The circumstances, however, most material in my judgment to the determination of this case, yet remain to be stated. At the time fixed for the payment of the money, proceedings were had under the warrant of attorney in this court, judgment was signed and execution issued. Under this the interest of the Rajahs in the pergunnah of Mullie was sold to one Neelmony Holdar, for Rs. 27,800 and Neelmony Holdar, about three years afterwards, conveyed this pergunnah, with some other lands, nominally, to a son of Doorgachurn Mookerjee, but really for Doorgachurn's benefit and interest, at a price very nearly, or perhaps exactly, corresponding with that originally paid by himself. By the sum realized from the sale of Mullie, by the payment of 20,000 rupees at one time and by the offer of 10,000 rupees at another, out of which the balance due was to be taken, Nemychurn Mullie was fully paid off; but before this account was thus settled and adjusted, he had directed a second sale under the execution, and another pergunnah belonging to the Rajahs but not included in the mortgage, the pergunnah of Syedpore, was sold for a sum of 30,000 rupees, and Doorgachurn Mookerjee became the purchaser, though, as appears to have been his usual practice, in the name of another. The proceedings of 1805, to which reference has already been made, were instituted to set aside this sale of Syedpore, on the ground that Nemychurn had been paid in full before it was made, by the two sums of 20,000, and 10,000, and the 27,000, the proceeds of Mullie; and in the result, the sale was accordingly set aside, Nemychurn Mullie being treated as entitled to his full sum of 52,000 rupees with interest, and Doorgachurn Mookerjee being compelled to pay to the Rajahs the sum of 7,400 rupees, originally withheld from them, with interest, and to reconvey Syedpore to them, accounting for its rents and profits during his occupation, and having allowed to him in return the sum he had paid for it, with interest, and a sum to meet certain outstanding debts due for the pergunnah while he held it.

Out of these circumstances the main question in the case arises: the defendants contending that the possessions under Neelmony Holdar and all subsequent possessions is a title under the Sheriff's sale, completely adverse therefore to the rights of the Rajahs; and thus established by lapse of time: the complainants insisting that all the proceedings connected with the sale are void, either for fraud or for irregularity, and independently of this, that the whole proceedings were virtually for the benefit of Doorgachurn Mookerjee, or if not so, that the pergunnah of Mullie very early came into his possession, and that, at least, as he was fully cognizant of the circumstances of the case, and fully apprized therefore that the whole was a mortgage transaction, his possession must be referred to the mortgage and not to the sale; that he could only hold the property under the original terms as property redeemable at any time.

I at once dismiss from consideration any objections arising out of mere irregularity of proceeding. It is quite impossible, in my judgment, to entertain them at this distance of time. The sale of the Sheriff was probably irregular for some or all the objections made to it: the premature date at which the proceedings in this court were instituted, though the execution did not issue till the sum was fully due: the failure to sell till after the return day of the writ: the selling, when the sale did at last take place, was that a ventitum ripens; and the selling the interest of the Rajahs which was an equity of redemption, unless the nature of the property, subjecting it to Hindoo law, gave it any different character, under a writ of feri facies. This last objection may bear upon the question of fraud, with reference to which I shall presently have to consider it, but as a question of mere irregularity, it must follow the fate of the others; even assuming it to be clear that it amounts to irregularity here, under the general words of the Charter it authorizes the Sheriff to "levy by sale of the houses, lands, debts, or other effects of the party,"—words far more extensive than the mere goods and chattels of an English feri facies. The only cases reported on this subject seem to treat the proceedings as regular; for in Shrik Junnoodeen v. Rammohun Mullie (Clarke's R. and O. 153) the only question was whether the mortgager was in time to redeem, after seizure under feri facies but before sale, and the case of a sale to a stranger was expressly reserved: and in Lapinmaudaye v. Prankison Biswas, (ibid) a bill to redeem the mortgaged premises, in the hands of the mortgagee himself, who had purchased under a judgment on the mortgage bond, was dismissed, as there were no particular circumstances to render the transaction injurious to other parties.

The question, therefore, turns on fraud, and the only fraud materially insisted on is fraud in the general character of the transaction. An attempt has indeed been made to shew sale without sufficient notice, and at an inadequate value, but there is no satisfactory evidence of the former, or, if the latter, to any extent that would infer fraud in the conduct of the sale: and as we are bound, in my opinion, by the conduct of the parties in the former sum, that Nemychurn Mullie, whatever he may really have been, as a substantial, independent, and bona fide party in the transaction, it was clearly his interest that the property should sell for all that it would fetch.

It is said, however, that by the Hindoo law, a pledge for an indefinite time is redeemable at any period, a proposition which I admit, and it is argued that it is a fraud upon this principle of law, that a mortgagee should do any thing inconsistent with this power of redemption. In this consequence, however, I cannot agree: if it were so every application for a foreclosure, in Hindoo cases of unlimited mortgages, would be fraudulent and illegal; and though the titles now existing under decrees of foreclosure, would probably be upheld, it would be difficult for the Court to say that the said decrees had been properly obtained, or ever after to allow similar proceedings. These decrees, however, have been continually made, and I cannot but treat that practice as a complete authority against the extent to which it is sought to carry the doctrine in question. If so, I apprehend that the authorities cited, must be understood to mean merely, that lapse of time, by itself, furnishes no answer to a claim of redemption; that it does not even furnish a presumption that any thing has been done inconsistent with that claim; that a party resisting such a claim, must show, at any distance of time, the circumstances or proceedings on which his resistance depends; but not that the right of redemption is indefeasible. This construction is perfectly consistent with a very large proportion of the authorities relied on: I do not know that it is absolutely contradicted by any of them, though there are some of which the most obvious construction would be that the right to redeem must, under all circumstances, remain. Again, it is not, I believe, contended, that the mortgagee is necessarily so completely confined to his mortgage, that any collateral securities taken can be of no effect. Here a warrant of attorney was taken, the effect of which, if it were to have any at all, was to enable the mortgagee to put himself in a condition to proceed against the property of the mortgagee to obtain satisfaction. By a technical rule of law, if it exists, he could not regularly obtain this satisfaction out of the mortgaged premises; but he could out of any other, and he did, in fact, proceed to obtain it, out of the pergunnah Syedpore, by a sale which would have been unobjectionable except on the ground of his having already received full satisfaction by the purchase money of Mullye and other payments. I can see some probable irregularity in these proceedings, but I can see no more fraud in obtaining satisfaction out of Mullye than in obtaining it out of Syedpore, and fraud is the question here. A title deficient only by reason of irregularity, is exactly the title which lapse of time ought to protect: a perfect title needs no protection whatever.

As far therefore as Neemychurn Mullic's conduct is concerned, I see nothing to impeach the title of the purchasers under him, or rather under the sale effected for his benefit after this lapse of time. Had he, himself, either nominally or substantially, been the purchaser at the Sheriff's sale, the question would have been different: his character as mortgagee might have disabled him from becoming the purchaser and leave such a transaction invalid in law. But it is not pretended that Nilmoney Holdar purchased for him. It is said that he purchased for Doorgachurn Mookerjee indeed, but of this there is no conclusive evidence; nor, if it were so, am I satisfied that Doorgachurn Mookerjee had such a character with respect to the transaction, as to render a purchase by him fraudulent or invalid, if there was a real sale on behalf of Neemychurn Mullic, and if Neemychurn Mullic is to be treated, as I have already said he must in my opinion, after the conduct of the parties in the former suit, as an independent party in the business. Doorgachurn Mookerjee, however, had full knowledge of all the transactions and must be bound by the consequences of that knowledge. If, therefore, Neemychurn Mullic's sale were a fraud, he purchased with full cognizance of that fraud; but if, as I have already expressed my opinion, it was no fraud, though it might confer no title, Doorgachurn Mookerjee would indeed acquire an additional security as a subsequent purchaser, being aware of all the infirmities affecting the title he purchased; but he would purchase a bad title only, not a fraudulent one, and in all hands, like any other, this bad title might become good by uninterrupted enjoyment.

On these grounds it appears to me that it is now too late to impeach the transactions in question: but even independently of them, there are circumstances which would, in my judgment, render it very difficult in the particular case, for the complainant to do so. There can, I apprehend, be no doubt, that objections to the title now subsisting, are derived chiefly from treating the Sheriff's sale, as a sale by directions of the mortgagee or by Doorgachurn Mookerjee. If without any such direction, having the writ put into his hand, he had proceeded to levy, and had of his own mere motion selected the interests of the Mullye pergunna, as the property he thought it most eligible to seize, there can, I imagine, be no question that the sale, though it might have been irregular and originally invalid, would not have been fraudulent. If fraudulent at all, it becomes fraudulent by having been directed or adopted by Neemychurn Mullic, the mortgagee, or Doorgachurn Mullic, an agent in the mortgage, or at least a person privy to it. But surely if it is to become fraudulent by their order or adoption, it will become a fair and binding transaction by the adoption of the Rajahs themselves, the only parties upon whom it could possibly be a fraud. And this adoption it seems to me to have received by the proceedings of 1805. The only objection to the sale of Syedpore was that it was a sale for a debt which was already satisfied: and the satisfaction of the debt was derived in large part from the sale of Mullye. The mere holding of Mullye as security would have furnished no objection to the sale of Syedpore, unless it were contended that the mortgagee could resort to no other property for the payment of his debt,—that the bond and warrant of attorney were mere nullities; a position which has not been contended for on the present occasion, and is quite at variance with the course adopted in 1805. The complainants in that suit, therefore, treated the sale of Mullye as valid; for if invalid, the purchasers would recover back the money they had paid, and the mortgage debt consequently was not satisfied. To treat that debt as paid off, the Rajahs must, as it seems to me, have treated the sale of Mullye as a good sale, and it therefore becomes so, to whatever objections it might have been originally exposed, as far as their consent could render it so. This conclusion is even confirmed by the course adopted with reference to the 7,400 Rs.: the actual fraud in the transaction was set right at their instance, without impeaching the general validity to the proceedings which had taken place; and this seems to me to furnish conclusive evidence of their consent and recognition, the only thing they objected to was that fraud for which they obtained compensation. I am aware, indeed, that they on that occasion, expressed their intention of proceeding afterwards to redeem the property: but this cannot alter the character of what they did, and if this were inconsistent with their so proceeding to redeem, they were not the less bound by their acts, though they might not have fully adverted to all their consequences. It seems to me, therefore, that under the circumstances of this case, that, even independently of the more general questions, the present complainant cannot now impeach and set aside a transaction which all the parties under whom he claims, consented to and adopted thirty years ago. It is on this ground of their conduct that I proceed, not on any notion of the matter being disposed off by the former decree.

It is necessarily with regret and doubt that I come to any conclusion different from that adopted by the court in the former hearing of a cause, and from the opinion of the majority of the court now; but in this case, except from the magnitude of the interests involved in it, there is less reason than ordinary to regret such a difference, because on the most material principles involved in it, we are, I believe, agreed. We all construe the mortgage deeds in the same way, and all apply the Hindoo law relations arising out of them: we all consider that the mortgage in this case is for an unlimited period; and that the mere lapse of time is no bar to the redemption of such a mortgage as long as the possession is referable to it.

We only differ as to the construction to be put on the facts in this case—whether this is to be treated as a possession under the mortgage or not; and with the view I entertain of them, I cannot but treat it quite independently of any question as to the effect of mere lapse of time as a possession by mere adverse title under the Sheriff's sale; and this possession recognized and adopted as givers by the Rajahs Baneecaunt and Gopeenauth, under whom the present complainant claims. In my judgment, therefore, a good title has been acquired against him by this length of adverse possession; and it follows that this bill, which has been brought to disturb this possession, ought to be dismissed.

Mr. JUSTICE GRANT said, that having delivered his judgment at great length when he made a decree in this cause,—having carefully considered his opinion, and seeing no reason to alter that opinion, he deemed it unnecessary to take up the time of the court by saying more than that he adhered to it. He believed his former judgment was in the hands of the counsel, but if not, and the case should go further, he should be supplied with copies of it. He was, therefore, of opinion that his decree must be affirmed.

RYAN, CHIEF JUSTICE.—I regret that the Court have not been able to deliver their judgment in this case at an earlier period, but the mass of papers which it was necessary to look through, and the great importance and difficulty of the questions arising in this suit, have prevented me at least from before delivering my opinion. I will endeavour to state that opinion as concisely as I am able. It appears that two native zemindars the names of Sreecaunt and Gopeenauth, being in pecuniary distress in 1795, and their estates being about to be sold by the Government for the arrears of revenue, applied to Doorgachurn Mookerjee to procure for them a loan of 52,000 rupees. This sum of money Nemychurn Mullic, at the instance of Doorgachurn, agreed to advance; Doorgachurn negotiated the whole transaction of the loan by Nemychurn Mullic, and it was agreed that a mortgage of the lands of pergunnah Mullie and the other pergunnahs should be given as a security, and also a bond and warrant, to confess judgment. This mortgage and the bond and warrant are dated 17th of November, 1795. Nemychurn Mullic advanced the whole of this 52,000 rupees; but the sum that was actually paid to Sreecaunt and Gopeenauth, was only 44,600. and the balance 7,400 as admitted by all parties was retained by Doorgachurn Mookerjee. On the 16th of September, 1796, without any previous demand of payment, judgment was entered upon the warrant, and on the 17th of September, the day stipulated for the repaying of the mortgage money execution issued and the mortgaged pergunnah Mullie was on the 14th of November 1796, sold by the Sheriff to one Nilmoney Holder for 27,800 rupees. The sum endorsed on this writ, and which the Sheriff was directed to levy, was 57,893 rupees. On the 15th of February 1797, Sreecaunt and Gopeenauth paid to Nemychurn on account of the balance still remaining due the sum of 20,000 rupees. The sum endorsed on the writ not yet having been satisfied, a second seizure was made of pergunnah Syedpore, property belonging to Sreecaunt and Gopeenauth, but which was not included in the mortgage. The pergunnah was sold for 40,000 rupees, and purchased by Doorgachurn Mookerjee, in the name of Sibchunder Mookerjee. In about three years after Doorgachurn purchased of Nilmoney Holder pergunnah Mullie, at nearly the same price that it was sold for by the Sheriff. After the sale of Syedpore, Sreecaunt was thrown into goal, and shortly after his release in 1801 he died, leaving Baneecaunt his heir, who is alleged to have been at that time about 12 years of age.

Now the facts which I have stated are not disputed on either side. It is in 1805 that the validity of these transactions are first questioned in a bill filed by Baneecaunt and Gopeenauth against Nemychurn Mullic and Doorgachurn Mookerjee. I think it unnecessary to go in detail through the bill, it sets forth the facts I have stated, and charges a fraudulent contrivance of Doorgachurn, by which he retained the 7,400 rupees. The bill prays that the defendants may be decreed to come to an account on the footing of the mortgage and monies really lent that they may pay over the money they have received above the money lent. That the sale of pergunnah Syedpore may be set aside, and that Doorgachurn may pay over the rents and profits received for Syedpore.

Answer of Nemychurn Mullic, filed April 1805. That he advanced the whole Rs. 52,000 on the securities stated in the bill and security of Doorgachurn Mookerjee. Denies all knowledge of what passed between Doorgachurn and the complainants. Denies all knowledge of the tin, lead, &c. Paid in full amount of Loll Beharry Bonnerjee (Rs. 52,000) by order of complainants, and took his receipt. Does not know whether Doorgachurn kept back 7,400. Admits Doorgachurn is his intimate friend.

Answer of Doorgachurn Mookerjee, filed April 1805. Agreed to procure for complainants the loan. Admits that the whole of the negotiation for the loan was carried on by him. Denies he ever appeared as principal in the business. Admits he procured the money and became security for the repayment. That complainants agreed that Rs. 7,400 should be allowed defendant for becoming security. Denies the tin and lead transaction. Gave defendant an order on Loll Beharry for Rs. 7,400. Denies that Mullie was sold to Nilmoney Holder on his account. Asserts that Nilmoney Holder was himself the purchaser. After three years defendant purchased from Nilmoney Holder. Denies the offer of settlement and 10,000. Admits purchase of Syedpore for 40,000. Surplus paid to complainants.

Interlocutory decree, 19th June 1806 Master's Report, 11th of November 1807. Final Decree 3d of February 1808. Defendant to pay principal and interest or 7,400 16-527. Defendant to pay to complainant 48,724—balance of amount of rents and profits of Syedpore from the time defendant got possession. After deducting 81,625, purchase money and interest, on 68,468 the amount of outstanding debts, Defendant to reconvey pergunnah Syedpore. From this decree there was an appeal to the Privy Council, which appeal was dismissed in 1817.

Before I proceed to consider the nature of the present suit, I think it better to mention what I conceive to have been decided in the suit relating to Syedpore. I think that decree has found that Doorgachurn Mookerjee fraudulently retained the Rs. 7,400, that he fraudulently caused the pergunnah Syedpore to be sold for a debt not really due, in order that he might at an inadequate value become the purchaser. What other conclusion can be drawn from a decree directing him to refund the money, which in his answer he alleged was given to him for becoming security for the Rajah to Nemychurn Mullic, and also setting aside a sale by the Sheriff, to which if fraud was not apparent, there was no ground on which its legality could be affected. The conclusion I draw from this decree and the evidence is that throughout these transactions, Doorgachurn Mookerjee fraudulently endeavoured to take advantage of the necessitous condition of the Rajah, in order to possess himself of both pergunnahs Mullie and Syedpore, at an inadequate value, and that he was successful in his attempt, and did purchase those pergunnahs at a sum below their value at the time.

The appeal being dismissed, as I have stated, in 1817, Baneecaunt died on the 27th of February 1819, and on the 22d of February 1828, the present bill was filed by Rajah Budroacaunt Roy, an infant of 10 years, by his next friend, against the present defendants.

The complainant is the sole surviving heir of the mortgagers of pergunnah Mullie, and files his bill against the representative of Doorgachurn Mookerjee and Nemychurn Mullic. The prayer of this bill is in substance a prayer to redeem the pergunnah Mullie, and to adjust the account arising therefrom between the parties. The real question which arises on the pleadings and evidence in this suit is, whether the complainant has a right to redeem this mortgage. Before I enter upon this, I think it right to state that I think this case must be decided by Hindoo law, and by that law only. It is true that the instrument by which this property was conveyed to the ancestor of the Mullies, is, in form, an English conveyance; but I cannot in a case between Hindoos only, think, the form of the conveyance can regulate the law which is to be applied to the rights of the parties taking under it, and unless it does, this Court must decide between Hindoos according to their own law. The first question then is what interest did this deed convey to Nemychurn Mullic, according to the Hindoo law. The Hindoo law applicable to this subject will be found in the 3d chapter of Mr. Colerbrook's Digest. Title, Pledge, Hypothecation and Mortgages: "a pledge is called bundha and devisable into four kinds, moveable or personal, and fixed or real, for custody only, and for use unlimited, and limited as to time; with a written contract, and with a verbal attested agreement."

Now what species of pledge must the present be considered? It is clear that it is fixed or real, also it is a pledge for use, it being defined, that a thing which is not probably injured by use, is a pledge for use. Is it limited or unlimited as to time? The instruments of mortgage are in form English deeds of lease and release. Now according to English law, although a day of payment is fixed, the equity of redemption continues prima facie open until actual foreclosure. In p. 141 of Colebrooke, the sage subjoins the distinctions respecting the period of the pledge, "limited and unlimited"—unlimited subject to redemption at pleasure, that this, to be released at no specific time, limited to be released at a specific time. In p. 143 examples are given, "a loan is now received by me, and a pledge is given paying the debt at the close of the year, I will redeem the pledge, else this pledge shall be your absolute property." This is limited as to time. But in case the agreement is in this form "whenever the debt shall be discharged, then only shall the pledge be released", it is unlimited as to time. The latter is the meaning, that I conceive must be put on this instrument, and consequently what Nemychurn took, under this deed, was a pledge of fixed, or real property of an unlimited time. If such is the interest, Nemychurn took under these deeds. The next point for consideration is whether from lapse of time, adverse possession or the relief already granted by this Court, in a suit, setting aside the sale of Sydepore, the present complainant is barred of all right of redemption, and that this bill should be dismissed. Now it is clear according to Hindoo law, that a pledge for use for an unlimited time is never lost to the owner. Thus in p. 185 it is said, "A pledge to be used for an unlimited time is not forfeited, even though unredeemed for a thousand years." The authorities are many in support of this position, in the chapter to which I have referred. In Sir Thomas Strange, 1 vol. 292, who cites as his authority Menu, it is stated "prescription runs, in other cases titles being gained by long possession, and lost by silent neglect, but his property in a pledge is never lost to the owner by any lapse of time while it remains as such out of possession;" and see also the case of Parvuttee v. Dooruj, 2 vol. Burdada's reports of Sudder Adawlut of Bombay, where after a lapse of 75 years it was held, that the heirs of the mortgager were not barred of their right of redemption, though the property had been re-mortgaged,—the zillah judge, Mr. Anderson, holding, that the law of mortgage was, that the mortgager could always recover his property on payment of the sum advanced. The Sudder Judges, Mr. Komer and Mr. Ironside, confirmed this decree. No mere lapse of time, therefore, would bar the plaintiff's right of redemption. As to any title, arising from adverse possession, it is clear that the sale, under the judgment was invalid, whether the question is to be decided by English or Hindoo law. If by English law, it is clear law here, that an equity of redemption cannot be sold under a feri facies according to the Hindoo law, it is clear that a pledge cannot sell or dispose of a pledge for use for an unlimited time, and the sale by the Sheriff under process issued at his suit cannot give validity to such a sale. I am not quite satisfied on the whole of this evidence, that Nilmoney Holdar was a bona fide purchaser, but if he was, what title could Doorgachurn gain by adverse possession, or those who claim under him, when he bought with full notice of the pledge, and that the pledge had no right to sell? Sir Thomas Strange, in 1 vol. 291, says, "it is agreed that a purchaser being privy to the estate being in mortgage at the time, the transfer shall not avail him."

In Mr. Macnaghten's translation of a portion of the Metacahara, p. 201, 207, and also in Colebrook's Digest, 2 vol. p. 169, 190, 191, it is laid down that "He who sees his land possessed by a stranger for 20 years without asserting his right, loses his property," an exception to this rule is now propounded except properly connected with pledges, boundaries, &c. I do not, therefore, see according to Hindoo law what adverse possession there is in the present case that could be a bar to the complainant's claim. But one of the grounds on which the Advocate-General mainly relied upon in answer to this claim, was that the matter had in truth been adjudicated upon, that the facts were all before the court in the suit which set aside the sale of Sydepore, and that the validity of the sale of Mullye was by that decree, in truth, established. I confess I have always felt this the most doubtful question in the present case, and I of course feel the force of this objection the more strongly, as in the opinion of one of the learned judges, it is thought a bar to the complainant's relief; certainly in that suit the whole of the facts of this were before the court, and they could have adjudicated upon the right to redeem Mullye had the complainant sought such relief in his bill. The sale of Sydepore was set aside as unnecessary, and as well as being fraudulent, clearly on the ground that by the sale of Mullye, and the subsequent payment of the Rs. 20,000, the debt due to the mortgagees was satisfied, and on this footing the account between Doorgachurn and the complainant is taken. It is to be observed also that on the coming in of Nemychurn's answer, the bill is dismissed as regards him, and no relief is prayed as to Mullye. Does the omission to claim all the relief to which the party was entitled in that suit bar his right to relief, for what he had omitted to claim, in any subsequent suit instituted for that purpose? In considering this question, I am of course taking it for granted, that he would have had a right to redeem Mullye, had he sought to do so in that suit at that time; I do not understand Mr. Justice Makin to dispute this position. If the decree of February 1808 has determined the rights of these parties, then it might have been pleaded in bar to this suit. It being clear that a decree determining the rights of the parties may be pleaded to a new bill for the same matter. Now on a plea of this nature, so much of the former bill and answer must be set forth as is necessarily to show the same point was then in issue. It seems to me that no plea could have been framed that would have been good in argument. The question in the former decree was the fraud in the sale of Sydepore, not the right of redemption of Mullye. The sale of Sydepore was held invalid, because no debt was due at the time of the sale; it seems to me not to have said that the sale of Mullye was valid, but only that by that sale the money had been paid, and therefore at all events no debt was due for which the execution could issue; but I do not see how by any plea or averment it could appear that in the former suit the right of redemption was abandoned and the relief ~~now~~ decreed on the ground of such abandonment. If that decree cannot be pleaded in bar, it seems to me that the proceedings in that suit was no answer to the relief claimed in the present. For the reasons I have stated I am of opinion that this decree must be confirmed. I think it, however, necessary to guard against any erroneous conclusions that might be drawn from the points of Hindoo law, on which I have expressed my opinion. Although lands in the Mofussil and without the local jurisdiction of this court pledged by instruments of a nature similar to the present, would, if no decree of foreclosure had taken place be prima facie redeemable, and such redemption not generally barred by lapse of time: yet the present decision would not apply to any cases, where the mortgage had been foreclosed by decree, nor do I at present express any opinion here from this view of the law of redemption of lands in the Mofussil, as in any way applicable to lands situate within the local jurisdiction of the court, and I am quite clear that it cannot apply to cases where there has been a decree of foreclosure; the court having, by an uniform course of proceeding, held that by decree the right of redemption in cases of pledges by Hindoos, by instruments of this nature, might in all cases be barred.—Hurkaru.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 15.

In the matter of Rose.

Mr. Turton applied for a writ of habeas corpus to be issued against Mr. J. Beardmore, a British subject, residing at Bowanypore, out of the local jurisdiction of the court, to bring up the body of—Rose an infant. The learned counsel stated that the subject of this application was an illegitimate child, one year old. The mother, Anne Rose, had cohabited with a gentleman.

now absent at the Cape, and who shortly before his departure from India, had taken away the child from its maternal grandmother, and placed it under the care of Mr. Beardsmore. The mother had not received any maintenance during the absence of the gentleman at the Cape, and though she was far from saying Mr. Beardsmore did not take proper care of the infant, she was desirous of having it under her own protection.

Chief Justice—Take your writ.

In the matter of Calder A. Halket.

Leave was given to amend the Petition of Appeal.

The Chief Justice, with reference to the business of the term, noticed two Petitions Appeal against the decision of Mr. Justice Malkin in the Insolvent Court. His Lordship said they were down on the Equity Board and they would be taken, as causes, in their regular course.

THURSDAY, JUNE 16.

Ezeziel Ezra v. Edward Cooke.

This action was brought to recover the sum of Sa. Rs. 977, being the equivalent of the difference in value between 551 dollars, the nett proceeds of sale of six bales of cotton piece goods, shipped by plaintiff on board the Corsair, Hughes, bound hence to Singapore, in June 1835, and which were transhipped by the defendant and delivered in a damaged state. The hearing came on during the second term this year, and plaintiff was nonsuited with leave to move on the third count for nominal damages. Mr. Turton, on a former day, obtained a rule nisi for a new trial on the ground that the verdict was contrary to evidence.

Mr. Advocate General now showed cause, chiefly confining himself to the third count of the plaint on which the court had given leave to move. It was alleged in the plaint that the goods were transhipped from the Corsair into the Bowrong, and whilst they were on board the last mentioned vessel they were greatly damaged. The learned counsel contended that there was no evidence at the trial that the goods proved to have been damaged were the particular goods mentioned in the plaint, and that there was no evidence of the damage having taken place on board the Bowrong. As for the two first counts, if it were necessary to allude to them, they alleged a total loss, but it was in evidence that certain goods were delivered to the consignee in a damaged state.

Mr. Turton, with whom was Mr. Grant, for the rule absolute, contended that the goods were shipped, it was in evidence by the production of the bill of lading, "in good order and condition," and not having been delivered to the consignee in the state they were received, he had a right to repudiate them. It was a non-delivery in good condition.

But the court saw no reason to disturb their former verdict, and the rule was discharged with costs.—Englishman.

In the goods of Homes, deceased.

The Advocate-General made an application on behalf of Mrs. Harding, for probate of the will of the deceased. The testator died in August 1833, and a former application had been made in September 1834, which was refused and letters ad colligenda were granted to the Registrar. The probate on the former application was refused on the ground, that Mrs. Harding had made a mistake in her affidavit, as to the place of the death of the testator, which she stated to have been in Calcutta, whereas it occurred elsewhere. Another objection was, the absence of a person of the name of Robinson, an attesting witness; there was also an objection, that the witnesses contradicted each other, one having sworn that the will was in Hindoostanee, the other in Bengalee. These discrepancies are now cleared up. It was shown, that Mrs. Harding's mistake originated in a confusion as to the place of the death, with the place where the will was made. With regard to the attesting witness Robinson it was now proved, that he had died abroad, and his signature was duly ascertained. As to the discrepancy regarding the language in which the will was written, it appeared that it was written in one language and explained in the other.

There was no great motive to dispute the motion, as no assets had been realized.

By the Court, after some deliberation, "take your probate, Mr. Advocate-General."—Hurkian.

MONDAY, JUNE 20.

In the matter of—Rose.

Mr. Turton had on a previous day applied for a writ of Habeas Corpus to be directed to Mr. Isaac Beardsmore to bring up the body of—Rose, an infant, illegitimate child of 22 months old, which had been granted at the instance of the mother, and Mr. Clarke now put in the return thereto and moved that it be filed together with the affidavits annexed.

The return stated that on the 6th of April last, an infant child was placed under his charge by its father James Hutchinson, Senior, who subsequently on the 9th April stated in conversation that he was obliged to remove it from the care of its grandmother as he had found her in state of intoxication and the child was filthy and full of sores. In consequence of this the said Isaac Beardsmore took the child to his own house. That was in consequence of a long intimacy with the father of child that he was requested to take charge of it, during its father's absence on a voyage to the Cape. That the said father expressed a strong desire that it should not be delivered up either to its mother or grandmother, more especially the mother, her conduct being improper. He had left an order for 20 rupees per month for its support, which had been duly disbursed for that purpose.

That the mother had no visible or reputable mode of supporting either herself or her child.

That the father had made a will, by which he bequeathed the whole of his property to the infant.

The affidavit of a bearer was also put in corroborating the fact of the child having been taken from the grandmother, dirty and covered with sores, and likewise that the mother had returned to Calcutta in company with some gentlemen with whom she had left that place, and had cohabited.

That the father went to the Cape and left 100 rupees to be given to the mother, for which she gave her receipt.

This receipt was read in Court.

Mr. Turton rested the claim of the mother to the custody of the child under the circumstances on the well known rule of the law of England, which a recent statute had not only recognized, but contrary to what had formerly obtained, had imposed upon her the burthen of its support. He would put it to the Court what would be the situation of the mother, if after 4 or 5 years the burthen was thrown upon her hands. It is said the father has made a will leaving all his property to the child. Has he any property to leave? Besides, if he have, his will is revocable to-morrow. Mr. Turton urged further reasons and Mr. Clarke was about to reply when he was stopped by the Court, which after looking through the affidavits decided as follows.

Mr. Justice Ryan.—We do not think that in this case it will be proper for the Court to interfere to enforce the delivering up the child to the custody of its mother.

Mr. Justice Grant.—I cannot consent to deliver a child over to the charge of a mother who leaves Calcutta as she alleges for the benefit of her health, when in fact it was for the purposes of prostitution.

There are other facts which go to prove that it would not be proper to remove the child from its present custody in order to place it in that of the mother.

Mr. Justice Malkin agreed in the general principle, but entertained some doubts whether sufficient facts were sufficiently established in the present case to render it one, which the Court ought to take out of the acknowledged rule, that the mother of an illegitimate child has the right to its custody.—Hurkaru.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 22.

C. and T. Mangles v. T. E. M. Turton.

Mr. Advocate-General moved for a rule nisi, calling on plaintiffs to shew cause why an injunction should not issue to stay proceedings until they have made their election whether they will proceed in this court, or in the Mayor's Court, London, whither they have also commenced their action. The learned counsel stated that the action was commenced on the 15th of March last, and on the last day of last term the plaintiffs were directed to give security for costs which they have not yet done. He applied for the injunction on two grounds: first, an account had not been rendered, and there are many charges of an improper description,—such as defendant never authorized when he sent his ship to England. Secondly, plaintiffs having commenced legal proceedings in the Mayor's Court, London, and made a seizure of property in England, in value nearly to the amount of their claim. He, the learned advocate, thought these grounds were sufficient to induce their lordships to grant a rule nisi to shew cause why an injunction should not be issued, and under that impression he would not at present trouble the Court with further details of the case.

Chief Justice.—Your first ground of an account, is a matter for a court of law: as to your second ground, how are the facts established?

Mr. Advocate-General read an extract from an affidavit, sworn by the defendant, which set forth, that he had received a letter from his agents in London, Messrs. Petre and Fry, informing him that two attachments had been taken out in the Mayor's Court, London, and property had been attached in the hands of Mr. Robert Petre, to the amount of £580; further, the defendant swore that he never had any other transaction with the plaintiffs but the one out of which this action arose.

The Chief Justice after reading the affidavit, granted a rule nisi, and took that opportunity to remind the Bar, that in the New Rules, lately drawn up for the Practice of the Court, it was ordered that all motions in equity should be made on notice in conformity with the practice of the Court of Chancery. The New Rules, drawn up for the practice of this Court, had not been passed in consequence of a notice from Government, but he thought it desirable that the Bar should adopt that particular rule, as it enabled the party to come in and shew cause in the first instance.—Englishman.

Khamah Dossee v. Seebpersaud Bose.

JURISDICTION OF THE SUPREME COURT.

The jurisdiction clause of the bill stated "that Ramnair Mitter and others were all respectively inhabitants of Calcutta, and therefore persons respectively subject to the jurisdiction of the Court." To this it was pleaded, "that the defendant was a Hindoo, and was not an inhabitant of the town of Calcutta, that he did not by his agents, gomastahs, &c., carry on trade in Calcutta, that he had not any residence or dwelling house in any house or place of business in Calcutta, where such, or any such trade or business was carried on by his gomastahs, &c., with his funds or on his account, nor was he in any manner, for any matters in the bill alleged, subject to the jurisdiction of the Court."

The plea came on to be heard in evidence. The complainant's witnesses swore that the defendant was residing in his joint family house in Calcutta on the day the bill was filed, that he was joint in estate with the several other members of his father's family, that this joint family had a joint family dwelling house in Calcutta, in which they respectively resided, and in which their father had resided, and which had descended to them from him, and in which an establishment of horses, carriages, and servants was kept at the joint family expence and a joint family worship maintained, and that the son of the defendant was residing there on the day of bill filed. The defendant's witnesses swore that the defendant was residing out of Calcutta on the day the bill was filed, and had been so for seven months before, that he was not an inhabitant of Calcutta, that he did not carry on trade or business in Calcutta, nor had he any residence or dwelling house or place of business in Calcutta, in which such trade or business was carried on.

Mr. Pearson and Mr. Clarke for the complainant, contended that the words of the jurisdiction clause were sufficiently extensive to admit the evidence under the 26th plea rule of there being a family house in Calcutta, in which the joint family resided, for although that amounted only to constructive inhabitaney, yet the word "inhabitant" in the bill would apply to actual inhabitaney. As to the actual residence of the party on the day on which the bill was filed, there was conflicting evidence, and if it depended on this only, the Court would probably direct an issue, but the defendant had not attempted to prove that he had not a house in Calcutta with all his family residing in it on the day on which the bill was filed. If it should be argued that the complainant's witnesses being contradicted on one point, namely, actual residence, therefore, they should not be credited, on another without further investigation, the answer was that they were confirmed on the second point by the defendant's plea. The plea was a very full one, it went beyond the statements in the bill, and did not negative the mere fact of inhabitaney which would have been sufficient; but travelling out of the record, it denied that the defendant carried on trade or had a house in Calcutta in which trade was carried on, or an establishment of servants to conduct it. Why did he not deny the family residence, and why not call witnesses to prove that he had none? Because he could not do it. His silence therefore was confirmatory of the positive evidence of the complainant.

Mr. Turton and Mr. Osborne contended that the conflicting evidence on the actual residence made it necessary to have an issue that the silence of the defendant as to the family residence resulted from surprise, the point not having been raised in the pleadings. That under the 26th plea rule this evidence could not be read as that ground of jurisdiction was not laid, and that even if proved, a family residence was not sufficient to constitute jurisdiction of itself as was held in Tunsook Roy v. the Nawab of Moorsheadabad, who had a house in Calcutta, which had descended to him from his father, and in which his servants were residing.

Chief Justice.—The word inhabitant was sufficient under the 26th plea rule to admit evidence of a family residence in Calcutta, and that was so well known a ground of jurisdiction that the Court could not believe that the defendant was taken by surprise. This case materially differed from Tunsook Roy. Neither the Nawab nor his father, nor any member of their family had ever resided in that house, only some of his servants in attendance on his vakcel. That could not be treated as a family residence, but here the defendant's father had lived and died in this house, he himself had resided there up to within a few months, while all his family continued residing there and all his establishment of servants. This house was his domicile, and wherever that was he was constructively an inhabitant of that place. This had always been considered a good ground of jurisdiction. Plea over-ruled with costs.

MONDAY, JUNE 27.

Commuloney Dossee and others v. Rajah Benawarree Lal and others.

Mr. Clarke moved for rule to discharge an order to amend, and to strike out the amendments made upon the order. Rule nisi granted.

Gomes v. D'Costa.

Mr. Turton moved to make a rule absolute.

The Advocate-General shewed cause. This was a question of practice as to the time of putting in bail, but the point was not decided. After the facts had been stated by the Advocate-General, Mr. Turton rose and said, to save your Lordships all trouble, I think it is "sharp practice," they ought to have the twelve days; and upon the offer of the Advocate-General, the parties shewing cause were admitted to pay money into Court, on entering into the usual rule, to take short notice to plead, &c.

Chief Justice Ryan.—Let the order be drawn up by consent.

Finch and others v. —

Mr. Clarke moved to substitute the name of Mrs. Dunbar for that of Mr. Dunbar in an order made in this suit in—1830. The learned counsel put in the consent of several adult annuitants under the order. In 1802 an order was made in the suit confirming the provisions of the will of the testator; the Court ordered that, after payment of legacies, and repairs of the estate, the 6 annuitants under the will should receive 100 rupees a month, and that a Mr. Crosby should be appointed as receiver of the estate, and to pay the annuities; but that, if the surplus funds were not sufficient, then the annuitants were to be paid, in equal shares, such sum as the surplus allowed of. In 1830 another order was made upon the report of the master, that as Mr. Crosby was dead, Mr. Dunbar was a fit and proper person to act as receiver, and to pay the annuities. Mr. Clarke now moved upon the Accountant-General's certificate of monies paid under the order of 1830 to Mr. Dunbar, and on an affidavit of Mr. Hudson, the attorney, to substitute the name of Mr. Dunbar, with the consent of the annuitants, who were now of age. He was, he said, going precisely on the grounds of the two former orders, and in point of fact moving only for the substitution of a name, the order would be still perfect and subsisting, as far as the parties take an interest under it. He was anxious to avoid the parties the expense of opening the decree.

Chief Justice Ryan.—We must see. If we substitute another person, that person has a right under the original order. We are of course anxious to save expense, but we must know that the person to be substituted is a proper person to distribute the money.

Mr. Justice Grant.—On these grounds we are very ignorant of the real state of the cause. We know nothing as to how the money came or where it goes.

Mr. L. Clark.—I am applying on the order of the court to substitute merely.

Chief Justice Ryan.—The 1st order is of 1802. In 1830 the receiver Mr. Crosby being dead, another person is appointed receiver, and now you apply for a third receiver. The Master in 1830 only reported Mr. Dunbar a proper person to be a receiver; the best course and safest will be a reference to the Master. You may take an order for a reference to the Master, to report generally on the state of the cause, and whether your motion can be granted.

Suroopchunder Sircar Chowdry v. Sumbhoochunder Sing.

Advocate-General.—I have to shew cause against a rule of Mr. Prinsep, whether a rule for setting down this cause ex-parte and judgment thereon, writ of execution, &c. should not be set aside for irregularity.

The defendant had notice that the cause was set down ex-parte. It appears that notice of the taking out the ex-parte rule, and notice of cause being set down for trial ex-parte, was served on defendant's attorney, the cause was set down for hearing in March last, and notice of it was given to the defendant by his gomastha, who carried him a letter. Defendant was then residing in Nuddea. Defendant stated that the answer to this letter service was unnecessary, as he did not mean to make any defence. The 18th March last was the day of trial. On the 16th the messenger went up to the defendant in Nuddea.

Mr. Justice Malkin.—How far is Nuddea?

Mr. Prinsep.—Three or four days' journey.

Mr. Clarke, on the same side, cites Arthur v. W. F. Clarke, and Naransing v. Bissumber Mullick. In both these cases the motion was to set aside an ex-parte rule, this is to set aside an ex-parte judgment and all proceedings thereon. The court ought to require an affidavit of merits. After judgment the plaintiff has established his case, having proved his case and examined witnesses, and the court having confirmed that by judgment, will surely not set aside a proceeding of this importance without an affidavit of merits in the defendant.

Chief Justice Ryan.—When did execution issue Mr. Clarke?

Mr. Leith.—On the 4th April, my lord.

Mr. Clarke.—There is also in this case another point which does not appear upon the other cases.

The letter was sent to the defendant on the 16th of March to Nuddea; and the defendant then said an answer to it was not necessary, as he did not mean to make any defence to the action.

Mr. Clarke then contended that in the absence of any affidavit of merits, the court ought not to disturb the judgment.

Mr. Prinsep.—I don't know the ground on which it is attempted to draw this distinction between the co-parte rule, and ex-parte judgment. The ex-parte rule had expired, and therefore a new rule to plead is necessary.

Chief Justice Ryan.—We won't trouble you on the irregularity. The question is your want of affidavit of merits.

Mr. Prinsep.—The two affidavits of friends are laid. The first for not appending to it the notice to the service of which he swears. For the second, the man Gungadur Dose, a marksman, (a person who even can't write) swears to the contents of the letter he delivered to the defendant. The cause was tried on the 3d term after the ex-parte rule was taken out. Nuddea is 3 or 4 days journey from this place. He does not swear that he delivered the letter, he only swears he proceeded to Nuddea for the purpose of delivering the letter. There is now in court a bill filed to set aside the proceedings on which the action is founded against the defendant on the ground of fraud, the defendant was not likely therefore to let the action go undefended. In the affidavit the man calls himself a chopperdah, which is no description. He ought to describe himself. I have not the most distant conception of the meaning of chopperdah. We had an affidavit of the defendant who swears that he had no notice of any proceedings in the action, until judgment was served upon him. The chopperdah is therefore flatly contradicted. The 10th April, the defendant swears to have been the first intimation of the proceedings in the action he received, the ex-parte rule having expired, the cause came on in fact without any notice of trial having been served, upon such an affidavit as that of the chopperdah, your Lordships will not hold the proceedings in the action to be good. Do they serve the defendant's attorney with notice? No, nothing but a verbal message to the gomastha, the court will not fix a party living in the Mofussil on such a judgment. When on the 11th April he came down to set aside, the 11th was the first intimation he received of the judgment against him.

Mr. Leith.—I, my Lord, follow Mr. Prinsep in support of this rule. The learned counsel stated the affidavit of the gomastha was rather suspicious, it was sworn in such a manner the court could not act upon it. He merely swears, and clearly for the purpose of this motion in such a manner that it is impossible for the court to discover whether the letter was delivered at all. The facility of obtaining perjured witnesses rendered it absolutely necessary the court should be very careful in allowing such proceedings as the present. It was absolutely indispensable that defendants should have opportunities of cross-examining. The ex-parte rule had expired before trial and judgment it is, therefore, invalid. With regard to our laches in coming to set the judgment aside. It was only last term that judgment was recovered, we move in this term, as soon as we could, there is no proof before the court that we had notice until the 11th April last of any proceedings in the action. The defendant swears positively he had no notice of any proceeding till 11th April last, and contradicts the affidavit of the other side.

Chief Justice Ryan.—In this case we think the rule must be made absolute, the only question is whether there was laches in the defendant in coming to set aside the judgment and proceedings. The affidavit of the gomastha is exceedingly loose, we therefore allow the defendant to come in and set aside the proceedings on the usual terms. (To Mr. Prinsep).—The irregularity was in your not coming in to set aside the ex-parte rule and waiting for judgment and proceedings thereon. You must pay the costs and take short notice of trial.

TUESDAY, JUNE 28.

Joseph John Toman v. R. and T. P. Morrell.

This was an action brought to recover from the defendant the sum of Rs. 1243, principal and interest for one hundred maunds of indigo seed, sold and delivered by the plaintiff to the defendants, at the rate of twelve piccas rupees per maund, and for charges incurred thereon.

The Advocate-General stated the case to the court. The plaintiff in this case is a grower of indigo seed in the district of Jessore, and the defendants are proprietors of the Shakra indigo factory, near Cutwa, on the Bhugagaruttee. In 1834 this factory was in the possession of Mr. Rose, who held it with Carr, Tagore and Co., and who previously to disposing of it, wrote to Mr. Toman requesting to know what would be the price of indigo seed for the next year. The plaintiff replied, twelve rupees per maund, and Mr. Rose agreed to take two hundred maunds at price, but subsequently having sold the factory to the Messrs. Morrell, those gentlemen, of course, purchased the arrangement also of the former proprietor, for the learned counsel argued, a factory without seed is as useless as seed without a factory. But subsequently finding that two hundred maunds of indigo seed would be more than the defendants would require, they agreed to give up one hundred maunds to Carr, Tagore and Co. That firm, afterwards, as the agent of Mr. Toman, made out a receipt for Rs. 1,243 for the seed supplied by the plaintiff which they, the defendants, refused to pay, and a good deal of correspondence followed, when it was agreed to refer the dispute to the Chamber of Commerce. Accordingly a case was made out and sent to the Secretary, but the defendants, possibly, not finding any persons supposed to have their own views of the case, broke off the reference. They had since offered 1,000 Rs., or ten rupees a maund, to settle all differences, but this Mr. Toman refused, rightly considering that if he allowed such an arrangement to take place in one case, where the parties were fully capable of paying the full amount, it would be a ground on which others might claim a similar reduction.

Several witnesses were examined touching the price of indigo seed in the sowing season of 1835, and the connection existing between the plaintiff and Dwarkanauth Tagore, and Carr, Tagore and Co. It appeared that the charge originally made was eighteen rupees per maund, and that there was a considerable rise in price of seed between January and the end of March, 1835, and that the plaintiff was indebted to Dwarkanauth Tagore, Carr, Tagore and Co. realizing sums for the sale of indigo seed in liquidation of the amount.

Mr. Turton, for the defendants, submitted for a nonsuit, on the ground that Mr. Carr, who had given evidence for plaintiff, was not a competent witness, he being a member of the firm of Carr, Tagore and Co., who are interested in this issue. Further, that were Mr. Carr a competent witness, his evidence proved that contract existed between Carr, Tagore and Co. and defendants, but not between the latter and the plaintiff. But the Court decided there were no grounds for a nonsuit, and the learned counsel went into the case, arguing that the seed was of an inferior description, and that the contract for the delivery was not fulfilled, plaintiff having undertaken to deliver two hundred maunds on the 25th January, whereas only one hundred maunds were delivered two months after that date.

But the court thought there was no evidence of the inferior quality of the seed, and gave a verdict for rupees 1,243, the amount for which the action was brought.—Englishman.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 29.

In the matter of James Cullenman insolvent, on the petition of Appeal by Davidson and Donald Macallon, Executors of Donald Macintyre, deceased.

Mr. Leith opened the petition of the Executors of Mr. Macintyre, Robert Davidson and Donald Macallon, and read the first order bearing date 11th January, 1834, of the Insolvent Court, which was, that Mr. Macintyre should be at liberty to take a commission of 4 per cent. on all declared dividends, &c.

Read the order of the—th September, 1834, by which the special assignees was allowed by the order to defer sale of ships, lands, and factories, for a year, unless the price offered was such as in the judgment of the estate could be accepted to the benefit of the estate; with liberty to advance money by mortgage for the purpose of carrying on the factories.

Order of 23d January was an application by Mr. Macintyre, to leave to proceed to sea, and for his discharge from the management of the estate. He had filed his accounts down to the month of January, in which he made the application. The estate probably realized was estimated at 1 crore 11 lacs of rupees.

He stated he had been unable to dispose of the greater portion of the indigo factories: a list of the property was filed, and an estimate of the probable outlay for the ensuing season. There were 7,800 maunds of indigo in hand; cash balance in hand two lacs and upwards. Order of 23d January, 1836, ordering the indentures from Mr. O'Hanlon, common assignee, to Mr. Macintyre to be cancelled.

Read the report of the committee, bearing date 6th February, 1836, approved of by the meeting, and recommending that the expenses of Mr. Macintyre should be defrayed out of the estate, he giving up his commission of 4 per cent; the report stated that no remuneration had been paid. The order of reference to Mr. Macnaughten. Read the report of Mr. Macnaughten of the 1st March, 1836, dismissing the petition of Mr. Macintyre. The executors of Mr. Macintyre presented their petition under the 4th section of the Insolvent Act. Read the 4th sec. of the Insolvent Act. "And be it further enacted that it shall be lawful for any person who shall think himself aggrieved, by any adjudication, order, or proceeding of any such court for the relief of insolvent debtors, to present within one calendar month thereafter, a petition to the Supreme Court of Judicature of the presidency, where such court shall be holden, &c. &c."

Mr. Clarke.—May it please your lordships, you have now before you the statement contained in the petition; I submit that under the 4th section they have no right to be heard.

Justice Grant.—For whom do you appear?

Mr. Clarke.—I appear for Mr. Dickens, trustee for infant creditors. This is the first time that an appeal has been made by the executors of an Assignee, and I submit that under the 4th section they cannot be heard. In the latter part of this section the court is directed to inquire into the matter of the petition, and of such proceedings and evidence, and shall make such order thereon as to the court shall seem meet and just; and shall thereby direct by whom and in what manner the costs of such petition, and of the proceedings which shall have been had thereon, and of the taking down of any such evidence in writing, and of the proceedings of which such complaint shall have been made shall be paid. Now they appeal from the order of the 5th of March 1836, which merely dismisses Mr. Macintyre's petition; how can the executors feel themselves aggrieved under that order, which merely dismisses the petition of their testator? If the order had directed payments out of his estate, this might have presented some ground of appeal; that this—

Justice Grant.—What is the prayer of Mr. Macintyre's petition?

Mr. Leith.—That he may be discharged from being Assignee, and may be allowed such monthly allowance for his services during the period in which he was Assignee, as may be deemed fit, just, and proper, and that the charge of the establishment since the date of the insolvency, may be allowed to continue as a charge and at the debit of the said estate.

Mr. Clarke.—That makes the case stronger. The order makes no charge upon his estate: it may be the foundation for a charge; had an order been made by the court charging his estate, it might have been different. The court is empowered to direct by whom the costs shall be paid; under this we are, if the court shall decide with us, entitled to have the costs of the present proceedings, and the costs of the proceedings below. The petitioners are not subject to the Insolvent Court,—they are not parties in any of the proceedings below,—they are not creditors; the court, I submit, has no power to make an order for costs, as against them; they appear here merely as executors of an estate. If the court has power to make an order against them for the proceedings in the court above, it certainly can make no such order for the costs of the proceedings in the court below, to which they were not parties; they are only responsible to the court above, as far as the estate of Mr. Macintyre will go. Now suppose his estate is insolvent; the court cannot award costs against them; we have no security, therefore, for our costs in the event of the court deciding in our favor, and they ought not to be heard.

Mr. Turton.—"Mr. Clarke by reading the prayer of the petition has answered himself." The learned counsel was proceeding to argue for the petitioners, but was stopped by the Chief Justice.—We entertain no doubt, Mr. Turton, as to the right of these parties to appeal. As to the costs we have no difficulty, for if we make an order we have power to carry it into effect.

Mr. Turton.—Then opened the case on the part of the petitioners. Without going through all the circumstances of the case, it is sufficient to inform the court, that Mr. Macintyre was in February 7th, 1834, appointed assignee with a remuneration for his services of 4 per cent. on all dividends. After two years service as assignee he dies before a dividend is made. The question is whether he shall be permitted to charge the estate with the expenses of the management, and whether being permitted to use the funds of the estate for carrying on the estate, he shall be permitted to have his expenses saddled on the estate. I am not surprised that the executors should think themselves aggrieved. No person will contend that a dividend could have been made, before Mr. Macintyre's death, and if it could have been made, as it since has of 5 per cent, his commission could not have been sufficient to have paid his expenses laid out in the management. The point is, is Mr. Macintyre entitled to charge any thing whatever on the estate? It has been attempted to apply the doctrine respecting the wages of seamen, as analogous to this case. It does not apply; and if it did it makes for the claim of the petitioners. A sailor if he dies on a voyage, gets his wages up to the time of his death. If by the act of God, he is sick during the whole voyage, he is entitled to his wages, on completing the voyage. The safety of the ship is the ground on which the sailor is paid; but that does not apply here: if the estate were wrecked, it might be different; the rule depends upon the safety of the thing, and not on the safety of the individual. The real object of the rule was the encouragement of commerce. The safety of the ship was the mother of freight, and freight was the mother of wages. I think it never can be contended by any one, that the expenditure whatever it was, was to come out of the pocket of the assignee. If this were to be the case, no person could be appointed, who was not rich enough to pay the whole expenses, and carry on the estate, until a dividend could be made, and if he should die before, the whole of his advances are to be lost. I do not understand that there is even a pretence, that such should be the case; if so, after the 1st or 2nd dividends, by far the largest, he would be enabled to resign, he might say, I have laid out my money for the best return, the best share of the estate is gotten in and what remains may wind itself up as it can. It is now to be considered what is to be done when the intentions of the two contracting parties, the assignee and the creditors, are frustrated by the act of God. I say nothing of 2 years' hard work, and some abuse, which has been lavished on Mr. Macintyre, and that at a time and in a place, when he could not meet it. He has been abused for shipping indigo to England; the turn out of the sales at home has exceeded by £8,000 sterling, the estimated value put by Mr. Macintyre on the indigo here. He has been abused for mismanagement. An assignee is very frequently left to the discretionary exercise of his judgment, and the human intellect is not infallible.

Chief Justice.—All this matter as to the management of the estate we shall not enter into: the question is, what construction we ought to put on the order of the 11th of January, 1831. Here the learned judge asked for the order of the 6th February, 1834, by which the assignee was allowed to defer the sale of property for a year, and to raise money by mortgage for the carrying on the factories.

Mr. Justice Malkin.—The production of this order is material. Supposing I was right that the party was bound by his contract; and that because he derived not the benefit he expected, he should not therefore be allowed to rescind it. But if under this order of Court, a new course of dealing was entered into, and he then became exposed to greater expenses that might make a difference in the decision of the Court as to the question of remuneration.

Mr. Turton handed up the order of the 6th Feb. 1834.

Mr. Clarke objected to its being read, the order was not before the Court below, and "I submit the Court ought to take only those proceedings before the Court below. They have no right to read it here, or to insert it in their petition; it is only on those grounds before the Court below, on which the order, now appealed against, was made, that the Court here can reverse, or determine upon that order."

Mr. Turton.—My Lord, the order of Jan. 1834 was made in consequence of a meeting of creditors directed by the Court, who recommended 1,200 Rs. a month to be allowed out of the estate, to the insolvents, and 4 per cent. commission on all dividends to the assignee. This order was then made in pursuance of the recommendation of creditors; I consider that it never would have been intended, but that the salary to Mr. Browne and Mr. Cullen should be paid monthly, but it was never intended that if the act of God should intervene, the assignee should pay the salary out of his own funds. The act of God has intervened. It is utterly impossible we should be charged under this order with interest on money expended, in carrying on the establishment. It is sufficient for the man to give up his remuneration, as he could not fulfil his contract, but he should not be called on to bear losses or expenses incurred in the management of the estate.

Justice Malkin.—Suppose after winding up the estate the commission on the dividend would not have been sufficient to satisfy the sum expended by the assignee?

Mr. Turton.—He is not responsible for what he has properly expended on the estate. The whole contract is at an end by the act of God. He has not earned his remuneration, but he is not responsible for what he has fairly and duly expended; that is my objection to the order; he ought to have been wholly absolved, or not discharged at all, by the order.

Justice Malkin.—There were several orders, the first petition prayed his discharge, the second prayed to charge the estate with his expenses.

Chief Justice.—I recollect that on the first petition I was very unwilling to make the order, but health required he should go to sea.

Justice Grant.—I think you are entitled to consider his illness which necessitates his going to sea, as the act of God.

Mr. Turton.—I have always considered that there is no substantial difference between the act of God, which incapacitates from duty and the act of God which destroys. Suppose he had recovered, would he have been entitled to resume the management, and complete a dividend? I consider the whole contract as void on both sides, consideration having totally failed.

Justice Malkin.—The assignee would not have been discharged, but for the fact of his life having been in danger.

Mr. Turton.—Justice Grant discharged Mr. Burkin-yong under similar circumstances. Mr. Macintyre's estate is entitled to be defrayed the sums expended by Mr. Macintyre in the management of the insolvent estate.

Mr. Leith, who appeared with Mr. Turton for the petitioners. This is an application from a Court of Equity, to a Court of Equity, and the rules of equity will be those by which the court will regulate its decision, the order of the 6th of February, 1834, orders that the assignee be allowed to pay the expenses of carrying on the estate out of the estate. His own remuneration to be paid out of a commission when a dividend shall be made; no dividend had been made by Mr. Macintyre, and no commission received by him. The period of making a dividend was postponed by Mr. Macintyre himself, by his laying out assets to come to hand, in the redemption of mortgages on the estate, which course he deemed would be for the ultimate benefit of the insolvent estate. Were he an assignee under the bankruptcy acts at home, he would be allowed to charge the estate for his services: this depends on no particular claim, but on the general principle, which governs matters in bankruptcy. Mr. Macintyre is not to be charged personally, he having delayed his own remuneration for the benefit of the estate, and by the act of God, subsequently intervening, the dividend out of which his remuneration was to accrue, not having been made, the report of the committee recommended Mr. Macintyre's expenses be deposited out of the estate, Mr. M. giving up his four per cent. commission. Application was made to the court by Mr. Macintyre in the terms of the report. Here, therefore, is a report made by a committee assembled under an order of the Insolvent Court, and an application by the assignee in the terms of the report.

Justice Malkin.—This case has nothing to do with the matter; the question for the court is, was he bound by his contract?

Mr. Leith.—Then, my lord, I submit that this order must be taken to be wholly inoperative.

Chief Justice.—That may be, Mr. Leith; the question turns upon the order against which you appeal. I myself I believe made the other order (laughter.)

Mr. Leith.—Oh, my lord, I did not mean to say your lordship made a bad order, my assertion was only what in law we call "a remote possibility." The order of the 6th September, 1834, gives the assignee powers to postpone sales, to raise money on mortgage for carrying on the factories, &c.; this order sanctions his paying himself. It says the second assignee shall be at liberty to advance money as he had already done, confirming him in the power to apply the funds of the estate, for the purposes of the estate. It is impossible from this to suppose, that he ever meant to charge himself with the expenses of the estate, with the prospect of being paid by a commission on a dividend, when such dividend should be made. But if the estate should have turned out so badly, as not to allow of a dividend, a court of equity would have compelled Mr. Macintyre to defray out of his own estate, the expenses incurred by him in winding up the estate. The contracting parties can be put in the same condition, in which they stood previously to the contract. Indeed the estate is better off than before Mr. Macintyre undertook charge of it, the act of God prevented him from getting his remuneration, the one party (the creditors) therefore can be put not only in the same condition they held previously to the contract with Mr. Macintyre, but even in a better, for they have had an assignee for two years for nothing; and a dividend is now made in consequence of the unremitted exertions of Macintyre. He is deprived by the act of God of his remuneration, he ought not to be deprived by the court of his equitable claims on the estate. To do justice to both parties, the court should allow Mr. Macintyre his expenses, the assignees of the other insolvent estates have received under orders of the Insolvent Court a monthly allowance.

Chief Justice.—Not so; some have had commission some a salary.

Mr. Leith.—To resume; the order of the 6th February, 1834, allowed the assignee to advance money for the general purposes of trade out of the assets which came to hand, he had them for the sanction of the Court, under the second order for the outlay of monies.

Justice Malkin.—He was allowed by this order to do exactly what he had done before, under the first order with such assets as came to hand.

Mr. Leith.—On the general principles which obtain in bankruptcy he was entitled to charge his remuneration.

Justice Malkin.—The assignee in bankruptcy, until the last Bankrupt Act, had no remuneration for his services, and an assignee in England has no opportunity of making such a bargain as Mr. Macintyre has made.

Mr. Leith.—Then suppose that Mr. Macintyre, for a future uncertain and unexecuted consideration had undertaken to pay office rent, and to defray accruing expenses, the consideration remaining unexecuted, would a Court of Equity allow him to be the loser? The court must put the parties in the same condition in which they stood previously to the contract.

Justice Malkin.—You cannot now put the parties in the same state in which they were before the contract. You cannot make the present assignee go on the same terms with Mr. Macintyre: he has a right to make a fresh bargain.

Mr. Leith.—This is not the cause of a person being able to complete his contract; and who says let me off, I don't like any bargain. Here the contract is put an end to.

Mr. Clarke.—(For the Trustee of opposing creditors.) Mr. Turton commenced with stating that remuneration was now abandoned, and that the question was, whether Mr. Macintyre was to replace in the funds of the estate such sums as he took out, for the purposes of carrying on the management. I admit that considerable sums of money must be advanced; but not that the assignee should not be called upon to pay the money so advanced back to the estate out of his own funds. The simple question is has there been a bargain, and can they set it aside?—and then comes the question does the assignee deserve any thing whatever from the estate?

Justice Grant.—The difficulty is, whether the bargain has not been set aside, by a power infinitely greater than that of the court.

Mr. Clarke.—If the court shall go in the question of management, and whether there has or has not been mismanagement, I will go into the whole course of management of the estate, by Mr. Macintyre, the whole matter shall be brought before the court.

Mr. Turton contends that there is no similarity between the cases of the sailor and the assignee. I liken the dividend to the freight; the contract with the assignee is you shall take your wages out of the dividend; the contract with the sailor is, you shall take your wages out of the freight; no dividend therefore, no commission to the assignees, no freight earned, no wages to the sailor.

Mr. Turton has also contended that if the act of God prevented the completion of the contract, the party so prevented is not entitled to remuneration: but is not to be put in a worse condition than before he entered into the contract.

Justice Grant.—It is not a condition of all contracts that the party shall live to complete them?

Mr. Clarke.—No, my lord, suppose a round sum of money had been given to Mr. Macintyre to wind up the estate, and he had died before winding up, must his executor refund? I contend not; he must give his services as long as he can, but if he cannot go on, no claim survives to the creditors against his executors. The order of the court below actually excludes Mr. Macintyre from his claim to remuneration; another point is then taken by my friends, whether the first order is not extended by the order of the 6th September, 1834, I submit this last order cannot be produced. It was not used before the court below. Your lordships here are to determine only on the proceedings put in the court below. The words of the 4th section of the act are these:

"It shall be lawful for the court or judge, to whom the petition of appeal shall be presented, to order that the whole of the evidence, if any, which shall have been so taking down in writing as aforesaid and the minutes and records of proceedings, of which complaint shall have been made shall be brought before it."

If your lordships let in new matter, I will ask if it is not a new trial, and so new matter of all sorts may be introduced. This is a substantial and distinct order, and was not urged upon the court below, and cannot now be produced to influence this court's determination of the court below.

Justice Grant.—There is no doubt about the rule, you cannot bring new evidence before the court of appeal.

Mr. Clarke.—Why are we to be brought here then at all the expense of an appeal, and to have new matter produced, which had it been produced to the court below, would possibly have produced a different order, and have so rendered this appeal unnecessary? I therefore ask the court whether they now receive that order of the 6th Feb. 1834.

Mr. Turton.—I submit that my friend is not entitled to stop in his argument, and to take the opinion of the court on this point without my being heard.

Chief Justice.—Yes, of course, you must be heard upon the reception of this order by the court.

Mr. Turton.—Well, then, I submit, that the whole proceedings in the cause, at the time of the appointment of the assignee, are before the court, and we are therefore entitled to have it in.

Mr. Clarke.—This order was not about the appointment of the assignee, and if every thing used in argument by counsel, is to be considered a proceeding before the court, what a mass of things would your lordships now have before you. We have it now before the court, for my friend has embodied it in his petition. But if the argument of Mr. Turton go for any thing, what will be the consequence? The parties must come into the Court of Appeal perfectly ignorant of what they respectively bring into Court; as they must have every order and proceeding which ever took place in the matter of the insolvency in the Insolvent Court, brought here at an enormous expense. I submit your lordships have not the power to receive this order; the 4th section of the act regulates what the Court may receive.

Chief Justice.—We are of opinion that this order cannot be read—this point has been expressly decided in this Court when Sir W. Russell presided, on a similar appeal from the Insolvent Court. If we are to have this order before the court, we must have every order which was ever made in the matter, in the Insolvent Court; we decide, therefore, it cannot be read.

Mr. Clarke.—Then that saves a good deal of argument with which I should have troubled the court. As to the doctrine laid down by Mr. Leith that under 1 and 2, 4 Wm. c. 56, the assignee would have a right to his remuneration in matters of bankruptcy, and the analogy attempted to be set up by my friend; I will call your attention to the case ex-parte Bray 1st. Rose 144, there is an express direction under this act of the 1st and 2d, 4 Wm. c. 56, for the remuneration of the assignee in bankruptcy, but there is no such direction in the Indian Insolvent Act. The Court of Bankruptcy require the authority of Parliament, before they assume the right to decide on the remuneration of their assignees. The Insolvent Court here should require the same high authority. They have no such authority, and have no authority or right whatever to make any order respecting the remuneration of an assignee of an insolvent estate. He has nothing here to stand upon but his bargain, and in the absence of the authority of the legislature, the court ought to take upon itself to give remuneration to Mr. Macintyre. The report of the committee has been laid stress upon by my friends, they divided I think 7 to 5, and were therefore a very limited number. This proceeding therefore of the few ought not to weigh with your lordships, to rescind a contract entered into with the assignee, with the assent of the general body of the creditors at the first meeting. By the order of the 11th Jan. 1836 made upon Macintyre's own petition, he prays that the recommendation of the creditors be acted upon, and I submit that both parties are therefore bound. I submit that this court cannot go further than a Court of Equity will go. Here there is no hardship, but if there were hardship in the case, I lay it down broadly, that hardship is no ground in equity to set aside a contract. Here is Mr. Macintyre, a person conversant with insolvent estates, experienced in business, and it is ridiculous to argue that Mr. Macintyre did not know what he was about; he was a candidate for the situation of assignee, there were many other candidates, and much canvassing took place. He was successful, and the bargain was made for him at the meeting. He acceded to the bargain, and from it he cannot recede; there is no ground either of hardship, fraud, or surprise. Mr. Macintyre entered into the contract with his eyes open, and must be bound by it. Suppose the bargain had turned advantageously for the assignee, it was the general opinion a short time before the insolvency, that the estate would pay 18 annas. Mr. Macintyre, had the estate wound up as it was anticipated, would have realised between 3 and 4 lacs as his commission on the dividends. This I presume would have afforded to the creditors a ground of application to this court, to set aside the contract with the assignee, on the ground of hardship to them; would the court set aside the contract on this ground, that the bargain had turned out better for Mr. Macintyre than was anticipated? This is the converse of the proposition. I submit that this court has not an arbitrary authority to allow any given rate of interest to the assignees. My friends are investing this court with an authority not given them by the act of Parliament. I will now shew not only there is no hardship, but that the loss, if any, to Mr. Macintyre, has arisen out of his own negligence.

Chief Justice.—You must argue this on the supposition that Mr. Macintyre is a meritorious assignee, and the question is, whether as such he is entitled to remuneration.

Justice Malkin.—I thought he was bound by his contract, whatever might have been his conduct as assignee, and I would not, therefore, allow the other side to go into the facts of the management. I thought it unnecessary.

Mr. Clarke.—It has been considered that 4 per cent. is a large commission on the dividends; but if the Court allows the sum of 92,000 Rs. asked for by Mr. Macintyre, it will add to the commission allowed to Mr. Holroyd; supposing the turn out to be—Rs. it would be saddling the estate with a commission of 7 instead of 4 per cent.

Justice Malkin.—If the court decides that Mr. Macintyre is entitled to his 95,000 rupees expenses, the order for a commission of 4 per cent. to Mr. Holroyd can easily be altered.

Mr. Clarke.—The order has been made, and Mr. Holroyd has acted under it, and it would be a question, whether the court would alter the rate of remuneration to a meritorious and active assignee, no charge, or ground of dissatisfaction, appearing against him.

Mr. Turton replied to Mr. Clarke, and the court gave judgment.

Chief Justice.—There is a difference of opinion on the bench which I regret. I do not give my judgment with the same confidence I otherwise should, when I find it opposed to that of the learned judge who decided the case in the court below. The learned judge refused to entertain the petition of Mr. Macintyre; he thought himself precluded by the order of 7th January, 1834. The first question is the construction to be put by the court on the order. Had the party been still alive, he must have abided by the order. And had his commission on the dividends proved insufficient to remunerate him for his services and outlay, he could not have got more. That is Mr. Turton's argument, and I think it is the proper construction to be put upon the order. I myself made the order, and that certainly was my intention in framing it. I should say had he lived, he would have been entitled only to commission. If the only question were, as to the construction to be put on the order, the learned judge who decided in the court below was in my opinion right. But there is another point. Mr. Clarke has argued that this is a bargain between the assignee and the creditors. I think it is no such thing. It would be impossible to carry into effect the Insolvent Act, if we had not the power to give remuneration to the assignee. The creditors cannot bind the assignee, their consent was only a matter of evidence, to guide the court in fixing the amount of remuneration. The court has done as, I think, they have the power to do. The court in the exercise of its equitable jurisdiction has the power to consider this order, looking at all the circumstances of the case, and to alter it if it shall see proper so to do. We are bound to take Mr. Macintyre as a meritorious assignee. He dies before his remuneration accrues. I shall consider the question, as to whether he is, or is not, entitled to remuneration. The order is the act of the court; and not a bargain between the parties; they have a right to alter the order should circumstances require it. The presiding judge in the court below must review the whole matter. The only order we shall make is: That the order dismissing the petition be discharged, that will give the parties an opportunity of coming before the Insolvent Court, and showing all the circumstances under which Macintyre may be entitled to remuneration. Each party must pay his own costs. The learned judge has put the right construction on the order itself; but I think the court ought to entertain the question.

Justice Grant concurs in the foregoing judgment. The meaning of the order is quite clear. The assignee was to get no commission until dividends were payable, out of that commission the charges were first to be paid, and what remained was his own remuneration. The nature of the estate to be managed, and the nature of the charges must be taken into consideration. The majority of creditors cannot bind the minority; but the court has been in the habit of taking the opinion of the majority, as evidence reasonable and practicable, but the court is not bound by it. The learned judge then went into the account of the property, the debits and credits. The first years must necessarily be the years in which the greatest outlay takes place, the latter years, the period in which remuneration can be anticipated. The order, therefore, contemplated that the assignee should remain in office until the winding up of the estate. The order if held to bind the assignee, would be in the nature of a wages, which I cannot consider it, as between the court and its officer, the contract, if contract there was, was put an end to by the death of the assignee. An assignee is as to this matter the officer of the court. No man is to make a profit by another man's loss. The creditors who oppose this, contend de lucro captando; the executors of the assignee on the other hand, contend strictly, de damno vitando. There can be no doubt which of those parties equity will assist. We are interpreting an order of a court of justice appointing its own officer, and his remuneration in such a manner as to excite in him the greatest activity; but I cannot suppose that the court contemplated to make a bargain with its officer, in the nature of a wages, and I cannot hold that it is equitable, that the creditors are to make a gain, at the expense of a man's family, and at the risk, perhaps, of reducing them to beggary.

Justice Malkin.—This appeal is allowed upon grounds very different from those upon which I made the decision, upon grounds likely to lead to uncertainty, mischief and expense, overhauling and upsetting arrangements, made at a considerable time after it. I agree with the construction put upon the order by the Chief Justice. I hold that it is in the nature of a wages,—one party plays a game, wherein he puts the contingency of his own life against the chance of a large remuneration. The argument of the act of God cannot apply. I am not prepared to abandon the construction I put upon the order. This decision will lead to a completely new practice in the Insolvent Court. In each of the cases mentioned by the Chief Justice, where alterations have been made, in the arrangements with assignees as to their remuneration, they were alterations after the period, for which the arrangements had to run. Mr. Leith argued that an assignee would have a right to apply for relief, on the winding up of the estate if there was an insufficient out-turn of the estate, and there were no funds left, for the payment of his expenses in managing the estate. If the orders of the court are thus to be overhauled, and altered for the benefit of the assignee, I presume the same operation may take place for the benefit of the creditors, and they also have a right to come in and change the order, and the rate of remuneration to the assignee. The result of the present decision goes the length that whatever orders are generally made in the first instance, they in the end are to go for nothing, as they may be varied, altered, or totally changed, according to circumstances, and the turn of the estate. I am not clear that the Court has any right.—Englishman.

THURSDAY, JUNE 30.

Russick Chunder Weoghy v. Hurromoney Dossee.

Advocate-General.—I have to move to make a rule absolute.

Mr. Turton shewed cause. The order is that Briggscoonder Chuckerbutty should shew cause, why he did not attend the court to give evidence, in pursuance of subpoena served. My friends have an affidavit that he is a mooktear of the defendant. I have the man's affidavit, and he swears that he was mooktear neither for the defendant, nor plaintiff, but a mooktear general for all persons who may choose to employ him in the Mofussil court; he also swears that he was in attendance four days in court, before trial, and that on the day on which the trial came on, he was very ill, and that the defendant who subpoenaed him, sent him his own family priest, to give English medicine.

Advocate-General.—This affidavit's only merit is, that it is sworn the last. If I could now file an affidavit, I would contradict it in every particular. He sent us no message that he was ill. If he had the court would have put off the trial. But why is there no statement from any native doctor? Why no affidavit from any of his friends?

Chief Justice.—This affidavit is the last sworn. The motion is for an attachment, a criminal matter, and we must take the affidavit as true. You, Mr. Advocate, may indict him for perjury if you please.

Advocate-General.—My Lord, to indict him for perjury would be to injure ourselves in the cause, in which he is a material witness (laughter.)

Rule discharged with costs.

Chawnemoney Dossee v. Rangoput Sein.

Mr. Dobbs, with whom was Mr. Grant, stated the case.

This was an action of trover brought by the plaintiff, the wife of the defendant! to recover some gold and silver ornaments which she held in stridhun, and which were given to her at the time of her marriage. The marriage took place some time in the year 1820, the facts of the case were detailed by the first witness.

Muddosoolden Sein.—I am the uncle of the plaintiff; she was married in, — I was present at her marriage; the plaintiff lived about a year and a half with her husband when he sent her back to her father; the reason he sent her back, was that he was angry with her, because she had an ominous mark on her back, (she was afflicted with some disease, the leprosy, was not proved by the witness). The ornaments were given her partly by her father, and partly by her husband's father; they consisted of gold and silver. I went to her husband, and said if you will not live with the woman give back her ornaments. He said if I did not go away, he would kick me from the house. He detained the ornaments when he sent her back to her family. She was about 8 or 9 years old when she was married. The ornaments were given to her at the time of marriage as stridhun. I can state that the value of the ornaments was between 7 and 800 rupees.

Mr. Turton.—For the defendant submitted that the evidence of the conversion by the defendant was very slight; and that the ornaments given to plaintiff by the father-in-law, could not be considered as stridhun, or the private and peculiar property of the wife, plaintiff; and that she was entitled only to recover the value of the ornaments given to her by her own family.

Chief Justice.—We are of opinion that the whole is stridhun, and though the evidence of conversion is very loose, and the whole case very slight, yet such as it is, it has not been met by any case whatever on the part of the defendant. She must have a verdict for 688 rupees. Verdict for plaintiff 688 rupees.

Adam Maxwell v. R. H. Browne and others.

This case came on exceptions to the Master's report; it lasted the greater part of the day, but possessed no public interest. Exceptions stand over for judgment. The court then disposed of several ex-parte cases.

Bissumber Seal v. Ramdhane Bonnerjee.

The decree in this case was that fraudulent mortgages be set aside, and for a receiver, and injunctions until foreclosure at suit of the complainant, who is second mortgagee.

Hurrenmay Dossie v. Radamodub Saks and others.
Stands over till Monday to allow parties to settle.

Hurrykisen Misser v. Ramkisen Paray.
Decree for sale, to satisfy mortgage debt.

Twentyman v. Woollaston.
Decree for an account of testator's estate.

Rammohun Dutt v. Peter Foster.
Decree for an account of partnership dealings in the pleadings mentioned.—Englishman.

FRIDAY, JUNE 24.

Upon an application made in the Insolvent Court on behalf of Mr. W. F. Fergusson, one of the late firm of Fergusson and Co., for a final release under the new Act, Mr. Justice Malkin took occasion to explain, that his former refusal to grant releases to persons absent was given contrary to his individual opinion, but on the ground that the Chief Justice had expressed an unqualified opinion that the presence of the parties applying was necessary. However, at the last sitting of the Court, Mr. Turtin having pressed for a decision in the case of Mr. Browne and Mr. Ballard, he had thought that he had no right to refuse them the benefit thereof, according to his own construction of the Act; and subsequently Sir Edward Ryan having explained, in the case of Mr. Goddard, that he would not have applied that principle to parties who had obtained the ordinary discharge, Sir Benjamin Malkin said he had directed the officer of the Court to make out the orders for Messrs. Ballard and Browne's releases, and he would give the same direction now with respect to Mr. Fergusson. But he could not say whether the Chief Justice would consider absentees entitled thereto, who should not have obtained the ordinary discharge. That order, however, having been obtained by the partners in the firm of Mackintosh and Co., as well as in all the above cases, which was a presumption that the Court was satisfied with their conduct, he considered Mr. John Storm was entitled to a release, though absent, as much as his late partner Mr. Gordon to whom it had been given.

An adjourned hearing in the Estate of Palmer and Co. having in the mean time been called on, Mr. Prinsep reminded the Court that a petition presented by him on behalf of the Members of that firm had stood over for consideration this day; and in the terms of the prayer of it, he now asked the Court to grant the same order of adjudication with respect to this Estate, which had been made with respect to others, or to discharge the Petition of the insolvents from the file altogether.

Mr. Prinsep challenged an examination of the Schedules of all the late Agency Houses, as bearing him out in the assertion that there was nothing in the conduct of this Estate different from that of the others; to justify a distinction prejudicial to those whom he represented. He pressed this application in order to put his clients on the same footing with the rest, and because, from what had just fallen from the Court, he feared that if the order of adjudication were not made, Mr. C. B. Palmer, who was now in Europe, unable perhaps on account of his health ever to come out again, would be precluded altogether from obtaining a release. He conceived the parties were entitled to the order without an examination, and that indeed the Court could not consistently with its own practice order a previous examination. But two of the parties (Mr. G. A. Prinsep and Mr. William Prinsep) who were now present, were quite ready to be examined to-day or at any other time and to any extent which the Court might prescribe, and it was his intention to ask for it on their behalf.

The Commissioner observed that there were many objections, under the circumstances, to going into such an examination as he had before suggested, which it seemed to him would only occupy the time of the Court without causing any discovery of a nature to disqualify the parties from their right to a release; but as he thought some such examination ought in all cases to have preceded the first order of discharge, and therefore he could not grant such order now in this case, without some qualification to prevent its being quoted as a precedent against his view of the proper course of proceeding; and again as he must refuse an application for an examination, if made, for the above reason; he suggested that the most convenient course would be for Mr. Prinsep to withdraw his present petition, and go upon that previously before the Court, for general release; adding, that he would look at the Statute between this and next Tuesday and then communicate with Mr. Franks as to the manner in which he would make the necessary order, which should have effect from to-day; and Mr. Prinsep might in the mean time put in a petition for Mr. C. B. Palmer notwithstanding his absence.—Calcutta Courier.

MISCELLANEOUS NEWS.

CALCUTTA.

ATROCIOUS ASSAULT.—A statement has recently been published of a most atrocious assault committed by the satellites of the Alleeport Sudder Ameen's Court on Mr. Charles Reed, while within the precincts of the Sudder Dewannee Adawlut, and in direct opposition to the orders of one of the judges of that court. He was seized while on the staircase of the Court, where he had a writ pending, forcibly dragged down, brutally felled to the earth and bruised, pulled bare-headed through the sun, forced into a keranchee and hurried off to the Ameen's Court, by whose order he was released, as the defence which had been made the plea of ill-using him, had been previously referred to arbitration, and was enforced in direct opposition to the will of the party in whose favor it was made.

STEAM PETITION.—One thousand five hundred and fifty-nine additional signatures in favor of the Steam Petition, from twenty-five places in the Mofussil, making in all four thousand and ninety signatures from eighty-three places, have been sent home by the Kyle. These added to the names on the petition, make the total number of signatures seven thousand six hundred and thirty-two.

POLICE OFFICE, June 21st.—Mr. Longueville Clarke appeared before Mr. Justice McMahon, and swore the peace against Mr. Bargrave Wyborn, who he believed intended to provoke him to fight a duel. Mr. McMahon asked on what grounds the application was made; when Mr. Clarke submitted a letter which he had received from Mr. Wyborn, in which that gentleman distinctly called on him to give him satisfaction for an offensive term used by Mr. Clarke to him. On this, a messenger was sent for Mr. Wyborn to attend, and after going into the case, it was decreed, that Mr. Wyborn should enter into securities, himself in five thousand rupees, and two sureties of two thousand five hundred rupees each, to keep the peace to all his Majesty's subjects, and to Mr. Clarke in particular, for a period of twelve months.

BABOO FRANKISEN HALDAR.—This man, who has recently returned from transportation beyond sea, in gratitude for his safe restoration to his country and friends, gave notice of his intention to visit the shrine of Kafi on a particular day, and great in consequence was the concourse of expectant visitors who had assembled to congratulate him, and to join in the ceremonies requisite for his purification. But the law had not quite done with its persecutions; the elves of Mr. Staggs were on the alert, with certain mysterious bits of paper. The appearance of these birds of ill omen put a stop to the intended ovation, and the multitude returned disappointed to the place whence they came.

BABOO RAJCHUNDER DOSS.—Baboo Rajchunder Doss, a wealthy Benundar, well known to both the European and native community, for his benevolent disposition, paid the debt of nature about one o'clock of the 9th of June, after an illness of fifteen hours duration, deeply and sincerely regretted by his friends and relatives. He was seized with an attack of apoplexy about the same o'clock on the preceding morning. In the Baboo, the public, and the native community more especially, have suffered a great loss. Besides the two ghauts, the road, and that princely edifice for the reception of the sick that are carried down to the river's side at the point of death, constructed by him, it was his intention (as he informed one of his most intimate friends, a native gentleman equally conspicuous for his liberality,) to have left better monuments to his memory. Among many other praiseworthy things, he contemplated founding some scholarships in the Hindoo College; but death interfered and frustrated his benevolent scheme.

SIGNORA SCHIERONI.—A very beautiful article of jewellery, of the armllet species, has been prepared by Messrs. Pittar, Lattey and Co. and is to be presented to Signora Scheroni by the gentlemen recently forming the Opera Committee, in testimony of the respect admiration and esteem, which the donors bear to the professional accomplishments and individual worth of that talented and deserving lady.

THE NEW FISCAL REGULATIONS.—The new fiscal regulations have now come into operation, and the following is the scale of the preventive establishment. One Superintendent Inspector, five Inspectors, and thirty-five side waiters. The duties of the Superintendent Inspector, are to control the Inspectors, whilst the latter in their turn pay regular visits to the shipping, on board of which the Custom House Officers are placed. The duties of these latter functionaries do not appear, from all that we have heard, to be of a very pleasant nature. They are required to be constantly on board of the vessels to which they are posted, day and night; and to keep an accurate register of all goods which come in, or go out of the ship.

SAUGOR RAILWAY AND HARBOUR COMPANY.—Mr. Theodore Dickens, has publicly declared that he is not connected in any way with the Saugor Railway and Harbour Company, and that his name has been used without his authority. The names of the other individuals of this community, have also been used without their knowledge.

ROBBERIES.—A robbery was perpetrated by a gang of thieves on the night of the 9th June, in the hut of a washerman residing in the Ramkistepore bazar, on the opposite side of the river. They effected an entrance in the dwelling, while the inmates were asleep, by cutting away part of its thatch wall, and succeeded in removing three bundles of clothes undetected; they next tried to take away a box on which the head of the washerman's wife rested, but the woman being awakened by the attempt, immediately gave the alarm—the thieves then endeavoured to choke her, but it was too late, and they were forced to fly, as the neighbours and chowkedars were hastening to her assistance. They were hotly pursued, but all succeeded in effecting their escape but one, who, after a stubborn resistance, during which he twice wounded the chowkedar who was opposed to him in the leg, with a clasp knife, was cut down with a slight wound on the shoulder, and captured. The man (a lean, muscular, stupid-looking Bengallee) has made some disclosures which has led to the imprisonment of several shop-keepers who have hitherto been considered honest, industrious men, and has also furnished a clue for the capture of a gang of rogues. It appears from what he has stated, that the shop-keepers have been for sometime leagued with a gang of desperadoes residing in Calcutta, whom they used to inform of any place from whence a booty might be obtained, and lay a plan for securing it, which the gang put in execution—hitherto successfully. When the prize was won, it was taken to the shop-keepers, who paid the thieves about one-tenth part of its value for it, and they afterwards took measures for disposing of the property, on a fitting opportunity, in the Calcutta markets. Of course the shop-keepers deny all knowledge of the rogues; but, nevertheless, they have been marched off to the Huzzoor for examination.

The perpetrators of the dacoity which occurred recently at Bourea, being residents of a different district, have not yet been detected; but it is stated that the chowkedar of that place has confessed to having been implicated in the robbery, and to having received his share of the plunder in cash. None of the stolen property has been recovered.

SERIOUS ACCIDENTS.—A serious accident occurred on the evening of the 31st May, at twilight. Mr. Charles Wickens and his brother-in-law were sailing on the river in a bauleah, when they were caught in a north-wester and capsized. Every exertion was made by the Superintendent of Police to render assistance to the gentlemen, but in vain—all trace of them was lost in the darkness of night. The bauleah was picked up the next morning on the Samatra Sand, but the gentlemen were never heard of again. Several dinghees were also capsized, but their crews escaped.

While a Hindoo was bathing in the river at Cossipore, on the evening of the 7th June, an alligator seized and carried him away. When at some distance from the shore the animal rose, and his prey appeared a little above the water, which some of the by-standers observing, swam to the poor man's assistance. The noise occasioned by their approach, induced the alligator to quit its victim who was left on a sand bank, where some boys followed and brought the body on shore, but life was quite extinct.

On the evening of the 12th June, the powder-magazine at Dum-Dum, in which were deposited about one hundred barrels of powder, was struck by lightning and blown up, the concussion of the explosion causing considerable damage. One golumdaz and two other natives were killed and several had their arms broken and received severe bruises. A great number of gun-carriages were smashed to atoms, the houses occupied by Captains Cartwright and Dallas and Dr. Mellis, were greatly injured, and the bricks from the Magazine, &c. sent hissing through the air.

to the distance of several hundred yards, in all directions. The Magazine was about fifty yards from the Main Guard, which received a tremendous shock, and part of a wall about eight feet in length, was completely blown off; the doors and windows of the adjacent dwellings were all broken to pieces, and the Artillery Mess-house greatly damaged. A palankeen-carriage, which was standing about sixty yards from the Magazine at the time of its destruction, had both of the horses knocked down and one of them killed; the doors were burst open and the inmates flung out, one of whom received a severe bruise on the cheek from a brick-bat. The Congee House, which was immediately over the Magazine godowns, had all the doors burst open, and the prisoners were thus afforded free egress; but they were so terrified that they could hardly stir, and were found lying on the floor quite stupified and nearly insensible.

The lightning also struck the superb residence of Baboo Motee Lall Seal at Colootolla—perhaps the most tastefully built of any of the native houses in Calcutta. The electric fluid entered a small room, which the Baboo had left only about ten minutes before, but only destroyed the frame of the Baboo's portrait, which had recently been finished and put up. A Brannin had a hair-breadth escape, having entered the room for the purpose of shutting the windows at the very moment the lightning struck it.

PETITION FOR TRIAL BY JURY, &c.—The Government have returned an answer to the petition of the inhabitants of Calcutta, praying for an extension of the limits of Calcutta, trial by jury in civil cases, and a reform in the court of Quarter Sessions. The government have refused to grant the extension of trial by jury to civil cases and the extension of the limits of the town of Calcutta, but promised to direct the immediate attention of the Law Commissioners to the prayed for reform in the Magisterial department.

PILOTAGE AND STAMP CHARGES.—Government have reduced the stamp charges from sicca to Company's rupees and made a new scale of pilotage and port dues in Company's rupees.

THE CURRENCY.—Complaints still continue to pour in of the extortion practised by the shroffs and zemindars in receiving and exchanging the new coin, both in Calcutta and the Mofussil.

INDIGO.—Accounts from the banks of the Baurgurtee are very unfavorable: all the chur sowings have been burned up or are nearly so, and a very poor crop is expected, as the recent rains will do but little good. The prospects of the Tirhoot planters are better than those of the lower districts, but not quite so good as they were last season.

The following is the estimated out-turn of the present crop in the different districts mentioned.

Western Provinces,.....	5,000

HOUSEHOLD DOCKS.—Messrs. Beauchamp and Co., have obtained the contract for executing the repairs of the Government vessels, boats, buoys, &c., theirs being the lowest tender.

SIR FREDERIC ADAM.—Letters received from the Neelgherries mention, that Sir Frederic Adam will positively quit India in January next, and that his health has been considerably impaired.

DR. MCLEOD.—In consequence of arrangements made in England, Dr. McLeod, Deputy Inspector at Madras, is to come to Calcutta and officiate as Inspector of Hospitals, until a permanent appointment is made, in consequence of Mr. Burke's death.

LANDED PROPERTY.—Landed property appears to be again improving in price: on the 28th of May the house No. 20, in Mangoe Lane, occupied by Messrs. Boyd and Co., was sold by Messrs. Jenkins, Low and Co. to Messrs. Thomas D'Souza and Co., for 78,500 rupees, and the house No. 4, now let to Messrs. McLeod, Fagan and Co., was sold to Mr. Burlingame for 37,500 rupees: a house in the Circular Road sold for 8,000 rupees, and four lots of landed property at Mirzapore, were sold for fair prices.

FEVER HOSPITAL.—Lord Auckland has subscribed one thousand rupees as a donation to the Fever Hospital, besides entering his name as an annual subscriber to the extent of five hundred rupees.

GAMBLING.—At 9 o'clock on the night of the 8th June, a gang of twenty Chinamen and eight natives, whilst gambling in Chinaparran, were apprehended by the police constables headed by Mr. Macan, after a great deal of difficulty; they were taken before the Chief Magistrate, and the case having been gone into, the party were fined five rupees each, and in default of payment to be sent to the house of correction for a term of six weeks. Three other Chinamen of the gang were made to give security of 110 rupees each until they disclose the name of the proprietor of the house in which they were apprehended.

THE TANK IN WELLINGTON-SQUARE.—The extreme drought of the season has brought many of the tanks in Calcutta to their lowest ebb; among these, is that in Wellington-square, which, from the numbers of dead fish and the small quantity of water, has been rendered quite unfit for use and is the cause of much distress in that neighborhood.

SEIZURE OF SNUFF, &c.—It is stated that a seizure of a case of snuff endeavoured to be passed off as wearing apparel, and of six pipes of unmanifested wine, has been made on board of a vessel recently arrived from England. One of the supervisors also made a capture of a great quantity of snuff some days ago.

SUICIDE.—A man named Cossinath, who lived at Jora Sanko, aged about 26 or 27 years, put an end to his existence by hanging himself by the neck with a piece of cloth, on the night of the 12th June, in order to free himself of the torment he suffered from rheumatic pains.

MONSTER.—During the storm on the evening of the 12th June, the wife of a lascar at Dum-Dum, was delivered of a monstrous child with four arms, two enormous teeth, and eyes preternaturally large.

MR. CURNIN.—Mr. Curnin's mission has utterly failed, and that gentleman has been told at the India House, that unless he returned immediately to India, his appointment would be filled up.

THE BENGAL CLUB.—At the Bengal Club meeting on the 14th June, a proposition was made to dissolve the Club with a view to the formation of a new one upon reformed principles: it, however, did not obtain a majority of the voices present, nor did another to reduce the entrance fee from 250 to 150 rupees: but it was resolved to circulate the former proposition among the subscribers.

It is stated that the Editor of the Englishman has at last retired from the Bengal Club, some of his friends having succeeded in convincing him that his being a member is injurious to its prosperity. Since the last six months that he has been a member, 22 resident members and 12 members in the Mofussil have left the Club, while only one has joined it. The retirement of the 22 resident members alone is an annual loss of about 2,200 rupees, and evinces a rapid falling off.

THE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.—The Chamber of Commerce solicited Government to allow grain, raw cotton, and all other gruff goods to be shipped from the merchants' godowns without passing through the Custom-house. This has been conceded, but at present with a limitation to rice and other grain and pulse, coals, dunnage, cotton, and also sugar when shipped in British vessels for any British possession.

GOVERNOR OF MADRAS.—Lord Elphinstone has been appointed Governor of Madras by the Court of Directors.

NEW COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF FOR MADRAS.—The selection of a new Commander-in-Chief for Madras is said to hang between Lord Edward Somerset and Sir Robert Wilson.

EQUALIZATION OF WEIGHTS AND MEASURES.—Government have replied to the letter of the Chamber of Commerce and Trade Association, on the subject of equalization of weights and measures. The answer states that Government have for some time had the measure in view, but in consequence of the difficulty attending it, they would pause for a while, before they sanction a resort to it.

NAWAB FEKBAL-ODD-DOWLAH.—On the 17th June, the Nawab Fekbal-odd-Dowlah arrived here from Benares on board of a Steamer, and landed at the residence of Nawab Tahower Jung, Behadoor, at Chitpore.

PILOT STATION.—It is said to be in contemplation at the Marine Board to have the pilots' cruising station at False Point.

THE BONDING SYSTEM.—It is said that Government have yielded to the request of the Chamber of Commerce, for the introduction of the Bonding system.

SAVINGS BANK.—By the abstract of its operations, comprising a period of two years and six months, the Savings Bank appears to advance in prosperity and importance. The deposits up to the 30th of April last, after deducting the sums withdrawn, amounted to more than seven lakhs and a half of sicca rupees under 1,569 accounts, the average amount at credit of each depositor being 480 sicca rupees. The following sums have been subscribed by the classes mentioned:—

12 Civilians,.....	Sa. Rs.	3726
430 Military men,.....	"	334,938
347 Natives,.....	"	60,125
607 Miscellaneous persons, ...	"	224,840
<hr/>

The deposits of the last three months have averaged 28 per diem in March, 29 in April, and 42 in May, the maximum in any one day being 197 and the minimum 10. The gross amount of deposits last month exceeded 60,000 rupees, being more than in any former month, but not more than the current one is likely to exhibit. The withdrawals of the same period scarcely amounted to one-fourth of the sum deposited.

PORT REGULATIONS.—The Custom's authorities have decided that the moment a vessel inward bound, with salt or foreign goods on which heavy duties are leviable, makes Keldgerree, a blue flag is to be hoisted at the fore, as a signal that she has no custom house officer on board. The communication is to be made to Calcutta immediately, by semaphore, when a person will be sent down to meet her charge take charge.

MOFUSSIL.

RAJAH OF BURDWAN.—The affair of Purtab Chund seems still involved in mystery. It is stated that the trial of the Rajah will be only for his breach of the peace, and not for his title to the guddee, for which the Rajah must himself bring a civil suit in the usual way; the Government has not and will not interfere in it, and have washed their hands clean from the affair. The reason assigned for this course is that a multitude of petitions, memorials, &c. have been poured upon Government, which originated from different quarters, in favour of the assumed Rajah, but which pay for measures contradictory and opposite. If one it is submitted that the Rajah being in jail the applicant in his favour is ready to give 25,000 Rs. as security requisite to bring the Rajah to Calcutta. Another petition prays that the Rajah being unjustly held in insurance on pretence of a breach of the peace, fabricated to suppress his claims, is anxious for an investigation into his title to the guddee by officers appointed by Government at any place where the money influence of his opponent, the present incumbent, may not extend, and to undergo the severe penalty of law in case of being proved an imposter.

ROBBERY AND MURDER.—A respectable native woman, while recently passing through a village called Chandytollah, in the district of Hooghly, in her palankeen, was attacked in a field by a body of dacoits, who murdered the bearers; but the woman by some means escaped and took refuge in a Mahomedan's house. The villains followed her there and stated to the Mahomedan that she was a runaway wife whom they were in pursuit of; but the man, disbelieving their story, prevailed on them to wait a while, and sent information of the case to the thana, when the thanadar arrived and captured the miscreants, who have been sent to the Hooghly Court for trial.

DELHI.—The mortality from fever still continued very great in the city.

A very extensive fire broke out in Delhi a short time since, when one hundred and twenty thatched houses and a brick building, were destroyed.

On the 27th of April, two men who were carrying two thousand four hundred rupees from a soucar in Delhi to Anoopshuhur, were way laid and murdered on the bank of a small stream, by a gang of villains, who carried off the money. They have however been traced and captured, and all but two or three hundred rupees of the money recovered.

A dacoity has also been perpetrated in the Delhi territory by a gang of forty-five miscreants.

The statement that the Resident had taken the administration of the affairs of the great Moghul's Palace into his hands, was incorrect:—no interference is admitted unless the Moghul himself calls for it.

The Government, it is said, have determined on relinquishing their right to a share of the produce of salt manufactured, and to the proceeds of the fairs held at Gorgaun, in honour of the Goddess Setulla, or small pox: the former, with a lease of five years, would realize annually some 6,000, and the latter 8,000 rupees. Notwithstanding this, the revenue this year will average about 78,000 rupees, and in time, it is not improbable but that it will rise as far as 84,000; for the whole of the sugar-cane lands are, at present, used to raise produce of comparatively small value, on account of the high rates which were fixed for sugar cultivation by the late ruler; and a large extent of land lies, at present, uncultivated in different parts of the pergunnah.

MORTALITY IN THE MOFUSSIL.—The present season has been remarkably unhealthy throughout the Mofussil. Accounts from all parts state that great mortality is prevailing: almost every family has suffered at Delhi, and among the natives the deaths have been very numerous. At Benares and Mirzapore the mortality has been frightful, and the loss has been very great among children, chiefly from small pox. The general complaint is a dangerous fever. Accounts from Chunar state that the mortality there has been so very great, that the river is studded with dead bodies.

AGRA.—A most destructive fire broke out in Agra on the 16th of May, by which property to the amount of 50,000 rs. was consumed.

A meeting of the subscribers to the Agra Circulating Library took place on the 16th of May, when it was resolved to discontinue the circulation of periodicals and to transfer the books of the institution to the Station Rooms as a library of reference.

With reference to the dispute between Lieutenants Hall and Loveday, the general commanding the division, has directed the senior officer to refer the case to arbitration, which however he has refused to do, as he conceives such a compromise in the face of the decision of Brigadier Cartwright would be less reparation than he is entitled to.

Orders have been received by the local authorities so to entertain pilots for the navigation of the Jumna by the iron steam boats, one of which is to be despatched from Allahabad at the commencement of the ensuing rains or rather early in July. The pilot stations are to be placed on this line of river, at short distances of 25 or 30 miles. The following are the pilot stations recommended to be fixed on the Allahabad and Cawnpore branch of the line. Allahabad, Pedumma, Rajapoor, Ghuddar, Jomgura, Duryabad, Hammeerpoor, Koutar, Menapoore, Oomeerghur, Talapoor, Dubessnuggur, Etawah, Panea, Jaraghegurbee, and Chundwarer.

One of the principals in the robbery of Captain Hay's house, has been sentenced to seven years' imprisonment with labour, as has also one of those who received the stolen goods. A plan is on foot for enabling the Civil and Military Police to act more in concert, and consequently be more effective.

MUSSEORIE.—Several gentlemen have been forced to return as all the passes into the interior are closed, towards Kunawar, in consequence of the severe weather in March. New houses continue to spring up in every direction and the utmost harmony prevails. The Lord Bishop was escorted through the district by Colonel Young.

MEERUT.—Mr. Priest, who distinguished himself a few years back at Mr. Mackinnon's examination, and has since been employed in the Delhi College, has been appointed an assistant teacher in the Meerut Free School.

Mr. Dyce Sombre is making a tour through the Hills, and will shortly take his departure for England.

Sickness has prevailed to an unusual degree in this station, especially amongst the natives, but the mortality has not been great.

A manufactory is established within the jail at this station, at which setringees are fabricated superior to those ordinarily procurable in the market; the price too is under the bazar rate.

Orders have been received, for opening and cleaning the Nullah, which passes through the Cantonments and annually inundates the bazars.

ALLAHABAD.—A great fire took place on the 8th June, destroying the village of Jendapore and causing the loss of several lives. A woman and three children fell sacrifices to the fire, which spread with dreadful rapidity, as a strong gale was blowing at the time, and the buildings, which consisted of very combustible materials, were small and very crowded.

The memorial of the uncovenanted servants of Government stationed in Allahabad, has at last been forwarded with a hundred signatures to the Governor-General.

The Ganges from Futtyghur to Allahabad, has just been surveyed with a view to its navigation by the steamers. Mr. Lindquist came from Futtyghur in a boat, sounding and taking bearings. His report will be delivered to the Board at Calcutta.

The Baiza Baie on the 10th June, moved her camp about a mile beyond Sultan Khosroo's Garden, being the first stage of her departure from Allahabad to Mutra.

On the 7th May the Government dwak bhany was attacked about 27 miles westward of Cawnpore at dark, and 5 pitaruhs carried off by the robbers: one of these pitaruhs, which was for Futtehghur and contained the most valuable part of the despatch, was subsequently found unopened with some parcels of the other pitaruhs, about a mile from the place of plunder towards the Ganges, which is fordable near where the gang divided the spoil.

CAWNPORE.—Every thing in the shape of gaiety, it is said, has been driven out of this station by sickness. Col. Barton is about to proceed to Calcutta, where, it is stated, he will remain, at the head of the Quarter-Master-General's office, until the Commander-in-Chief shall have returned from his tour of inspection in the Upper Provinces.

MIRZAPORE.—Six thousand bales of Banda cotton, were burnt in the godowns in this station, on the 24th of May.

MIRZAPORE.—An encounter recently took place near Mirzapore, between a petty rajah and a petty zemindar, in which several persons on both sides were slain and wounded.

PURNIAH.—Mr. Forbes was attacked by dacoits on the 17th May in his bungalow at 12 P.M. He saved himself and family by wounding two or three of the villains with his gun, which was loaded with small shot, just as the fellows were about spearing him. Mr. Forbes had been from home, but he fortunately arrived from an out party at 8 P.M. the same night, owing to his feeling unwell—he had left home only the day before to be absent some days. A hurkaru was speared in three or four places and Mr. Forbes's dog killed. The Darogah is supposed to be at the head of this business.

TIRHOOT.—A most distressing famine is said to be raging in Tirhoot, and that hundreds of people are dying of starvation daily. There is scarcely any grain to be had and that enormously dear, being all forestalled by the grain-dealers. The indigo planters have contributed greatly to alleviate the sufferings of the famishing population, by employing them to weed their fields, &c.

BOOLUND SHAHUR.—On the morning of the 20th May, a Bramin was executed in this place, for the murder of a man upon whose field his bullock had trespassed.

NATIVE STATES.

TRIAL OF JOTARAM.—Government have issued orders for the trial of Jotaram at Jeypore, and the proceedings will be conducted in the most open manner possible, through the regular local tribunals, and not by a special commission. The charges are to be preferred by a British officer (Lieut.-Col. Speirs, the Political Agent at Neemuch) who will be present at the trial without taking any formal part therein.

HERAT.—Herat, it is said, has been invaded by the Persian troops, under Shah Mahomed their King. Shah Kamran, the ruler of Herat, is shut up in one of his strongholds, but the Persian troops have so hotly besieged it, that little doubt seems to be entertained of his defeat. Dost Mahomed of Cabool, on hearing this, is said to have written to the Persian King, making proffers of submission, and inviting him to Cabool, whence they will proceed to the conquest of Peshawur, Lahore, &c. To this Dost Mahomed is said to have received a favourable reply, intimating that the Persians would be in Cabool immediately.

LAHORE.—Runjeet Singh, in a fit of spleen, caused by Doctor Harland refusing to relieve him of a paralytic affection of the muscles of the face, which caused a strong impediment in his speech, unless he gave him a lakh of rupees, dismissed that gentleman from his service; but on it being hinted to him by his courtiers that the Doctor might make disclosures to the Feringhees of the state of Lahore, the Maha Rajah thought proper to restore him.

Runjeet Singh also, with a determination to eradicate from his dominions the vice of hoarding money, has confiscated the very large wealth of a deceased miser. The heir at law preferred his claims to the property, but His Highness declared the abhorrence he entertained of so disgusting a propensity, and his sense of duty, compelled him to make an example, and keep the money, and that, however frequent were the instances of indulgence in it, he would never neglect using the same means to suppress it.

JEYPORE.—It is said that much anxiety is felt by the Rajpoots, as to the result of the investigation at Jeypore. They are said to be assuming a threatening attitude, and to question the right of the English to demand satisfaction for the blood of one man, when they themselves have to answer for that of so many. They say they are prepared to dispute, inch by inch, the possession of their country, should the English resolve upon seizing it. A great deal of excitement is also said to exist in Jeypore in consequence of the soucars having closed their shops, and refused to transact business. Lieut.-Col. Alves had called upon them to pay up a large sum of money which is due by them to Jotaram, but they refused to accede to his desire until they received a written order from Jotaram himself. Very rigorous measures had been adopted, to force them to give up the money, but to no purpose; they are still firm in refusing to comply with the requisition, until a written order from Jotaram shall have been produced. Guards have been placed over their houses, to prevent egress from the city to any member of their families, and to starve them to compliance.

Lieut.-Col. Alves, in compliance with a numerously signed request, has ordered a well to be dug near the tomb of the late Mr. Blake.

Beem Sing has betaken himself to his old habits, and is now pillaging and plundering with the greatest zeal and alacrity. Some ill timed opposition offered by a few zemindars has added to the eclat and numbers of Beem, who it is said was hastening to oppose some of the troops of the Raj itself.

CASHMERE.—A letter has been sent to Runjeet Singh, by the Hakeem of Cashmere, informing him of the discovery of extensive lead mines in the mountains of Cashmere, and requesting that 12,000 rupees might be sent to work them.

GWALIOR.—It is said that the Resident at Gwalior has been interceding in behalf of Rookma Baie, the widow of Foutca Jogee, who has been in close confinement in Oujein for sometime past, and that his intercession is likely to meet with success.

OODHPHORE.—A gang of Mairwarry plunderers recently made an incursion into the Oodehpore territories, and sacked the town of Gungapote; but on their retreat they were intercepted by the Mairwarra battalion, posted at Todgunga, who succeeded in capturing thirty-one of the robbers, besides killing ten more.

DHOLPUR.—It is said that the young Raja is making himself popular among his subjects by restoring the estates which his father had confiscated and letting loose all prisoners, besides remitting a portion of his income.

BHOPAL.—This place, it is said, is on the eve of being revolutionized by the Putan soldiery employed in it. One of the concubines of the late Nuwab, who has been some time on the throne, has been amusing herself with acting the martinet towards her soldiery, and her conduct has so greatly displeased them, that they have determined on deposing her.

MADRAS.

COORG PRIZE MONEY.—Orders have been received from home, for the distribution of the Coorg prize money.

THE BOAT QUESTION.—At a numerous meeting of the European and native merchants of Madras, held in the Marine Board Office on the 6th June, J. W. Dore, Esq., in the Chair, it was resolved unanimously—

That the present boat system should be retained, with some modifications. The alterations and suggestions proposed by the Marine Board to Government, as detailed in the extract from the minutes of consultation, referred for the consideration of the merchants, are concurred in by the meeting; as also the revised boat lading schedule, submitted by the Board to Government, with their letter dated 19th of April. At the same time it is hoped, that if upon trial, a surplus is found to remain from the accommodation boats at their present rate of hire, a farther reduction may be made; and that if upon experiment being made of the new mode of levying salvage upon anchors, a profit is found to accrue to Government, the rate may be reduced to one-fourth of the market value of the article.

GOOMSUR.—Letters from Goomsur of the 30th May mention, that the sick were being sent to the rear and the force was preparing to fall back for the monsoon, save the regiments destined to remain, which are the 8th, 44th and 50th. A second campaign was talked of against the zemindars on the Bengal frontier, and that a most efficient force would be collected after the rains. Dora Bissoye, the chief rebel, was still at large.

VIOLENT SQUALL.—The Black Town of Madras was visited, on the 1st June with a very violent squall. No damage however was done beyond a dhony having run ashore at Royapoorum. The gale was very partial, and scarcely extended in a southerly direction beyond the Fort; within that limit and Royapoorum it blew furiously, and the effects were seen in the torn off branches and in many instances prostrated trunks of the large trees which line the road across the north esplanade. An unfortunate native was crushed to death by the falling of a tree, and many individuals passing in buggies within its influence, had their vehicles caysized by its force.

THE GOVERNOR OF PONDICHERY.—Trichinopoly has been visited by the Governor of Pondicherry, who saw the force out, and expressed great satisfaction at the general appearance of the different regiments. The 6th Cavalry under their able and meritorious commanding officer, Major Sandys, went through their last review manoeuvres with astonishing rapidity. The French Governor was accompanied by Colonel Fane, whose acquaintance he personally made on the field of Waterloo twenty years ago.

THE BAR.—The following is the present state of the Madras bar: Mr. Norton, advocate-general; Mr. Minchin, clerk of the crown; Mr. Savage, master in equity; Mr. Cator, registrar; Mr. Teed, police magistrate; Mr. Campbell, chief clerk, insolvent court; Mr. Fullerton, petty court.

BREAK-WATER.—The Break-water Committee have published a report of their proceedings for the month of April, showing an expenditure that month of rupees 2,454-9-9, making the total of expenditure 19,454-8-1. Nothing is said of the advancement of the break-water.

SUICIDE.—Major Davis, of the Pension Establishment, who had for some time been labouring under mental aberration, terminated his existence on the 21st of May by taking prussic acid.

NEW LIGHT HOUSE.—Intelligence has been received from the Company's Engineer in London, stating that the Court of Directors have ordered a new light to be furnished for Madras, which is to be revolving to distinguish it from the light house at Pondicherry.

FATAL ACCIDENT.—Lieut. Campbell, while driving with ensign Wood on the evening of the 14th May, was preceipitated from the buggy and had his head so severely fractured, that he expired on the evening of the following day. Ensign Wood escaped almost unharmed though he was pitched to a considerable distance over the horse's head.

BOMBAY.

THE CHOWK SUFFERERS.—The large village of Chouke (on the road to Poona, the first stage from Panwell,) has been almost totally destroyed by fire! About noon, while the greater part of the inhabitants were out in their fields or engaged in other occupations, at a distance from the village, some stubble accidentally took fire. A fresh breeze blowing at the time, and most of the houses being covered with straw, the devastating element spread with fearful rapidity, and in a few hours, from 90 to 100 houses, together with all the property they contained, were reduced to ashes—10 or 12 houses only escaped. Most of the inhabitants have lost all they had in the world—the grain, other provisions, fuel, and fodder for cattle, which they had laid in for the ensuing monsoon, having been all consumed. The sufferers are mostly poor cultivators, labourers, and petty shopkeepers. A subscription has been raised at Bombay for their relief.

SUPREME COURT.—On the 6th June a motion was made before the Supreme Court by the Advocate-General, on behalf of the Commander-in-Chief, for a rule to file a criminal information against the Editor of the Bombay Gazette, for republishing a letter signed Miles which appeared in the Calcutta Englishman of the 24th March. The point in that letter which was considered libellous, was the allegation that Sir John Keane had, without obtaining the concurrence of the Governor in Council, directed a sentence of death which had been passed by a Court Martial at Deesa, on a camp follower named Jhora, to be carried into execution.

The Court, after looking at the regulation and consulting a little time, granted a rule nisi.

CONTRABAND TRADE.—On the 16th of May, Lieutenant Rogers, in command of the H. C.'s brig-of-war Euphrates, by the direction of the Superintendent of the Indian Navy, seized the brig Mootechund, from Goa, laden with opium, under the statute 3rd and 4th of William 4th, chapter 34th, she having broken bulk and landed part of her cargo contrary to that statute and without having entered at the custom house.

An order from Government has since been received for restoring the vessel and her cargo, to the owners. The despatch with which this has been sent down enables the owners of the latter to proceed with their speculations almost as well as if nothing had occurred, and must be highly gratifying to them after the apprehensions they have experienced for the fate of their property.

LAUNCH.—A new pilot vessel, for Bombay, named the Tiptoe, was launched from the docks on the 17th May.

FAILURE.—The old and respectable firm of Shroff Hurka Purshotum, failed on the 16th of May. The debts against the firm are stated to be 500,000 rupees.

COL. VANS KENNEDY.—It is rumoured that it is the intention of the Commander-in-Chief to re-appoint Colonel Vans Kennedy to the office of Judge-Advocate-General of the Army, vacant by the death of Major Miller.

CEYLON.

The Government Gazette of the 7th June, announces the appointment by the Right Honorable the Governor, Sir William Norris to be Chief Justice of Ceylon; and of the Honorable W. O. Carr, Esq., to act provisionally as Second Puisne Justice of the Supreme Court, in the absence of John Jeremie, Esq., who has been appointed by His Majesty to the said office. Also, of the Hon'ble J. PERRINO, Esq., to act as King's Advocate in the room of the Hon'ble W. O. Carr, Esq.; J. J. STAPLES, Esq., to act as Deputy King's Advocate in the room of the Hon'ble J. PERRINO, Esq.; and C. A. MORGAN, Esq., to act as First Proctor for Prisoners in the room of J. J. STAPLES Esq.

SEVERE ACCIDENT.—When the salute was firing at Battenburg Battery, on the 28th May, in commemoration of the anniversary of His Majesty's birth, a 24-pounder went off unexpectedly, whilst two men were in the act of ramming down the cartridge, and blew them both over the ramparts; one to the distance of about 24 yards, where he was found quite dead amongst the rocks, against one of which his head had been dashed with such violence as to smash the skull and force out the brain. The other fell immediately under the rampart, and appeared to have received the principal force upon the right fore-arm, which was torn and marked by the powder, which acted with such violence as to rend the limb asunder at about the centre of the upper arm, which was found hanging to the stump merely by a piece of integument. This unfortunate man lived in great agony for about an hour after the accident. The person who "served the vent had a hole blown through the upper phalanx of his thumb and the lower one broken; which shews that he had his thumb closely applied to the touch-hole when the gun went off. It is supposed that the piece of ordnance is "honey-combed" and to the continuance of a spark of fire in one of these imperfections the cause of the accident is attributed. The names of the two men killed were Wake and Webster.

BARK REGIA.—The Bark Regia, Nunn, for the safety of which fears were entertained, in consequence of her not making her appearance at Ceylon, although chartered for a voyage to England, is advertised for sale or charter in the Mauricien. There can now be little doubt as to the cause of this unexpected change in her destination, as it is stated that Captain Nunn borrowed a large sum of money from two gentlemen at Cochin, one of whom, a resident at Bombay, was the charterer for the voyage home, and who actually came on to Colombo and waited a considerable time in expectation of the Regia's speedy arrival after him.

ASSAM.

THE SINGPHOS.—A letter from Bishonauth, dated 8th instant says, "There is no more likelihood of the Singphos troubling us. The Dutta Gaum gave himself up to Captain Hannay who has now returned to Ava. Part of the Burmese have come down here and go on to Singmanu to try and take back the Burmese settlers from this country. Our Government surely ought not to allow it, considering that it is generally supposed, there are 100,000 slaves, Mannipuris and Assamese, in the Burmes country?"

PENANG.

PILOTAGE OF PENANG.—The following is an extract of a letter, dated 21st April, relative to the pilotage of Penang:—"As several accidents of vessels navigating the South Channel have happened from the commanders not taking the established pilots, I consider it necessary to inform you it will be necessary to guard commanders from running this unnecessary risk, as on their approaching the island from the southward, if they make a signal for a pilot, the Hill Flag Staff will repeat the same, when a pilot will be sent off. The pilotage is cheap being only one rupee a foot draft of water. A fine ship from China got aground and remained five days with a very valuable China cargo of copper, &c."

The excitement which prevailed in Penang, in consequence of an expected attack from the piratical followers of the young Rajah of Perak, assembled at Broos with the declared intention of attacking the Siamese at Kedah, had considerably abated; but precautionary measures were still adopted by the Government. The ex-Rajah of Kedah was still at Broos, living on board of a little brig, and evinced no intention whatever of fulfilling his promise of proceeding to Delhi, in the island of Sumatra. It is reported, that there is a general arming in favor of the ex-Rajah among the Malayan states, the people of which abhor the Siamese and deprecate the conduct of the English towards the Rajah, and aim at extirpating their power in the Straits.

Sir E. J. Gambier's appointment to the Madras Bench, was still confidently reported.

BARK HYDROOSE.—The bark Hydroose, after leaving Penang for China, sprung a leak and was obliged to put back, with a great deal of her cargo damaged.

THE EX-RAJAH OF KEDAH.—The Ex-Rajah of Kedah still remains at Broos, but it is said purposes proceeding immediately to Delhi. He has however shown no indications of such a movement.

THE HYDROOSE.—Upon lightening the Hydroose, her cargo was found undamaged. She was undergoing a thorough caulking and was soon to proceed to sea again.

A DARING MURDER.—A most daring and cruel murder was committed upon two Chinese shop-keepers who resided on the south side of the cross road leading from Macalister's road to the seepoy lines and distant only a hundred yards from the police thanna. The lower part of one side of the back attic wall of the shop was forced open, through which the villains entered and attacking one of the men who was sleeping on his counter or money chest, strangled him; the noise made awoke the other man who was sleeping in a separate room, and who was attacked and seized in the same manner as his companion, but strangled with his own tail! These atrocities were perpetrated without the least noise, as none of the neighbours, some residing within ten yards of the shop, had been disturbed during any part of the night. The murderers opened the counter and carried off all the money that was in it, amounting to about thirty dollars in silver and twenty in copper, leaving behind a parcel of new and other wearing apparel, a small slab of tin and several other articles equally portable. Government have offered a reward of one hundred dollars for the apprehension of any person concerned in the murder, the friends of the unfortunate Chinese have likewise come forward to subscribe a similar sum, and the Police are very actively employed in endeavouring to trace them.

THE ANDROMACHE.—A commission, consisting of Capt. Chads of the Andromache and Mr. Resident Councillor Bonham, has been appointed by Government for the purpose of proceeding to Batavia to obtain the co-operation of the Dutch Governor and thence to the principal Malayan states with a view of establishing with the latter, charts and papers to be carried by native pilots whereby they may be recognized as lawful traders of navigators, and not be considered as pirates; which, after a certain period to be fixed upon, all native vessels are to be that are not furnished with such evidences of their civilization and purity of intention.

SINGAPORE.

SHIPWRECK.—The ship Jadul Kurrem, bound to Amboyna with upwards of three hundred souls on board, the greater part of them native troops for the Moluccas, has been lost and the greater part of the people on board have perished. Count Piquelmont, the commander of the troops, and sixty-two other individuals, reached the shore on a raft after eight days.

PENSIONS TO THE FAMILY OF THE LATE SULTAN OF JOHORE.—The Supreme Government has authorized and directed pensions to be granted to the family of the late Sultan of Johore from whom, in conjunction with the late Tumpongong, the cession of Singapore to the British was finally obtained in 1824. The family numbers four in all—two sons and two daughters—and the pension allotted to each is Spanish drs. 70 a month.

RHIO.—C. F. Goldman, Esq., had been appointed Resident of Rhio.

INSOLVENT ACT.—It was reported, that the Insolvent Act had been extended to the Straits.

PIRACY.—Piracy in the Straits has somewhat abated; the Wolf and Scylla have been out cruising about, and only one junk has since been captured by the corsairs; but we suspect that as soon as the men-of-war return to harbour, the instances of piracy will be as frequent as ever. Nothing but light armed steamers, constantly employed, will be able to exterminate the pirates.

SUMATRA.

Accounts recently received from Padang intimate, that the Dutch had suffered severely in Sumatra in the war with the Padrees, at a place called Bonjal, which they had made three ineffectual attempts to carry: they had been reinforced by a small detachment of troops from Batavia, but were unable to act on the offensive until they received further aid, as their troops in the interior were in a very sickly state. The rule of the Mynheers seems to be very irksome to the Malays in Sumatra, who are constantly forming factions against them, and the weakness betrayed by the Java Government, in their attempts to suppress these, tends to encourage them to persevere in their endeavours to throw off the galling yoke. Unless they change their present ridiculous plan of sending detachments of ten, twenty or fifty men at a time, to reinforce the troops in the field, who are put hors de combat almost immediately after their arrival, either by the Malays or the climate, the Mynheers stand a good chance of being driven out of the island. An epidemic fever had been raging in Padang, which had swept off thousands of its inhabitants, but its ravages had almost subsided when the vessel which brought the intelligence sailed.

A further account up to the end of April, of the war in Sumatra between the Dutch and the aborigines of the soil, has been received, which, while it shews that the Dutch were at last on the point of conquering their stubborn foes, also develops the detestation which the tyrannical rule of Mynheer is held in. The Dutch have once more carried all before them and crushed their opponents vi et armis; but the rule of oppression and tyranny cannot endure, and ere long they will be placed in a predicament, from which they will find it difficult to extricate themselves without the aid of strong reinforcements from home, if at all. General Cleerens had just arrived at Padang from Batavia with a handful of troops, that might rival Fallstaff's recruits in wretchedness of appearance, being the first portion of 2,000 men, intended by the Dutch Government to take Boonjal, the stronghold of the insurgents, by storm. The Government had at first determined to use only their own guarda costa schooners to transport the troops from Batavia to Padang, and they were consequently conveyed in tens and twenties; but on a strong remonstrance from the Resident, suggesting that they should be simultaneously sent over, in order to give the Boonjalites no time for preparation, they had chartered four large merchantmen for that purpose, besides three of their own craft and a steam boat. Accounts, however, had been received from the interior, that the Boonjalites had hoisted a white flag, and being in a state of starvation, had formed into two factions, one of which was inclined to yield, whilst the other were determined only to surrender with the loss of life. So inveterate, indeed, are these latter against the Dutch, that Twank Imam, the head chief of the party, decapitated one of his chiefs, for proposing that he should surrender to the Dutch. The surrender of Boonjal will obviate the necessity of sending the troops from Batavia, and the only good they will then be able to do, will be to relieve the poor half dead soldiers who have been stationed in the vicinity of Boonjal ever since the commencement of the war.

PERSIA.

A letter received by a recent arrival from Persia states, that a grand party was given by the Shah on the anniversary of his accession to the throne, and that the health of Emperor Nicholas of Russia was drank first, and then that of the King of England. Mr. Ellis asked next day in the Darbar why preference was given to the Czar, but was told in reply that it was customary to pay honour, first to the Emperors, and afterwards to Kings. Upon this, Mr. Ellis left the Darbar with a dissatisfied countenance!! The same letter states that the Shah expressed his intention of marching upon Herat, in May next, without minding the advice of the English.

A vessel from the Gulph has brought favourable accounts of Col. Chesney's expedition. The following is an extract of a letter by her:—

May 14th, 1836.—“Our accounts from Bussorah shew, that Col. Chesney, with his steamers, was expected there on the 21st instant. He had met with some little obstacles in the river about 90 miles above Bussorah, which were to be overcome before he could proceed. In the meanwhile, he is engaged in making a more accurate survey of the river in his neighbourhood.

“I am happy to say that Wully Khan, and his banditti, have at last been overcome, and the roads through Persia, in consequence, are once more free. The present tranquillity promises, as far as I can judge, to continue; and trade with the interior is reviving.”

It is stated in a letter from Bussorah received by the same opportunity, that the Euphrates expedition was expected there on the 25th of May last.

REVIEW OF THE CALCUTTA MARKET.

(From A. E. Kuhn's Monthly Price Current, June 30, 1836.)

The rivers being now generally open, our supplies from the interior will not be detained any longer,—we may therefore expect our next number to be of more general interest.

INDIGO.—Our accounts are now rather conflicting, the only thing certain at present is, that we cannot by any probability have more than an average crop.

We extract from the Calcutta Courier the following estimate of the coming crop.

“The prospects of the approaching Indigo crop become now an object of interesting speculation to a large proportion of our readers, we have therefore taken some pains to gather the best information upon the subject, so as to give a tolerable idea of the results of a season which has been from the first of a character more than usually precarious. Since the cold and rain at the end of February and beginning of March, there has been experienced throughout Bengal, with a few partial exceptions, a drought that has every where been very injurious to the young plant of early sowings, while it has also retarded the cultivation of high lands. Sowings have been repeated in many places several times, and as usual, when at last the seed has vegetated after the few late showers, the ground has been overrun with weeds. In the neighbourhood of Calcutta, the rains may be said to have fairly set in on the 12th instant, and where they have not been too violent, the plant, from early sowings, is very fine and healthy, promising an excellent return. But since that date, our Mofussil correspondents have sent in reports so various, that we must continue to think it a very precarious season.

In one half of Tythoot, however, the promise is very fine—equally good in the Northern neighbourhood of the Jellingly and in Rajeshye and Purneah. The greater part of Jessore has only very moderate hopes: along the banks of the Ganges the drought has been most severely felt, and the season there will be too late for recovery before the river rises. From Dacca and Eastern Jessore, where the finest hopes were lately entertained, we have accounts of serious disasters, from ten days of incessant rain and the consequent rapid rise of the Burhampootur. Taking therefore the corrected statement of the produce of last season, of each district, we obtain the following estimated outturn of the present crop:

Crop of 1835.	Estimate for 1836.
3865—Western Provinces,.....	5,000
3612—Benares and vicinity.....	2,000
4257—Jannpore and Ghazceppore, &c.....	3,000
21,452—Tythoot and Chupra,.....	22,000
3201—Patna and Buxar,.....	2,000
2150—Monghyr and Bhagulpore,.....	1,000
4627—Purneah,.....	4,000
2020—Malda,.....	1,500

7892—Rajeshye,.....	8,000
2528—Rungpore,.....	3,000
6796—Dacca and Mymensing,.....	4,000
13,558—Jessore,.....	12,000
6493—Moorsheadabad,.....	5,500
21,603—Nuddeah,.....	22,000
5460—Burdwan,.....	5,000
1620—Hooghly and 24-Pergunnahs,.....	1,700
222—Midnapore and Cuttack,.....	300

Maunds 102,000

*To this total the utmost addition which continued fair weather would probably make, may be estimated at from 8 to 10,000 maunds, while an unfavorable change or a heavy inundation would reduce it at least 5000; so that prices in Europe may well be expected to hold their present rates, if not to rise gradually with continued large deliveries, since our average produce of the past four years is considerably below the average consumptions.”

OPIUM.—The prices, although unusually high, appear nevertheless likely to be maintained. The advices from China bringing letters up to the 10th April, shew that the holders in Canton were firm, and that from the uncertainty which prevailed concerning the adulteration of the Malva drug, the demand was directed in a special manner to the Bengal produce. The quantity existing at present in the Honorable Company's godowns is about 4,500 chests.

RAW SILK and SILK PIECE GOODS.—In our number of August last, we endeavoured to bring the attention of our readers to the very interesting course which this article would have to follow during the present year in Europe. Our arguments were then based upon palpable facts. The scarcity and the considerable demands which are noticed in our last advices from England, confirm fully the opinion which we then expressed, that have produced also in these parts a considerable rise in prices.

Large advances have been made to the manufacturing districts for the supply of Corahs and a few for Raw Silk and what arrives, besides these orders, daily from the interior, is eagerly purchased for the home markets. It will be observed by our statement of Exports, that shipments of Raw Silk and Corahs to England and of Choppahs to the United States, were considerably more important in May last than in the same month of the four years previous, and those of the month now ending will not fall short of the last.

RAW COTTON.—Our sales have been extensive during this month and would have been still more so if freights to England were more obtainable. The demand for China is also active, and our prices are well supported.

SALTPETRE.—In this staple there would be still greater activity, if the continued scarcity of freights did not impede operations. Advices from the home markets are favourable and our prices well supported, but the market is still bare of fine qualities. Our exports to England during the last month were heavy, being 33,917 mds. against 9907 mds. average of the same month of the 4 years previous.

SUGAR.—Our market continues to be affected by the late favourable advices from England, and shipments to some extent have been made, prices continue to advance and are quoted as high as sicca rupees 10-4 for fine white Benares, but it must be observed that quality has been much improved, and some very fine parcels have been brought to the market, which found eager purchasers. The scarcity of tonnage for England continues, however, to depress also this article.

LAC.—In Lac Dye, shipments to England have been rather extensive; supplies continue small, particularly of the finer marks. The article remains in good enquiry at steady prices.

Shell Lac, is less in demand; our stock continues heavy and prices are declining.

RICE.—The few transactions reported in regard to this article, are chiefly for shipment to the Mauritius. The exports to England keep back, owing to the scarcity of tonnage and the high rates of freights:—prices continue depressed.

WHEAT.—The market is still bare of fresh supplies; demand has been, however, steady for shipment to New South Wales and Hobart Town. The new Wheat is arriving but slowly from the interior.

HIDES.—Continue depressed owing to the scarcity of available tonnage for England, purchases are chiefly made for the American markets.

LINSEED.—Without alteration, the bulk of the supply of the new Crop is not expected to arrive before the end of July.

SPICES, DRUGS & OTHER MISCELLANEOUS PRODUCE.—Business to some extent has been transacted during the month in these articles.

METALS.—Copper.—The late favourable accounts from England continue to keep the market in a very healthy state, and prices which have already improved since our last are expected to have a further rise. Our imports have not been heavy during the last two months, and are below the consumption. With the opening of the rivers, our exports to the interior may further reduce our stock, which is already very moderate.

Spelter.—No transaction worthy of notice has been reported since our last; prices are, however, on the advance at the high rate at which this article is held, on the English markets, and on the continent of Europe, importation cannot be heavy.

Lead.—The few transactions we have to notice, are at enhanced rates, owing to the reduction of our stock and to some demand for the interior where the stocks are reported small.

Iron.—This article has been neglected during the whole month, as will be observed by the few sales reported, prices are, however, on the advance owing to the favorable accounts from England.

Tin Plates.—Continue as reported in our last, extremely dull of sales.

Quicksilver.—The sales reported are in advance of our last quotation, and prices may experience a further rise; our stock being much reduced.

TWIST.—White Mule.—Although our late supplies have been larger than the corresponding period last year, the activity in the Bazar has not only sustained prices, but in several instances caused a slight advance. Our stocks are very moderate. The sales during the past month amount to about 1,000 bales of Mule.

The market for Turkey Red Yarn is dull, owing to the excess of importation Orange Twist.—Is rather more steady, the market being relieved by re-exports to Madras.

WHITE COTTON PIECE GOODS.—Long cloths and Shirtings demand steady and expected to improve. In Madapolams some transactions have taken place. In low Cambrics, large parcels have changed hands. Jacquets in fair demand for the better sorts, of low qualities the supply has been abundant, and the prices have fallen. Mull Muslins, the middling qualities have been much overdone this year and the existing rates are exceedingly low, fine coarse cloths appear to realize comparatively much better prices. Book Muslins are becoming more plentiful, but the market is generally firm for this tissue. Lappets and Lenoës of suitable patterns in good demand and prices looking up. Honey Combs and Japan Spots, on fine cloth, much enquired after.

COLOURED AND PRINTED COTTONS.—The demand for neutral pines and stripes is steady and will augment, now that the up-country merchants are beginning to arrive. Single coloured Plates sell freely and Bengal stripe of good patterns are much enquired after. Gingham is heavy in stocks, and we hear of but few sales. Coloured Handkerchiefs dull of sale unless for good designs and fair quality of cloth. Red Twisted Cotton is in steady demand.

WOOLLENS.—A good enquiry prevails for low Woollens from Sa. Rs. 1 6s Sa. Rs. 1 10 per yard. Town Cloth, are rather dull. Long Ells, or Purperts very depressed, and not likely to rally, the consumption in the interior being manifestly on the decline.

REVISED BLACK ACT PETITION AND MEMORIAL.

PETITION TO PARLIAMENT.

SHERWETH.—That by the 51st Section of the 3d and 4th W. 4, c. 85, it is enacted that all Laws and Regulations made by the Governor-General in Council of India, shall be transmitted to England and laid before both Houses of Parliament, in order that if objectionable, they may be repealed or altered.

That by successive Charters of His Majesty's predecessors and numerous Acts of Parliament, all the British-born subjects of His Majesty have had confirmed to them the indisputable right of being governed by the laws of England throughout His Majesty's Indian territories, and the English law has prevailed within the Town of Calcutta, for the space of more than 130 years.

That an Act has lately been passed by the Legislative Council of India and promulgated as law, entitled Act No. XI. of 1836, purporting to repeal the 107th Section of the 53d Geo. 3d c. 155.

That the object of this new Indian law is to render all the British-born subjects of the Crown throughout these territories amenable to the jurisdiction of the Provincial Courts (many of which are presided over by Mahomedan and Hindoo judges, the number of such judges in the Presidencies of Bengal and Agra not being less than ninety-six) and to take away the appeal to His Majesty's Supreme Court, from which an appeal lies to His Majesty in his Privy Council in all cases in which the amount in dispute exceeds 4,000 rupees.

That by this new law the British-born subject is deprived of his right to appeal in all cases to the Supreme Court; and even in all cases where the amount in dispute under 5,000 Rs. to the East India Company's Courts of Sudder and Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, and when it exceeds that sum, he may appeal to these Courts, Courts from which no appeal lies to His Majesty in Council unless the amount in dispute exceed fifty thousand sicca rupees.

That many of the British-born Inhabitants of Calcutta, deeming the proposed law to be grievous, ill-timed and unnecessary, petitioned the Legislative Council of India against its enactment.

That the Government of India, in their answer to the Petition of the British Inhabitants of Calcutta, declared that the act in question made no change in the substantive law to be administered hereafter to British subjects, but that the effect was simply to substitute one appellate tribunal for another, which the Government in its reply endeavoured to shew by argument was a preferable Court.

That several of the British Inhabitants of Calcutta conceiving from the tenor of the Government Regulations that it was doubtful (at least as far as the intentions of Government were concerned) whether they might not be wholly deprived of all rules of law and subjected in all Civil proceedings whatever to the mere discretion of the Local Judges, before they entered into any consideration of the asserted superiority of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut as an appellate tribunal for British subjects, thought it necessary to request that the Government would distinctly state what law it intended the Provincial Courts in future should administer where British subjects were concerned, and accordingly addressed a memorial to Government stating that they were left in doubt whether it was the intention of Government by the proposed Act to give to the Judges of the provincial Courts and to British-born subjects in all civil proceedings whatever, (not even excepting marriage and inheritance and succession to property, real and personal) no other law or rule of civil conduct than what the Judges of those Courts might deem to be the rule of justice, equity, and good conscience, or whether it was the intention of Government that the law of England in some or any cases should be administered by these Courts.

That to this memorial, after seventeen days, the Government returned a reply as follows: The Company's Courts are directed by the Regulations to decide according to equity and good conscience, only in cases in which no other rules exist. The proposed Act repeals no existing rules. To whatever extent, therefore, the English law of inheritance, marriage and succession is now in force with respect to British subjects residing in the Mofussil, to the same extent will it continue to be in force after the passing of the proposed Act.

That the reasons which induced the British Inhabitants of India who signed this Memorial to request from Government an explanation of its intentions in passing Act No. XI. were the extreme uncertainty which must exist under the Regulations of Government considered as distinct from the Law of England, and until the instructions of the Executive Government are given to their Courts how to act in each case, whether even as between British-born subjects when both Plaintiffs and Defendants are such, the laws of England or any Laws will be regarded by the Provincial Courts as binding and imperative on them, even in questions relating to Marriage, Divorce, Inheritance to real, or succession to personal property, the proof and construction of Wills, the rights and duties of Executors and Administrators, or in fact in any questions or cases whatsoever.

That your Honorable House may clearly understand there was good reason for these doubts, and good cause for requesting an explanation from Government for the purpose of solving them (at least as far as the intentions of Government were concerned) your Petitioners here subjoin the clauses of the different Regulations which contain all the provisions that Government has made for the decision of the rights of parties not being Mahomedans or Hindoos. The first Section in point of date of any Regulation which contains any provisions that can be construed as applicable to the cases of British-born subjects is Section XXI. of Regulation 3, of 1793, in these terms.

"In cases coming within the Jurisdiction of the Zillah and City Courts for which no specific Rule may exist, the Judges are to act according to justice, equity and good conscience."

The next (Clause 2, of Section 3, of Regulation 8, of 1795, having been repealed) are Sections 8 and 9, of Regulation 7, of 1832, in these terms.

"VIII. Such part of clause 2, Section 3, Regulation VIII. 1795, enacted for the province of Benares, which declares that "in causes in which the plaintiff shall be of a different religious persuasion from the defendant, the decision is to be regulated by the law of the religion of the latter, excepting where Europeans or other persons not being either Mahomedans or Hindoos shall be defendants, in which case the law of the plaintiff is to be made the rule of decision in all plaints or actions of a civil nature," is hereby rescinded, and the rule contained in Section 15, Regulation IV. 1793, and the corresponding enactment contained in clause 1, Section 16, Regulation III. 1803, shall be the rule of guidance in all suits regarding succession, inheritance, marriage, and caste, and all religious usages and institutions that may arise between persons professing the Hindoo and Mahomedan persuasions respectively.

"IX. It is hereby declared, however, that the above rules are intended, and shall be held to apply to such persons only as shall be bona fide professors of those religions at the time of the application of the law to the case, and were designed for the protection of the rights of such persons, not for the deprivation of the rights of others. Whenever, therefore, in any civil suit, the parties to such suit may be of different persuasions, when one party shall be of the Hindoo, and the other of the Mahomedan persuasion, or where one or more of the parties to the suit shall not be either of the Mahomedan or Hindoo persuasions, the law of those religions shall not be permitted to operate to deprive such party or parties of any property to which, but for the operation of such laws, they would have been entitled. In all such cases, the decision shall be governed by the principles of justice, equity, and good conscience; it being clearly understood, however, that this provision shall not be considered as justifying the introduction of the English, or any foreign law, or the application to such cases of any rules not sanctioned by those principles."

That your Petitioners feel assured that these extracts will make it clear to your Honorable House, that they acted with becoming caution in requesting this information from Government, and they think that they had reason to hope for a more explicit answer, seeing that the Memorial was couched in terms altogether respectful, that there was evidently great uncertainty relative to one of the most serious of human concerns, viz. what law men were hereafter to live under, and in as much as the Government had shortly before conceded in principle and acknowledged in practice, that British Subjects had the right to seek in a respectful manner for explanation respecting the objects of a proposed law, and your Petitioners feel that the uncertainty in which they have been left as to what law they are to have for their future guidance, is in itself a grievous injury and oppression.

That pending the preparation of a general Code of laws applicable to the condition of each class as far as civil rights are concerned, and which shall preserve to British subjects the civil laws of England in like manner as Hindoos and Mahomedans retain their own, and which shall also provide equal security to all for political and personal liberty, at present entirely unsecured from the hazard of wrong committed by Government, your Petitioners, comprising all classes of his Majesty's Indian subjects, are strongly desirous of possessing a liberty of appeal from the local Courts, to the only Court of Justice independent of the East India Company and local executive Government, and that such appeal should be open to every suitor without distinction of birth or religion.

That those among your petitioners who have the right to be governed by the laws of England, maintain that, they cannot lawfully be deprived of a right of appeal to his Majesty's Supreme Court, and they are especially desirous that in all cases relating to marriage, divorce, inheritance to real, and succession to personal property, in which both parties are British subjects, and which ought therefore to be decided by the laws of England, the Provincial Courts of the first instance should be altogether prohibited from intermeddling with or entertaining suits, for the decision of which, neither their constitution nor the previous study and practice of the Judges render them at all fitted.

That moreover your Petitioners, while they admit the merit and general respectability of the Civil Service of the East India Company, are all of opinion that the Provincial Courts as at present constituted, do not afford adequate security to any class of men that justice can be administered in them and civil liberty duly protected; that these Courts are peculiarly unfitted to administer justice without appeal to British-born settlers in the Interior for those reasons solely affecting the especial rights and interests of that class, viz. 1st, because the Judges, both English and Native, have never studied and are almost entirely ignorant of the laws of England. 2ndly, because though they have assistance from native law Officers and assessors in the expounding and administering Hindoo and Mahomedan laws, they have no assistance in expounding English law, which nevertheless in cases relating to marriage, inheritance and succession to property, and indeed in all others, they may be now called upon to apply. 3rdly, because the whole proceedings of such Courts are conducted partly in the vernacular languages of India and partly in the Persian, which latter is in India completely a foreign tongue and therefore imperfectly understood by the majority of the Judges, law officers and pleaders, and not understood at all by Englishmen or by the great body of the people. 4thly, because there are no pleaders or attorneys in these Courts who understand the English law and few who understand the English language. 5thly, because the Judges of these Courts are entirely dependent on the Executive Government, removable at pleasure and promoted at pleasure. 6thly, because the Executive Government has the power, and has exercised it, of requiring obedience to its own circulars addressed to the Judges, which the Government appears to think, ought to have in all these Courts and with all the Judges, the force of laws, not only in respect to matters of process but in matters affecting right also. 7thly, because such Courts so constituted and subject to such dependence, may be easily rendered political engines by which the residence and settlement of Englishmen in the interior shall become impossible. 8thly, because the East India Company has not only in times long past but up to the present period, been opposed to the free trade and settlement of their countrymen in India, and your petitioners are confident that if the power they now possess were exercised in conformity with this policy, they could altogether prevent the extension of British settlements and in the end diminish or destroy those already founded. Indeed for this end, the Act No. 1F of 1836 would alone be amply sufficient, if administered in conformity to such a policy and coupled with a construction giving to the British settlers no other law and to the Courts no other rule of decision than what each Judge may think proper to call the rule of justice, equity and good conscience.

That in addition to these reasons more peculiarly affecting British-born subjects, the Provincial Courts in the judgment of your Petitioners, are not adapted by their form and constitution to protect adequately the civil rights of any class whatever; 1st, because the Civil Service receive their appointments from the Directors of the East India Company with little or no reference to qualifications. Secondly, because each member of the whole body is thus made a Judge, or eligible to be a Judge, by virtue of his appointment. Thirdly, because the only test of eligibility for office in India is knowledge of two languages. Fourthly, because they receive no legal or judicial training in practice having previously received no legal education or instruction in theory. Fifthly, because when appointed to judicial situations as the service is now constituted, it constantly occurs that they have never previously decided or considered a civil case, except as connected with the Government Revenue System, in their whole lives. Sixthly, because the ordinary and permanent establishment is but one Judge of the Civil Service to each Zillah, the average population of which in Bengal and Behar may be estimated as exceeding one million. Seventhly, because they had to administer before the Regulation XI of 1836 was passed, three distinct systems of law and practice, viz. the Hindoo and Mahomedan, each subdivided into several written systems, and also the Government Civil Regulations, besides various minor customary and unwritten laws in each district, and they have now superadded to these the common and statute laws of England, its equity and ecclesiastical systems with all their subdivisions. Eighthly, because there is no adequate provision made for the execution of their decrees when pronounced, there being no officer like a Sheriff or any other person specially charged therewith; a very serious evil, and which leads in many cases to a total denial and mockery of Justice. Ninthly, because they have no honest assistance, the Amlah or native officers of Court being notoriously corrupt, a fact not denied by Government of the most able men in its service, and the native officers being besides but very moderately versed in the knowledge of the Hindoo and Mahomedan Law; and because the suitors are deprived of the aid of an independent Bar, the Pleaders or Vakeels being mostly ignorant and too dependent on the Judges who frequently exercise an arbitrary power of fining for alleged disrespect and contempts. Tenthly, because the Judges are almost irresponsible from their situation, being too much removed from the inspection of Government or an intelligent public. Eleventhly, because the revenue Regulations are mixed up with the Judicial in such a manner that in many cases it is impossible to separate them by any intelligible definition; and the Collectors are constantly clothed with Judicial and Ministerial powers and functions, and decide as well as Judges most important questions relating to civil rights, not only between ordinary parties but between Government and its subjects.

That as the formation of a Code of Law applicable to all classes throughout India and the reform of all Courts, and particularly the obvious reform in the East India Company's Superior Courts, which shall emancipate them from the direct control of the executive Government, are labours likely to consume much time, and to encounter many difficulties, it is expedient in the judgment of your petitioners, that in all cases of debt and contract or trespass, in which one British subject shall be sued by another or in which a British subject shall sue or be sued by any other than a British subject, all suitors without distinction against whom a decision shall be passed by the Company's Courts, should have the power of appealing to the Supreme Court or Sudder Dewanee Adawlut at their option, and that in all cases respecting marriage, divorce, inheritance to real, and succession to personal estate, merely regarding rights of British subjects or persons entitled to be considered as such, the decisions in which cases ought to be regulated entirely by the law of England, the Courts of the East India Company shall be altogether prohibited from entertaining them, until reformed by the labours of the Law Commission.

Your petitioners, therefore, humbly pray, that the Act of the Council No. XI. of 1836, be repealed, and that the law as laid down in Sec. 107 of the 53d, Geo. 3d, c. 155, be amended, if necessary, by enacting that in all cases of debt, contract or trespass in which one British subject may be sued in the local Courts by another British subject, or by any other than a British subject, for an amount exceeding 4,000 Government rupees, an appeal shall be given to the party against whom the decision of the Court shall pass, (whether a British subject or any other than a British subject) either to the Supreme Court or Sudder Dewanee Adawlut, at his option; and that in all cases merely between British subjects, relating to marriage, divorce, inheritance to real and succession to personal estate, inasmuch as they relate solely to matters cognizable by the laws of England, the Courts of the East India Company be prohibited from holding plea thereof.

And your Petitioners shall ever pray, &c.

MEMORIAL.

OF THE INHABITANTS OF CALCUTTA AND OTHERS, OF ALL CLASSES OF HIS MAJESTY'S INDIAN SUBJECTS IN THE PRESIDENT AND BOARD OF COMMISSIONERS FOR THE AFFAIRS OF INDIA, AND THE COURT OF DIRECTORS OF THE EAST INDIA COMPANY.

RESPECTFULLY SHewETH, — That by the 44th Section of the 3d and 4th, W. 4. c. 85, it is enacted that the Court of Directors under the Control of the Board of Commissioners for the affairs of India, shall have the power to disallow any Laws or Regulations by the Governor-General of India in Council made.

That an Act has lately been passed by the Legislative Council of India and promulgated as law, entitled Act No. XI of 1836, purporting to repeal section 107 of the 53d Geo. 3d c. 155.

That the object of this new Indian law is to render all the British born subjects of the Crown throughout its Indian territories amenable to the jurisdiction of the Provincial Courts, many of which are presided over by Hindoo and Mahomedan Judges, (the number of such Judges in the Presidency of Fort William not being less than ninety-six) and to take away the appeal to His Majesty's Supreme Court.

That by the Charter establishing the latter, an appeal is given from it to the King in his Privy Council in all cases in which the amount in dispute exceeds 1,000 pagodas or 4,000 sicca rupees.

That by this new law the British subject is deprived of his right to appeal to the Supreme Court in all cases whatever; and even in all cases to the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, where the amount in dispute is under 5,000 rupees, and although he may appeal to that tribunal when the amount in dispute exceeds 5,000 sicca rupees, no appeal lies from it to the King in Council, unless the amount in dispute exceeds Sa. Rs. 50,000

That many of the British-born inhabitants of Calcutta deeming the proposed law to be grievous, ill-timed and unnecessary, petitioned the Legislative Council of India against its enactment.

That the Government of India in their answer to the Petition of the British Inhabitants of Calcutta declared that the act in question made no change in the substantive law to be administered hereafter to British subjects, but that the effect was simply to substitute one appellate tribunal for another, which the Government in its reply endeavoured to shew by argument was a preferable Court.

That several of the British inhabitants of Calcutta conceiving from the tenor of the Government Regulations that it was doubtful (at least as far as the intentions of Government were concerned) whether they might not be wholly deprived of all rules of law and subjected in all Civil proceedings whatever to the mere discretion of the Local Judges, before they entered into any consideration of the asserted superiority of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut as an appellate tribunal for British subjects, thought it necessary to request that the Government would distinctly state what law it intended the Provincial Courts in future should administer where British subjects were concerned, and accordingly addressed a memorial to Government stating that they were left in doubt whether it was the intention of Government by the proposed Act to give to the Judges of the Provincial Courts and to British-born subjects in all civil proceedings whatever (not even excepting marriage and inheritance and succession to property, real and personal) no other law or rule of civil conduct than what the Judges of those Courts might deem to be the rule of justice, equity, and good conscience, or whether it was the intention of Government that the law of England in some or any cases should be administered by these Courts.

That to this memorial after seventeen days the Government returned a reply as follows: The Company's Courts are directed by the Regulations to decide according to equity and good conscience, only in cases in which no other rules exist. The proposed Act repeals no existing rules. To whatever extent, therefore, the English law of inheritance, marriage and succession is now in force with respect to British subjects residing in the Mofussil, to the same extent will it continue to be in force after the passing of the proposed Act.

That the reasons which induced the British Inhabitants of India who signed this Memorial to request from Government an explanation of its intentions in passing Act No. XI were the extreme uncertainty which must exist under the Regulations of Government considered as distinct from the Law of England, and until the instructions of the Executive Government are given to their Courts how to act in each case, whether even as between British-born subjects when both Plaintiffs and Defendants are such, the laws of England or any Laws will be regarded by the Provincial Courts as binding and imperative on them, even in questions relating to marriage, divorce, inheritance to real, or succession to personal property, the proof and construction of wills, the rights and duties of executors and administrators, or in fact any questions or cases whatsoever.

That your Memorialists conceive the terms of section 21 of Regulation 3 of 1793, of section 31 of Regulation 6 of 1793, and sections 8 and 9 of Regulation 7 of 1832, prove that there was good ground for their doubts and good reason for requesting an explanation from Government for the purpose of solving them.

That they feel assured that a perusal of these sections will make it clear, that they acted with becoming caution in requesting this information from Government, and they think they had reason to hope for a more explicit answer, seeing that the Memorial was couched in terms altogether respectful, that there was evidently great uncertainty relative to one of the most serious of human concerns, viz: what law men were hereafter to live under, and in as much as the Government had shortly before conceded in principle and acknowledged in practice, that British subjects had the right to seek in a respectful manner for explanation respecting the objects of a proposed law

That your Memorialists feel that the uncertainty in which they have been deliberately left as to what law they are to have for their future guidance, is in itself a grievous injury and oppression.

That pending the preparation of a general Code of laws applicable to the condition of each class as far as civil rights are concerned, and which shall preserve to British subjects the civil laws of England in like manner as Hindoos and Mahomedans retain their own, and which shall also provide equal security to all for political and personal liberty, at present entirely unsecured from the hazard of wrong committed by Government, your Memorialists comprising all classes of his Majesty's Indian subjects, are strongly desirous of possessing a liberty of appeal from the local Courts to the only Court of Justice independent of the East India Company and local executive Government, and that such appeal should be open to every suitor without distinction of birth or religion.

That those among your Memorialists who have the right to be governed by the laws of England, maintain that they cannot lawfully be deprived of the right of appeal to his Majesty's Supreme Court, and they are especially desirous that in all cases relating to marriage, divorce, inheritance to real, and succession to personal property, in which both parties are British subjects, and which ought therefore to be decided by the laws of England, the Provincial Courts of the first instance should be altogether prohibited from intermeddling with or entertaining suits, for the decision of which, neither their constitution nor the previous study and practice of the Judges render them at all fitted.

That as the formation of a Code of law applicable to all classes throughout India and the reform of all Courts, and particularly the obvious reform in the East India Company's Superior Courts, which shall emancipate them from the direct controul of the executive Government, are labours likely to consume much time, and to encounter many difficulties, it is expedient in the judgment of your Memorialists, that in all cases of debt and contract, or trespass, in which one British subject shall be sued by another, or in which a British subject shall sue or be sued by any other than a British subject, all suitors without distinction against whom a decision shall be passed by the Company's Courts, should have the power of appealing to the Supreme Court or Sudder Dewanny Adawlut at their option, and that in all cases respecting marriage, divorce, inheritance to real and succession to personal estate, merely regarding rights of British subjects or persons entitled to be considered as such, the decisions in which cases ought to be regulated entirely by the law of England, the Courts of the East India Company shall be altogether prohibited from entertaining them, until reformed by the labours of the Law Commission.

Your Memorialists therefore pray, that the Act No. XI of 1836 be disallowed. — Hurkian.

MADRAS TEMPERANCE SOCIETY.

In pursuance of a notice to the effect which appeared in all the newspapers, a Public Meeting was held in the Scotch Church "for the purpose of taking into consideration the expediency and practicability of forming a Temperance Society for the general advantage of all classes of Europeans and East Indians residing in Madras."

The Lord Bishop of Madras took the Chair soon after six o'clock, and opened the Meeting with prayer. He then explained that he had felt at first unwilling to come forward publicly in a Meeting of that description—especially in Madras, as he had been informed that there was not much need for a Society of this kind in the middling and lower classes of society; and, with respect to the Military, that there was less intemperance in H. M. Regiment now in the Fort than in any other Regiment in India. Under these circumstances, in which every Christian man must rejoice, he had come to his first conclusion; but, upon conversing with the other friends, and considering the subject more particularly, he did not think there was sufficient reason for him to object to the proposition, which had been made to him to preside at that Meeting.

It had been well ascertained by medical experience and otherwise, that ardent spirits possess no strengthening properties, but, on the contrary, those of a debilitating nature—from these and other considerations he thought that such a Society as that which they had now met to establish, was by no means unnecessary. It was their intention to abstain from ardent spirits, and to discountenance the use of them as much as possible.

Some had objected to the establishment of such a Society on the plea that every person had it in his power to abstain if he chose; but every Christian knows that it is not only his duty to cease to do evil, but to learn to do well. Some again say, that they had no reason to expect a blessing from God, because they had no scriptural authority for what they were doing, but they knew that God works by means, and they have had evidence that Temperance Societies have been blessed as a means of leading many persons to become truly religious; it has been objected also that many withdrew from their agreement, but so they do from many other good resolutions. They would not require any person to become a member inconsiderately, but to remember that not merely human resolution is necessary, but also the Grace of God. These are the thoughts which had occurred to him to justify him in the course which he was then taking.

A few friends had prepared a string of Resolutions, or Rules, which, with their permission, he would now read.

His Lordship then read the following Resolutions:—

RESOLUTIONS.

"Considering that the common use of distilled spirits is one of the chief causes of poverty, disease, and crime, and a most powerful hindrance to the reception of the Gospel, indisposing and incapacitating the minds of men for attending to the things which belong to their eternal salvation, Christians are especially called upon, by the adoption of every lawful and scriptural means in their power, to remove this occasion of falling.

This meeting, therefore, is of opinion that it is highly advisable to establish at Madras, a General Temperance Society, trusting that, with God's blessing, it may be a means of greatly obviating the causes and practice of intemperance.

Resolved, therefore,

1.—That a Society be now formed, to be called "The Madras Temperance Society"—and that it consist of all persons subscribing to the following agreement.

AGREEMENT.

"We do hereby agree, God helping us, to abstain from ardent and distilled spirits, except for medicinal purposes, and to discountenance the causes and practice of intemperance."

2.—That any persons departing from the terms of this agreement shall forfeit the privilege of continuing a member of the Society.

3.—That no member can be considered as having withdrawn from this Society until he has intimated his intention to do so to the Secretary.

4.—That the Society shall meet annually, when a Committee, including a President, Treasurer, and Secretary, shall be chosen, with power to add to its number.

5.—That it be the duty of the Committee to conduct the affairs of the Society, to carry into effect all its resolutions, to take means for obtaining the requisite funds, to appoint the time and place of the Annual Meeting, and to adopt such measures as may appear to them likely to facilitate and extend the Temperance cause.

6.—That Sub-Committees be recommended to be formed in each of the Christian Congregations of Madras to further the designs of the General Committee.

7.—That the General Committee meet quarterly, any five members constituting a quorum.

8.—That the following Gentlemen be requested to act as a Committee for the present year :—The Right Rev. the Bishop, President ; the Hon'ble J. Sullivan, Esq., John Underwood, Esq., Major Brett, James Lawder, Esq., G. F. Beauchamp, Esq.

With all Ministers of the Gospel who are members of the Society, and are desirous of joining the Committee.

Colonel Cadell, Treasurer.

Rev. Mr. Bowie, } Secretaries.
Captain Browne, }

On the first Resolution being put by the Chairman and seconded by the Rev. Dr. Laurie.

The Rev. Mr. Denton observed that he endeavoured to form a Temperance Society some years ago in the Fort, and when H. M. 57th left Madras 17 of them were members of it. Since that time he had been less successful as only 3 persons of His Majesty's 63d would consent to sign the pledge of entire abstinence. He thought it necessary to make these observations to shew the difficulty attending the formation of such a Society amongst British Soldiers.

Colonel Conway then rose and stated that he did not believe that entire abstinence could be expected amongst the soldiers at first ; but he thought that if they could succeed in making them temperate at the outset it would be a great victory. Few persons had had greater opportunities of knowing the character of soldiers than he had, having himself been a soldier for 40 years, and he was satisfied that circumstanced as they were in this country without other resources, they could not do entirely without spirits.

The President said that his own experience had led him to form an opposite conclusion. Whilst he was a Chaplain in Bengal 50 persons, whom he had reason to believe were religious characters, had declared to him that they could abstain from spirits altogether, but they could not be temperate. And if men with these principles found it difficult to use spirits temperately, how much more difficult must it be for those who have not the same motive to guide them.

Colonel Conway said that his only desire was to benefit the soldier, and, as far as he had learnt, nothing but deceit and disappointment had followed the establishment of Temperance Societies.

The Rev. Mr. Wright stated that there were 258 persons at Bangalore, connected with the Temperance Society, all of whom, he had reason to believe, strictly adhere to their agreement. He thought the principal benefits to be expected from Temperance Societies might be considered prospective. He was in hopes that ardent spirits would be again thrown into the medicine chest, from whence they never ought to have been taken. He was at first of Col. Conway's opinion that it would be better to endeavour to make men temperate than to desire to make them abstain from spirits entirely, but his objections had been overruled. It had been well ascertained that when a person took one glass it rendered it necessary that he should take another—this was the testimony of one who was acting under the influence of religious principles. At Bangalore they had established Coffee Houses, where people go and procure hot coffee and biscuits, also a general coffee house where ginger beer, beer, magazines and books were to be procured, and where the men who desire to abstain from ardent spirits have the means of passing their time away.

The Rev. Mr. Drew had no experience of his own on the subject, but he was guided by what he had heard and read of the Societies in America. In that country they first formed Temperance, or partial abstinence Societies, but they were not found to answer. Societies had also been established at Glasgow on partial abstinence principles, but they were found to fail entirely ; spirits, when taken in small quantities, create a desire for more, and thus the temperate man becomes a drunkard. Ardent spirits, taken in any quantity, cannot possibly do any good ; and the severest labour is borne better by persons who totally abstain than by those who take spirits. There is an instance in some large iron works at home where men are used to the hottest kind of labour, and where they drink nothing but pure water. He believed, also, that soldiers could bear fatigue better in a hot climate when they took no spirits, and on these grounds he would support the resolution.

Mr Underwood stated that they had endeavoured to establish a Temperance Society at Cannanore, where the moderate use of spirits was to be allowed ; but the men came forward voluntarily and said they could abstain, but they could not be temperate.

The Rev. Mr. Tucker said that he had passed through Trichinopoly in January last, and he understood that drunkenness was then common—a man had been just tried for shooting one of his officers. On his return a Temperance Society had been formed and crime had greatly diminished ; indeed they were much surprised at their own success. He agreed with Mr. Drew that their object was to keep temperate men, temperate. It was well known that however small the quantity of spirit which was taken, it necessarily created a desire for more. A striking example of this had occurred in Edinburgh ; a lady was sent for to see a person in a dying state ; she remembered the lady and the lady recognized her, and asked her what her illness was owing to. She said the lady herself had been the cause of it by giving her a glass of whiskey when she came to her house to wash at night (as was the custom in that country). The one glass soon became of little better than water ; the second the same, and thus she went on habitually until she became reduced to the state in which she was then found. He remembered a circumstance also, which happened just before he left England ; he observed that the coachman took no spirits, and on asking his reason he said he did so because he did not then feel the effects of cold. This man was not aware of the existence of Temperance Societies.

Colonel Conway in rising to beg that his name might be withdrawn from the Committee, stated his belief that their endeavours to introduce abstinence amongst the soldiers would prove a failure. From his own means of gaining information he was enabled to state that, notwithstanding the flattering statements which had appeared, nothing but deception and smuggling were going forward. He thought great benefits would arise by reforming the canteens, and by giving the men coffee, beer, congee, &c. &c. Several deceptions had been practised at the Mount where the men had carried spirits into the barracks by having false tops in their caps.

Captain Macdonald stated that military experience generally, was directly opposed to Colonel Conway's, especially that of the Duke of Wellington's.

The Rev. Mr. Bowie, as an example of the hardships which might be borne without the use of spirits, instanced the number of vessels, more than 1,000, which sail from America, to all parts of the world.

The other Resolutions were then put and agreed to without discussion, and the meeting closed.

The following Gentlemen then signed their names, as MEMBERS OF THE MADRAS TEMPERANCE SOCIETY:—

DANIEL, Madras; H. Harper; Geo. Catell; W. T. Brett; John Underwood; J. Tucker; John Smith; Robert Carver; A. C. Thomson; P. Carstairs; J.

AGRICULTURAL AND HORTICULTURAL SOCIETY OF INDIA.

A General Meeting was held in the Town Hall on Wednesday, the 13th July, 1836.

PRESENT.

The Hon'ble Sir E. Ryan, President, in the chair.

The Hon'ble Col. Rehting, Governor of Serampore, Dr. Marshman, James Kyd, Esq., David Hare, Esq., Nawab Fahower Jung, Capt. Leach, William Storm, Esq., D. Syers, Esq., A. Grant, Esq., J. W. Masters, Esq., W. H. Hamerton, Esq., and John Bell, Esq.

Visitor.—G. A. Priusep, Esq.

The Proceedings of last meeting were read and confirmed.

The following gentlemen proposed at the June Meeting, were duly elected Members of the Society by ballot, viz.

Col. Skinner, the Rev. H. Pratt, M. A., Capt. Stewart Corbett, 25th Regt. N. I., J. B. Jones, Esq., and M. G. Staunton, Esq.

The following Gentlemen were proposed as Members:—

Capt. W. H. Sleeman, proposed by Mr. Bell, seconded by Dr. Wallich.

J. P. Marcus, Esq., proposed by Mr. Bell, seconded by W. Storm, Esq.

Mr. Waghorn, proposed by Mr. Bell, seconded by W. Storm, Esq.

Charles Devenanne, Esq., proposed by G. F. Hodgkinson, Esq., seconded by W. Storm, Esq.

R. Savi, Esq., proposed by G. F. Hodgkinson, Esq., seconded by Mr. J. Bell.

E. Harding, Esq., proposed by C. K. Rolison, Esq., seconded by Mr. Bell.

The Secretary submitted, that in reference to the heavy demands made on the Society for seed, a packerman might be employed on five rupees per month. Resolved, that the expense be incurred.

Mr. Bell further suggested, that as branch societies were now springing up in every direction, some definite understanding ought to take place between those institutions and the Agricultural Society of India. That the co-operation of all societies having but one common object in view, viz. the amelioration of horticulture, and dispensing agricultural improvement through their united means and exertions, should be promoted to the utmost; but these several societies looked towards that of Calcutta, for supplying all their wants in the seed-way, (excepting the institution at Madras, which had remitted funds for the purchase of seed,) while they contributed nothing to its funds. Mr. Bell expressed his perfect willingness and anxiety to meet the wishes of other societies, and to bring that of Calcutta into more close and frequent correspondence, but he did not feel competent to supply seed purchased with its funds without the authority of the President and Members.

Sir E. Ryan proposed that each new society should be invited to contribute a certain sum annually, which would entitle them to draw upon the stores of the Calcutta Society, for a share of all seeds purchased. The President further suggested, that the question be submitted to the Committee of papers, expressing at the same time the gratification he felt in the increasing interest shown both by the accumulation of correspondence, and the many new societies recently established.

Mr. Bell brought to the notice of the Meeting the great number of copies of the society's transactions in Bengalee, which, unhappily, were only lumbering the room and creating food for the white ants, and the President suggested the expediency of presenting twelve copies to each society in India for distribution to native gentlemen; who might by those means, infuse a taste for agricultural pursuits among their countrymen.

Resolved, that Sir E. Ryan's proposal be adopted, and that the Secretary take steps to forward the volumes accordingly.

The following communications were then read, and presentations severally alluded to in their respective addresses submitted to the Meeting.

No. 1.—From the Right Hon'ble Lord Auckland to the Secretary, dated Barrackpore, June 17th, presenting to the Society a copy of a report sent to his Lordship, by the Chairman of the East India Company, drawn up by the Committee of the society for the encouragement of arts, &c. dated 20th January, 1836, upon sundry articles sent to them for examination by the Hon'ble the Court of Directors, of which the following is an abstract.

1st.—That the Joomla or Himalya paddy, or mountain-rice, received from the Resident of Nepal, appears to be of the same kind as that forwarded to the above Society by Dr. Wallich in 1821, comprising 5 varieties, of which a distribution was made to parties in England, France, Switzerland, Germany and Russia. No intelligence had been received regarding the result of that sent to the continent, and with one exception the rice had not germinated in England;—moreover, it would appear from a statement in the French journals, that experiments previously made in that country had proved also unsuccessful. The solitary exception in England was the attempt of Mr. Anderson, Curator of the Apothecary's garden at Chelsea;—whose mode of culture was sowing the seed in a hot-house in March, removing the plants to a Greenhouse in May, and transferring the same at the end of June into a basin containing 9 inches water and 12 inches of mud, all which care caused the grain to prosper till the end of July, when the weather being rather cold and cloudy, the plants became sickly and died at the end of September without flowering.

It would seem that the temperature even of the warmer parts of England is not sufficient for its successful development, and that of the countries of Europe, Italy alone affords the same varieties of climate, as are experienced at Suinagur, the place from whence the rice was originally brought.

That the Committee is not possessed of any information to admit of their forming an opinion on the comparative profit of land cropped with hill rice, and with oats or barley, but rice not being a general food amongst Europeans they suppose that the profit would be in favor of the two last grains, and from the value of the East India rice in the English market, to which grain the hill rice is similar, it would secure little or no profit to the seller, and further, it is the opinion of the Committee that this species cannot be cultivated in Europe, and even if it were grown successfully, that it could not compete in the English market with Bengal rice.

2nd.—The wool from the Thibet sheep had been referred by the Committee for examination to Messrs. Ebsworth and Southey, gentlemen of experience in these matters, and that in their opinion the unsorted sample was superior to the sorted. Mr. E.'s value of the former was from 5 to 7 pence per lb. and Mr. S.'s about 10d. per lb.

It is Mr. Southey's opinion that the introduction of well selected rams from New South Wales would greatly improve the wool of the above breed of sheep, as also of other coarse-producing kinds.

3rd.—Concerning the two pieces of cloth made from the simool or tree cotton, it is the opinion of the Committee that being composed of the short down of the tree twisted and interwoven with common thin thread, and forming a loose cloth, it is incapable of being washed without injury; and from the shortness of the staple of the down, and its elasticity, it could not be spun by the cotton-spinning machinery. The above two qualities, and its great warmth, would however well adapt it for wadding, stuffing muffs, &c. &c. and if carded with wool, it might be otherwise employed.

4th.—The samples of the safflower made at Myrung in Assam, were considered by several eminent dyers, whose opinions were obtained by the Committee, as excellent and of good fair merchantable quality, and that the average value is about £ 7 per cwt.

5th.—Relative to the two skeins of fibre made from the leaves of the wild pine apple, that the portion forwarded was not sufficient for any fair comparative trial of its tenacity. Suggesting the transmission of a larger quantity for the purpose of contrasting it with hemp and flax; as from samples of fibre made from the West Indian pine apple, now in the possession of the society, and the use to which this plant is likewise applied by the natives of Chirra Poonjee in the East Indies, it is probable that the above article could be advantageously used in the preparation of rope.

6th.—Samples of the wood of the Nepal prevet. That a former specimen of this wood was forwarded to the society by Dr. Wallich, which being cut sufficiently high from the root was of a perfectly uniform texture, and was in the opinion of an eminent engraver, applicable for the purposes of his profession. The present sample has, it would appear, in order to get it of the greatest size, been cut too near the root, which has wholly destroyed the uniformity of texture, and rendered it altogether worthless to the object for which it was intended.

No. 13.—From H. T. Prinsep, Esq., Secretary to Government, dated 22d June, addressed to the Society, forwarding a duplicate copy of the report, presented by the Right Hon'ble Lord Auckland on the 17th Inst.

No. 2.—From Henry Cope, Esq., Secretary to the Horticultural Society at Meerut, to Mr. Bell, dated 16th June, intimating the existence of an Horticultural Society at Meerut, and conveying the wish of the Committee, to enter into active correspondence with the Agricultural and Horticultural Society of India, requesting a supply of seeds and plants, and to be furnished with the published transactions of the latter institution.

The Secretary had replied to the above communication, and had forwarded a parcel of seed.

No. 3.—From Dr. Wise, dated 2d July, intimating the establishment of a Branch Horticultural Society at Hooghly to which he had been appointed Secretary, and requesting a supply of coffee plants, cuttings of sugar-cane, arrow-root bulbs, tobacco, cotton, and grass seeds.

No. 4.—From T. O. Crane, Esq., Secretary Agricultural and Horticultural Society, Singapore, dated 10th June, advising the establishment of an Agricultural and Horticultural Society, and requesting to be furnished with a complete assortment of garden seeds, and the transactions as published by the society of India.

No. 5.—From Mr. C. Veller, dated Cape of Good Hope, 21st March, acknowledging the receipt of Mr. Bell's letter of 2d December, 1835, forwarding indent for a fresh supply of kitchen-garden seeds, regrets the late arrival of the last, and promises to take every necessary precaution to ensure an early receipt of the next.

No. 6.—From J. Vaupell, Esq., Secretary to the Agricultural and Horticultural Society of Western India, dated Bombay 2d June, enclosing a letter from Mr. Waghorn, on the subject of procuring cotton seed from Egypt, and intimating his intention to forward the same on arrival at Bombay by the first opportunity to Calcutta.

Advises intention to send twelve boxes of cane cuttings, &c. as soon as they shall have taken root.

No. 7.—The enclosure referred to in Mr. Vaupell's letter from Mr. Waghorn to the former, dated Cairo, 20th April, advising the receipt of Mr. Bell's letter, ordering Egyptian cotton seed, particularizing the difficulties of obtaining and transporting it to India, and his intention to ship the seed by the Hugh Lindsay, &c.

No. 8.—From Mr. Waghorn to the Secretary at Calcutta, dated 26th April, acknowledging the receipt of his letter dated 1st March, per Hugh Lindsay, advises the dispatch of Egyptian Cotton seed per Hugh Lindsay, and intimates the many difficulties of getting it on board the Steamer. Promises a further supply by the Clive. Desires to become a Member of the Society.

No. 9.—From Colonel Colvin, dated Dadoopoor, 2d June, to the Secretary, advising the receipt of a cask of sugar-cane cuttings, forwarded through Messrs. Colvin, Ainslie, Cowie, and Co. These cuttings were packed in dry sand, precisely in the manner observed by the Bombay Secretary, and not one cutting received by Colonel Colvin had failed. The cask was just four months on its way.

Colonel Colvin attributes the decay of those received from Bombay, to two probable causes. 1st, that the sand used might have been sea sand; and 2dly, that they must have been stowed in the hold of the ship.

The cuttings which reached the Colonel, were found to have thrown out clusters of the most vigorous shoots in the dry sand.

No. 10.—From Captain Sleeman, dated 16th June, to the Secretary, acknowledging the receipt of his letter of the 3d June, and stating that he will introduce the Otaheitee sugar-cane into the districts pointed out in that communication.

No. 11.—From Thomas Tonnochy, Esq., Deputy Collector at Boolundshahur, to the Secretary, dated 22d June, requesting a supply of Peruvian cotton seed, and enquiring whether the cane he has introduced in that district from Saugor be the Otaheitee? Enquiring further whether windmills, as in Russia, could not be successfully used for raising water to irrigate the land?

No. 12.—From T. S. Henley, Esq., dated Mauritius, 10th April, acknowledging the receipt of the Secretary's letter of the 11th February last, and advising the preparation of an extensive supply of sugar-cane plants, with several varieties of the manioc, some seed maize, bagon seed, and samples of the best sugar-cane soils in the Mauritius—all to be forwarded by the first vessel.

No. 13.—From the same to the same, dated Calcutta, 8th July, intimating the loss of the Barque Vicissitude, and of the consignment of sugar-cane plants, &c. alluded to in the above communication.

No. 12.—Mentioning also the cause of the delay in forwarding them, and enclosing an invoice, accounts and receipts of the sums expended on account of this unfortunate shipment.

No. 14.—From W. Stevenson, Esq., Secretary Agricultural Society at Lucknow, dated 27th June, acknowledging receipt of Mr. Bell's letter of the 9th May, acknowledging the receipt of a portion of the seeds alluded to in that communication, promising to send the sugar-canes solicited for the Society, so as to reach Calcutta during the cold season.

No. 15.—From J. H. Stoeckeler, Esq., to the Secretary, dated 21st June, enclosing a portion of a Bombay Courier of 1830, which contains some valuable remarks on the cultivation and produce of sugar-cane in the Pergunnah Gundavie in the Surat Collectorate.

No. 16.—A paper by H. Piddington, Esq., without date, received on the 8th June, on the disease of cattle in Bengal.

No. 17.—From the same to the Secretary, dated 6th June, enclosing an extract of a letter on the subject of prize silk.

"I notice your remarks on the sample of prize silk. They were returned in the case per Bolton with the opinion of them given by Messrs. Royle and Crompton of Manchester, the first throwsters in England. They pronounced your silk excellent, equal in appearance to Italian and superior to any Bengal they had ever seen."

No. 18.—From W. Bruce, Esq., dated June 9, enclosing a letter from Mr. Marcus of Naunsaugor, near Arrah, to his address, intimating his intention of sending for the inspection and opinion of the Society, specimens of flax, cochineal, &c. and offering guinea-grass seed.

No. 19.—From J. P. Marcus, Esq., dated 19th June, acknowledging receipt of the Secretary's letter of the 11th June, and stating his willingness to rejoin the Society, advising the despatch, by dak banghy, of some guinea grass seed, and requesting a supply of Virginia, Persian, and Sandoway tobacco seed, as also a few Otaheitee canes.

Memo.—The samples of flax, cochineal, &c. alluded to in this gentleman's letter to Mr. Bruce, have been received by the Secretary, and were submitted to the meeting this day.

No. 20.—From Captain T. Jenkins, dated Gowhatee, 30th May, acknowledging receipt of Secretary's letter of 27th April, and seed forwarded through Messrs. Cantor and Co., intimating that the Egyptian cotton seed had vegetated, and also some dasee seed from Central India; offers some suggestions as to dak banghy, and the manufacture of beer in India; mentions that potatoes and cabbage have both ripened their seed in his garden, asks for Otaheitee sugar-canes.

No. 21.—From Mr. J. W. Masters, dated 18th June, forwarding a sample of wool from Thibet sheep, received from Captain Jenkins, and annexing an extract of that gentleman's letter to his address. The extract further states that the coffee plants in Assam are thriving.

No. 22.—From Dr. Wallich, to the Secretary, dated 23d June, returning the report of the Committee of the Society of Arts in London, and annexing an extract of his letter that accompanied several of the articles therein noticed, enquiring if any reply has been received from the Secretary of that institution to his letter transmitting sundries on account of the Agricultural and Horticultural Society of India; forwarding on behalf of Lieut. H. Vetch, for the acceptance of the Society, two blankets and two woollen cloths, the former made from the simool tree, and the latter manufactured by the "Bhootas," and also enclosing a report by Mr. J. W. Masters on the state of the plants destined for the Agricultural Society, which is not favorable.

No. 23.—From the same to the same, dated 26th June, forwarding two boxes of seed, one for the West Indies, and the other for England, and enquiring whether a supply of mountain rice be required.

No. 24.—From the Hon'ble W. H. L. Melville, dated Berhampore, 14th June, acknowledging receipt of Secretary's letter of 29th April, will be glad to have any seeds that can be spared, as he is desirous to impart a taste for Agriculture and Horticulture to the family of Nawaub Nazim, whose example and influence would shed abroad a spirit of emulation, in the same field; promises to send the seeds and cuttings of two famed species of mangoes, and asks for cotton seed and Otaheitee sugar-cane.

No. 25.—From the same to the same, dated 17th June, advising dispatch of some mangoes and stones, alluded to in the above communication. The Secretary had received the mangoes, and distributed them (only four in number).

No. 26.—From Colonel Dun'op, enclosing a letter to his address from Capt. Watt, which states that the Deputy Post Master at Allahabad would not forward to their respective destinations the several parcels of seeds lately transmitted by the Steamer, bearing postage from that station.

The Secretary immediately addressed the Post Master General on the subject, and received in reply,

No. 27.—Annexing copies of a letter addressed by Capt. Watt to the Secretary of the Lieut. Governor N. W. Provinces and of one to the Deputy Post Master at Allahabad by Mr. Secretary Bushby, the latter document authorizing transmission "bearing postage" of all packages forwarded by the Agricultural and Horticultural Society of India.

No. 28.—From Dr. Bramley to the Secretary, dated 28th June, furnishing extract of a letter to his address from Mr. Hodgson, Resident at Nepaul, relating to the medicinal, &c. seeds lately forwarded to that gentleman, all which had been sown.

No. 29.—From G. J. Gordon, Esq., to the Secretary, dated 1st July, furnishing extract of a letter.

No. 29.—From Messrs. W. Thacker and Co., dated 23rd June, in reply to a question from the Secretary, stating that the Society are at liberty by law to re-publish Dr. Royle's treatise on tobacco cultivation, and that they are of opinion that such a course would not be detrimental to Dr. R.'s interests.

No. 30.—From J. R. Colvin, Esq., to the Secretary, dated 7th July, presenting in the name of Mr. D. Pringle, Collector of Mymensing, a basket of mangosteens produced in that gentleman's garden at Nusseerabad, from trees planted there many years ago, by Mr. Pakenham.

The fruit when received, was over-ripe and much spoiled, the Secretary sent a few to Dr. Wallich, who pronounced it the "cowa," an indigenous fruit, and not the mangosteen.

No. 31.—From G. J. Gordon, Esq., to the Secretary, dated 1st July, furnishing extract of a letter to his address from Lieutenant Bigge, of the Assam Local Corps, in which a request is conveyed for a supply of Pernambuco cotton seed.

No. 32.—From Lieutenant Bigge, to the Secretary, dated 28th June, repeating the request conveyed above, and stating the success which attended a trial of Pernambuco cotton and Persian tobacco seed.

Memo.—Lieutenant Bigge's request was complied with by the Secretary.

No. 33.—From H. Henley, Esq., dated 9th July, forwarding specimens of soils of Ceylon, collected near Galle, and suggesting that Mr. Piddington be solicited to analyze them. Enquiries for seed, &c.

No. 34.—From Major E. Gwatkin, dated 30th May, acknowledging receipt of Secretary's letter of 29th April, and hoping that the seed, the dispatch of which was then advised, was not, as the letter, sent to Goruckpore instead of Hauper; promises attention to the wishes of the Society.

No. 35.—From W. Gibbon, Esq., dated Shahabad, 13th June, acknowledging receipt of Secretary's letter of 2d May, and of the seed; promises to give his best attention to it.

No. 36.—From J. R. Spencer, Esq., dated 19th June, requesting a supply of Virginia tobacco seed and Peruvian cotton seed.

Memo.—Complied with.

No. 37.—From H. Inglis, Esq., dated Sylhet, 18th June, intimating receipt of Egyptian cotton, sent by dak baulghy, and promising to give it wide distribution, also requesting a supply of guinea-grass, clover, and vegetable seeds, &c.

Memo.—Complied with.

No. 38.—From R. N. Hamilton, Esq., Magistrate and Collector at Meerut, to the Secretary, dated 18th June, requesting a supply of cotton seed and Otaheitee sugar-cane, and promising his efforts to promote their growth in the Meerut district.

No. 39.—From Colonel Stacey, dated 20th June, stating the non-receipt of seed, dispatched by the steamer via Allahabad.

Memo.—The obstacle removed by the following:—

No. 40.—From Colonel Dunlop, dated 25th June, stating that by a subsequent communication from Captain Watt, the parcels were forwarded from Allahabad, "bearing postage."

No. 41.—From A. Moffatt Mill, Esq., Collector of Cuttack, to the Secretary, dated 29th June, requesting a supply of cotton and tobacco seed.

Memo.—Order complied with.

No. 42.—From William Liddel, Esq., Secretary to the Agricultural and Horticultural Society of Madras, dated 29th June, requesting that Mr. Bell will procure and forward a second supply of vegetable seeds according to a list enclosed,—mentioning that the first shipment arrived too late in the season to be of use at Madras, and has been consequently sent to the hills; asks for fruit or flower trees, and encloses a remittance to credit of seed account.

The Secretary lost no time in forwarding the indent to Patna, with particular instructions as to time, mode of packing, &c.

No. 43.—From Major C. Smyth, 29th June, acknowledging receipt of Secretary's letter, intimating his admission as a Member of the Society, expressing a wish to have vegetable and flower seeds. Contrasts the properties of the guinea grass and lucerne.

No. 44.—From Colonel Presgrave, dated Mirzapore 13th June, intimating his wish to withdraw from the Society for the present.

No. 45.—From H. Henley, Esq., to the Secretary, dated Calcutta 12th July, forwarding a selected specimen of Muscovado sugar from Mauritius, produced at about 3½ rupees per maund, and expressing his regret at the loss of specimens of the soils of the Mauritius.

No. 46.—From Colonel Skinner, dated Hansi, 30th June, acknowledging the receipt of the parcel of seeds alluded to in the Secretary's letter of 2d ultimo, also of the 2d vol. of the transactions of the Society, promising to give the cotton seed his best attention. Col. S. mentions that his American cotton had already commenced flowering, &c.

The Secretary laid before the meeting three "squashes" produced from the seed of one presented to the society on the 9th March last, by Captain Thomas M. Saunders of the American Ship Georgia,—which, considering the unfavorable season of planting, were fair and perfect specimens although small. The plants were most prolific, and the fruit set regularly, but after a few days growth prematurely decayed.

Those presented, were set after the first showers in June, the former were destroyed by the excessive heat and drought.

The Secretary is not aware that the American squash has ever been introduced into India before.

JOHN BELL, Secretary.

Town Hall, Calcutta, 13th July, 1836.—HURKARU.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE ASIATIC SOCIETY.

Wednesday Evening, the 6th July, 1836.

The Rev. Dr. Mill, Vice-President, in the chair.

Captain R. Lloyd, I. N., Dr. D. Stewart, and Dr. McClelland, proposed at the last meeting, were ballotted for, and elected members of the Society.

Mr. Wm. Speir was proposed by Mr. J. Prinsep, seconded by Dr. Mill.

Sergeant Dawe, of the Delhi Canal Establishment, proposed as an associate member by Mr. J. Prinsep, seconded by Dr. Pearson.

Read a letter from Wm. Mackenzie, Esq., stating that, in consequence of the pressure of business, and other indispensable engagements, he was obliged to retire from the Society.

Read a letter from Charles König, Foreign Secretary to the Royal Society, acknowledging the receipt of the Journal, and Index Aa. Res.

The following circular, enclosed in the above, was read and directed to be printed for general information:—Royal Society of London, Somerset House, Nov. 19, 1835.

SIR,—I am directed by His Royal Highness the President and Council, to acquaint you, for the inforination of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, that His Majesty the King has been pleased to grant two Gold Medals, of the value of Fifty Guineas each, to be awarded by the Royal Society on the day of their Anniversary Meeting in each succeeding year, for the most important discoveries in any one principal branch of Physical and Mathematical knowledge.

His Majesty having graciously expressed a wish that scientific men of all nations should be invited to afford the aid of their talents and researches, I am accordingly directed by the Council to announce to you, Sir, that the Royal Medals for 1838, will be awarded in that year, the one to the author of the most important unpublished paper on Chemistry which may have been communicated to the Royal Society for insertion in their Transactions, after the present date and prior to the month of June in the year 1838;—the other, to the author of the most important unpublished paper in Physics, which may have been communicated to the Royal Society for insertion in their Transactions, after the present date and prior to the month of June in the year 1838.

I have the honor to be, Sir, your very obdt. humble sert.

CHAS. KONIG, For. Sec. R. S.

TO JAMES PRINSEP, Esq.,

Secretary of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, Calcutta.

Read a letter from H. T. Prinsep, Esq., Secretary to the Government of India, General Department, intimating that the Right Honorable the Governor of Bengal had been pleased to empower the Curators of the Public Library to make over to the Society the Oriental books printed in Europe, on the same conditions, with the manuscripts and works already transferred from the College of Fort William. The Secretary stated that he had in consequence received charge of three hundred volumes—some few being, however, duplicates of works already in the library.

A letter from the Civil Auditor, desiring to be furnished with an abstract of the establishment entertained for the care of the Government Oriental Works. Understanding the 78 rupees monthly to be a consolidated allowance, in which case no detail of its expenditure need be furnished. Resolved to make a reference on the subject to Government.

Library.

Read a letter from H. T. Prinsep, Esq., Secretary to the Government of India, forwarding on behalf of the Honorable the Court of Directors for presentation to the Society, a copy of the Catalogue of Stars in the Southern Hemisphere, by Lieut. Johnson, H. C. Asst. at St. Helena.

Read a Persian note from Manu Lal, presenting a copy of a compilation from standard Persian and Hindustani Poets published by himself under the name of Guldestek i Nikat,—The Nosegay of Pleasure.

Read a letter from Kumar Radhaacanth Deb Behadur, forwarding for presentation to the Society a copy of his great publication, entitled Sabda Cūṭha Drama, an Encyclopedical Lexicon in Sanscrit, vols. 1, 2, and 3. The subsequent of the remaining vols. will be forwarded when published. Also translation of an extract from a Horticultural work in Persian, printed by the Roy. As. Soc. of London.

A volume of selected papers of a literary nature published in the Government Gazette while Mr. Wilson was Editor, was presented by Mr. James Prinsep.

Meteorological Registers for April and May 1836, were presented by the Surrey General.

Museum.

Read a letter from Prof. Goodeve, Secretary to the Medical and Physical Society, requesting the Society's acceptance of a pair of glazed almirahs, their contents having been transferred to the Medical College.

Two large chatta-hats from Assam, were presented by Dr. W. B. Davis.

Various rude specimens of domestic implements from New Zealand, by Mr. H. T. Prinsep.

Literary and Antiquities.

Read a letter from R. D. Mangles, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, Judicial Department, transmitting on behalf of the Right Honorable the Governor of Bengal, a census of the population of the town of Gwah and its suburbs, framed under the superintendence of Mr. Hathorn, the Magistrate of Behar.

A note on the origin of the Armenian era and the reformation of the Haican Kalendar, by Mr. Johannes Avdall.

Read a letter from L. Wilkinson, Esq., Agent at Bhopal, forwarding the copy of an inscription on a copper-plate lately found at Piplanagar in the Shujal Pergannah, by a krisan, or husbandman, in ploughing; with an English translation.

Read a paper by Major Lloyd, on the sacred silken vests of the Tibetan priests, alluded to in Turner's, Embassy. They are adorned with images, and have a lettered border of sacred texts woven into the scarf: one of these had been submitted to Mr. Csoma de Körös, and by him translated.

Mr. Hodgson forwarded an amended list of the Sanscrit Budilha works procurable in Nepal. Such as have been sent home to Paris or London, were noted by an asterisk.

Physical.

A note on the progress of the boring in Fort William was read by Capt. Taylor, Town Major. [Vide infra.]

A memorandum of a well sunk in the Chandpur bunds, near the foot of the Shewalik range, was likewise communicated by Lieutenant Baker, Engineers.

A descriptive catalogue of part of the Society's collection of Silhet shells, was received from Mr. W. H. Benson, M. A. S.

A letter from Lieutenant Geo. Fulljames, giving further detail of the fossil discoveries at Perim, and announcing the despatch of specimens for the Society's museum.

[As this letter arrived while the Baron Hugel's note was in the press, the interesting particulars it contained were appended to that paper; see last No. p. 290.]

Mr. B. H. Hodgson transmitted 27 further specimens of his illustrations of Nipalese Zoology; also papers

On three new genera of thrush.

On three new species of woodpecker.

Dr. W. Cantor submitted his sketch of an undescribed hooded serpent with fangs and maxillar teeth, accompanied with coloured drawings on a large scale.

Dr. N. Wallich presented two papers on new genera of plants, by Dr. Griffiths, to which the author has given the names of Bucklandia and Sodgewickia.

Presentations to the Museum of Natural History.

Specimens of the great-eared owl, (Bubo Macrocephala;) Flammous Fly-catcher, (Muscicapa Flummea;) Gorial Kingfisher, (Haleyon Gorial;) black-headed Oriole, (Oriolus Melanocephalus;) Bengal wood-pecker, (Picus Bengalensis;)—Woodpecker, (Picus Macsei;) skulls of Hornbill, (Buceros Hornai;) and Pelican, (Pelecanus Onocrotalus;) and skin of the Amethystine Python; presented by W. B. Davis, Esq.

Specimens of Silky-throat Râya, (Raya Sericeogula;) Nepal Bucia, (Bucia Nepalensis;) black-headed Sibia, (Sibia Nigricaps;) Picaoid Sibia, (Sibia Picaoides;) and blue-winged Chloropsis, (Chloropsis Cyanopterus;) presented by B. H. Hodgson, Esq.

The above are specimens of new genera, instituted by Mr. Hodgson; papers on which he has favored the Society with; and the specimens will be figured in his great work on the Fauna of Nepal.

Specimens of white eye-browed Jacana, (Para Supercilliosa;) and Girra Teal, (Anas Girra;) presented by W. C. Smith, Esq. The internal ear of the whale, presented by H. T. Prinssep, Esq.

Specimens were exhibited of birds from Almorah, mounted in the Museum; and an articulated skeleton of the Adjutant, also prepared there.

On the conclusion of the ordinary business of the meeting,

A letter was read from the Most Rev. the Bishop of Cochin China, (who was present at the meeting) resubmitting a proposition for the publication of his Anamitan Dictionary, and stating that in an interview with the Governor-General, he had been empowered by his Lordship to renew his application to Govt. through the Secretary of the Society.

The favorable recommendation embodied in the report of the Committee of Papers last year, was qualified on one point—namely, in as much as the specimen of the work then before them wanted the Chinese character, which was deemed essential to its perfection as a literary work. This was now removed, and the Bishop was present, and ready to engage for its correct insertion: he would also engage, should it be determined to publish in lithography, to write, or superintend and correct the whole of the work on transfer paper, for the consideration of 4,000 rupees. The paper and printing might cost about 1,200 more. On these new grounds it was agreed that there would be no disrespect in submitting a second application to Government in favor of the proposition, which the Secretary was requested to prepare.

Note on the Progress of the Boring in Fort William.
By Captain Taylor, M. A. S.

In laying before the Society the accompanying section* and specimens of the strata found in the recent operations carried on in Fort William for the discovery of a spring of pure water, it may be expected that I should give some account of the progress and state of the experiments; I therefore beg to offer the following observations.

A detail of the early part of these operations, which commenced in October last, would comprise little besides a narrative of difficulties beyond of facts scientifically interesting. It will be sufficient briefly to state, that in the first attempt a depth of 136 feet only was attained by boring; when the same quicksand which in every case seems to have baffled General Garstin's efforts to proceed, put an end to this also. The tubes, without support in the loose sand, separated in several places, and fell out of the perpendicular; all attempts to rejoin or recover them failed.

As the same strata, and consequently in so much as that is concerned, the same difficulties might be expected to occur in boring in any part of the alluvial formation of the delta of the Ganges, it was not supposed that any material advantage would be gained by changing the site of operations; it was resolved to proceed with a second attempt in the immediate vicinity of that where we had just failed.

On the 28th of April another shaft was commenced; experience had suggested several improvements in the arrangement of the machinery, and taught us to use the tools with better effect. The improved skill of the workmen was made manifest by the fact, that the depth of 126 feet, which in the first attempt occupied forty-seven working days to attain, was now reached in eighteen with ease and facility.

So far the strata passed through, corresponded precisely, in their order at least, with all that had occurred on former occasions. The same quicksand which caused the abandonment of the first attempt was reached at 120 feet, and at this point our difficulties commenced. To obviate the disaster which had rendered our labour abortive in the first instance, the tubes were secured against dislocation in the loose sand by screws at their joints; and to this precaution must be attributed the success of the work so far. The sand alluded to is of so loose, I may say, semifluid a character, that on the removal of a portion of the water which stands in the tube to 15 feet from the surface, it immediately rose 17 feet; and although at this time the work was prosecuted night and day without any intermission, the sand rose faster in the tubes than it could be removed; so that at the end of eleven days and nights of incessant toil it had risen from 124 to 103 feet.

Hence it became evident that the only mode of overcoming the obstacles presented by the sand was to force the tubing down, until coming in contact with some firm stratum, the sand should be excluded. By unrelaxing perseverance and much labour, frequently gaining but a few inches in the day, the tubes at last attained a depth of 157 feet. The sand was gained upon; at 152 feet it was observed to become darker in color and coarser in grain, containing a quantity of what appeared to be small pieces of iron ore*. At 159 feet a stiff clay with yellow veins occurred, resembling in appearance a thin stratum passed at 127 feet. The borer, which during the prevalence of the sand was always behind the tubing, sometimes several feet, now penetrated in advance of it, and in less than 24 hours reached the depth of 175 feet.

The clay at 163 feet changed, for a short space, remarkably in color and substance; becoming dark, friable, and apparently containing much vegetable and possibly some ferruginous matter. At 170 feet it became sandy, and gradually passed into a very coarse sharp sand, mixed with small fragments of quartz and felspar, which was brought up from 175 feet.

This gravel or shingle at present impedes further progress, until we shall have made some auger capable of penetrating and lifting the stones.—Journal of the Asiatic Society for July.

BOMBAY BRANCH OF THE ROYAL ASIATIC SOCIETY.

At a meeting of the Bombay Branch of the Royal Asiatic Society, held on Wednesday, the 29th June.

Read a letter from W. H. Wathen, Esq., Chief Sec. to Govt., presenting to the Society, by desire of the Right Hon'ble the Governor in Council, in the name of the Hon'ble the Court of Directors, two copies of a catalogue of stars in the Southern Hemisphere, by Lieut. Johnson, of the St. Helena Artillery.

The President presented to the Society from Capt. T. D. Jervis, of the Engineers, three inscriptions on stone, from Jaina temples in the Southern Mahratta country, two of which are in the Hala Kanadi character.

The President presented 25 pieces of fossil bone to the museum on behalf of the Baron Hugel and read the following letter, which accompanied them:

MY DEAR SIR,—I received the other day from Mr Williams, Political Commissioner for Guzerat, a collection of fossil bones from Perim Island, from which place I requested his having the kindness to procure me some, as I was at Surat with him when Dr. Lush brought from thence a few specimens of petrified bones. The collection he sent me consisted of 44 pieces, and as I think that the Asiatic Society at Bombay would not object to give a little place to some of them, as the highly interesting fact of the mass of fossil remains in that little Island is worth a closer inspection, I take the liberty of sending 25 pieces to you. I think that when placed in the rooms they will most likely induce travellers in that direction to collect more of them. I have numbered them and made a little description of them, which is, however, a very superficial one. The immense quantities of fossil remains found lately in different places in India would make it very desirable that a gentleman at Bombay would take up this highly interesting study. Many extinct and entirely new genus of quadrupeds have been discovered, some of which have not even left a representation existing in the world in a living state. I am confident that great discoveries could be made at Perim, which, as a little Island (now) offers a highly interesting fact in the possession of these fossils. I anticipate that they will be found in Kattywar too. The Island may have been formed by an earthquake or by a separation from the main land through a rush of water.

I am sorry that my time, then, did not allow me to inspect the Island myself, and I regret that even now I am obliged to break off without being able to enter more fully on the subject.

Believe me, my dear Sir, with my best wishes for your health and happiness in this part of the world.

5th June.

Yours, &c.
BARON HUGEL.

List of fossil bones from Perim Island in the gulf of Cambay, most likely connected with those found recently on the Nerbudda near Hosingabad.

~ 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5. Pieces of Tusks of Mastodon Gigas (Euphas latideus), having found the teeth too of the animal on the same spot, there can be no doubt of the animal. These bones must have been a long time exposed to the tide and ebb, as they are partly perforated by a kind of sermala.

6. Bone of the fore leg—the lower joint of Mastodon Gigas.

7. Fragment of the bone of the leg of the same animal.

8. Fragment of the shoulder blade-bone of the same.

9. Vertebra (of ditto) N. B. At all events of a smaller individual.

10. Fragment of the skull of the same.

11, 12, 13, and 14. Shapeless fragments.

15 A very singularly formed bone with petrified wood.

16. Shapeless bone with a singular shining substance on it. In the matrix is contained a black substance like umbra.

17. Here a fragment of a petrified tusk is, a second time petrified: the calcareous fossil is surrounded by a hard sandstone.

18, 19, and 20. Most likely fragments of bones of Mastodon; the matrix singularly marked and perforated by the mentioned sermala.

21, 22, 23, and 24. Pieces of a large ruminant; I think the bones easily referred to the genus through comparative anatomy (Bos I think.)

25. Piece of the horn of a stag. (cervus)

My own collection contains fragments of Rhinoceros, larger fragments of stag (cervus) and of the horn bone of Bos. This gives till now only 4 kinds of animals: two ruminantia and two pachydermata: one jaw with teeth in my possession is new to me.

It was then on the motion of the President, seconded by J. Scott, Esq., and unanimously resolved, that the special thanks of the society be presented to the Baron Hugel, and that he be elected an honorary member of the society.

The President then exhibited to the meeting fac-similes of the ancient inscriptions at Gurnar, which had been presented to him by Capt. W. Lang, first assistant to the political agent in Kattywar, under whose direction they had been made. They are executed on cloth with great neatness and accuracy, and cover a surface of 150 square feet. — Bombay Gazette.

MEDICAL AND PHYSICAL SOCIETY.

Proceedings of a Meeting of the Medical and Physical Society of Calcutta, held at the Asiatic Society's Apartments, 2d July, 1836.

Dr. A. Stewart, Assistant-Surgeon, proposed at the last meeting, was elected a member of the Society.

The following Gentlemen were then proposed as Members:

— Dr. Drampford, Esq., Surgeon to the Right Hon'ble the Governor-General, by Mr. Bramley, seconded by Dr. Goodale.

Dr. Marshall and J. Dodgson, Esq., Assistant Surgeons of the Hospital establishment, by J. Dempster, Esq., seconded by Dr. D. Stewart.

Letters from the following gentlemen were then read:

From J. Boswell, Esq., Assistant-Surgeon, Prince of Wales Island, J. Forsyth, Esq., Assistant-Surgeon of the 65th Regiment Native Infantry, and E. Watson, Esq., Assistant-Surgeon of the 69th Regiment Native Infantry, requesting that their names might be withdrawn from the Society.

From W. Kerr, Esq., of Paisley, acknowledging with thanks the compliment of his election as a corresponding member of the Society.

From D. S. Young, Esq., Staff Surgeon, Nizam's Army, describing the properties and mode of preparation of a species of oil, a specimen which he forwarded to the Society for trial.

The oil is the expressed juice of the Moorung Kia. (The Hyperanthera Morunga of Botanists) and is said to be the basis of macassar oil. Mr. Young states that it is quite equal to that far famed oil for all the purposes for which oil is applied to the hair, and that it is used by the native doctors as an external application in rheumatism.

The oil is of a beautiful straw color, perfectly clear and transparent, congealing at a low temperature. Mr. Young thinks its use may supersede the expensive patent hair oils at present so extensively employed.

From G. Playfair, Esq., containing a description of a set of native lithotomy instruments with which several operations for urinary calculus had been successfully performed by a native doctor. The letter was accompanied by the instruments themselves, consisting of a knife and a blunt hook like a small vectis. They are both of the rudest description, especially the former, which is apparently an old gardener's clasp knife, the blade about two inches long, the edge nearly as blunt as the back, and attached to the handle by a most rickety joint; indeed it is hardly conceivable how any one could operate with such tools, but Dr. Playfair states that he has seen several of the calculi which had been extracted by this apparatus, and the operation has been witnessed by some gentlemen of his acquaintance.

Dr. D. Stewart then laid before the Society, the details of a case of cholera in which a solution of salts had been injected into the veins but without success.

The patient, a pale, slender individual, 34 years of age, was admitted into the General Hospital at 9 A. M. on the 1st of this month. At twelve the night before, he had been seized with sickness at stomach, slight cramps in the lower extremities, and he had passed one loose evacuation, for which he took compound jalap powder, after which he had upwards of 20 loose stools and frequent vomiting, and general spasm of the extremities: when he came into hospital his skin was cold and wet with perspiration, fingers shrivelled, countenance livid and shrunk. A scruple of calomel was administered with 3 grains of opium followed by spirit ammonia aromatica, one drachm mistura camphoræ, one ounce and half, and a sinapism to the epigastrium; brandy and sago occasionally. At 10 A. M. 10 grains calomel with 6 of colocyth and 2 drops of oil caryophylli, were ordered to be taken every half hour with the camphor and ammonia mixture. At 3 P. M. the blue color of the face and extremities was well marked, purging continued, but there were no cramps, tongue was thickly furred, pulse a mere flutter. He had already taken 80 grains of calomel. Dr. Stewart resolved therefore to try injection into the veins. Accordingly a vein having been opened in the arm four pints of the following solution was injected:

Carbonate of Soda, 2 scruples.
Muriate ditto, 3 drachms.

Distilled water at the temperature of 114° F.—4 pints. During the operation the pulse rose, the patient perspired freely, face became flushed and eyes animated. The voice which was previously quite recovered its natural tone. The skin of the extremities remained warm for half an hour, but pulse continued very unsteady. He continued sensible until 5 P. M. when he gradually sunk and died in convulsions. On examining the body after death, the viscera of the abdomen were found vascular, liver large, of a pale buff color, gall bladder shrunken and containing but little bile.

The right ventricle of the heart was distended with fluid blood containing numerous air bubbles, a great part of which gushed out with a gurgling noise. The same appearance was observed in the right auricle and superior vena. The branchial vein gave out two or three small bubbles of air. Dr. Stewart remarks that in injecting the solution the greatest caution was used, and he is convinced that not a particle of air entered the vein.

In consequence of some discussion which arose upon this communication, it was proposed by Dr. Corbryn, seconded by Dr. Cantor, that the members of the Society present at the meeting be formed into a committee to experiment upon and report on the extent to which injection into the veins may be practised with safety upon animals, and likewise the effects of aqueous solutions of saline substances at different temperatures. Dr. O'Shaughnessy to be the Secretary of the Committee.

This resolution was unanimously agreed to.

A case of extensive liver abscess successfully opened by A. Colquhoun, Esq., was then read and discussed.

The patient was a European who had been under medical care for some months before Mr. Colquhoun saw him when that gentleman took charge of him on the 23d April, he was in a state of great debility, pulse small and quick, pain in right side, increased on pressure, or on taking a full inspiration, tongue and skin natural, bowels confined. From the treatment he had previously undergone, and his general weak state, Mr. Colquhoun did not like to venture on general bleeding, but leeches were frequently applied to the side and a caustic blister, purgatives occasionally, and a scruple of calomel every night were administered.

These remedies produced no sensible effect, about the 6th May fullness and prominence of the side became distinct. These symptoms increased till the 15th, when the tumor was opened by an incision about two inches in length. From the opening seven pints of reddish yellow pus was discharged in the course of half an hour; this afforded him great relief, he could lie down comfortably, which he could not do previously. At 9 P. M. Mr. C. was suddenly called to see the patient; he found him pulseless, cold and nearly dead from hæmorrhage of some small vessels in the abdominal paries; several pints of blood were lost, and the bleeding was at length stopped by pressure of a pledget soaked in oil of turpentine. The wound was dressed with a simple dressing and a bandage; a mixture of sulphate of quinine with sulphuric acid given twice daily, and an opiate at night. On the 17th he was allowed a bottle of beer a day. He continued for some days weak, exhausted and slightly feverish; occasionally small quantities of thin pus were discharged from the wound. Gradually, however, he gained strength and improved till the middle of June, when a troublesome diarrhœa came on. From this he recovered, and at length was discharged perfectly cured. Mr. Colquhoun saw him in August last marching with his company in perfect health.

Mr. Colquhoun remarks that this is the most extensive liver abscess successfully operated on which has been recorded. He states also that after the operation he did not follow the practise recommended by most authors, that of filling the cavity of the abscess with lint: indeed from the magnitude of the abscess all the lint in Benares would not have sufficed for one dressing. Mr. Colquhoun is inclined to think that it is better to apply external pressure than to irritate the abscess by the presence of a large foreign body, especially when that abscess is situated in the centre of so important an organ as the liver. The writer also notices the alarming hæmorrhage, and seems inclined to believe that it may in some measure have contributed to the patient's ultimate recovery by keeping down inflammation and checking the secretion of pus.

PROCEEDINGS OF A QUARTERLY GENERAL MEETING OF THE SUBSCRIBERS OF THE MEDICAL RETIRING FUND.

The third Quarterly General Meeting of the Medical Retiring Fund was held on the 11th July.—on Mr. Superintending Surgeon S. Ludlow being called to the chair, the following report of the Committee of Management was read.

Since the last Quarterly Meeting held on the 11th of April, 1836, the Management have received official intelligence of the establishment of the Fund by the sanction of the Hon'ble Court of Directors, in a letter from Colonel Casement, Secretary to the Government of India in the Military Department, which has been circulated to subscribers, and published in the newspapers for general information.

The provisions of the Court's sanction are most satisfactory. In the first paragraph of their letter it is stated that a clause is directed to be inserted in the covenants of assistant-surgeons who may be appointed on this establishment by which they will bind themselves to subscribe to the Medical Fund. In the second, the disposal of the surplus funds is left to the Managers; and the Hon'ble Court do not object to the remittance through private agency of annuities granted in excess of those remitted through their treasury, provided that not more than the six annuities specified in the regulations be granted in any one year. A retrospective operation of the fund is also sanctioned from the 1st of January, 1833.

A part only of one regulation is objected to; the Hon'ble Court requiring a modification of Regulation I. of section V. of the rules of the fund, by excluding from the class of Medical servants who may receive back their subscription those who shall be 'struck off' or 'dismissed the service.'

The committee having carefully considered the purport of Colonel Casement's letter and its enclosure, respectfully tendered their thanks for the benefits thus conferred.

The committee further resolved that a circular letter be forthwith addressed to the service, to declare the fund in actual operation, to state to the subscribers the amount of arrears of subscription; and to request them to pay those arrears with interest, within a period of 12 months; and to call upon those members of the service who have not joined the fund, to do so within three months from the date of the circular letter, and to inform them also of the arrears of subscription, &c. due in like manner as mentioned above.

In conformity with this resolution, a circular letter to non-subscribers is in preparation, a copy of which will also be sent to subscribers for their information; and so soon as the accounts can be prepared the particulars of arrears, with interest, will be communicated, but owing to their number some time must necessarily elapse before this can be done.

The Committee anticipate no objection on the part of the subscribers to comply with the Hon'ble Court's stipulation with regard to Regulation I. s. V., and accordingly propose that the words "struck off," and or "dismissed the service," be omitted; and that the Regulation stand as follows.

Persons retiring from the service before having served seventeen years, persons transferred to the Pension Establishment, may refer their particular cases to the subscribers in India, through the Committee of Managers, and should a majority prove favorable to the measure, they shall receive back the whole or a portion of their subscriptions with or without interest. A similar modification must also be made of Regulation 6, section 3rd, but any decision come to here will, of course, be subject to confirmation by the subscribers; to whom the question will at the earliest opportunity be submitted.

Some doubt being entertained as to the rate of interest allowed by the Government, upon the money already in the Treasury belonging to the Fund, Colonel Casement has been addressed upon the subject, and the Committee have expressed a hope, that the indulgence of six per cent. may be considered to extend to all sums heretofore paid in, as well as to those which may be hereafter collected; and that such interest may be calculated from the date on which the subscriptions are deducted from the salaries of the subscribers.

Mr. Mercer having tendered his resignation of the office of secretary, the Management accepted the same; and passed a vote of thanks to that gentleman for his great exertions, and zealous co-operation, in their past labors; and Mr. Pearson was elected to the situation, subject to confirmation by the subscribers; in obedience to regulation 6 of section 4.

Letters have been received during the quarter from the following gentlemen: viz. from Messrs. Bagshaw and Co. requesting, on the part of Mrs. Burnard, refund of the subscription of the late Mr. Surgeon R. N. Burnard; which, as the decease of that officer took place before the establishment of the Fund, the Management have thought it right to agree to. From Mr. Assistant-Surgeon G. N. Cheek, requesting to be informed if there is any rule in the Fund excluding assistant-surgeons who have given up promotion from its benefits, and if so to submit the point for the vote of the subscribers. The Committee in reply quoted the passage in the preamble to the regulations which excludes assistant-surgeons who have given up promotion, and stated that they shall be happy to take the sense of the subscribers upon his case, if he will be good enough to favour them with such arguments as he may deem to meet its peculiar circumstances. From Col. Dunlop stating that he is instructed by Mr. Superintending Surgeon George Gunning Campbell, now on furlough, to make arrangements for payment of his arrears of subscription, and for future monthly subscriptions. From Mr. Assistant-Surgeon J. Bowron, requesting a statement of arrears, and information as to the usual course of payment. From Mr. Assistant-Surgeon J. F. Steward, containing arrangements for the payment of his arrears of subscription, and from Mr. Assistant-Surgeon A. K. Minto, requesting similar information previous to forming his determination to join the Fund.

By a communication from Mr. Morley there appears to be a sum of sicca rupees 78,602 6 7 to the credit of the Medical Retiring Fund, exclusive of interest, without taking into account the collection in north western Provinces. The Accountant-General further states that interest will be allowed on the balances at 6 per cent. per annum. No statement of receipts has been rendered during the quarter. The expenses have amounted to Company's rupees 390 15 10.

As it is of great importance that a deed of the article of the fund be prepared at an early period for the signature of the members, Messrs. Collier, Bird and Grant have been instructed to prepare one, and it is accordingly now in progress.

The number of subscribers at present on the list is 2 members of the Medical Board, 7 Superintending Surgeons, 68 Surgeons, 81 Assistant-Surgeons of the 1st class, 25 ditto of the 2nd class, and 2 ditto of the 3rd ditto—total 176.

Finally, the Committee of Management have to congratulate their constituents, upon the fair prospect which has opened before them. No doubt there must be some difficulty in bringing the Institution fairly into operation; especially with regard to the payment of arrears: but the inconvenience of this is but temporary, while the advantage will be important and lasting; and from the zeal and unanimity now displayed, well grounded anticipations may be indulged of every success.

The above report having been read, it was proposed by Mr. H. S. Mercer, seconded by Mr. Raleigh, and carried unanimously.

That the report now read be confirmed and adopted.

Proposed by Mr. H. S. Mercer, seconded by Mr. Corbyn,

That the arrears of subscription of Members due to the Fund shall be calculated with interest at 8 per cent. upon annual balance, and not upon their monthly contributions.

Amendment proposed by Mr. Raleigh, and carried,—

That in consequence of the Fund not having been actually established until the present period, and it being an object to lighten as much as possible the pecuniary demand on subscribers, I propose that the retrospective subscription from January 1833 up to the establishment of the Fund, shall be called for without any demand of interest on the arrears, and that the amount of interest accruing on the subscriptions already paid into the treasury, shall be carried to the credit of those who have paid it.

Proposed by Mr. Raleigh, seconded by Dr. Jackson, and carried,

That it shall be compulsory on intending subscribers, now in India, to signify their intention to join the Fund previous to the 31st of October, 1836, and that the arrears of subscription (except from interest) shall be paid up by twelve equal monthly instalments, previous to the 31st August, 1837.

Proposed by Mr. F. Corbyn, seconded by Mr. Low, and carried unanimously,

That so soon as the Fund deed shall be signed by the majority of the subscribers, either themselves or by their attorneys, the Management be empowered to offer three annuities to the three senior subscribers, in conformity with the regulations, there being now funds sufficient in the treasury for the purpose; and to offer others in succession as they are enabled to do so by the arrears of subscription being paid in.

MEETING AT BELGAUM—SALE AND PURCHASE OF COMMISSIONS.

At a meeting of officers of the Honorable Company's service at the station of Belgaum, held by permission of the Brigadier General commanding Southern Division of the army, on the 25th June, it was resolved.

1st.—That this meeting, having learnt that a memorial has been lately addressed to the Court of Directors by an officer on this establishment; complaining of a system of sale and purchase of commissions stated to be unfair and unauthorized, and uncontrolled by any limits save the value set on his commission by the retiring party, and the inclination or pecuniary ability of his juniors; and that this system is carried on without disguise or concealment, and is matter of public notoriety, and which he, for himself, the officers of his regiment, and many others, prays the Honorable Court will either modify or prohibit; and this meeting being impressed with the belief that the representations contained in the memorial in question, tend to convey very erroneous opinions to the Hon'ble Court of a system which it believes to be the fairest and most unobjectionable that could be devised, and which it is the almost universal wish of the Army should be allowed to continue, feels itself called on publicly to record its grounds of dissent from the statements and opinions of the writer of that memorial.

2nd.—That it is undisputed that the pension offered by the Honorable Court to officers who have completed their period of service in India, has not been sufficient inducement to any, but a most inconsiderable number to retire, while the increasing stagnation of promotion, added to diminished emoluments and advantages, renders retirement yearly still more improbable. The officers of regiments have endeavoured to counteract this deleterious stagnation, by contributing from their limited means such sums, as added to the pension, enable a few worn out officers to retire, and who, without such assistance, would be compelled by poverty to remain much longer in the service.

3rd.—The constitution of the service, as likewise the impracticability of being otherwise able to raise the requisite funds, necessarily limits this practice (in the infantry) to the rank of Major, and occasionally, but rarely, to that of senior Captain, it must therefore be evident that the offer of such small sums as the officers of the Army have it in their power to contribute, cannot, without other and more urgent reasons, be sufficient to induce these officers to resign the service at a moment when the fruits of it have arrived within their reach, in the enjoyment of superior emoluments, and the pride of military command. The officers who wish to retire, are such as feel themselves incapable from moral or physical infirmities of longer serving efficiently, and who having completed their full time, are anxious, but unable from want of means, to withdraw from their profession. This practice then, so far from being "uncontrolled," is limited on the one hand by the rank of the officer, and on the other by the prescribed term of service. Exceptions may occur; but it is evident that when an officer retires before he is entitled to a pension, such retirement entails no expense upon the state.

4th.—The advantages of the system pointed out, both to the efficiency of the Army and the comfort of the officers, have not been overrated in the petition which has given rise to this meeting; and the benefits to officers individually, are sufficiently proved by the almost universal wish that it should continue to exist; and while this meeting is led to believe that a conviction of those obvious advantages, has induced the Honorable Court tacitly, but virtually, to abolish restrictions, imposed at a time when circumstances were far different from the present, it deems it incumbent on itself solemnly to record its belief that the "dissatisfaction, jealousy, and irritation," represented to arise from this system, are confined to a few, if not exclusively to the writer of the memorial referred to.

5th.—This meeting is impressed with the belief, the practice is approved of by the Hon'ble Court, for reasons both of policy and humanity, and because the system of purchase has been already recognized in the Civil and Medical Services, and the principle of a retiring being sanctioned for the Army. There is also a clause in the regulations of Bombay Military Fund which provides for this very purpose, but which, from want of means alone, the officers of the Army have been prevented from carrying into effect.

6th.—The plan understood to be proposed by the writer of the memorial, of purchase in the line, involves objections both in detail and principle, of the most serious nature, such as to render it, in the opinion of this meeting, most undesirable; it would moreover require the whole amount of purchase money to be paid by the person immediately promoted,—a condition which could not in most cases be fulfilled from absolute want of means.

7th.—The suppression of the system now in existence, would inflict a most serious and lasting injury on a large body of officers. Many of them induced by the belief that it was tacitly acknowledged and approved by the Honourable Court, have advanced sums of money (to them of considerable amount) to secure the advantages contingent on its uninterrupted continuance: many, in the expectation of being repaid in like manner, when their own time of service should expire; while many have, without repining, witnessed their own supersession by their more fortunate comrades, in the confident hope that the course of events would ultimately draw the same chance of obtaining rank, and the means of retirement, within their reach also.

8th.—That this meeting, while it acknowledges with gratitude the desire shown by the Honourable Court to promote the comfort and happiness of their old officers, as evinced in the modification of the retiring regulations lately published, still feels persuaded that this modification is, of itself, for the reasons adduced, quite insufficient to effect the desired purpose; but it is of opinion that, combined with the free permission to offer a decant and respectable competency to officers who have served their time, it will have the happiest effect on the spirit and efficiency of the Army: such permission will moreover set at rest the vexatious doubts and difficulties which are ever liable to be raised by memorials similar in spirit to that which has been the origin of this meeting.

9th.—That a memorial founded on the above resolutions, be drawn up, and transmitted through the proper channel to the Court of Directors.

Signed by 23 Officers.

Belgum, 25th June, 1836.—Bombay Gazette.

ORIENTAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY.

A meeting of Proprietors of the Oriental Life Insurance Company was held on the 18th July, for the purpose of revising their rates of Premium. Mr. Bruce being in the chair.

A new scheme of Insurance Premiums, prepared with much care and labor by Mr. G. J. Gordon, with explanations and comparative tables of the old rates, those now charged by the Universal, and the rates recommended by Mr. Curran to the Government Life Insurance Committee, having previously been circulated among the Proprietors, a great deal of conversation arose, (chiefly between Mr. Carr and Mr. Gordon) about the probable effect of the proposed modifications upon the general interests of the office,—which ended in the adoption of the following Resolution:

1st.—Proposed by Mr. Carr, seconded by Mr. Manuck and resolved,—

That Mr. Gordon's Table of Rates for Insurances for Life be adopted.

2d.—Proposed by Mr. Gordon, seconded by Mr. Davidson,—

That with reference to competition, it is submitted to the partners of the Company, whether it may not be expedient to reduce the proposed rates for the seven years renewable class conformably to the following abstract:

Age 20 from 36 to 35	Rupees per 1000
" 25 from 40 to 38	"
" 30 from 45 to 43	"
" 35 from 50 to 48	"
" 40 from 55 to 53	"

3d.—Proposed by Mr. Carr, seconded by Mr. Arathoon,—

That instead of the rates proposed in the Table submitted, upon Insurances for seven years, the integral rates of Mr. Curran's Table be adopted from the age of 55 upwards.

4th.—Proposed by Mr. Jenkins, seconded by Mr. Arathoon,—

That the Tables for Insurance for one year, three years, and five years be modified upon the same principle as the rates for seven years.

5th.—Proposed by Mr. Davidson, seconded by Mr. Carr,—

That all Insurers upon whom the increased premium will fall, be advised by letter when their policies become renewable upon the new rates.

6th.—Proposed by Mr. Arathoon, seconded by Mr. Jenkins,—

That the proceedings of this day be circulated to the Proprietors resident in Calcutta for their final votes upon rates proposed.

7th.—Proposed by Mr. Jenkins, seconded by Mr. Carr,—

That the thanks of the Proprietors are due to Mr. Gordon for the care and trouble he has bestowed upon the table of rates now submitted.

8th.—Proposed by Mr. Arathoon, seconded by Mr. Carr,—

That on the final adoption of the revised rates, they be published in the principal daily papers for a fortnight.

9th.—Proposed by Mr. Davidson, seconded by Mr. Carr,—

That the thanks of the Meeting be given to the Chair.

We may as well observe that the principle adopted, in Mr. Gordon's modified table as lately circulated among the proprietors, was to preserve the same aggregate amount of premiums to the office as hitherto, but to rate them for the different ages with more exact relation to the real risk of life as far as the same had been ascertained by actual results of experience in his office. The further modification now proposed for the fixed-period Policies, in the second Resolution might, it is assumed, occasion a sacrifice of about 8,000 rupees to the Proprietors, which would only be made up to the extent of about one-half by adopting the third Resolution. We were happy to hear the Society had been going on for some time with uninterrupted prosperity. No lapses have occurred since the last half-yearly Meeting, and the capital now invested in Company's Paper amounts to 4,80,000 rupees. Twenty-three new policies were granted during the two months of May and June last.—Courier.

CIVIL SERVICE ANNUITY FUND MEETING.

At an adjourned Special General Meeting of Subscribers to the Civil Service Annuity Fund, held pursuant to notice, at the Town Hall, on Monday, the 11th July, 1836—

Present—G. J. Siddons, W. Money, G. Stockwell, H. F. Pinsep, J. F. M. Reid, F. Millet, J. A. Donn, H. M. Parker, A. C. Bidwell, J. B. Ogilvy, and G. F. McClintock, Esqrs.

G. J. Siddons, Esq., was called to the Chair.

Moved by Mr Pinsep, that the printed Rules as circulated to the Subscribers and advertised under the orders of the Committee of Managers, dated 27th May last, be adopted with the following amendment to Rule No. 36, in order to fix the date and manner of carrying that Rule into effect, viz after the words "entitling him thereto," in the middle of the Rule, add—"If he do so before the 1st May, and shall have then retired from the Service, his Annuity will commence from that date. If he complete his payments and retire at any subsequent date of the same year, the value of the Annuity will still be calculated as from 1st May, but the retiring servant will receive only the fractional portion of the Annuity for the first year, calculated from the date of such payment and retirement, and his subscriptions after the 1st August shall not be credited in his account, but shall accrue to the Fund, together with the unpaid portion of the Annuity."

The above motion being seconded by Mr. G. Stockwell, was carried unanimously.

A vacancy being reported in the Committee of Managers in consequence of the retirement of Mr. C. W. Smith, Mr. F. Millet was unanimously elected.

The thanks of the Meeting being voted to the Chairman, the Meeting separated.

UNION BANK.

A general half yearly meeting (the 13th) was held on the 14th July, at the Union Bank, pursuant to advertisement. Captain VINI in the Chair. The business of the meeting commenced by reading the SECRETARY'S REPORT,—14th JULY, 1836 In reporting operations for the last six months, I have again to announce continued prosperous results

The nett profits amount to no less than Company's rupees 1,28,046 5 10 equal to 14 7 1/4 per cent per annum on your capital stock.

The rate for the preceding half year was 13 5, and for the half year before that, 12 10 2.

I have to remark, as formerly, that profit upon paper issues appears to enter but slightly into this large amount of gain the points of greatest and least issue in the six last months of 1835 were 5,71,000 and 3,35,000, in the half year now expired, 7,57,000 and 4,04,000, or in favor of the present period about, say 6 to 5. The new coinage has probably had some unfavorable effect upon note issues, from the inconvenience of their sicca denomination. Our business in all other respects has increased so much, that Co.-rupee notes will probably obtain a proportionate share of town circulation. This, however, is a matter of comparatively little moment in these times of prosperous commercial activity. The new Notes may be expected by the end of the current year—as we learn from our Agents, Sir Charles Cockerell and Co.'s replies to our overland instructions of October last.

A considerable expense is entailed on the Bank by this unavoidable change in our bank paper. The new notes are expected to cost about £1,600 and on their passing into circulation this amount will be gradually written off, as notes are worn out and cancelled. In this manner, the accounts now before you, are charged with rupees 3,800 for the half year, besides which we have a stock of sicca notes valued on our books at sicca rupees 9,000, so that even after using off 3 or 4,000 rupees more before the new notes arrive, we shall still have on hand about 5,000 rupees worth of obsolete paper. In appropriating the present overflowing profits, it may be expedient to set apart something, to meet this extra expense.

You are aware that all the resident proprietor's supplementary shares are taken up. Forty-six only remain, the privilege of absentee. These, if not claimed in December, will be sold at next General Meeting, under the resolutions of January last,—like the two full and two supplementary shares to be sold this day. It is hardly necessary to remind you that in computing whatever dividend you now declare, supplementary shares will of course reckon for two months only, viz, from the 1st of May.

My last report wound up with a figured sketch of progress made towards extinguishing the item of account called "Dependences" no less at one time than Sa. Rs. 2,72,201 4 10 representing all the losses of the Bank from the beginning

I then showed that from accumulation of undivided profits and realized outstandings, had arisen, to set off against those losses, a reserved fund amounting on the 30th June, 1835, to Sa. Rs. 2,25,410 4 8, leaving a balance of Sa. Rs. 46,791 2 pies.

It was also shewn that within the six months following, a similar fund of Sa. Rs. 33,149, had become applicable to further reduction, so that on the 31st December, 1835, the balance was only Sa. Rs. 13,542 2 pies, against which would be set off, future realizations from Palmer and Co.'s Assignees, and from Gopee Mohun Dass's Estate, the latter, greatly more than enough to cover the whole balance.

But this small balance of Sa. Rs. 13,542 2 pies, or Co.'s Rs. 14,444 13 1, has been still further reduced during the six months now expired by the following accumulation to credit of reserved fund, viz. Received from Palmer and Co.'s Assignees Sa. Rs. 1,319 5 8 or Co.'s Rs. 1,407 4 11

Unappropriated profits of the previous year, after dividing 10 per cent. and applying Co.'s Rs. 19,933 5 4, to complete each share to Co.'s Rs. 2,700 . . . 6,496 0 2

Total Co.'s Rs. 7,903 5 1

Deducted from last half year's balance 14,444 13 1

Leaves a balance this half year . . . 6,541 8 0

This balance then is all that remains now unextinguished of the old "Dependences" and it is, consequently to be far more than covered by expectancies before stated. Its amount is only about one twentieth of the net half year's profits which you are now proceeding to divide or otherwise appropriate as may seem meet.

J. Young, Secy.

It was proposed by Mr. Hurry, seconded by Mr. Carr, and carried unanimously, Resolution I.—That the Secretary's report just read, is approved, and that it be published.

It was proposed by Mr. Oxborough, seconded by Mr. Gardner, and carried unanimously, Resolution II.—That the accounts now submitted are approved and passed by this meeting, and that the books be closed accordingly.

It was proposed by Mr. Rogers, seconded by Mr. Rondo, and carried unanimously, Resolution III.—That a half yearly dividend at the rate of twelve per cent. per annum, being Company's rupees one hundred and sixty-two (Co.'s Rs. 162,) per full share, and Company's rupees eighteen (Co.'s Rs. 18,) per supplementary share, be now declared.*

The meeting then proceeded to elect four new directors in the room of Messrs. R. H. Cockeill, William Storm, Alexander Rogers and Radhaprasad Roy, whose periods of service had expired. The election fell on Messrs. K. R. Mackenzie, William Martin, W. C. Hurry, and Radamadab Bonerjea.

It was moved by Baboo Dwarkanath Tagore, seconded by Mr. Manuk, and carried unanimously, IV—That as the establishment appears to be inadequate, both as to salaries and numbers, while the business of the Bank has very largely increased, and its affairs are in a prosperous state—the directors be authorized to revise the whole establishment, and to submit to a general meeting, to be called for the purpose, such recommendations on this subject as they may think fit.

The usual thanks to the chair being voted, the Meeting broke up.—Hurkara.

REMARKS.

The items of the foregoing statement, which would appear to call for remark, are "Joint Liability Bills and Notes," "Purchaser of Pledged and forfeit Securities," "Doubtful Debts," "Advance for Legal Proceedings," "Suspence Account, B. N.," and "Suspence Account."

"JOINT LIABILITY BILLS AND NOTES."—The item is the balance of the principal amount of the Acceptances, (with charges) for which the Estates of Messrs. Crutenden, Mackillop and Co., Alexander and Co., Fergusson and Co., and Mackintosh and Co., are liable. For this sum the Bank holds the direct liability of the four Firms. Since the last report the balance has been reduced in the sum of Co.'s Rs. 10,778-2-8.

"PURCHASERS OF PLEDGED AND FORFEIT SECURITIES."—This item shows the Balance of the Acceptances for which the Collateral Securities of the Estates of Messrs. Alexander and Co. have been sold—the title deeds of the several Properties remaining with the Bank pending payment in full of the purchase monies.

"DOUBTFUL DEBTS."—The sum of Co.'s rupees 25,734-0-1 is the balance of Co's Rs. 9,23,451-5-4, the difference having been written off as Bad Debt. This balance was valued by the directors, at the close of the half year just ended, at Co's Rs. 1,42,359-4-9.

The profit on the Banking business of the past half year amounts to Co's Rs. 2,66,666-10-8, or at the rate of Co's Rs. 10 per cent. per annum on the Stock. Of this profit Co's Rs. 8,522-12 6 is the amount written off on account of Old Bank Notes marked A. outstanding for more than 22 years.

"ADVANCE FOR LEGAL PROCEEDINGS."—The amount of this item was advanced to meet the costs of the Appeal made by the Assignees of Palmer and Co. against the Judgment obtained by the Bank in the Supreme Court in the matter of the surplus proceeds of the Company's Paper of the Estate of Messrs. Palmer and Co., held by the Bank.

"SUSPENCE ACCOUNT, B. N."—The sum at credit of this account is the balance of outstanding Old Bank Notes marked A. Since the report of the half year ended 31st December last, only Co's Rs. 2,481-1-1 of Notes of this description, have been paid.

"SUSPENCE ACCOUNT."—The sum at Credit of this account consists of Interest on the Advances for Indigo made to the Assignees of Alexander Co. of the profit arising on those advances: and of other items relating to the Bank's transactions with the late Firm or Estate of Alexander and Co.

Published by order of the Directors.

SUPREME COURT REPORTS.

MINUTES OF DE REE, OR STRETTCELL versus PALMER AND THE OTHER CASES.

Pronounced 10th May, 1836.

Decree and Declare that the Lands and Houses situate in Calcutta, which the Testator Major-General Claude Martin possessed at the time of his decease, consist (besides the said House situate at Chandpal Ghant, decreed by decree of December 1822, to be personal property) of the following, viz. &c.

Decree and Declare that inasmuch as there is no party to these suits who hath made any claim to the said Lands or Houses on behalf of the Crown, that the Receiver appointed by the Court in these causes shall continue in possession and to receive the rents thereof, and from time to time pay the same into the hands of the Accountant-General and Sub-Treasurer of the Honorable East India Company, with the privity of the Accountant-General of this Court to the credit of a separate account in these causes to be opened and headed as hereinafter directed.

Decree and Declare that the sum of Sa. Rs. 4,74,154, 11 Annas and 6 Pie has arisen from the rents of the said two Houses situate in Calcutta, received from the time of the death of the said Testator up to the 29th February 1832, and that the said sum, together with the interest and receipts since the date of the said report ought to be transferred to the head of a separate and distinct account, entitled An Account of the rents and profits of Houses situate within Calcutta, subject to a claim of the Crown, and that the said sum, and all future rents and profits be paid in by the said Receiver, and do remain under the said head of account in these causes to abide any claim that may be hereafter made on behalf of the Crown.

Declare that the Houses, Lands, and immoveable property of the Testator, situate without the boundaries of Calcutta, but within the limits of the Presidency of Fort William in Bengal, as such limits stood in 1832, and which were held by the Testator at the time of his death, did not pass by his Will, and that none of such Houses, &c. have been since his death sold, that the Receiver thereof appointed in these causes was at the date of the Decretal Order of 23d February 1832 and is now in possession thereof, and in receipt of the rents and profits thereof.

Declare that the said last mentioned Houses and Lands consist of, and are situated as follows, viz. &c.

Decree and Declare that the Receiver of the last mentioned Houses, &c. do continue in possession, and to receive the rents thereof, and from time to time do pay the same into the hands of the Accountant-General and Sub-Treasurer of the East India Company, with the privity of the Accountant-General of this Court, to the credit of a separate account to be opened in these causes and headed as hereinafter next directed.

Decree and Declare that the sum of Sa. Rs. 53,558-9-3 has arisen from the rents of the said last mentioned Houses and Lands, and that the same ought to be carried to the credit of a separate account to be opened in these causes entitled Account of the Rents and Profits of the real and immoveable Property of Major General Martin, situate without the boundaries of Calcutta, and within the Presidency of Fort William, that the same, together with all future payments, to the credit of the said accounts and accumulations of interest thereon do remain to such credit to abide future claims.

Decree and Order that the cause wherein Ralph Uvedale, Esquire, Clerk of the Crown, at the relation of Thomas Christenson was Informant, and John Palmer, John Caulfield and Alexander Aberdeen, Executors of the Last Will and Testament of Claude Martin deceased were Defendants, and which has been set down for hearing and further directions, together with these causes pursuant to an order of Court bearing date the 21st day of January 1836, on the motion of John Pearson, Esquire, Advocate-General for the East India Company, be consolidated with these causes Decree and Order that the Funds separately entitled General Claude Martin's Fund for the relief of the Poor of Lucknow, Chandernagore, and Calcutta, and General Martin's Fund for the release and relief of Prisoners, and standing to the credit of the last mentioned cause, be continued under such separate titles, but respectively transferred with such separate titles to the causes hereby consolidated.

Decree and Declare that the Charity for the Poor of Calcutta should be dispensed and governed in the manner contained in the Schedule marked C, and annexed to the Report of Thomas Scott, Esq., the former Master of this Court, made and filed on the 11th day of November 1802, that is to say—1st, That this Charity shall be dispensed on the 2d day of every month, commencing with May in the year of our Lord 1803. 2d, That the Head Chaplain of Calcutta and the Church Wardens, the Accountant-General of the Supreme Court and the Registrar shall be the Distributors. 3d, That the Charity shall be distributed in small sums to each individual, consistently with the intention of the Testator, and proportionate to the more pressing wants of the person receiving the aid. 4th, That the Charity shall be distributed generally, as far as it will extend to all necessitous persons, inhabitants of Calcutta regard being chiefly had to character, conduct, and age, and without having any relation to distinctions whether of country or birth, or any other except that a preference is to be given to the poor of the Christian, Mussulmans, or Hindoo Religions in conformity with the Will of the Testator.

Decree and Declare that the Rules and Regulations under and by which the Charity for the release of Poor Debtors confined in the Jail of Calcutta, shall be dispensed and governed, are mentioned in the Schedule marked A, and annexed to the report of Thomas Scott, Esq., the former Master of this Court, and made and filed on the 11th day of November, 1802; that is to say—1st, That the Fund shall be dispensed annually on the 13th of September, the Anniversary of the Testator's death. 2d, That a preference shall be given to distressed Officers and Soldiers in conformity with the Will of the Testator. 3d, That no person who has once reaped the benefit of this Fund, shall ever again be released under it. 4th, That no person shall be released who has not been in prison more than nine months; and who cannot, if required, make affidavit that his confinement has not been collusive, and with the view of availing himself of this donation. 5th, That the person to be released, must, if required so to do, surrender upon Oath for the benefit of his Creditors, all his Property of what nature or kindsoever, save and except his wearing apparel, bedding, and the tools of his Trade. 6th. That no person of known bad character shall be released. Testimonies in favor of character to be produced by the Prisoner if required. 7th. That when debts are equal or nearly so, the Prisoner who has been longest confined, whose family is largest, or whose trade or business is most likely to suffer the greater injury, to have the preference next after poor Officers and Soldiers. 8th. That the Distributors of this Charity be the Accountant General of the Supreme Court, the Sheriff, and the Prothonotary. 9th. That the names of Prisoners who have been released to be advertised every year immediately after the distribution of the Fund.

Decree and Declare that the Charity for the relief of Poor Debtors in the Jail of Calcutta, shall be dispensed and governed in the manner mentioned in the Schedule annexed to the Report of Thomas Scott, Esq., the former Master of this Court, and marked B., and which said Report was made and filed on the 11th day of November 1802 that is to say—1st That this Charity shall be dispensed annually on the Anniversary of Testator's death 2d. That the Accountant-General and Sheriff shall be the Dispensers. 3d That no Prisoner who is not of fair character (of which if required, he is to produce testimonial) is to be relieved. 4th. That the sum to be dispensed to any Prisoner not in any case to exceed fifty rupees but the amount to each Prisoner shall be regulated by his rank in life, age, family, and necessities. 5th. That the surplus of each year's Fund (should any remain), shall be carried to the credit of the following distribution :

Decree and Declare that the Funds from the said Charity at Chandernagore shall in lieu of the manner mentioned in the second Report made by E. Lloyd Master, on 24th May, in the year 1804 which mode of distribution has become unsuitable and cannot now be carried into effect from the change of the Government of that Settlement, be dispensed in the manner hereinafter next mentioned ; that is to say—that the Accountant-General and Sub Treasurer of the East India Company, with the privy of &c. shall pay half yearly the interest of this Bequest to the person who shall have the Office of the Juge de Paix and Lieutenant de Police of Chandernagore, to be by him applied and paid pursuant to the intentions of the said Testator, and the Report of the said Master of the 24th May 1804, which except in so far as varied and altered by this Decree, is confirmed.

Decree and Declare accordingly, that the said Judge de Paix, Lieutenant de Police, shall receive and distribute the said charity in manner following, that is to say—

That out of the half yearly interest of this Bequest, the person who shall hold the Office of the Juge de Paix and Lieutenant de Police be at liberty to appropriate monthly such part thereof in such sums and proportions as he may think proper by a regular distribution to be made on or before the sixth day in every month, to such necessitous persons either Europeans or reputed descendants of Europeans or Christian inhabitants of Chandernagore as shall be found to be the most in want of relief. Second that he do appropriate such further part of the said half yearly interest as he shall deem necessary, and in such sums and proportions as he shall think fit, provided no individual receives more than the sum specified hereafter for and towards the relief of such indigent natives, inhabitants of Chandernagore, of either the Mussulman or Hindoo Religions as shall be found to be the most in want of relief. That for the faithful and equitable management of the foregoing the Juge de Paix and Lieutenant de Police be appointed as trustees to receive and distribute this Charity. That the half yearly interest of this Bequest shall be paid by the said Accountant-General and Sub-Treasurer of the East India Company with the like privy aforesaid to the said Juge de Paix and Lieutenant de Police upon his granting a receipt for the same and engaging to give a true account of the distribution of the said Charity. That the said Juge de Paix and Lieutenant de Police do fix and alter as occasion may require the list of the several distributions, provided that he shall not have power to give to any one European, more than sixteen sicca rupees per month, or to any Native more than 8 sicca rupees per month; and that he do keep regular monthly accounts of the several disbursements relating to this Bequest and once in every year transmit the same or a copy thereof to the Accountant-General of this Honorable Court, for the purpose of being filed in the said Court, that all the proceedings of the said Juge de Paix and Lieutenant de Police be entered in a book to be kept for that purpose.

Decree and Order that Sa. Rs. 30,825 be transferred from the Fund for the Relief of the Poor of Calcutta, Chandernagore, and Lucknow, to the credit of a separate head of account in these consolidated causes, to be entitled Fund for the payment of the sum of Sa. Rs. 1,200 annually to the Distributors of General Claude Martin's Charity to the Poor of Calcutta, Chandernagore, and Lucknow pursuant to the Will.

Decree and Order that a further sum of Sa. Rs. 9,027-2-3 which will remain as a balance after leaving 1 50 000 to the credit of, and fully providing for, the Funds for the Relief of the Poor of Calcutta, Chandernagore and Lucknow, pursuant to the Master's Report of the 21st November 1835, be transferred to the credit of the said Fund entitled Fund for the release of Prisoners; and that a further sum of 28,775-3-6 be transferred from the Fund now standing to the general credit of these causes, so as to make altogether a sum of 37 810-8-6 transferable and transferred in order to complete the said Fund for the Release of the Prisoners in Calcutta to Sa. Rs. 1,54,125, so that the same may yield 6,000 annually at 10 per cent. after paying the Court and Government Agent's charges thereon.

Decree and Order that the last mentioned Fund, entitled Fund for the Release of Prisoners, be divided into two, and a new Fund and head of account opened in these consolidated causes to be entitled General Martin's Fund for the Relief of Prisoners, and the sum of Sa. Rs. 25 678 transferred thereto from the said Fund, entitled General Martin's Fund for the Release of Prisoners, so as to leave the principal of the said last mentioned Fund 1 29 450.

Decree and Declare that a sum of 1 75,925-9 has been spent and laid out towards completing the House, called Constantia House out of the sum of 2 00,000, which the said Testator by the 33d Article of his Will calculated might be required for that purpose, and that the balance of Sa. Rs. 24 074-7 ought now to be set apart from the Funds standing to the general credit of these causes, and carried to the head of a separate account in these consolidated causes, entitled Building and Repairing Fund of Constantia House, and placed at the disposal of the Governor-General in Council pursuant to the Decree of the 23d February 1832; and that in case the same, and the Funds hereinafter mentioned as required for the repairs of the said House, should not be sufficient for that purpose, that such further sum as shall be necessary be paid out of the Fund to the general credit of these causes on the application of the Advocate-General of the East India Company on behalf of the Governor-General in Council.

Decree and Declare that from and out of the Funds now standing to the general credit of these causes, a further sum of Sicca Rupees 54,000 ought to be transferred to the said separate head of account and fund entitled Fund for repairing and finishing Constantia House, and paid to the Governor-General in Council, or some person by him duly authorized to receive the same in order that the works may be executed by Major C. J. C Davidson, Major of Engineers in the East India Company's Service, or such person as the Governor-General in Council shall appoint.

Decree and Declare that Jean Jacques Deverinne, junior, is a fit and proper person, due regard had to the wishes of the Testator, to fill the office of Superintendent of the said Building and Premises; and that in case of his death, removal for misconduct or resignation, the Governor-General in Council ought to appoint all future Superintendents with due regard to the wishes of the said Testator, as signified in his Will, and that the care and superintendence of the said Buildings can most conveniently, and with due observance of the wishes of the said Testator, be exercised by the Governor General in Council.

Decree and Declare that the sum 2,96,077-12-6 will be a sufficient sum to satisfy the principal and interest of the bequest of Sicca Rupees 1,00,000 for the establishment of the College at Lucknow, directed by the 33d Article of the Testator's Will to be established, and that the same ought to be set apart from the Funds now standing to the general credit of these causes, and carried to a separate head of account entitled Fund for the establishment of General Martin's College and School at Lucknow, and the interest of the said Fund paid over to the Governor General in Council, or such person as he may appoint to receive and apply the same for the purpose aforesaid.

Decree and Declare that no other sum of money has been expended under the directions or authority of any Accountant-General and Master of this Court in the necessary care and superintendence of the said Tomb and House at Constantia except the sum next mentioned, and that the sum of 8,218-4-1 has been duly expended under the directions and authority of George Money, Esquire, former Master and has been duly paid to the representative of Jean Jacques Deverinne pursuant to the Master's separate Report of the 16th October of 1833.

Decree and Declare that it appeared pursuant to a separate Report of the Master made and filed on the 14th July 1835, and afterwards amended on allowance of exceptions and filed on the 15th August 1835, and duly confirmed, that no part of the sum of 3,11,300 could then be transferred from the Fund set apart for payment of monthly Pensions pursuant to the Will of the Testator back to the general credit of these causes.

Declare that the parties now entitled to receive monthly Pensions are—

and that the annual sum necessary to pay and satisfy the same is sicca rupres 7,944 pursuant to the said Report.

Decree and Order by and with the consent of the Advocate-General of the East India Company on behalf of the Governor General that the Accountant-General of this Court do monthly issue a certificate authorizing the Accountant-General and Sub-Treasurer of the East India Company to pay to the Resident for the time being of the East India Company's Government at Lucknow, the monthly Pensions due to the Pensioners at Lucknow, pursuant to Will of the said Testator.

Decree and Declare that the Accountant-General of this Court shall be authorized to stop the payment of the said monthly Pensions until further order, unless a half yearly memorandum or account of the sums paid shall be furnished to him by the said Resident.

Further Decree and Declare that the Accountant-General of this Court for the time being, on receiving intimation thereof from the Resident, or other good and credible information, shall be authorized to notify to the Court, as the same may occur, the deaths of the said Pensioners at Lucknow, and thereupon to apply for and obtain an order authorizing the transfer from the separate Fund for the payment of Pensioners at Lucknow, created by and under an order duly confirming the said amended separate Report of the Master, made and filed on the 15th August 1835, back again to the Fund at the general credit of these causes of so much as was required to pay the Pension of the deceased person.

Decree and Declare that Sa. Rs. 2,83,077 will form a sufficient Fund to set apart to pay the annual sum of Sa. Rs. 2,580 for divers servants employed in and about the said House, &c and also the annual sum of Sa. Rs. 6,960 pursuant to the same 32d Article for other persons retained and employed in and about the said House and Tomb; and also the annual sum of Sa. Rs. 1,200 in the said 32d Article directed to be paid to an European House Superintendent of the whole Establishment of the said House; and also the sum of Sa. Rs. 280 directed by the said 32d Article to be paid annually to 8 Harkams the said sums amounting altogether to Sa. Rs. 12,288 annually, and that in lieu of the said sum of Sa. Rs. 3,00,000 directed by the said Decretal Order of 23d February 1832, to be set apart for that purpose only the said sum of Sa. Rs. 2,83,077 (the annuities or pensions of 720 annually and 420 annually to two persons for taking care of the said Tomb and House, and having been otherwise provided for and included pursuant to the said separate amended Report filed 15th August 1835, in the Fund for the payment of Pensioners at Lucknow) ought to be set apart for the payment of salaries and wages paid to a Supervisor and Servants employed in and about the said House, Tomb, Buildings, Gardens, and Establishment of Constantia House.

Decree and Order that the said sum of Sa. Rs. 2,83,077 be carried to a separate head of account and credit in these causes to be entitled Fund for the payment of the Establishment at Constantia, pursuant to the 32d Article of General Martin's Will.

Declare that pursuant to Master's Report of 24th November 1835 it appears that in case all the said several sums hereinbefore mentioned and decided were carried to separate credits, and set apart from the general fund to the credit of these causes the residue of the said Fund to the General Credit of these causes would only have amounted to Rs. 8,59,554 at the date of the said Report, and that it appears by certificate of the Accountant-General, the same together with accumulations of interest, now only amount to 9,04,144-12-5.

Consequently Declare that pursuant to the Will of the said Testator and Decree of 1832, the same is not yet devisable.

Order and Decree that the costs of all parties to be taxed as between Attorney and Client up to and including this Decree, do and shall be paid out of the Funds standing to the General Credit of these causes, and that the Accountant-General and Sub-Treasurer of the East India Company, with the privy of, &c. shall be at liberty to sell Company's Paper for such purpose if necessary.

Decree and Declare that the several Bills of Complaint filed in these causes be severally retained and that all parties are at liberty to apply to this Court from time to time as they may be advised—Calcutta Courier.

TUESDAY, JULY 5.

CUSTOMS' CONFISCATION.

Muddenmohun Sein v. C. C. Hyde.

Mr. Clarke opened. The plaint was filed on the 11th of March last, in trover, for 2507 pieces of goods valued at Rs. 3,000.

Mr. Prinsep stated the case for the plaintiff. This is an action brought by the plaintiff to recover the value of five bales of goods, taken to the Custom House, on the 5th of February last, to be passed for export to Dacca, it being at that time the law to levy transit duty on goods exported into the interior from this place. The bales were taken to the Custom House on the 5th February when an application was made for a rowannah accompanied by a tender of the duty. Some difficulties, however, occurred, and the plaintiff on a subsequent day found the goods taken to the "smuggled godown," where they were afterwards sold by the Collector of Customs, and the money appropriated to his order. To prove this, the learned counsel argued, would be sufficient to show a conversion, and he was quite at a loss to imagine what the defence would be, for surely, the fact of plaintiff taking his goods to the custom house was no evidence of his intention to smuggle them.

Ramkissno Dullol.—Proves the jurisdiction,

Samchurn Sircar.—I am the plaintiff's gomastha; he is a cloth-dealer trading to Dacca, and had in a godown in February last 5 bales of cloth which were subsequently taken to the Custom House. I went with them, and saw them taken in at the Export-gate, Strand-road; they were then put up to be appraised. I was asked where they had come from and so forth. Plaintiff made no application on that day. The cloths were left in charge in the Custom House. The following day plaintiff was somewhat indisposed, and the day following was Sunday. On Monday plaintiff and I went to the appraiser's godown, but the goods had been removed. I was informed the cloths were in the 'smuggled godown.' An invoice and a petition were drawn up, and given to a hulkari to be taken up to the collector. A little time after the peon came down and gave the papers to Mr. Bracken. That gentleman enquired plaintiff's name, whence the cloths came from, and where they were to be sent. Plaintiff replied from Mirzapore, and they were to be sent to Dacca, and then he said "take the duties from me, and gave me a rowannah." Mr. Bracken replied "come to-morrow." We went on the following day, and plaintiff again offered the duties. Mr. Bracken asked if plaintiff would know his own goods again; plaintiff said "yes." We went to the "smuggled godown," but before the godown was opened, plaintiff was asked over and over whether he would know his goods. He was told to mark them. There were about twenty-five bales besides those in the godown. We were desired to return next day, and we did so accordingly. We went to the godown, and found the bales opened and being counted. Mr. Bracken called plaintiff to him, and he stood while all the bales were opened and counted. Mr. Bracken said "they are all correct." Plaintiff said "here is the duty, give me a rowannah." Mr. Bracken enquired at what gate they were brought in, and we informed him. He then said "this matter must be reported to the board with all its circumstances."

Cross-examined by the Advocate-General.—The goods were first taken to the custom-house on Friday: we were not there on Saturday or Sunday, but we went there on the three following days, and I believe plaintiff went on Thursday. I saw Mr. Bracken on the three days. The cloths had been purchased three months previous to this occurrence from shopkeepers and weavers at Simla. I cannot distinguish the number purchased from each. I do not recollect the name of the weavers—they bring them and sell them: it is quite a ready money transaction, and there is no occasion to enquire their names. I have seen these men at Simlah. I do not know whether they are here to-day. One of the shopkeepers is Boggonath Sircar, in the Souba Bazar. 200 pieces were bought from him. Some were also purchased from Paunchoo in the Baboo's Bazaar. Both the shopkeepers are here. The goods were taken on two hackeries through the Export gate,—I mean the hackeries remained without the gate, and the goods were carried in by the coolies. I do not know why plaintiff did not make an application that day, he spoke to no persons, at least I did not hear him, but left the goods to take their chance. I do not know whether plaintiff had exported goods before: I have been in his service eight months. I saw the invoice written. The goods were marked with the first letter of plaintiff's name; this was put on by desire of Mr. Bracken, but the only mark on the cloth when they went into the Custom House was a charcoal mark "mo." There was no Bazar mark. The cloths which are sold to retailers have no marks put on them. Plaintiff is not a retailer. I was not permitted to go into the room to Mr. Bracken (Q. Why, you have told us what passed between plaintiff and Mr. Bracken?) I was outside of the room, but I could hear what passed. I swear I was in plaintiff's service at that time. Sometimes I appear dressed and sometimes not. Plaintiff lives in Entally, Cooleah is the name of the street. He deals largely in cloth; he is a man of property; he never told me he wished to follow up this suit through the pauper establishment. Mr. Bracken said this application must be reported to the board with all its circumstances. Why should plaintiff be surprised at hearing this. There is a small quantity of goods now in plaintiff's godown. He has landed property, houses, and some goods. I informed the Custom House people the goods were going to Dacca. One hackery carried two bales, and the other three.

Re-examined by Mr. Prinsep.—I saw the invoice and petition put into Mr. Bracken's hand. He said "very good, I will make enquiries." The goods may be worth about Rs. 3,000, a little above or below.

Torah, a hackery driver, examined by Mr. Clarke.—I know plaintiff, and took for him five bales of cloth, on two hackeries, to the Custom House at the latter end of Magh last. We brought them from Mirzapore. The merchant's sircar gave them to me, I have not seen him to-day.

Cross-examined by Mr. Cochrane.—We passed the east gate of the Custom House, and went round to the west side. I never was employed by plaintiff before. I saw him next when I was summoned to attend here, and I saw him a few days since. Three bales were on one hackery, and two on another. I have a regular hackery stand, and there would have been no difficulty in finding me.

Paunchon Day, examined by Mr. Painsep.—I am a cloth dealer and sold plaintiff some goods on three occasions (Refers to Book) in Augun, Rs. 794 in value. I saw those cloths at the custom's public sale in Bysack I purchased about Rs. 850 worth, of the same cloths. There was a mark 'mo,' my mark, on the cloth, in charcoal. This is the market mark.

Cross-examined by the Advocate General.—It is 'no,' not 'mo,' that is on the cloth, I know the names of the buyers at the custom's sales are always taken, and swear I purchased the cloth there. The mark was put on the goods when they were purchased at the fair. (Witness here referred to one of the transactions in his books.)

Buggerot Boondoo, examined by Mr. Clarke.—I am a cloth dealer, and sold some cloth to plaintiff, one day in Pous, and two days in Augun, (refers to book) in value—Rs. We had transactions previously to a small extent.

Cross-examined by Mr. Cochrane.—I am not in partnership with any one. Joynarain was discharged from my service in Maug. I have no business with Bissanauth Day. When selling by retail piece goods have an ink mark. That is the common custom, but those that are not intended for retail are not marked with a pen.

Bycaunt, examined by Mr. Prinsep.—Witness had dealt in cloth, and sold to plaintiff 490 pieces in Augun last, in value 590 Rs. They were without marks.

Council for defendant refused to produce the petition or invoice sworn to have been given to Mr. Bracken. Defendant's counsel would admit nothing. Notices to produce various documents were proved.

This was the case for the plaintiff.

The Advocate-General, for a nonsuit, on two grounds submitted, in the first place, that plaintiff, though he had proved the purchase of certain goods which had been carried to the Custom House, and sold there at a public sale, had given no evidence whatever that defendant was answerable for the confiscation, or that it had taken place in consequence of his direction. Secondly, and it was a far more important objection than the one he had just taken, arising as it did out of an act of Parliament, by the 21st Geo. III. chapter 37, sec. 8, the Supreme Court cannot exercise a jurisdiction over the collection of the revenue of this country. "The act 54th Geo. III. chap. 105. sec. 1 is confirmatory of the Regulations which have been passed by the Governor-General in Council, and the goods for the value of which this action has been brought, have been confiscated under the authority of those regulations.

Mr. Prinsep.—I can hardly think my friend serious when he offers these objections. This is the first time.

The Advocate-General.—First time! Why this is an entirely new experiment. This is the first time the question has been brought before the court.

Mr. Prinsep.—If my friend had listened to what I was about to say instead of interrupting me, he would have learnt that there was a similar action brought against Sir Charles D'Oyly, when he was Collector of Customs, and that the Acts of Parliament, which are now relied on were then quoted.

Chief Justice.—The first thing is, how is the defendant connected with this case? The authority of the court is another question. At present we want to know how you have made out the conversion.

Mr. Prinsep.—We show defendant to be the collector of customs, the goods are in the godown, and a sale has taken place on his premises.

Mr. Justice Grant.—It does not necessarily follow, because defendant is the collector, that he is custodian of all the goods in the Custom House, or that the sale has taken place under his authority.

Mr. Prinsep.—But when a sale takes place it is by the authority of the collector.

Mr. Justice Grant.—You have not shown that. It may be that Mr. Bracken has given the orders for a sale, for Mr. Hyde does not appear at all in this transaction.

Chief Justice.—There is no evidence whatever that Mr. Hyde has given the order for sale.

Mr. Prinsep.—Well, my lords, if there is a defect in the evidence, perhaps the court will permit us to supply the omission.

Chief Justice.—Not after Mr. Advocate-General has moved for a nonsuit.

Mr. Prinsep.—I submit there is a prima facie case against the defendant. We show that he is the collector; that Mr. Bracken refused to give a rowannah. We show a subsequent sale, a demand, and a tender of the duty to Mr. Hyde.

Chief Justice.—Is the defendant responsible? Did he order the conversion? There is not a word about that.

Mr. Prinsep.—If my friend had read a little more of the regulation, he would have found that the collector has an interest in the sale of confiscated goods, for he receives one-fifth of the amount realized.

Mr. Justice Malkin.—That might have shown the sale is for the collector's benefit, but it would not have proved that it took place in consequence of his order.

Mr. Clarke.—The sole question is whether there is or is not sufficient evidence of a conversion. I submit there is evidence; and though I allow that it is slight it is sufficient in this case, the defendant being a public officer who has thrown every obstacle in our way by the non-production of papers. My friends depend entirely on a want of evidence, and when you find a public officer of Government acting improperly in the discharge of duties, I submit, that the court will be content with slight evidence against him.

Chief Justice.—There is no evidence in law of a conversion. We are quite satisfied on that point. It is true defendant is the Collector of Customs,—these goods were taken to the Custom House;—they were sold there, but by whose order does not appear. For aught I know, the order may have been given by Mr. Bracken, he seems to have taken the most active part in these transactions. Now Mr. Bracken says, "the whole matter must be reported to the Board;" the Board then may have ordered the sale, and if we give a verdict against Mr. Hyde, we shall give it against a party, who, for aught we know, has nothing whatever to do with it. As to the second question, it is not necessary that the Court should now give an opinion upon it. Nonsuit.

Goluckchunder Roy v. Poddolochun Mitter.

Mr. Turton, with whom was Mr. Leith, opened the case.

This was an action on the following instrument which the plaintiff treated and declared upon as a bill of exchange.

'This puttree (writing) to Puddolochun Mitter and Juggut Sait Govinchunder's salutations, which he will peruse.

Further, Rupees 1,458 (in letters) one thousand four hundred and fifty-eight milled Rupees is become payable for the rent of the garden of Dewan Goluck Roy up to the 30th Pchagoon, year 1242, which money you will pay, and take a receipt for the rent from the Dewanjee in writing.

Sri Puddolochun Mitter.

The defendant on being applied to by the servants of the plaintiff for payment of the fourteen hundred and fifty-eight rupees, on three occasions said he would pay the money—he however did not pay, and the action was brought. When witnesses had been examined, and the plaintiff's case closed, the hand writing of the defendant Puddolochun Mitter proved, the Advocate General with whom was Mr. Prinsep submitted that the plaintiff must be non-suited, the instrument not being a promissory note, and no consideration appearing to have been received by Puddolochun. The instrument is beside not negotiable, and therefore not a bill of exchange.

Mr. Turton for plaintiff contended it was not necessary that an instrument should be negotiable to make it a bill of exchange—the principle now and for a long time before, fully recognized in the English course.

Mr. Justice Grant said the instrument must either come within the custom of merchants, or plaintiff must prove consideration.

The Chief Justice.—We are of opinion that this is not a bill of exchange. It is not an order to pay, on a person, on whom the drawer has a right to call for payment. And it is not stated on the acceptance to whom the defendant promises to pay—the plaintiff cannot recover on the account stated—there is no consideration, it is nudum pactum. Plaintiff non-suited.—Englishman.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 6.

Bisonauth Day and others v. C. C. Hyde.

Mr. Clarke opened. The plaint was filed on the 11th of March 1836, in trover to recover, from the defendant 20 bales, containing 3,490 pieces of razharrie cloth valued at Rs. 7127, and seven annas.

Mr. Prinsep stated the case for the plaintiff. The circumstances under which this action is brought resemble in some respects those of the case recently before your lordships, but they differ in one very material feature, the duty on the goods which were the subject of the former action not having been paid. In this case, however, the duty has been paid, so that, by the happy contrivance of these fiscal laws, government not only receive the goods but the duty also. The plaintiffs are traders residing in the vicinity of Calcutta, and carried into the Custom-house in January and February last, on three several occasions, the goods to recover which this action is brought. It is necessary to inform the court, that at that time there existed a practice, now, thank God, no longer requisite, of procuring a temporary pass before goods could be removed from Howrah to this side of the river. To get them into the Custom-House, it was requisite to have this pass; to get them out, as the court are now aware, is not quite so easy a matter. They were got in as it might be said, secundum artem, and there they remained until the collector thought proper to dispose of them and appropriate the proceeds. Now you would suppose this was a single case, and that the court had merely to try whether the goods were smuggled or whether they were not. But no, that is not sufficient, and a question is raised as to the court's jurisdiction, whether the officers of government may be protected right or wrong, though here, as in all countries, the laws have been contrived so as to edge them in with as little responsibility as possible. In this case, however, my friends are not content with these advantages, but put up to difficulties such as I never heard started by a Government protecting one of its officers, for we may reasonably conclude, as the Advocate-General, the Company's standing counsel, and the company's attorney are opposed to us, that this is a Government case. Here then are we in the first instance, obliged to prove the jurisdiction of the court; in the second in what do defendant's official duties consist. Government not content with the defence of their officer being exempt from the jurisdiction of the court, resort to subterfuges which hardly become individuals. I think, however, that we shall have no difficulty in proving the court's jurisdiction, for similar objections were brought forward and disposed of in a case in which Sir Charles D'Oyly was defendant; but it seems that the ingenuity of fiscal law is to be backed up by the ingenuity of legal refinement, corresponding with my learned friend's ideas of the march of improvement, and we are also to fail in proving that in this case there has been a conversion. This, however, we shall not find a very difficult matter, as it will require little ingenuity to show, on the authority of Bates v. Cole

Rep. that a detention of the goods one hour longer, than the defendant had a title to do so, is sufficient for the purposes of this action. Now I apprehend it is sufficient to enable us to recover that my friends admit a demand for the goods and a denial, or rather I apprehend if we prove them, for admissions from my friend are not to be expected, after he has refused to produce every document showing by what means the goods came into defendant's custody, those being, too, public documents, of which complainants have a moral, if not a legal right of inspection. It is something new to me to see a Government defending a government officer by these means, and I am greatly mistaken, if in the absence of this written evidence, your lordship will presume it to be at all in defendant's favour. Your lordships will draw your own conclusions from this circumstance, and for my own part I think it augurs little success to a case, wherein there is no lack of subterfuge.

Byroochunder Nebhy, examined by Mr. Clarke.—I was formerly employed in the Custom's department at the chokee at Howrah. I know plaintiffs. On the abolition of the transit duties I delivered my check book and register to Mr. O'Brien at Howrah. If goods had been delivered at Howrah chokee, an entry would appear in the books (Advocate-General refuses to produce books.)

Charles Pote, examined by Mr. Prinsep.—I was employed as assistant to the collector of Customs at Howrah in February last. Mr. Hyde was then, as now, Collector of Calcutta Customs, and was my superior. Last witness was my surnee; his duties were to receive and forward goods to Calcutta. We kept the chilaun at Howrah. There is only one collector at Calcutta; Howrah is under him. I do not remember the receipt of three particular bales on the 28th January. On the breaking up of the inland customs the books were delivered over to Mr. O'Brien who had charge of other duties at Howrah. Had any goods been brought to the chokee on the 4th February, they would appear in the register, and the chilaun and the rowannah which ought to be in the Calcutta Customs.

Cross-examined by the Advocate-General.—I received a written order from Mr. Hyde to deliver over the books to Mr. O'Brien. Mr. Hyde is a collector, and a servant of Government. He has a board over him, and I suppose he is merely the head servant at the customs of Calcutta.

Re-examined by Mr. Prinsep.—The Howrah chokee was under the controul of Mr. Hyde. The Collector of Customs had the appointment to my office.

Goverchund Bose, examined by Mr. Clarke.—I know Isserchunder Bose who has just been called on his subpoena. He was employed at the Sudder Ghaut; so was I. Imported goods came to the Sudder Ghaut. I entered them, they were then carried to the appraiser's department in the custom's. I have not the book, it was given to Mr. Moffat who is now here. Mr. Moffat is employed under the collector. I know plaintiffs. Three bales belonging to them came in on the 29th January. They were entered in my book. I could speak with certainty if I saw my books. Remember the confiscation at the custom-house; my book was sent for on that occasion. (Produces book.) Here is an entry, three bales, 29th January. I did not see the bales, but made the entry from the list sent to the ameen of the ghaut. From the circumstance of goods having come with a temporary pass the inference is that the duties have been paid to the cashier of the collector at Calcutta, and before the goods are carried in. But I know nothing of it: this formed no part of my duty. Referring to entries on the 4th February I find none of cloth: on the 5th twelve bales in the name of one of the plaintiff. As before, I infer duty was paid on these. There is no entry on this day of goods in the name of Joynarain Mill. Mr. Hyde had a general controul of the customs.

Cross-examined by Mr. Cochrane. The entry on the 29th January is in the name of plaintiffs. On the 5th of February twelve bales from Bourri. There is no entry on the name of Joynarain Mill on that day. Some times rajcherry cloths remain a considerable time in the customs: at others they are taken away soon.

Ramjoy Ghosein, examined by Mr. Prinsep. I was employed by Mr. Reid, the appraiser, at the custom, in January and February last. My duties were to take the numbers of cloth and submit them to Mr. Rice. I took the numbers of the bales from the chilaun. I kept no memorandum. I put my initials on the chilaun and could recognize it if produced, (exhibits B. and C.) These are a temporary pass and chilaun, but they were not examined by me, my initials are not on them. This is Mr. Rice's signature; this is the moonshie's, and I think this is Mr. Moffat's. These goods have not been examined or appraised. It is very often the case that goods are entered in the chilaun in other names than those of the real owners. I do not know what became of the rowannahs. I know plaintiffs, but I cannot say from memory if they had goods examined and appraised in January and February last.

A. D. Rice, examined by Mr. Clarke.—I was the chief appraiser of the inland export and import department in January last. All the persons employed in the custom-house were subject to Mr. Hyde. I signed this as import supervisor: it is an application to import cloth, and has been compared with the temporary pass. I believe this is the moonshie's signature, and the chilaun has been compared with the temporary pass. It appears by this document that the duties have been paid. This receipt would not have been here if the duties had not been paid. This (D and F) are another chilaun and temporary pass; the duties have also been paid in this case. I saw the rowannah which would accompany these on the 5th, 6th or 7th February. I was not present when the goods were confiscated. Mr. O'Brien was assistant to the Collector. I gave the papers with the rowannah to Mr. Moffat, who was town supervisor in January and February; he took them to Mr. Bracken.

Cross-examined by the Advocate General.—Chilauns are made out usually by the parties who make the application.

Re-examined by Mr. Clarke.—There is an application for a temporary pass in the first instance, and the chilaun is made out from the temporary pass.

Cossinath, Mill, examined by Mr. Prinsep.—I know plaintiffs, they were partners in January last. They imported some cloth on the 25th Mang, 17 loads, which were taken to Mr. Pote with the chilaun, subsequently the cloths were brought to the Custom-house here. I was at the custom-house on the 30th May when the cloths were counted. Mr. Bracken and others were present. One gentleman had the rowannah and the chilaun.

Cross-examined by the Advocate-General.—One of the plaintiffs is my brother. They do not deal in cloth. My brother and I are joint.

♦The Advocate-General submits the witness cannot give evidence.

On a re-examination it appeared that witness and his brother are 'joint in food,' but not in property.

Cross-examination continued.—These particular goods belonged to various shopkeepers in Calcutta, who had purchased them with their own funds, in the vicinity of Calcutta; plaintiffs are agents to clear them in the Custom House.

Re-examined by Mr. Prinsep.—Plaintiffs have been compelled to pay the value of the goods to the proprietors.

H. O'Brien, examined by Mr. Prinsep.—I remember 25 bales of cloth brought by plaintiff: they were subsequently sold by me, as an officer of customs, under the immediate order from Mr. Hyde. He directed me to make a sale of the goods, and when he did so, he had the Board's order in his hand.

Cross-examined by the Advocate-General.—They were sold under the orders of the Board of Customs. I believe they did not answer the quality and quantity of the papers to protect them. *I sold under the immediate orders of Mr. Hyde acting under the written order of the Board of Customs. He could not have ordered the sale without directions from the Board.

Mr. Advocate-General submitted for a nonsuit first, there was no proof of conversion, and secondly the court had not jurisdiction. As to the first point, the learned counsel contended that there was not one atom further proof in this case than in the case brought before the court yesterday. His learned friend had, indeed, asked much of Mr. Pote regarding the duties of Mr. Hyde, but the witness had subsequently declared that he knew nothing of them whatever; and then followed Mr. O'Brien who stated that he acted under the immediate orders of Mr. Hyde, the latter acting under the immediate orders of the Board of Customs. What does Mr. O'Brien prove? Merely this, that Mr. Hyde gives him the order to sell those goods, having at the time in his hand a written document from the Customs' Board to the like effect, thus showing that he, Hyde, is merely an organ repeating the orders of the Board. A detention is not a conversion where the law authorizes an enquiry, as it did in Regulation 19 of 1810, and that regulation confirmed by 54, Geo. III. chap. 105, is the law of the land. He knew his friend would say that this was a trifling objection, that he had never heard of such a course having been adopted in England, but some of their lordships might remember that in England an officer of Government had been protected, and a nonsuit had, in a case in which the officer was defendant in consequence of the action having been brought one day later than the time allowed by law. His friends had said nach regarding a lack of merits, but did he suppose Government were going to try their right in such a case as this? Of this he would assure his friend that when he suspected an action unjustly brought and supported by perjury and fraud, he would not be slow in availing himself of every objection which the law afforded, regardless of his friend coming to court as it would almost seem be had, with a speech, ready cut and dried, and adapted for no other purpose than an appearance in the newspapers.

Mr. Prinsep in reply. It is in evidence that the customs departments are under the general controul and management of the defendant, and that he gave a personal direction to Mr. O'Brien, who acted under his immediate authority, that is to say, the sale took place under the immediate direction of the defendant. He is shown to be the officer in charge by Mr. Pote and Mr. Rice, whose evidence cannot be disputed, and this and the detention I contend is sufficient for the purposes of this action. Suppose this case brought against a mercantile or a banking establishment, undoubtedly it would be sufficient to show that the order was given by the head of the firm. As to the order in writing which Mr. O'Brien says Mr. Hyde had in his hand, that I contend, as it is not produced, must be thrown overboard entirely.

Chief Justice.—Mr. O'Brien says, 'he gave me an order to sell under a document from the Board of Customs.' The question is, whether Mr. Hyde was not transmitting an order of Government to Mr. O'Brien?

Mr. Prinsep.—I submit that which Mr. O'Brien has said about the document must not be taken as evidence unless the document itself is produced. He says it is a written order, but you cannot look at it till put in. He must produce it. Where the detention is unjustifiable that is a conversion: the detention of goods must be justified by showing the order to confiscate. With regard to what Mr. O'Brien says, that defendant could not order the sales by the direction of the Board; we are not to be bound by what a witness thinks defendant may do, or may not do; here is an act which prima facie is unlawful, and to make it otherwise it must be shown the goods were liable to confiscation, and there was an order to confiscate. To say there is an order is not sufficient to discharge a defendant in trover; it must be shown in evidence, and not by the arguments, inferences, &c. Ipsi dixit a witness. In this case to obtain redress for the illegal act of the Government, we have attacked the head officer and not the underling; as in a case of trespass, it is the practice of this court to sue the sheriff and not the sheriff's officer. But if this line of evidence is to be taken, had we sued the auctioneer we should have been equally—

Chief Justice.—No, no. It is quite clear if you had sued O'Brien, we must have entered on the consideration of jurisdiction question.

Mr. Justice Grant.—The witness says he was acting under the immediate order of Hyde, the latter acting under the immediate order of the Board of Customs. This is tantamount to saying, he would not have acted unless Hyde had an order from the Board.

Mr. Prinsep.—No, my Lord, had the witness said so, the defendant would have known how to deal with a refractory subordinate. But I contend the document being in writing, not a word can be said about it until it is produced. My friend may raise the whole question by producing the order.

Mr. Clarke.—I submit three points for consideration. First, the goods were in defendant's custody; secondly, they were converted or lost to us, while they were in his custody; and thirdly, that the conversion proceeded from his immediate orders, and if he acted under the written orders of others it is not only necessary to produce them, but also to show how he was bound to obey them. As to the first point we have shewn the goods were taken to the Custom House, and that the defendant is at the head of that department; and goods being placed in the custody of persons who would not act without defendant's order must be taken to be in the custody of defendant himself. Then we show a demand for the goods, and defendant will not give them up; here then is a wrongful detention, and a wrongful detention is a conversion. As to the order which it is said defendant had in his hand, it is not only necessary that it should be put in evidence, but it must be shown that defendant was bound to act under it.

Chief Justice.—In this case plaintiff must be non-suited. The evidence is, that the goods were sold by O'Brien, and no doubt, if it was not a legal sale, it was a conversion by him, and an action might be maintained against him. The evidence, taken together, is this and this is our conclusion. Mr. Hyde is only the channel through which the orders of the Board are transmitted, the Board being the superior and controuling power. As to the detention, we think, under the circumstances, that it does not appear unreasonable. Nonsuit.—Englishman.

THURSDAY, JULY 7.

The Advocate-General moved for a rule to shew cause why a criminal information should not be filed against Captain Christopher Biden, for sending a libel under the form of a letter to Mr. Stocqueler, the Editor of the Englishman newspaper.

The Advocate-General was aware that Editors of public journals stood in a peculiar situation. They were exposed from the very nature of their employment to be constantly carrying on a species of warfare with rival Editors, in which, his client would forgive him for saying, the blows given and taken were soon forgotten. It must be admitted that where an Editor takes upon himself to criticise or remark upon others than Editors, such parties must be allowed to retaliate in the same manner, but no further. An Editor of a Journal is entitled to the same respect as another member of society, and no man must be permitted to insult his feelings, or reflect injuriously on his private character. These are general observations applicable to every one who stood in the situation of his client; he would now call the attention of the Court to the particular circumstances of this case.

Their Lordships were aware—for there was no particular reason why their Lordships should be in ignorance of the passing and public occurrences of the day—that on Saturday the 18th June last a public meeting was held at the Town Hall, at which a great many speeches were delivered and among the rest, one from Captain Biden.

On the 21st, and two following days, the proceedings of the meeting were published in the newspapers, and, as it seems, Captain Biden was not satisfied with the space that was or rather was not allotted to him in the columns of the Englishman. On the 24th, he sent a letter to Mr. Stocqueler complaining of this omission, and transmitting a copy of his speech for publication.

On the 26th, having carefully perused this speech and considering it with a view to the opinions of his readers, the Editor of the Englishman came to the determination not to publish it. In consequence of this Mr. Seppings, a friend of Captain Biden's, called upon Mr. Stocqueler and requested that the speech might be published. Mr. Stocqueler hereupon stated to Mr. Seppings, his opinion that the publication of the speech would not redound to the glory of Captain Biden, and that his readers would not be satisfied if his columns were so filled up. With this opinion Mr. Seppings did not coincide. There was in nothing greater variety than in opinions as to style, but it must be confessed that the speech in question did partake in no small degree of that particular species of style denominated the florid.

Mr. Stocqueler had a plain taste; Mr. Seppings, differed: there was no manner of harm in men's entertaining a difference of opinion in a matter so very indefinable as that of taste as respects so very fluctuating an object of man's opinion as that of language. I, said the Advocate-General, may prefer the simplicity of Swift's or Dryden's prose; others might prefer a style more decorated, and of loftier pretensions, and Mr. Seppings had an equal right with Mr. Stocqueler, to prefer that style which was most congenial to his own peculiar taste. However this may be, Mr. Stocqueler yielded and promised to publish the speech on the following day, with an understanding that Mr. Stocqueler should furnish such explanations as would justify him in the eyes of his readers—and it was then agreed that he should excuse himself for doing as requested.

It is necessary here, said the Advocate-General, to call your Lordship's attention to the editorial remarks that accompanied this publication of the speech, as they are the foundation of all Captain Biden's subsequent conduct:—

"Captain Biden says that 'Those persons who cannot render justice to an opponent or give him fair play, indulge in that spirit of malignity and falsehood which carries with it the seeds of wretchedness, and may lead to self destruction.' This has determined us to insert his letter even at the eleventh hour. We would not have it supposed that we either contemplate future misery or meditate felo de se."

"We certainly did think Captain Biden's interruption of the business of the meeting of the 18th instant a most unseemly and indecent proceeding; but we now perceive, and admit, the charitable feelings which governed his interference. 'The passions,' says he, 'had been roused by violent declamation, whilst the horror depicted in many a countenance stood aghast, portraying the devoted victims of a successful anarchy and revolt.'"

To return the current of feeling when things had reached such an alarming crisis was an act of praise-worthy benevolence, and we cannot, of course, but regret that we should have joined in stigmatizing the 'three cheers, as a piece of idle buffoonery. We will be good boys for the future, and if at any other meeting a jolly son of Neptune should propose to sing 'Poll and her partner Joe' by way of diversifying the entertainment, he shall receive no interruption from the Englishman."

This is the origin of Captain Biden's subsequent conduct. Every thing that appears in a newspaper is open to comment. Whatever occurs in this Court, and spoken professionally in the necessary performance of a duty, is open to comment; how much more, then, a speech voluntarily made at a public meeting, for the delivery of which there was no compulsive cause, and which was subsequently and voluntarily sent to a newspaper for publication. That such a publication should be open to criticism in its utmost latitude must be at once admitted. It is not necessary to recal to your Lordships' attention the case of Carr v. Hood which fully establishes this point. Your Lordships will recollect the criticism of 'no little severity on a poem called Hours of Idleness. What did the author do? He retaliated by chastising his critics with a severity which by the very act of punishment inflicted on themselves, proved that they had egregiously erred in the judgment they had passed on him. This however did not satisfy Captain Biden; but it may notwithstanding be advanced that fair criticism can never be employed with more utility or will be found to be productive of greater advantage than when inflicted upon a florid and inflated style of oratory. For this purpose ridicule may be properly and most laudably employed: it was however perfectly open to Captain Biden to attack the taste and judgment displayed in this criticism, but not on the ground of this criticism to attack the private character of the writer, as is done in the following passage:—

Sir,—Your commentary on my letter in the Englishman is a premeditated and wanton insult to me.

The unmanly attempt you have made to excite feelings of derision towards a person who never in any manner has given you the slightest cause or provocation for so unwarrantable a liberty, leaves me no other alternative than thus, publicly, to tell you, that you are unworthy any other notice than my most utter, and insupportable contempt.

This was not sent to the Editor of the Englishman but, according to the belief of Mr. Stocqueler, to the other newspapers published in Calcutta.

The letter then proceeds:—

Malignity and falsehood recoil upon those who presume to withhold the hand of retributive justice. The discussion of your unjustifiable conduct towards me, and the disgust it has universally created, has led to a development of your former delinquency, for which, Sir, you are aware you have been publicly denounced and thereby rendered beneath the notice of any gentleman! The proof of your deceitful and treacherous conduct towards me is as follows.

Mr. Stocqueler apprehended that these expressions had reference to a quarrel which formerly took place between the Editor of the Englishman and the Editor of the Hurkaru, in the course of which charges had been made against his client, which not only in his own opinion, but in that of many of the most respectable members of this community, he had completely refuted, and he could produce numerous letters to that effect from Dr. Bramley and several others equally respectable.

These are the grounds on which I apply to your Lordships for a criminal information against Captain Biden. I have no objection, my client has no objection that Captain Biden should go into the whole of the circumstance connected with the matter. My client is only desirous that he should be reinstated in that position of respect and consideration to which he is entitled in society.

It will be remarked that there is an inconsistency in the letter of Captain Biden, it states that Mr. Stocqueler was unworthy the notice of any gentleman, and yet intimates an intention to demand satisfaction from him. It is for Captain Biden to explain this discrepancy.

It is on these grounds that this application is made for a rule which I will presume must be a rule nisi in this case.

Mr. Justice Ryan.—I understand this to be an application for a criminal information, against a party for addressing to another a letter of a libellous character and tending to provoke a breach of the peace. Is there no affidavit of publication?

The Advocate-General.—No further than to the receipt of it, and to belief of its having been sent to the other journals. I should have remarked that the charge made against Mr. Stocqueler being of so vague and general a character it was impossible for him to meet it by a direct and particular denial.

Mr. Justice Ryan.—You mentioned the letters of several third parties. Such letters cannot be read unless the parties themselves make affidavit of their contents.

The affidavit on which the application was grounded was here put in and read, and which stated that the deponent being Editor of the newspaper called the Englishman, published a report of certain proceedings at a meeting held in the Town Hall. That at that meeting a speech was made by Captain Biden, which was omitted to be reported at length in the report above mentioned. That on the 24th June last past, the deponent received a letter from Captain Biden complaining of the non-publication of his speech, accompanied by a written copy of the speech for publication.

That acting under such discretion as deponent thought was becoming an Editor of a public journal to exercise, he had declined publishing the speech, as uninteresting to his general reader, and as being in a style of oratory by no means the most chaste.

That on the 27th June Mr. Seppings called on the deponent and said that Captain Biden was annoyed that his speech was not published; upon which the deponent replied that he suppressed it out of consideration to Captain Biden who had behaved in an absurd and ridiculous manner at the meeting, and that publication would only make matters worse. That Mr. Seppings did not concur in this opinion, upon which the deponent made some remarks upon the tone and style of the speech, and stated that if he published it, he must accompany such publication with an explanation, to excuse himself in the eyes of his readers.

That Mr. Seppings appeared displeased that any remarks of a severe nature should be made, upon which the deponent agreed to publish the speech with an inoffensive explanation. That he did publish the speech with editorial remarks.

[These remarks we have embodied in the address of the Advocate-General.]

That the following letter was therefore written by Captain Biden and sent to the deponent:—

On Monday last, the 27th instant, I deputed a friend of mine, to call upon you for an explanation as to the ground on which you refuse insertion to my letter; he did so, and stated the manner in which I felt aggrieved, as I consider the offensive liberty taken with my name originated from the columns of the Englishman. You, Sir, promised to insert my letter to-day, not for the reasons you allege, but in consequence of my friend's demand on you. You also said something about the remarks which would accompany my letter, when the gentleman thus in communication with you on my behalf, protested against any observations whatever being made in your journal, but such as might be of a conciliatory and respectful kind. These terms, my friend assures me, were unequivocally agreed to, and mutually understood between you and him; otherwise he was instructed to acquaint you with the ulterior measures I intended to adopt.

The conciliatory deportment manifested, however, in that stage of this affair by my friend, will shew the moderation and forbearance with which he was actuated, and that measures of resentment were contemplated only as a dernier resource by me.

I am, Sir, your obedient Servant,

Bengal Club, June 29, 1836.

CHRIS. BIDEN.

That deponent has heard and believes that a copy of this letter was sent to the other journals, both of which refused to insert it.

That he believes the charges of delinquency to have reference to a personal altercation which took place some time ago between this deponent and the Editor of the Hurkaru. That this deponent fully justified his conduct against those charges and received numerous letters from Doctor Bramley and Colonel Swinay, and many others of the most respectable members of society, congratulating him upon the manner in which he had established his character on that occasion, copies of which letters were annexed to the affidavit.

Mr. Justice Ryan.—This is an application for the summary criminal process of the Court against a party, for addressing a letter to another, which letter is alleged to be of a libellous tendency, and tending to provoke the party to whom it is sent, to fight a duel.

The Court look upon the letter in question as calculated to irritate, and consider its tendency such as might provoke to a breach of the peace. But that is not the question to be decided under the circumstances. The question is whether this is such a case as calls for the exercise of the Court's extraordinary and summary process. We are of opinion that this is not such a case. In coming to this decision, we do not overlook the peculiar situation in which the Editor of a public journal is placed; we are aware that he is no more exposed than the generality of people to liability to give offence, by his public comments; but that cannot in itself give occasion for the exercise of the Court's peculiar process on this occasion. It appears that a speech was made and published, in passing comments upon which, the terms "unseemly and indecent" are used, and in consequence of the application of these and other expressions, the letter complained of was written. We cannot say that such language was proper, or fit for an Editor of a paper to use, at least as far as they are connected with this application. The party must here be left to his ordinary remedy, of which he may avail himself almost immediately, as the criminal sessions will be held in three weeks.

The mode of proceeding for which application is now made, is not one which the Court are disposed to favor, and it will always require very full and sufficient facts to shew that this is the only mode to which the party can have recourse with safety. Such facts are not made out in the present case, the Court does not therefore deem it to be one which calls for its summary interference.

Rule refused.—Hurkaru.

FRIDAY, JULY 8.

Podicamohun Bysack, v. Gunganarain Dutt, and others.

Mr. Clarke opened pleadings.

Mr. Turton stated the case. The action was for trespass, and breaking and entering the women's apartment of the plaintiff's house, beating his wife, and daughters, and taking away their jewels and ornaments. The defendant Gunganarain had married a daughter of the plaintiff; and upon the marriage of another daughter an invitation was sent to the defendant's house. In consequence the defendant took his wife to his father-in-law's house and left her there; on the evening of that day, the defendant sent for his wife to come home; the messenger was sent back with the answer that she was to pass the night with her mother and sister. Gunganarain, with the other defendants, his brothers, went to his father-in-law's house, and broke into the women's apartment, seized his wife, who was eight months gone with child, pulled her hair, and beat her, her mother, and her two sisters.

Witnesses were called for the plaintiff who proved these facts.

Mr. Advocate-General, with whom was Mr. Leith, addressed the court for the defendants. The defence set up was that the assault was committed by the plaintiff and his sons on Gunganarain, who not only detained his wife, but moreover beat him for coming to the house to take her home. The defendants called many witnesses to prove these facts.

The Chief Justice intimated during the evidence of the defendant, that as this was a case of a family quarrel, and of conflicting evidence, the parties had better consent to the case being dismissed, no verdict given, and each party paying his own costs.

The counsel for the plaintiff refused to adopt this suggestion, and the case went on.

Mr. Turton replied on the evidence of the defendant, and the Chief Justice delivered judgment. The Court feels some difficulty in giving a verdict in this case. It is one of conflicting evidence. We shall give a verdict against Gunganarain, although we doubt whether he had not a right to go to his father-in-law's zenana; yet by his subsequent conduct he is clearly a trespasser. You had better take your judgment on the 4th count with a verdict of 100 rupees and costs, as against the defendant Gunganarain, the verdict for the other defendants with their costs, as we are not satisfied upon the evidence, that they were there. We do not think that the children of the plaintiff were beaten, at all events if they were it would only be a ground for nominal damages, as it does not appear that the father lost their services. We give the damages against Gunganarain, for a riot and disturbance.

SATURDAY, JULY 9.

Nilecomul Paul Chowdry, v. Gopemohun Chattopadaya and others.

Mr. Leith moved for an order for substitution of service, of a writ of attachment, for obstructing the process of the court, obtained against the defendants, on the dewan; and to enlarge the time, for the defendants to come in, and shew cause against the rule nisi for the attachment. The writ expired this-day. The application was made on a special affidavit, of obstruction of the process of the court by armed persons, in the service of the defendants. The obstruction to the process of this court, was in the first instance, in obstructing the Sheriff in the execution of a writ of fiat; the second obstruction, was to the service of the rule nisi, calling on the defendants to shew why an attachment should not issue.

Chief Justice.—We will enlarge your time for serving your order nisi. If you come to the court, and state you cannot serve it, we will then give you another writ of attachment, absolute in the first instance.

The rest of the day was taken up with contested motions, most of them of no public interest, and in several of which the court took time to consider. We will give these cases, and the decisions on them on a future day.

Seebchunder Bose v. Isserchunder Mitter and others.

In which Mr. Turton moved for a rule nisi, to set aside a nonsuit, the question involved is whether the representatives of a deceased partner (Hindu) are liable with surviving partner for the partnership debts. The court took time, but intimated that they were against granting the rule.

Assignees of Fergusson and Co. v. Francis Harris.

The Advocate General, with whom was Mr. Dobbs, shewed cause against a rule nisi to set aside a nonsuit and enter verdict for plaintiff.

The question was, whether the accounts in this action were open merchant's accounts, or closed accounts, so as to bar the operation of the statute of limitations. There was also a question as to the validity of certain transfer of claims on Messrs. Fergusson made previously to the insolvency of that firm.

Mr. Turton with whom was Mr. Clarke was heard in support of the rule.

The court took time to advise.—Englishman.

THURSDAY, JULY 14.

The court was occupied the whole of yesterday with a law argument arising out of the construction to be put upon an Armenian will. The Court took time to consider.

Parbattychurn Bose v. Isserchunder Mitter.

The Chief Justice delivered the judgment of the Court in this case, which appears in a former report. The point decided is, that there is no principle in the Hindu law, which recognizes a liability in the children of a deceased Hindu partner jointly with the surviving partner. The action ought to have been brought against the surviving partner alone.

Assignees of Fergusson and Co. v. Harris.

Chief Justice.—In this case the nonsuit must be set aside. We are of opinion that the claim is not barred by the statute of limitations; indeed the statute of limitations has nothing to do with the case, the evidence goes to them, that the first credit was given in 1832. We ought not to have nonsuited the plaintiff, there are items in the accounts, which would in our opinion shew that Fergusson and Co. took the debt upon themselves. We should not prevent the defendant from going into evidence, as the nonsuit was given on the plaintiff's evidence, and it may be material for the defendant to be let in to give evidence. We think a reference to some gentleman of the bar, as points of law may arise, would be the best cause for both parties; but they must consent to refer the question of liability, as well as the accounts. If the parties will not consent to this and will not refer the case, we make an order to set aside the nonsuit; giving the plaintiff leave to set down the cause for new trial in these present sittings.

Note.—We understand the parties will not refer.—Rer.

Buddenauth Bose v. Hurrymohun Roy.

Mr. Clark opened the pleadings and Mr. Turton stated the case. The action was brought against the defendant as executor of Mothoornauth Bose the nephew of the plaintiff, who at the time of making the note was an infant, to recover the sum of 300 Rs due upon his promissory note for Rupees 5000. Promises to pay subsequently to the coming of age of Mothoornauth, were attempted to be proved by plaintiff.

Boyrubchunder Ghose, examined by Mr. Clark.—Proved the making of the note, and that Mothoornauth told him at the time of making it that it was for money he has borrowed.

Cross-examined by Mr. Advocate-General.—Mothoornauth was under age at the time of making the note. He said the money was in part payment of the shraad of his father, and that he was not able to pay it; his paternal grandfather was Nundcoomar Bose, he has been dead about a year and a half. It was the shraad of his maternal grandfather for money advanced, for which the note was given. Nundcoomar was a wealthy man, he had four sons, the plaintiff is one, he is wealthy, he paid all the expenses. Goculnauth, a grandson of the person whose shraad was performed, gave afterwards 1,000 Rs., Rajkistno Ghose the uncle 400 Rs. and Nundcoomar Bose, 2,000 Rs. They were to pay according to their means, and Mothoornauth Bose and his mother not having the means gave this note. It is usual for the eldest son to pay, and for the grandsons to contribute.

Other witnesses were called on behalf of the plaintiff, and then,

Mr. Advocate-General, for the defendant, submitted that the plaintiff must be nonsuited.

1st. On the ground of infancy. 2d, no consideration for the note—the promise was the promise of an infant, and it was a question whether any subsequent promise was ever made. 3d it was a voluntary promise, made without any consideration, and the shraad had actually taken place before the giving of the note—and the note was not sufficiently understood; there was no evidence

(it being in English) that it was explained to Mothoornauth before he signed it.

Mr. Turton against the non-suit, was stopped by the Chief Justice.—We think as the evidence now stands, that the admission made by Mothoornauth to the last witness amounts to a confirmation when of age, of the promise made during the infancy. The shraad was a sufficient consideration as the evidence now stands, as he was sworn to be jointly liable for it—of course his credibility and the disproportion of the share are matters that you may shew, and must go to the jury.

The Advocate-General, with whom was Mr. Leith, then addressed the Court for the defendant, and called Boysrubchunder Mitter, who was examined by Mr. Leith. This witness proved that Mothoornauth paid two thousand rupees on account of the note during infancy, and said he could not pay any more. Buddinauth in conversation with Mothoornauth on the subject of further payment from him on account of the note, proposed to refer the matter to Nundcoomar Bhose, the father of Buddinauth and the grandfather of Mothoornauth. The latter assented, and a letter from Nundcoomar in answer to Mothoornauth was subsequently read as part of the evidence for the defendant. The letter prohibited Mothoornauth from making any further payments to Buddinauth on account of the promissory note. It was proved that Mothoornauth never had any dealings with the plaintiff, or money transactions of any kind, excepting the payment to him of the 2,000 rupees, on account of the note.

Mr. Turton replied at some length, and the,

Chief Justice.—We think there must be a verdict for the defendant. We do not think there is any proof of a subsequent promise to pay by the infant, on his coming of age, the remaining sum due upon the note. The whole affair is a suspicious transaction, and there is no appearance of considerations. Money is paid generally by the plaintiff on account of the shraad, but it does not appear to have been expended on account of the infant, nor how at all, nor at his request, nor with his knowledge.

Verdict for defendant.

Moheschunder Dutt v. Ordichurn Mullick.

Mr. Turton applied to put off the case on account of the absence of Gooropersaud Roy, a material witness.

Chief Justice. The attorney, Mr. Abley, has had plenty of time, the whole morning, to draw up an affidavit of the facts. We cannot put off a trial upon a mere statement of this sort. The case must proceed.

Mr. Clarke opened the pleadings.

Mr. Turton stated that the action was brought to recover 50,000 rupees with interest since—which amounted in the whole to 79,505 Rs. Moheschunder the plaintiff, was the son of Woodychurn Dutt, by whom in his lifetime the principal sum of 53,000 rupees had been lent to Ramgopaul Mullick, the father of the defendant Odichurn Mullick, and called, Seebnarain Roy. Who proved the jurisdiction, and the loan of 30,000 rupees to Ramgopaul in the Bengal year 1236, a further loan in 1237 of 20,000 rupees, and a direction by Ramgopaul when dying by the river side, to his eldest son to see the money repaid to Woodychurn Dutt.

Cross-examined by the Advocate-General, for the defendant.

Mr. Turton. That, my Lord, is my case. I will produce the books of Ramgopaul in which the entries of the receipt by him of the monies appear, if your lordships think proper.

The Advocate-General. Your lordships ought to require the production of the books.

Chief Justice. Oh! no, Mr. Turton may give what evidence he pleases.

The Advocate-General. My Lord, my friend has thrown it on the point.

Mr. Turton. Yes, and the court has thrown it back again upon me, and in the absence of the man, Gooropersaud Roy, who made the entries, I shall decline to produce them.

Chief Justice. You must take your verdict Mr. Turton for the principal sum, and the officer of the court must calculate the interest.

This was the last common law case.

The court then went into the Equity Board.

Lyall v. Gopeymohun Doss.

Ex parte. Mr. Turton took his decree nisi, the bill being pro confesso, against all defendants, but one Ramsabuck Mullick, who had put in his answer and disclaimer, and whose costs the complainants agreed to pay.

Calohdoss Mozendar v. Ramnarain Day.

Mr. Turton took his decree in the case, which was the usual decree in foreclosure of a mortgage.—Englishman.

MONDAY, JULY 18.

Doe, dem. Malchus, v. Turanauth Mullick.

The Court gave judgment in this case. It came on for argument, on a special case, agreed upon by counsel on both sides, and containing the facts involved in the case, and upon which the Court was to be guided in the construction they should put upon the will. The special case was argued at considerable length by Mr. Turton Mr. Clarke, and Mr. Leith for the plaintiff.

The learned counsel contended that the will was a devise of lands in tail-male, and

By the Advocate-General and Mr. Osborne for the defendant, who contended, that if the Court could put any construction, upon a will so strangely and obscurely worded, that the construction might be, that the devise took under the will an estate, in fee-simple. The 1st clause in the will, which was that of Catchatoor Issac, an Armenian, residing in Armenian street in Calcutta, was as follows. 'I, of my free will and pleasure, give my whole and entire estate to Messrs. Nicholas Malchus, Issac Malchus, Pogose Malchus, Petrus Malchus, and Casteian Malchus, the sons of my deceased brother Malchus, in the following equal shares and proportions, the same to be theirs and their heirs.

'After paying the expenses, consequent to my decease, and my just debts, and the following legacies, whatever be the residue, with whomsoever the same may be, and in whatever manner the same may be, the whole and entire thereof, I give unto (the 5 devisees above mentioned,) that the same be theirs and their heirs, in equal shares, for ever and ever.'

The 2d clause in the will was:

'I have five paternal houses, and a garden, and two houses, and a piece of ground—which ground is adjoining to the above garden, which were given to me by my said deceased brother Pogose Isaac. These seven houses, one garden, and a piece of ground, are not at any time, or upon any account to be sold, but they are to be let out, and whatever may be the income, after paying the expenses of repairing, they shall divide the same into five shares and (the 5 devisees mentioned) shall receive the same in equal shares, besides the above mentioned seven houses, one garden, and a piece of ground, whatever else I have, with whatsoever I have, where-soever I have, or in whatever manner so ever I have, the whole, and entire thereof, I give unto the said (the 5 devisees) in equal shares. Only I leave my totally garden and Arcooly ground, at the disposal of my executors, the said Messrs. Nicholas Malchus and Isaac Malchus; they may sell or hold them as they choose, should they sell them, the proceeds, whatever may come to hands, are to be divided into five equal shares, in the same manner as hereinbefore mentioned, and my five nephews above mentioned, are to receive the same. Should they hold them, they shall defray the charges from my estate.

The third clause was: 'In case any one of them, (the said 5 devisees) die before marriage, he is not the owner of what has been bequeathed to him by this my will, and cannot bequeath the same to any one, the share of the person dying shall be the survivors' in equal shares, the share of any one of them, who may happen to die married, shall be his legitimate male children's'.

These were the clauses of devise in the will, and the counsel for the plaintiff relied upon the third clause, as limiting the devise in fee simple, which they admitted was given by the early part of the will, to an estate in tail-male.

The facts stated in the special case were: 'that the testator Catchatoor Isaac was at the time of making his will, and at the time of his death, seized of the lands and house the subject of this action of ejectment, and had in them an estate of inheritance, in the nature of a fee-simple; that he died in November 1789, and that upon his death his five nephews, as devisees under the will, jointly entered upon and took possession of the premises, the subject of the present action, that two of them died married, but without leaving issue and intestate; and that two others died unmarried and intestate; and that Isaac Malchus, the father of the lessors of the plaintiff (the real plaintiffs in the action) survived all his brothers, and in 1816, conveyed away his whole interest in the property, the subject of the action, to Mr. Colvin, of the firm of Colvin, Bazott and Co. in satisfaction of debts, due by Isaac Malchus, to Mr. Colvin, the property was bequeathed by Mr. Colvin to his son and daughter: and on the 21st December, 1820, was put up by them for sale at Messrs. Tulloh's auction, a person named Assab Sing Lalaney became the purchaser, who took from Mr. Colvin's devisees, a conveyance of all their title and right in the property, and in June 1830, Assab Sing Lalaney, sold the property and conveyed away his whole interest in it, to Taranauth Mullick, the defendant in this action of ejectment.

The whole question was, whether Isaac Malchus had under the will an estate in fee-simple in the lands in question; or an estate for life—if only an estate for life, his four sons, the real plaintiffs in the action, were tenants in tail-male in remainder, and whether they had or had not such a reversionary interest in the property was the question for the decision of the judges, in the present action.

The Court gave their decision to the following effect: Chief Justice.—It is very difficult to give a consistent interpretation of this will—it is not to be wondered at therefore, that there is a difference upon the bench. My own view of this will is:—that by the 1st clause the testator gives his entire estate to his nephews in fee-simple. The next clause in which a perpetuity is attempted to be given, I consider as merely a direction to the executors limiting their powers of sale of the property, it is not to be considered as containing words of devise, and the construction we are all agreed to be put upon the will, must depend upon the 1st and the 3d clauses. Third clause is the one on which it is the most difficult to put any interpretation; the words 'his legitimate male children' will, if taken alone, give an estate tail, but if any one of them died married, he took as owner, and could bequeath, for the power of disposing of the property by will was conditional, upon marriage, upon marriage therefore he took an absolute estate in the property, with a power of disposal of it by will, which is an estate in fee, the first clause being quite clear and the last doubtful. I construe the will according to the first clause, which gives a clear estate in fee-simple.

Mr. Justice Grant thought the will gave an estate in tail-male to the four sons of Isaac Malchus, (the lessors of the plaintiff.)

Mr. Justice Mulkin concurred with the Chief Justice, and held that Isaac Malchus had an estate in fee-simple in the lands in 1816.

The Chief Justice.—The verdict for the plaintiff which was taken by consent must be set aside, and a verdict entered for the defendant.

Thomas Holroyd and others v. Aga Korblli Mahomed.

Counsel for Complainants.—Messrs Prinsep and Leith.

Ditto for Defendant.—Messrs. Pearson, Clarke, and Grant.

This was a demurrer to the complainant's bill, filed by him as assignee of Cruttenden and Co. for specific performance of an agreement to purchase a house, of which Cruttenden and Co. and the Military Bank were joint mortgagors.

Chief Justice.—The grounds of demurrer are two-fold; 1st, that the bill was improperly filed by two partners only; 2ndly, that the executors of Mr. Bryce should be made parties.

This is a private partnership, and not a corporate body. We said as much as to lead the plaintiff's counsel to consider if this bill could be amended. It has been amended, by making two only parties, to sue on behalf of themselves and their co-partners. It was decided on the former demurrer, that if a complainant disclose, his interest and want of title on the face of his bill the defendant may take advantage of it by demurrer. The court will not decree as to the rights of parties, not before it, and in this case, it is stated by the bill, as a reason for not making the other partners parties, that they are very numerous, and spread over the greater part of India, and many of them out of the jurisdiction of the court, (the parties alluded to are the shareholders of the Bengal Military Bank,) and therefore it would be impossible to amend the bill by making them parties. There is no alternative, we must dismiss the bill.

The 2d objection, it is not necessary to decide upon, partnership property is considered personal estate, and the executors of Bryce would be entitled to his share in the partnership estate, but we do not decide whether in this case the executors are necessary parties to this bill.

The court after hearing several motions, was occupied with a law argument, on the construction to be put upon an Armenian will, in the case of Manuck v. Sarkies Owen.

The counsel engaged were the Advocate General and Mr. Grant for the widow of the testator.

Mr. Turton for the infants and Mr. Prinsep for the adult, Mr. Manuck, the eldest son of the testator.—Englishman.

East India Company v. Kellysunker Ghosaul.

Mr. Pearson with whom was Mr. —

This was an action brought against the defendant for the loss incurred by the Government, by the re-sale of certain quantities of Turplook and Madras salt, bought at the first sale by the defendant, who did not complete the sale, and who by the conditions of sale became liable for the loss incurred at the subsequent sale.

Mr. Turton, with whom was Mr. Clarke, permitted the plaintiff's case to go on at great length. Several witnesses were examined, but the Government was in the end unsuccessful, they failing to establish the jurisdiction of the court against the defendant. The witnesses swore that they knew a Kollyunker Ghosaul, lived in Calcutta, but could not swear that he was the person, the defendant, in the present action. Nonsuit.

TUESDAY, JULY 19.

Collychurn Dutt v. John Moore and James Coul.

Mr. Turton, with whom was Mr. Clarke, stated that this was an action in debt and detainue, brought against the defendants, Messrs. Moore and Coul, who constituted at the time, the firm of Tulloh and Company, to recover the sum of 20,000 rupees in Company's paper, deposited with them, in part payment of the purchase money of some lands in Rada-bazar, put up to auction by them. The question turns upon the title, the plaintiff Collychurn is dissatisfied with the title, which does not turn out to be a marketable title; and he therefore brings his action to recover the Company's paper deposited on account of the sale.

This case on coming on for trial on a previous day had been settled in the following manner. The Advocate-General and Mr. Prinsep, counsel for the defendants, had agreed that a verdict should be taken for the plaintiff subject to a special case to be agreed upon by counsel on both sides. It appeared that Mr. Prinsep could not agree with Mr. Turton, as to the facts to be inserted into the special case. The case was again set down for trial, and the following were the particulars of the objections to the title delivered in by the plaintiffs:

1st. That the title is derived, through a Hindoo widow.

2ndly. That no Hindoo female has a right under any circumstances to dispose of landed property.

3rdly. That the vendors cannot give an indefeasible title and quiet enjoyment to the purchaser, inasmuch as Janookesdullub Tagore, Prosonocomar Tagore, Juggodullub Tagore, and several other persons intend upon the death of Rampriah Dabee, to institute proceedings in the Supreme Court against such person as shall be in possession of the property. The claimants are the grandsons of Durponarain Tagore, one of the brothers of Ramgovind Tagore, who was the husband of Rampriah Dabee. Durponarain Tagore and Nilmoney Tagore were the persons who conveyed the property to Rampriah Dabee, and the plaintiff cannot be compelled to accept a title coupled with half a dozen equity suits.

4thly. Govindram Tagore, Nilmoney Tagore, and Durponarain Tagore, were a joint and undivided Hindoo family. After the death of Ramgovind Tagore, the widow Rampriah Dabee was entitled to one-third of the property during her life by right; how then could the brothers take upon themselves by the arrangement which they made Rampriah Dabee to shut to future heirs of Rampriah Dabee or of Ramgovind Tagore, and that the assent of the heirs at the time of the sale by no means binds the right of those who may be his heirs at the death of Rampriah Dabee, who is still living.

The Hindoo widow in question was Rampriah Dabee, the widow of Govindaram Tagore, who died in 1780, leaving him surviving his widows, and two brothers Nilmoney Tagore and Durponarain Tagore. The state of the family in 1782 was detailed by the evidence of Dwarakamath Tagore who stated:

I knew Rampriah Dabee; she is my grand aunt; was the widow of Ramgovind or Govindaram Tagore; there were four brothers, Durponarain, Ramgovind, Nilmoney, and Anunderam; there was a cause in this Court by which Anunderam was excluded from any share in the property, under the will of his father Joyram. There are descendants of Durponarain, Nilmoney, and Anunderam now living; but no descendants of Ramgovind. At the settlement by the deed of 1782, between Rampriah Dabee, and the husband's brothers, Durponarain and Nilmoney, she gave up 7-8ths; these 7-8ths are now in the possession of Durponarain and Nilmoney. I recollect the sale of Rampriah's share of the property to Dr. Lyke, for between 10 and 50 thousand rupees. Her husband was never in debt, but she after his death got into debt to several members of the family. The sale of her share was known to all the family; part of the money was paid to the family for the debts. Lyke wanted the family to join in the sale to him and the conveyance. I was willing; but the others refused, they would not sign; they did not object to the sale; the absolute interest was sold.

Cross-examined by Advocate-General. There is a great grandson of Anunderam still living; his consent to the sale then was not given. We never gave him any part of the property; that suit which excluded Anunderam depended entirely on the will of Joyram. The great grandson of Anunderam, is now in my office, he is 20 or 22 years of age. Prosonocomar and I are one generation before this boy and the other descendants of the brothers. There are ten or twelve of us; we are grandsons of Durponarain and Nilmoney. There are no female descendants from Anunderam. Rampriah was not an extravagant woman, but she was very religious; she spent the money on the brahmins and worship; had she not been so very religious she might have been very rich this day.

By the Court.—Durponarain had six sons and a daughter, and by her there are two sons. Nilmoney had three sons and one daughter.

The particulars were then put in.

The Chief Justice then read the evidence which it was agreed upon on both sides should be received; and said: This is to be turned into a special verdict; any disputes as to evidence which may arise must be settled by the judge's notes. The case stands over for decision.

There were several other cases in the plea sittings board of no great public interest. The Court disposed of the sittings board, and then went into equity.

Robert C. Jenkins v. Boyrobchunder Mosondar.

Mr. Turton, with whom was Mr. Clarke, took his de-cre ex parte in this case.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 20.

Ramlall Mitter v. Nubkissen Mitter and others.

This was a demurrer to complaints bill for want of proper parties.

Mr. Turton, with whom was Mr. Osborne, argued in support of the demurrer.

Mr. Clarke, with whom was Mr. Grant, in support of the bill.

The argument lasted the rest of the day.

Demurrer overruled.

FRIDAY, JULY 22.

In the matter of Ram Babee and John Fountain, one of the Attornies of the Court.

In pursuance of an order of the Court on the 25th January last, this matter was referred to the Master to enquire and report, with liberty to receive further evidence in the case. The matter now came before the court on the Master's Report which found:—That on the 12th of August 1834 Mr. Fountain was consulted by Gopherdhone baboo, on the subject of a judgment obtained against himself and his mother Ram Bebee, grounded on an alleged joint mortgage of a house in Banstollah lane, purchased by Ram Bebee, in her own name and in that of her son, out of money she derived from her father, and which judgment Gopherdhone informed Mr. Fountain was fraudulent. Mr. Fountain advised that a Bill in Equity was the only remedy as the time for obtaining a new trial had elapsed; and on the 29th of August, he sent instructions to counsel to prepare such Bill. By these instructions Mr. Fountain was informed that Gopherdhone was a person of dissolute and extravagant habits, and had committed a fraud on his mother. Further, the report found, that the judgment affected not only the house in Banstollah gully, but also the ancestral property of Ram Bebee, Gopherdhone, and Purroatom. In order to raise money to pay Mr. Fountain an advance on account of costs for filing a Bill in Equity to set aside the judgment, he prepared a bond and warrant of attorney and mortgage of a house in Hanspookie lane which was ancestral property, in which Ram Bebee and her infant were interested, and in the opinion of the Master, Mr. Fountain was justified in this, if he believed at the time, after full examination, that the complainant in equity had a good case, but not otherwise. That on the last mentioned deeds, Sa. Rs. 1725 was paid by the mortgagees in part payment of the sum agreed to be advanced to the mortgagers, which Mr. Fountain received on their account. In this money Ram Bebee and her infant Purroatom baboo had an interest, and Mr. Fountain was aware that it was so. About the 18th of August, 1834, Mr. Fountain entered into an agreement to file a bill and obtain an order for an injunction for the sum of Sa. Rs. 400, but the whole of the Sa. Rs. 1725 remained in his hands. Further, that at various times, out of this latter sum Mr. Fountain paid to Gopherdhone baboo Sa. Rs. 607 on his verbal assurance that he was to receive all but Sa. Rs. 400 to be retained on account of filing the bill, and that of a writer who said he had attended at Ram Bebee's house, and that she said the money was to be disposed as Gopherdhone had represented. Further, that Gopherdhone was in jail on the 24th December, 1834, on a charge of which he was subsequently convicted and transported, and that while he was in jail, Mr. Fountain made him an advance of money, and appeared for, and defended him at his trial, charging therefore, and claiming to receive out of the Sa. Rs. 1,725, a further sum of Sa. Rs. 299, the expenses of the defence. The property of Ram Bebee before mentioned was advertised for sale in January, 1835, and sold by the Sheriff. That the bill for which instructions were sent to counsel on the 29th of August, 1834, was not returned by counsel until the 26th of March, 1835, and filed until the 21st of April, 1835, and after the bill was filed, Mr. Fountain omitted to file a replication in due time according to the practice of the court. In consequence of the replication not having been filed in due time, the defendants moved for and obtained two rules nisi, to dismiss the bill, but Mr. Fountain agreeing to pay costs of the rules nisi, the same were discharged, and the replication remained on the file. That the costs of the opposite party on the two allocuturs amounted to Sa. Rs. 250, and that Mr. Fountain did not pay costs of the opposite party; and in addition that he taxed costs as against his own client of the whole proceedings consequent upon the rule to dismiss which was his own mistake. In consequence of the nonpayment of costs the rules were made absolute, and the Bill dismissed with costs on the 25th September 1835, the taxed costs amounting to Sicca Rs. 1,224. Further the Master reports, that upon the whole of these facts, he humbly submits Mr. Fountain's conduct to have been fraudulent and negligent.

But the Court after hearing counsel, and after much deliberation, were quite satisfied that Mr. Fountain had no fraudulent intention to do that which was wrong, and that this investigation did not affect his professional integrity. He had however been guilty of most culpable negligence, carelessness, and laches, and they thought it right that he should make full reparation to his client. It was therefore ordered that an attachment should lie in the office for a month, and that he should pay to his client, sicca rupees 1,700, and the whole of the cost of the opposite party, making together sicca rupees 2,800, and that he should receive no costs himself.—Englishman.

SATURDAY, JULY 23.

Baboo Janookey Doss and Damooder Doss v. Bindabund Doss and others.

This was a bill of review to reverse a decree passed by Mr. Justice Franks on the 15th March 1834. Two former bills had been filed for the same purpose, both of which had been demurred to, and demurrers allowed with costs. To the present bill, a third demurrer was filed by two of the defendants Bindabund and Brigruton, and the causes assigned were, first a general demurrer, that the decree was erroneous, and secondly, that the bill was grounded on confusions of fact alleged to have been improperly drawn by the court, from evidence, given in the cause, which the defendants submitted, could not consistently with the rules of court be reconsidered in a bill of review, but only on a rehearing.

Mr. Dobbs for the complainant, opened the bill. Mr. Cochrane the demurrer, and Mr. Prinsep, the senior counsel for the demurring defendants, argued at great length in support of the demurrer. He contended that there was no error of law apparent on the face of the decree, and detailed the pleadings in the original suit, the case made by them and the decree which had been passed in order to shew, that no other decree could with propriety have been made for the second cause of demurrer; the learned counsel argued, that the objections assigned in the reasons appended to the bill of review, were founded, solely on fact and not on law, to which a bill of review was by the rules of courts of equity restricted.

Mr. Clarke, who was with Mr. Prinsep, called the attention of the judges to a passage in the bill of review, in which it was stated that 'the Honorable Sir Peter Grant had declined as counsel in the cause, to take any part in the decision of the 15th March.' It would happen, that in the most prudently drawn documents, passages did creep in which unwittingly discovered the real motive of the parties. They knew well enough that a petition to rehear, and not a bill of review, was the proper course, but then as Mr. Justice Grant would not try the cause in its original form, he would not have assisted at the rehearing, they would not come before Sir John Franks again, and thus they let the time go by for a rehearing. Now it might have occurred to his friends on the other side, especially when he saw arrayed among them the concentrated wisdom of another court, (Mr. Dobbs) that the rehearing would have been directed to stand over till another judge arrived, or the court under the circumstances would have permitted it to be filed after the time. This was the origin of the error into which his friends had fallen, and now he would shew, what the error really was. Their objections to the decree would be reduced to two points, first, that the decree did not go far enough; secondly, that a decree had been made, which ought not to have been made. In the first case it was imperfect, in the second erroneous; but the first was partial to them. The very first reason assigned was, that Muttichund denying in his answer any interest in the cooties, and a replication having been filed to this,

It was necessary to ascertain what Mutttychund's precise interest was, before any account should be directed; but this was fallacious. If Mutttychund had no interest, how was he affected by the account, he need not appear in the Master's office; but if he had an interest, the invariable course was, to take the account before the precise interest of each party was determined, for it frequently happened that until the account was taken, the respective interests could not be ascertained.

Chief Justice.—That applies only to decrees for partition in joint Hindoo families, where there can be no doubt that all must have some interest in the property.

Mr. Clarke.—And that is the present case. These are ancestral cooties, it is a joint trade; Bhooram Shah was the ancestor, and every one of these complainants and defendants are his grandsons, great grandsons, or the sons of the great grandsons, among whom there has been no division of this joint property. The decree, therefore, should be only for an account as is every other interlocutory decree in the case of a Hindoo family, which you may have reheard, as a matter of course, but against which, no bill of review will lie. The case of Taylor v. Sharpe, 3d Peer, Williams 371, is decisive on this point.

Mr. Justice Grant.—How can that be? This is designed and enrolled.

Mr. Clarke.—They state it to be so in their bill of review, but it is an interlocutory decree only.

The Advocate-General.—Then if we state it to be so, your demurrer admits all our statements, and you cannot now deny it.

Mr. Clarke.—The demurrer does admit the statements of the bill to be true, and in doing that, it admits that you have set out the decree itself correctly, which you have done, and from the decree itself it appears, it is merely for account, only interlocutory, and could not in that form be signed and enrolled, thus you prove beyond all contradiction, that the assertion of signing and enrolling is erroneous.

Mr. Justice Grant.—Nothing can be better known than that no bill of review can be filed against an interlocutory decree.

Mr. Dobbs.—There is no enrollment in this court. The signing by the judges has always been esteemed equivalent to enrolling.

Chief Justice.—That will not help you, for the judges only sign the final decrees, not the interlocutory ones. This decree has not been signed, and therefore that rule will not apply. Mr. Advocate, you can have no answer to this objection.

Mr. Dobbs.—Permit me to say, that we certainly understood, that this decree was in the office considered as enrolled, or we should not have filed this bill.

Mr. Dickens.—No statement of this kind was ever made by me, nor do I believe it could have been made by any one in my office.

Chief Justice.—The demurrer must be allowed for the cause which has been suddenly taken. The objection should have been taken earlier, and much time would have been saved.

Mr. Clarke stated that he commenced with taking the objection he had opened by reading to the court the passage from the bill which betrayed the complainant's reason for filing the bill of review, instead of adopting the proper course of a rehearing, and his whole argument had gone to show, that a bill of review would not lie.

Chief Justice.—But your leader, Mr. Prinsep, did not touch on it, nor is it in the demurrer. It is a demurrer. It is a demurrer ore tenus. Some discussion then took place as to whether the complainants could rehear the case, and the court intimated that the 59th Equity rule did not restrain the court from giving liberty to file a petition of re-hearing, on a strong case being made, which they seemed to think might be done here. They then said that as this was a demurrer ore tenus each party should pay his own costs.

Mr. Clarke.—I beg to be heard on that—

Chief Justice.—The court have given their decision and will not hear you. Had this objection which you have successfully taken, been expressed in the causes of demurrer, the Advocate-General might have submitted, and not come here. It is a surprise on him, and as costs are in our discretion, each party shall, under these circumstances, pay his own.

Mr. Clarke.—The court will, I am certain, acquit me of the disrespect of arguing against their decision, I only wish to make a statement that I have not had an opportunity of offering. In taking the demurrer ore tenus I did it for the sake of brevity, but I never abandoned the demurrer filed. I am ready to follow Mr. Prinsep, and shew that both the causes assigned there, are good grounds of demurrer. I am not bound to state all my reasons of demurrer, I need only state one that is good, and then succeeding on a demurrer, which I have filed, I am entitled to my costs, nor should I lose them, because there are other good reasons which I have not assigned.

Chief Justice.—No Mr. Clarke, we cannot take up the time of the court by hearing you argue that a bill ought to be dismissed, when we have already determined that point in your favor.

Mr. Clarke.—Pardon me, that is not what I want to argue—I say that if the demurrers filed are good, I am entitled to my costs;—that if you refuse my costs, you treat the demurrers as bad, and that if the court refuse to hear me, they will then be determining against my client, without hearing all his counsel.

Chief Justice.—No, Mr. Clarke, we have made our decision, and will not hear you.

Mr. Cochrane.—My Lords, I am also with my learned friends and I am most unwilling to trespass on the time of the court after the intimation thrown out. But the second demurrer is taken on the ground that the other party should have applied for a rehearing, and not have filed his bill of review, and perhaps I did not sufficiently state it in opening to the court; but I am quite sure that if your Lordships were to hear the circumstances of this case as detailed even on the face of the decree, you would find ample reason for not inflicting upon my client the payment of his own costs, especially when I shall endeavour to shew that the general demurrer ought to be allowed.

Chief Justice.—No, Mr. Cochrane, we won't hear you, we will not have the time of this court taken up.

Mr. Cochrane.—Well, my Lords, this is the first time in eleven years' practice in this country in which a court has made a client pay costs without giving his counsel an opportunity of being heard against it, and I trust it will be the last.

Chief Justice.—Mr. Cochrane, if you cannot address the court in a proper manner, you shall cease to practise in it.

Mr. Cochrane.—Your Lordship may act as you think proper, but I have only done my duty.—Englishman.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 27.

The third Criminal Sessions, Oyer and Terminer, commenced this day, before His Majesty's Justices, Sir J. P. Grant presiding during the trials. The following is a list of the Grand Jury :

Hurischunder Bhoze and Obeychurn Bonerjee.

Sir J. P. Grant delivered his charge.—Gentlemen of the Grand Jury, I am sorry I cannot tell you that the calendar, which I have now before me, is lighter than usual on these occasions, but although there are in it several cases of painful and great enormity, I am so far happy to tell you, it does not appear to me, that they will require much of your time in order to their investigation, being of an ordinary description and with the nature of which you have become already acquainted in the discharge of your duties as grand jurymen.

There are two cases, however, on which I wish to make a few observations : the first is one of theft. The nature of the accusation is, that the prisoner, the servant of a gentleman on board a ship, having charge of his master's chest, containing money, and having the key, extracted the money therein deposited and disappeared. Here then it may be proper to inform you, that if the money was in the chest belonging to the master, and the servant had only charge of it, like a butler having charge of plate, there is no doubt, that the offence amounts to larceny, the possession being still the possession of the master. But if it should turn out that the prisoner had charge of the money for other purposes, the offence would then amount to a different species of crime, not larceny.

There is another accusation of a much more serious nature to which I think it necessary to draw your attention. It is one in which several persons are accused of the murder of an aged woman, who, it would seem, lived alone, and was found dead in the house several days after the murder had been committed. In this case the evidence will be circumstantial, unless, indeed, there is the evidence of one of the accomplices. According to the evidence, the woman's house was robbed of everything valuable in it. The questions for you to consider are, who the persons are who were concerned in the robbery, and who are accessories before the fact—who shall be said to be present, and shall be said abetting, aiding and assisting themselves not being present. It is necessary that this distinction should be adverted to, because though the moral offences are the same, they are distinct in law and must be indicted distinctly. If any person along with others, goes with the rest to a house for the purpose of robbing it, and murder is committed, he will be a principal in the murder though he be not in the apartment at the time of the commission of it. For this I may appeal to my Lord Hale ; ' as to the first : if divers persons come to make an affray &c., and are of the same party and come into the same house, but there are several rooms in the said house, and one be killed in one of the rooms, those that are of the party and that came for that purpose, though not in the same room, shall be said to be present.' I go no further into the law for the authorities on this subject are well known. The next thing for you to consider is, who shall be said to be parties to the murder not having been present within the house. Now whosoever was of the party that plotted the robbery during the commission of which the murder took place, are accessories to both ; and for this plain reason, that murder is most likely to happen in the commission of robbery, and therefore the party who counselled the robbery must be answerable. But one who counsels a robbery and withdraws himself before the violence is committed ceases to be an accessory. I cite a case from my Lord Hale in 1672 Hyde and A. B. C. and D. conclude to ride out to rob, and accordingly they rode out ; but at Hounslow D. parted from the company, and rode away to Colbrook : Hyde, A. and B. assaulted a man ; but before he was robbed, C. seeing another man coming at a distance, before the assault, rode up to him, about a bow shot or more from the rest, intending either to rob him, or to prevent him coming to assist, and in his absence Hyde, A. and B. robbed the first man, and then rode back to C. and they all went to London and there divided the spoil. It was ruled, upon good advice, first, that D. was not guilty of the robbery though he rode out with them upon the same design. Because he left them at Hounslow, and fell not in with them, it may be he repented of the design, at least he pursued it not. Secondly, that C. though he was not actually present at the robbery, nor, as I remember, at the assault, but rode back to secure his company, was guilty as well as Hyde, A. and B., and thereupon C. as well as Hyde, A. and B., had judgment of death.

Therefore if you are advised that those who plotted the robbery, and who were not within the house, continued not to free themselves, up to the time of the violence, you must conclude they were accessories. If you are of opinion that any of them quitted and were not connected with the robbery at the time of the offence, you will not send them to trial ; but if on the contrary, they are not within the house, and quitted the counsel before the division of the spoil and after the violence had been committed, you will find a true bill.

I need not, I am sure, inform you, that you are not to decide who are guilty or who are not guilty ; but merely whether there is sufficient evidence to induce you to send a prisoner to trial ; and I beg to express my certain conviction, from what I have before witnessed of grand juries in this place, that you will bestow on all cases brought before you the most careful attention.—Englishman.

ECCLESIASTICAL SIDE—JULY 29.

(BEFORE THE CHIEF JUSTICE AND MR. JUSTICE MALKIN.)

In the business of proving in solemn form of law, the last Will and Testament of George Page, deceased.

Counsel for Promovents—Mr. Prinsep and Mr. Leith.
Ditto for Impugnant—Mr. Turton and Mr. Clarke.

The libel of the promovents set forth : that on the 4th of September, 1835 George Page, the testator, being of sound mind, memory, and understanding, and having intent to make a will, gave to John Lamb instructions in writing, signed with his own initials, and requested Mr. Lamb to get the same prepared, in due legal form, for execution by him the said Geo. Page. That Mr. Lamb accordingly took the instructions to Mr. J. C. Wilson, an attorney, and directed him to prepare a will accordingly to the tenor of the instructions; that Mr. Wilson did accordingly prepare a rough draft of a will (the writing marked A) and on the 5th delivered it to Mr. Lamb, recommending that as Mr. Page was about to go on the river, and was in a very precarious state, that he should execute A before he went, for fear of accidents. That Mr. Lamb on the 5th of September took the paper A to Mr. Page, together with the original instructions on which it had been framed, and that Mr. Page read over A, approved of it, and duly executed it on the 5th of September, in the presence of Mr. Lamb, Mr. Lazarus, Mr. Allardice, and Puddolochun Chunder, the sircar of Mr. Page, and that the three last named person signed (A) as attesting witnesses. That Mr. Page after this went on the river, and remained absent during some days, during which time Mr. Wilson prepared and engrossed a fair copy of the will which had been executed, and delivered the same to Mr. Lamb; and this fair copy was delivered by Mr. Lamb to Mr. Page on the 24th of September, and was personally read and approved of by Mr. Page, and on that day he wrote his name at the foot of the engrossed copy (B) in the presence of Mr. Lamb, and of the three subscribing witnesses (already mentioned.) That on the 29th of September Mr. Page died. That he was a British subject, and subject to the jurisdiction of the court, and that all and singular the premises aforesaid, were true, public and notorious, and a decree was prayed, &c.

Mrs. Page by her proctors, Messrs. Collier and Bird, filed her negative contestation of the allegations in the libel and denied the truth of them.

The evidence in support of the libel is very voluminous, we extract a portion of the evidence of the medical men, particularly that of Dr. Martin, who attended Mr. Page from the 12th of August to the 29th Sept. the day of his death. This evidence goes merely to the state of mind and capability of making a testamentary disposition by Mr. Page from the middle of August to the 24th September; the circumstances attending the giving the instructions on the 4th by Mr. Page to Mr. Lamb; the execution by Page of the rough draft of Mr. Wilson on the 5th; and the execution by Mr. Page of the fair engrossed copy of the will on the 24th September; all this is to be found in the evidence of Mr. Allardice and Mr. Lazarus, two of the subscribing witnesses. We shall give shortly the substance of the evidence of these gentlemen.

Mr. James Ronald Martin.—Knows nothing whatever regarding any instructions Mr. Page may have given to Mr. Lamb regarding the making or preparing the paper (A); was the regular medical attendant of Mr. Page; attended him during his last illness; was first called in on the 12th August 1835; found he had been very ill for 9 or 10 days previously; had night paroxysms of fever. At this time he was perfectly capable of transacting any business, and indeed was transacting a great deal, relative to the dispatch of a ship of which he was the owner. I was in daily attendance on him from that day till his death, with the exception of two periods during which he went on the river. To the best of my recollection I visited him in Calcutta 2 or 3 times a day on the 2d, 3d, 4th, and 5th day of September, and on each of those days I considered him to be perfectly sound in mind, memory and understanding, and quite capable of transacting any business. I think it was on the 18th or 19th of September I first saw him after his return to Calcutta, from his trip on the river. I then also considered him to be perfectly sound in mind, and fully capable of transacting business. From that period I continued to see him 2 or 3 times a day until he died; he was occasionally delirious for 4 or 5 days before his death. I cannot speak as to dates. I took my report of his condition, and the events of his case from those who saw him, believing I should obtain from them a more correct account of him than he was himself capable of giving. During these 4 or 5 days he had occasional fits of delirium with lucid intervals, during which he made his wants known to his family, and conversed rationally, and I was told by Mrs. Page and others of his family, and I now think I recollect one occasion during the 4 or 5 days I have mentioned, in which he, Mr. Page, corrected the report, given in his presence to me by those about him; but within the last 2 or 3 days previous to his death he fell into a state of stupor and insensibility to what was passing around him. When I saw him, on the 18th or 19th of September, on his return from his trip on the river, Mr. Page was perfectly sound of mind and understanding, and continued so, to the best of my recollection, for 4 or 5 days after, when the occasional delirium came on.

Mr. Simon Nicholson, visited Mr. Page with Dr. Martin 7 or 8 times, in the month of August, and prior to the 6th of that month. Believes he saw Mr. Page on the 16th or 18th of September; but can't be positive as to the day. Had frequent occasion to call at the shop of Mr. Page. He had at that time the contract for repainting my house. On every occasion of my so seeing him, during the aforesaid period, Mr. Page appeared to me to be of sound mind, memory, and understanding, and perfectly capable of disposing of his property; although my mind was not particularly directed to the ascertainment of this point, during the above mentioned period, as far as I know. Mr. Page was confined to his bed or couch. Suffering under fever, which was succeeded by an attack of liver, of which he died. Whenever I saw him he appeared perfectly capable of transacting business, and of giving rational answers to such questions as I thought proper to put to him regarding his illness. I do not think I ever saw him after the 16th or 18th of September.

Mr. Alexander Russell Jackson. I was first called in to attend on Mr. Page, on the 21st September, then found him in nearly a hopeless state, he was suffering under an abscess in the liver. From questions which I thought it right to put to him regarding his illness, and from the answers which he gave me, I had no reason to think him wandering in mind; he appeared perfectly to understand what was said to him, but was so enfeebled by disease, that I avoided as much as possible questioning him at all. In my opinion his mind was then capable of recognizing any thing with which he might have previously been familiar, or have given directions about, or of putting his name to any paper placed before him; but I think Mr. Page was then too far reduced in thought, to admit of his undertaking any subject which was new to him, or upon which he not previously thought. I continued to attend him daily from the 21st September till he died. For the first 3 or 4 days of my attendance I visited him only once a day, and for the remaining period twice a day; from what I could observe, on my visits to him, on the 22nd, 23d, 24th, and 25th day of September, there appeared to me to be no change of consequence in the state of his mind; and in his condition generally from what I have already stated, as having observed, on my first visit. But from the 26th to the period of his death, Mr. Page, to the best of my recollection, was alternately delirious and quietly insensible, at times muttering and delirious, at other times quietly insensible. In my opinion Mr. Page, when I saw him on the morning of the 24th September, about 11 o'clock, was in a state of mind to be capable of recognizing any subject with which he had been previously familiar, or had been thinking upon, or of attaching his signature to any paper.

The will of Mr. Page was in substance thus:—All his debts to be paid, the property to be realized by executors as soon as possible. If the whole should amount to between 60,000 and 80,000 rupees, one-third to be paid at once over to his father, if alive, and to be at his disposal; and if dead, in equal shares, amongst his brothers and sisters, the remainder to be invested, and his wife to enjoy the whole interest arising thereon, while she continues a widow; or till her death should she not marry again; if she marry again, all her claim to cease, and at her death, if still a widow, she shall have power to will away one-fourth part of the remaining principal; in the event of his property amounting to between 80,000 and 100,000 rupees, then alike proportion as before, part shall be paid over to his father if alive, and the remaining principal shall be subject to the conditions before stated, with the exception that Mrs. P. shall have power at her death to will away one-fifth part of the property, 'and I hereby appoint Mr. T. B. Watt of Edinburgh, and Mr. Patton and Mr. John Lamb of Calcutta, Executors to this my last Will and Testament.' Calcutta, Sept. 5, 1836.

These are the instructions purporting to have been given by Mr. Page to Mr. Lamb, upon which the rough draft (A) was framed by Mr. Wilson the attorney, and the subsequent fair copy (B). The following witnesses depose as to the state of the testator, and the circumstances under which papers A and B were executed.

Robert Allardice, saith, I am an assistant in the employment of Messrs. Middleton and Co. of Calcutta, jewellers. I was very intimately acquainted with the late George Page, the testator abovenamed, for about 3 or 4 years previous to his death. Looking at the paper writing now produced to me by the Registrar of this court, annexed to the libel filed in this suit, and marked with the letter A, I am a subscribing witness to this paper. I was present at the signing and execution of the said paper writing on the 5th day of September last, by the said George Page, the testator abovenamed; and I also saw it signed by the other subscribing witnesses, Benjamin Walter Lazarus and Puddolochunchunder; myself and the two other subscribing witnesses attested the execution of the said paper writing at the request of Mr. John Lamb, one of the promoters abovenamed, the other subscribing witness Mr. Benjamin W. Lazarus, wrote a note to me on the said last mentioned day, and told me that Mr. Page wanted me. On going into the wood-yard of Mr. Page's premises, I saw Mr. John Lamb. I asked him for what purpose I had been sent for by Mr. Page, and he told me Mr. Page had been making a settlement, and wanted me to witness it. I went upstairs with Mr. Lamb to the room adjoining that in which the said George Page lay. I found there Mrs. Page, the Impugnant abovenamed, Mrs. Scott her sister, and Mr. Lazarus; there was also a Captain Bain there, but he went away before the will was signed. The sircar Puddolochunchunder came up shortly after; Mr. Lamb and myself remained in the adjoining room for a short time, and then myself, Mr. Lamb, Mr. Lazarus, and Puddolochunchunder went into the room where the said George Page lay. Mr. Page was then laying on his couch and unable to move without assistance. On going into the room, Mr. Lamb went up to the deceased and accosted him the said George Page, as nearly as I can recollect in the following words, "You must now sign this, Sir," handing him at the same time the paper writing marked A; the paper was folded up, and no part thereof shewn, except the lower part of the last page where it was to be signed. The deceased said, pointing with his pen to the foot of the last page, "Is it here?" Mr. Lamb said "yes." Mr. Lamb then held the paper, and I supported the said George Page whilst he was signing it. He appeared to execute the said paper with perfect willingness, and no entreaty of any kind was used by the said John Lamb or any one else, to induce the said George Page to sign the same. But the said paper writing was not read over to him by any one, nor did the deceased read it himself; the said testator appeared, as far as I could judge, to be perfectly sound in mind, memory, and understanding, at the time of executing the said paper marked A as aforesaid, the signature "George Page" at the foot thereof is in the hand writing of the said deceased George Page, and the signature "R. Allardice" also appearing at the foot thereof, as a subscribing witness thereto, is in my own hand-writing, and the signatures "Benj. W. Lazarus" and "Puddolochunchunder" the other two subscribing witnesses at the foot thereof are in the respective hand-writing of the said Benjamin Walter Lazarus and Puddolochunchunder, both of whom signed the said paper in my presence. When the said deceased had executed the paper, Mr. Lamb said "that will do," you may now lay down again. Myself and the two other subscribing witnesses signed our names thereto on the table next to Mr. Page's couch, and in his presence. It was after Mr. Page had signed the will, and we had attested it as witnesses that Mr. Lamb said to him, "that will do, you had better lie down again." Mr. Lamb then folded up the paper and took it away. Mr. Page did not tell him to do so. Coming downstairs from the room with Mr. Lamb, I asked him what he thought of Mr. Page; if he was getting any better. He told me he had been delirious the night before, but that that was only from weakness. Nothing more passed on that occasion. I do not know in whose handwriting the body of paper A is written, but the words "John" before the word Page in about the middle of the last sheet, and the word "fifth" in the second line from the bottom of the said last sheet are in the hand writing of Mr. John Lamb. I know that the said George Page, the testator abovenamed, on the day he signed and executed the paper writing marked A, as stated in my answer to the preceding article, went on the river, and remained absent from Calcutta about 6 or 8 days, as well as I can remember after Mr. Page's return from his trip on the river, on the 24th day of the same month of September last. I was sent for as before stated by Mr. Lazarus, to come over to Mrs. Page's on the same business, that I had been there before. On going to the premises of Mr. Page, I met Mr. Lamb in the yard, and he told me, that it was only the rough copy of Mr. Page's will that we had signed before; that he had now got the fair copy made out, and that we were to sign it, the same way as the former one. After remaining a short time below stairs, myself, Mr. Lazarus, and Mr. Lamb, went up stairs into the room in which the deceased was, the sircar came up a little after. After we had been in the room a few minutes, Mistress Page, the impugnant above-named, came into the room. Mr. Lamb then went up to the deceased and said to him "Now you must get up," having first placed the paper writing now produced to me by the Registrar, and herewith produced, and marked B, upon the table before him. Mrs. Page also went up to the said George Page, the testator above-named, and said to him, "Now, George, get up and do this," and took hold of him and kissed him. Mr. Lamb then said to Mrs. Page "you had better go into the next room," and I think the deceased also said to her "go" or some word to that effect. She then left the room; myself and Mr. Lamb then assisted the deceased George Page, to sit up on his couch, which he did, and signed his name in my presence to the paper writing propounded in this second article of the said libel, and marked B, now produced to me by the Registrar. After the deceased had signed his name, I think he said to Mr. Lamb, "Will this do?" I then signed the said paper writing marked B, as a witness at the request of Mr. Lamb, in the presence of the deceased. The other two subscribing witnesses then did the same: the signature "George Page" at the foot of the said paper writing, is of the proper hand-writing, of the said George Page deceased, and the signature, "R. Allardice, subscribed thereto, as witness, is in my own hand-writing, and the signatures of the two subscribing witnesses "Benjamin W. Lazarus and Puddolochunchunder," are in the respective hand-writings of the said Benjamin Walter Lazarus and Puddolochunchunder, who respectively signed their names thereto in my presence. The said George Page at the time of the signing and execution of the said will marked him, appeared to be perfectly sound in mind, memory, and understanding, and seemed to understand what he was about. That the will was not read to him by any one, neither did the said testator personally peruse the same in my presence. After the said last mentioned paper writing had been executed, Mr. John Lamb took a half sheet of China paper, and folded the said paper writing in it and then called for a candle, and having sealed it, took the same away with him. The testator seemed perfectly to understand what was said to him both by Mr. Lamb and also by Mrs. Page; he seemed also to sign the will willingly and of his own accord. Nothing more passed upon the occasion in my presence or hearing. This took place on the 24th of September last.

Benjamin Walter Lazarus saith, I am a Cabinet-maker in Calcutta. I knew the said George Page for nearly 2 years before, and up to the time of his death. I was in his employment during the whole of that time. I looked at the paper writing now produced, and shewn to me by the Registrar of that court, propounded in this first article of the libel in this suit, and marked with the letter A. I am a subscribing witness to this paper. It was executed by the said George Page, the testator abovenamed, in my presence, and the signature "George Page" at the foot thereof, is in his hand-writing; the signature "Benjamin Walter Lazarus" appearing thereon as a witness thereto is in my own hand-writing. I signed the same in the presence of the said testator and at the request of the said John Lamb; the two signatures, "R. Allardice" and "Puddolochunchunder" also appearing thereon as subscribing witnesses thereto are in the respective hands writing of the said Robert Allardice and Puddolochunchunder respectively, who so respectively signed the same in my presence and in the presence of the testator. This will A was so signed and executed on or about the 5th day of September last; the first I heard of this paper in any way was on being called upstairs on the said last mentioned day to Mr. Page's room by Mr. Lamb to witness the will. On going upstairs to the said room, Mr. Lamb and Mr. Page were together, Mr. Allardice, the other subscribing witness, came up along with me, and Puddolochunchunder came up shortly after; to the best of my recollection nothing was said by any party on this occasion. Mr. Page was lying on a couch supported by pillows, the said testator was at this time very unwell, indeed, owing to his not having had any sleep for several previous nights, and he had been a little delirious the night before he signed this will. In my opinion the mind and intellects of the said George Page were so weak at this time that if this paper marked A had been read over to him by any one, he was not capable of thoroughly understanding it from its intricate nature, but I think that he the said George Page was aware that he was signing his will, and if the will had been in a more simple form, he might have been capable of understanding its contents. Even when in perfect health, in my opinion the said George Page would have had considerable difficulty in understanding a paper of this intricate description. The testator signed this paper marked A without reading the same, nor was it read over to him by any one in my hearing either before or after he signed the same. He was not in my opinion capable of reading the will himself from the weak state he was in. After the making and publishing of such his last will as in my answer to the preceding article mentioned, the said George Page did depart from Calcutta on his intended excursion, and remained absent about 10 days. After the return of the said George Page to Calcutta from his said excursion, and about the 24th day of September last, I was in a similar manner, as upon the execution of the former paper, called up from the office of the said George Page by the said John Lamb to witness a fair copy of the former will of the said George Page. I accordingly went upstairs to the writing room of the said testator in which he was lying.

Upon entering into the said room, saw there Mrs. Page, the impugnant, in this suit, and Mr. Lamb; Allardice and Puddolochunchunder came up along with me. I looked at the paper writing now produced to me at the time of my examination, propounding in the second article of the said libel, and marked with the letter B. I am a subscribing witness to this paper; it was signed and executed in my presence by the said George Page, the testator abovenamed, and the signature "George Page" appearing thereon at the foot thereof, is in the hand-writing of the said George Page, and the signature Benjamin Walter Lazarus also appearing thereon as a witness thereto, is in my own hand-writing. The signatures "Robert Allardice" and "Puddolochunchunder," the other two subscribing witnesses thereto, are in the respective hand-writing of the said Robert Allardice and Puddolochunchunder, both of whom signed the paper in my presence, and also in the presence of the testator. I also signed the same in Mr. Page's presence, but we three attested the paper at the request of the said John Lamb, he, the said John Lamb, held this paper B before the said testator for signature, with only that part exposed to which the names were to be affixed. I put the pen into Mr. Page's hand; and he then signed the said last mentioned paper. He, the said George Page, was on this occasion very weak indeed. I assisted to raise him upon the couch, and put a pillow under his right side to support him whilst he was signing his name. The testator did not read over this paper B before he signed it in my presence, nor did any one read it over to him. Mrs. Page had left the room before the will was signed, but I have no hesitation in saying she knew that the said George Page was going to sign his will on this occasion, and she made no objection whatever before she left the room as to what was about to take place. She mentioned to me after Mr. Page's death that she knew when we were sent for up-stairs on this occasion, that it was for the purpose of witnessing the said George Page's will. The said George Page was on the occasion of signing and executing this will marked B, much more debilitated in body and much weaker in mind than when he signed the former will marked A, and in my opinion his mind was quite incapable of understanding the contents of this paper marked B, if it had been even read to him by any one; but I feel certain that he was sufficiently sound in mind to know that he was in this occasion signing his will. When he, the said George Page, had affixed his name to it, he said "Will that do?" Nothing more that I can recollect passed on this occasion.

Mr. Prinsep, with whom was Mr. Leith, contended generally that the testator was in a fit state at the time he delivered his instructions to Lamb, and subsequently, to be fully aware of what he was about; that the evidence of the medical men went to shew him sound in mind, memory, and understanding; and that all the circumstances under which the two papers A and B were executed, indicated on the part of Page, an animus testandi. The learned counsel dwelt on Dr. Martin's evidence as to the state of the testator, and his transacting business about his ship Psyche; comments on the evidence of Mr. Charles (clergyman); on the evening of the 25th Sept. Mrs. Page told Mr. C. that Page had executed his will the evening before. The only question will be whether he was competent to sign the 2nd paper B; the animus testandi is clearly indicated by the republication of the 2nd will, &c. &c.

The instructions were given on the 4th, the draft was executed on the 5th, and the will engrossed was executed on the 24th Sept., if the testator was sound in mind on any one of these occasions that is sufficient; the opinion of all the medical men is in favour of his soundness and disposing state of mind. Mr. Scott, who from being excluded from the office of executor, was no doubt actuated by exasperated feeling, gives no single instance of incapacity in Page, he only states it generally.

Dr. Martin says he was sound in mind on the 4th, 5th, and 6th of Sept., also on the 19th he was occasionally delirious for 4 or 5 days before his death. There is no suggestion any where in the evidence that Mr. Lamb acted fraudulently; he takes nothing under the will; he was not even sole executor; there were three others; all he got was his share of commission. The labourer is worth his hire. An executor takes on himself an onerous burden. But look at the dispositions of the will, is there any thing in them suspicious in its nature. The natural relations take under it, they alone are benefited, the faction, his brothers and sisters. Mrs. Page is a young and childless widow, and as such not an object of the care of ecclesiastical courts. Did she ever suggest to any one that Page was not in possession of his faculties? Does she not say "George do this!" and that was her request to him to sign the paper (B.) Mrs. Page never complained to Scott, her brother-in-law, of the making of the will; she was in the next room at the time of the execution of the will; her sister was with her and a Captain Bayntum. The general character of Mr. Lamb is good. She has a power of willing away a portion of the property at her death. The learned counsel then cited Broyden v. Broue 2. Adams 441. 2. Phillimore 449. as to lucid intervals in delirium; and violent nervous attacks, how far to be taken to incapacitate. My friends cannot set up the opinion as to the state of Page, of the attesting witnesses in opposition to the opinion of the medical witnesses. Should my friends, however, succeed in getting rid of papers A and B, and drive me back upon the instructions, I still submit, we are entitled to probate.

Mr. Justice Malin. Can we grant you probate of the instructions upon this libel?

Mr. Leith continues. The instruments propounded in the libel are A and B, but they are drawn upon the instructions, and in Sykes v. Smith 2 Phillimore 355, instructions committed to writing in the life time of the testator, though never seen by him, or read to him, were established as a will, and in Lewis v. Lewis 3 Phill. 112, it was satisfactorily proved that the deceased gave the instructions, and that the codicil was reduced to writing during her life. It was held as valid as if executed by her. The subscribing witnesses to both A and B, are Puddolochun, Lazarus, and Allardice: there is some doubt on the mind of Lazarus—none on the mind of Allardice; Lazarus impeaches by his own act his own testimony; he doubts the condition of the testator to make a will, and yet attests the will—in Lebreton v. Fletcher, 2 Haggard, 568, it was held what a will may be pronounced good, though both the attesting witnesses deposed as to the incapacity of the testator. Mrs. Page by her conduct shewed she wished Page to execute the will. She told Mr. Charles he had executed his will, and raised no objection to the will or to the sanity of her husband until after his death. The attesting witnesses are not allowed to invalidate their own act, by subsequently swearing the testator to be non compos. The learned counsel then attempted to get up Puddolochun's evidence (he had contradicted himself in several instances.) The medical and European evidence are alike in our favour; and this proceeding impeaching the will, must be attributed to the anger of the wife and the disappointment of Mr. Scott.

Mr. Turton, for Mrs. Page, comments on the libel. There is no evidence that any instructions were ever given by Page to Lamb. The evidence of this fact is entirely harryay, it rests on no other foundations than what was told by Lamb to Mr. Charles. There is plenty of evidence as to Mr. Wilson, and the instructions; but no request to him by Page to draw up a will from these instructions is proved, on the contrary the proof is, that the request was the request of Lamb. There is no proof at all, that at the time he executed A, he understood the meaning of it. I contend the promiscuous can have no relief upon this libel, the same deficiency of proof occurs as to the execution of B. It does not appear that Page ever gave any instructions, that they were ever read over to him—or that at the subsequent execution of A and B, he understood, or knew at all what were the contents of the papers he executed. Observations have been made upon Mrs. Page. She does not impute insanity to her husband, and acquiesced in his execution of the will. It would have been highly unbecoming in Mrs. Page, considering the state of her husband, had she then raised any objections, and had she not done every thing in her power to soothe, and calm, instead of agitating her husband at that time; she might acquiesce, yielding to the suggestions of others, and although in her own mind, well aware of his incapacity, she yielded rather than agitate or discompose him. It would not under the circumstance have been the part of an affectionate wife, had she not then yielded to what others were promoting, rather than by raising opposition disturb, and disquiet her husband. She was not present on the first occasion (execution of A)—the instructions were carried in secret, to Mr. Wilson, who appears to have taken for granted the statement of Lamb, that the instructions were given by Page. The paper as drafted by Wilson, was then shewn folded up to Page, who was made to execute it, without any explanation of its contents! It is then returned to Wilson, to be engrossed for future execution. Lamb goes down stairs without saying a word to Mrs. Page. Here, therefore, the transaction is pregnant with clandestinity, and any thing but creditable to Mr. Lamb. He is wholly unconnected with the family, he does not hold one word of communication with any one individual of the family. Mr. and Mrs. Scott were in the house; not one syllable ever transpires as to the contents of these papers until the morning of the funeral. Mrs. Page has been called a young and a childless widow—and we are told that she is not an interesting object in the eyes of the Ecclesiastical Law. By the statute of distributions she would get, if she be childless, a great deal more than if she were otherwise. The learned counsel then commented on Mr. Charles' evidence (we have not given it as it does not touch the execution of the will.) Lamb comes to him on the 4th Sept. saying he had with him the instructions for the will signed with the initials of Page; but he does not produce them to Mr. Charles. He then takes the opinion of Mr. Charles. The result of the dispositions of the will are to leave her a less interest in the property should it amount to alac; than she would take if it only amounted to 80,000 rupees. Now considering the affection he always expressed for his wife, I consider this absurd and highly improbable that Page ever gave or intended to make any such disposition of his property, and the question then arises, did he know of any such will? or did he intend ever to execute a will of this tenor? Lamb says he came to Mr. Charles on the 5th, not on the 4th, here is a contradiction. Wilson is never asked to go to Page, and never saw him! The instructions were drawn up; and the draft will (A) executed in the absence of the professional person Mr. Wilson; who drafted the will, and made several alterations in the draft, which thus differed from the instructions; and yet the draft will is executed without any of these alterations being explained by Wilson who made them!! Why were not the Scotts called in? Why not Captain Bain? The persons who were called in, were those only, over whom Lamb thought he might exercise an influence. Allardice, Puddolochun, and Lazarus. Allardice, a young person, summoned by Lamb himself, his uncle, a man of mere, matured judgment, living in the same house, and equally at hand with the nephew. Puddolochun, the testator's sircar, to whom Page himself never entrusted either the keeping his accounts, or his money, and Lazarus, an assistant to Page, proper persons enough perhaps, but other proper persons had been called in also, but they, although in the house, were not called in, and Puddolochun, who contradicts himself in half a dozen places, in his evidence, is AFTER THE DEATH OF PAGE, and after the affairs of the estate transferred to the hands of Lamb. The whole case furnishes evidence of clandestinity; and that in itself affords a strong suspicion of fraud and contrivance. The learned counsel then cited 1st Hagg. 310. 321. 384. 2 Phillimore 224. as to clandestinity; pencil observations in instructions being only deliberative Lagram v. Wyatt and Hellinghurst v. Vickers; Phill. 193 as to when capacity is doubtful at the time of execution; there must be proof of previous instructions given by testator; or of reading over previous to execution. The learned counsel then took up the paper purporting to be the original instructions; in which all the sums were left blank; there were a great many pencil alterations, not in the hand of Page. The executor clearly prefers clandestinity to publicity, Mrs. Page is excluded from any portion of the property, if she marry again; this is contrary to law, and it must be shown, therefore, that Page had expressed the previous intention to make this disposition, or that it was read over to him before he executed it, whereas it now appears to have been drafted out, without ever being read to him, by persons for him, who have a wish to make this disposition. The one thing that appears any where to excuse the want of reading over and explaining to the testator, the instrument previous to allowing him to execute it: cites 1. Haggard 262. I don't contend instructions may not stand in place of a will, Sykes v. Snaith; but I do contend that these instructions have never been read over or explained to Page. Ross v. Chester 1st Hagg. 227. here the will originated in the desire of the testator: but in Page's will, the act is not proved to have originated in the desire of the testator. Young v. Brown 1st Hagg. 566. In both this and the preceding case, the will was read over to the testator, here it was not. The learned counsel, then cited Groom v. Thomas 2d Hagg. 433. as to the principle laid down by the courts in cases of delirium or insanity. "The party setting up any instrument executed after insanity once shown, has the burden of proof cast upon him, and must then prove the mind perfectly restored; and the delusion removed." Rules of a Court of Equity are the same in this respect, as the Ecclesiastical Courts. The learned counsel cited several other cases: as to the rules which govern wills made by interrogatories 1st Phill. 58. Green. v. Skipworth. The circumstances of Page's will are totally different from this last case. Moss v. Bramter 1st Phillimore 266. there must be proof that Page understood this will, and that it was read over to him. As the medical evidence, its value, and the rule by which it is to be regulated by the Courts see 2. Adams, 441. Broydon v. Brown; in this case it is also laid down, that the will must appear to be the act of the deceased, and not the act of any other persons whatever acting in the name and on behalf of the deceased. See also this case as to delirium, as contradistinguished from insanity proper. It was no part of the moral duties to bar the future marriage of his wife. Such a disposition is not to be favoured, but construed strictly. In this case there is no previous declaration of intention by testator; neither is the any subsequent recognition by him of the will. Now as to his state and capability of disposing: Scott and Lazarus are not partizans, they consider him unfit. Dr. Jackson says, the mind was enfeebled by the body, he might have understood the will, had it been explained to him. Lazarus says he could not. Had he been aware or thought on the subject, would he not have made Scott his executor, who was his brother-in-law, most intimate with him, accompanied him on the road, and was prodigal of kindness and attention to him; these attentions, in the hour of sickness and debility, have increased effect on the feelings. Is it likely when he was making his will, he would have omitted the name of Scott as an executor? I now come to the evidence of Puddolechua.

Puddolechua's evidence, he has contradicted himself on two points.

Mr. Turton.—Yes, and he has contradicted himself on several other points, in such a manner that it is impossible to rely upon what he says. Mr. Turton then took the evidence of Lazarus as to the sanity and capability of Page. The medical men were not called in to examine the appearance and to the state of mind of Page when he executed the papers. They only speak from recollection, some time after his death; Lazarus saw him at the time; was with him, and had known, and watched him for a long time before, was more likely to judge of his state of mind than those whose attention was never particularly directed to it; and who spoke merely from ignorant recollection of the events of his disease. Under all these circumstances can there be any doubt, that this will was not executed by the testator with the full knowledge of its contents; and with an intention to make such a disposition of his property? We believe it to be the will of Mr. Lamb.

Mr. Clarke followed in support. As to the motive of Lamb, in making himself executor to this will, he is a cabinet-maker in the same business with Page, whose affairs were considerable; by becoming executor he had to wind up the estate, finish the jobs, see the customers, give time and indulgence to them to liquidate their debts to the estate, and thus have ample means of acquiring the good will of the business. Mr. Scott, who was in the same line, and who might have interfered with Lamb's design, was therefore not joined with him as executor. On the evidence of Lazarus and Allardice, it does not appear that Page knew any thing of the contents of the will. Lazarus says Page was imbecile, and that Lamb could induce him to sign any paper. I submit upon all the evidence, that there is no proof whatever, that any instructions for a will were given by Page to Lamb, or to any one else: nor that he consented to, or knew of any instructions—they are in the hand-writing of the party setting up of the will—they were not drawn up in presence of the family nor was any individual of the family consulted with respect to them—we then come to the execution of A, the paper is shewn folded up to Page, and neither read, nor explained to him. The attesting witnesses are persons over whom Lamb may be supposed to have control. Why is young Allardice sent for instead of his uncle, or Mr. Scott, or Captain Bain who were in the house at the time, and by whom are these attesting witnesses summoned? Why by Lamb. The whole is pregnant with clandestinity, and therefore a suspicion of fraud raised. Page's signature is the only evidence of integriton, the disposition of the will are unkind, illiberal, and inconsistent, with the affection ever evinced by Page towards Mrs. Page, &c.

Mr. Prinsep replied,

And the Court intimated they would give judgment on the 15th August.—Englishman.

Maria Margueritta Gonsalves v. Francis Barretto Gonsalves.

The libel in this case was filed at the suit of the promovent, Mrs. Maria M. Gonsalves, against her husband for a separation a mensa et thoro, on the grounds of cruelty and adultery on the part of the impugnans, Francis B. Gonsalves her husband.

The libel stated various acts of cruelty and adultery on the part of the husband. The parties were married some time in the month of August, 1835, and the suit for divorce was commenced in the month of October of the same year. The impugnans in his personal answer to the libel admitted the adultery, but denied the cruelty. The evidence on both sides is very voluminous; and contains many details of a nature, which it is advisable not to place before the public. It is also unnecessary. The details in question relate to the proof of the allegations of adultery on the part of the husband charged in the libel; and he having by his per-several answers, admitted the adultery, we very willingly suppress these details and circumstances. Upon the case being called on,

Mr. Turton and Mr. Grant appeared on behalf of the promovee, Mrs. Gonsalves, and Mr. Clarke and Mr. Lieth for the Impugnant, Mr. Gonsalves.

Chief Justice.—The adultery is admitted; we must decree a separation; the only question therefore to discuss is the amount of alimony. You have not filed an allegation of faculties Mr. Turton.

Mr. Turton.—When the marriage is once established, alimony follows as a natural consequence.

Chief Justice.—No doubt of that, but the question here is what is the amount of the husband's property?

Mr. Turton.—By the marriage settlement, the interest of 50,000 rupees and the rent of two houses. And by a clause in the deed, it is provided, that if the husband commits an act of insolvency, or becomes bankrupt, he forfeits all right to the money in settlement, and all beneficial interest under it—and the property becomes the wife's. Now he was a partner in a house of business; he chooses to go out of the house. He was then in a condition to supply alimony; by his own act he relinquishes that position; the wife is not to suffer, she is still entitled to her alimony—and if he cannot pay in pursuance, he must in person; he will then go to gaol upon not obeying the decree of this court. We shall drive him to an act of insolvency—and then under the covenant of the marriage settlement his wife will be entitled to 50,000 rupees, and the rent of two houses. (Laughter.) Mr. Turton cited Brown v. Brown 2 Hogg. Rep. 5. This was a case in which the wife was alienated in the sum of £50 a year, out of a property of the husband the income of which was £140 a year—the husband thought fit to abandon the source from whence he derived this income; Sir John Nicol laid it down that he must betake himself to some occupation to provide for the alimony of his wife—this is a sufficient authority to show, that the wife is entitled to alimony, according to the apparent means of the husband. He was at the commencement of the suit a partner in the firm of Biale and Co.; he has chosen to withdraw himself from it; he must now therefore adopt some course by which he will be enabled to alimant his wife. I ask two hundred rupees a month.

Mr. Grant cited several cases.

Chief Justice.—There is no case before us in which the court has gone into the question as to the amount of alimony to be decreed, in which there does not appear on the part of the promovee an allegation of faculties, in the husband. Now you have filed no allegation of faculties. You must file your allegation of faculties and get your answer to it, or how do we know what is the property of the husband, out of which you ask us to decree alimony?

Mr. Turton.—I ask for costs also.

Mr. Clark for the husband. This is an attempt of Mrs. Eyob, the mother of Mrs. Gonsalves, to get possession of the property, under the marriage settlement. The young lady would, were she permitted by her relations, willingly go back to her husband. My friends wish to drive Mr. Gonsalves into the Insolvent Court, and so upon the death of his mother, get possession of the whole of the property in settlement! Is that, conduct on the part of a wife, such as to call upon this court for its sanction? It is out of the power of this court to grant alimony, or to fix its amount, without it has been shewn by the promovee, that the husband has something, and without an allegation of faculties in him, and my friend Mr. Grant has very obligingly cited several cases, which fully establish this position for me. Blacquiere v. Blacquiere, 3 Phill. 254; Cook v. Cook 2 Phill. 43. cited by my friend are the very cases I had brought here to establish my proposition. Mr. Clarke cited Brown v. Brown, already mentioned, and Green v. Green, 2 Adams, 285. As to the property of the husband, what says Mr. Biale his partner, and Mr. Christiana his brother-in-law? They both state him entirely dependant on his mother, and having nothing of his own. Faculties in the husband are the foundation of alimony. Nothing is here shewn to be in the husband and this court will not decree alimony out of nothing.

The wife went back to her mother Mrs. Eyob, at the suggestion of the elder Mrs. Gonsalves it is true; but that was only meant, as a temporary measure. The husband subsequently writes contrite and affectionate letters to her, requesting her return to him, and containing promises of future kindness and attention. She can go back now if her friends will let her. It is absurd to talk of danger to her, either personal or to her health. She might go back; but, po, that will not suit the views and designs of her friends; they want to break up these settlements. Mr. Aspar, who has married her sister, and who brings to the matter all the astute wilyness of a native of Isphahan, says, oh yes she may go back, but you must first break up the settlement, give her the interest of 50,000 rupees, and the rents of the two houses; make her wholly independent of her husband, and then she shall go back!

Mr. Leith followed and began to comment on the evidence of Mr. Christiana, and the circumstances under which the separation took place.

Chief Justice.—What have we to do with all this? The question is whether we can grant alimony; and whether the wife is to have her costs. The adultery is admitted; we must decree a divorce.

Mr. Leith.—Mrs. Gonsalves, the mother, declared she will withdraw all support from her son, should he not live with his wife. We have, therefore, nothing absolutely out of which the court can decree alimony.

Mr. Turton replied.

Chief Justice.—The question is simply one of costs and alimony. We will give judgment on the 15th August.

The court had previously, at the close of the sittings, appointed the 15th of August for resuming the sittings of the court. The court will after that day continue to sit for a week to dispose of all the cases in the equity sittings board.—Englishman.

BOMBAY SUPREME COURT REPORT.

WEDNESDAY, 13TH JULY.

BEFORE MR. JUSTICE AWDRY.

On Wednesday about 11 a. m. the proceedings of the case of the King v. the Editor of the Bombay Gazette, from an alleged libel upon Sir John Keane, Commander-in-Chief at this Presidency, commenced, when the following Jury was sworn:—Messrs. James Portar, Wm. Anthony Clarke, Joseph Sprague, William Macculum, Robert McKimm, William East, Francisco de Ramos, Richard Farmer Hart, John Mullaly, Andrew Bruce Boswell, Henry Andrew Cannon, and Richard Harrison.

Attorneys, Messrs. Stewart, John Montague Farnworth, Messrs. Framjee, Cranes and Cowajee Hormasjee, were summarily challenged by Mr. Roper, the Advocate-General, who appeared for the prosecution. The information upon which the proceedings were instituted consisted of three counts which set forth.

1st.—That John Keane, Knight Commander of the Military order of the Bath, Lieutenant-General and Commander-in-Chief of His Majesty's and the East India Company's Forces at the Presidency of Bombay, was upon the 1st day of December, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and thirty-five, and thence continually hitherto hath been and still is Commander-in-Chief, and the officer Commanding His Majesty's and the East India Company's Forces at the said Presidency, and that by the judgment of a native general court-martial duly held at Dacca, in the East Indies on the 2d day of December in the said year one thousand eight hundred and thirty-five, one Jhora, a native camp-follower, belonging to the Bombay army, was found guilty of having murdered one Piermut, and the said Jhora, was thereupon sentenced by the said court-martial to be hanged by the neck until he should be dead at such time and place as His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief of His Majesty's and the East India Company's Forces at the Presidency of Bombay should be pleased to direct, and that one John Malone Macdonald late of Bombay, gentleman, knowing the premises and unlawfully and maliciously devising and intending to traduce, vilify and defame the said John Keane in his situation and conduct as such Commander-in-Chief as aforesaid, and to expose him to great and public hatred, disgrace, discredit and contempt, and to instigate and cause to be believed that the said John Keane wilfully, knowingly and in contempt of what the law had intended, wished and devised that the said camp-follower should illegally be hanged by the neck until he should be dead, in the ninth day of April in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and thirty-six, with force and arms at Bombay as aforesaid, unlawfully, wickedly and maliciously did print and publish and cause and procure to be printed and published in a certain public newspaper called the Bombay Gazette, a certain false, wicked, scandalous and malicious libel in the form of a letter, signed Mills, addressed to the Editor of the Englishman, and containing therein divers false, scandalous, malicious and defamatory matters of and concerning the said John Keane, and of and concerning the said John Keane as such Commander-in-Chief as aforesaid, that is to say in the part thereof according to the tenor following to wit: "To law in particular, Sir John Keane (concerning the said John Keane) has a decided aversion," and in another part thereof according to the tenor following to wit: "as to rules and regulations also and the established usage of the King's and Company's services, these are restraints which Sir John Keane (meaning the said John Keane) utterly condemns," and in another part of the said letter according to the tenor, following to wit:—"On just looking at the general orders above referred to, (meaning certain General Orders which had been duly published by order of the said John Keane as Commander-in-Chief as aforesaid, I (meaning the author or writer of the said letter) observe, that in a General Order dated the 18th February, 1836, a native camp-follower, (meaning the said Jhora) tried and convicted by a native general court-martial, (meaning the said court-martial held at Dacca as aforesaid) of murder, is directed to be executed without the sentence of death having been concurred in by the Governor and Council (meaning the Governor of Bombay and his Council) according to the provision contained in the regulation or any which gives such courts jurisdiction in criminal cases." But it is not yet known whether the Brigadier General Commanding the division will proceed to carry this sentence into effect. Such an omission as this it will be evident, cannot be ascribed to either the Judge-Advocate-General, as these officers must have been perfectly aware that the concurrence of Government (meaning the Government of Bombay) is indispensable, for giving effect in such a case to a sentence of death. But as Sir John Keane (meaning the said John Keane) has introduced into the native army the novel punishment of imprisonment on his own authority, he (meaning the said John Keane) may think himself at perfect liberty to direct a native camp-follower to be hanged without any reference to the Government, (meaning the Government of Bombay) on the subject," to the great scandal, infamy and disgrace of the said John Keane, in manifest perversion and violation of the laws of this realm, and to the evil pernicious example of all others in the like case of offending, and against the peace of our said Lord the King, his crown and dignity.

The 2nd count was the same as the above, only that it charged with having sentenced the camp-follower to death, whose name is not mentioned.

The 3rd count contained a similar technical difference.

The defendant having pleaded not guilty, Mr. Roper opened the case, and in a speech which lasted nearly two hours, informed the jury that the present action was brought by Sir John Keane in consequence of a letter signed "Mills" which had been republished by the Editor of the Gazette from the Englishman, a Calcutta newspaper (in which it had originally appeared with comments tending to accuse Sir John Keane of having unlawfully confirmed the proceeding of a court-martial sentencing one Jhora, a camp-follower, to death. The learned Counsel contended, that if Sir John Keane had acted as was insinuated by Mills and the Editor of the Gazette, that he would have been guilty of murder, and would have been dismissed with ignominy from the honorable situation which he held—would have been scouted from society and his name held up to reprobation. By a reference to Blackstone's Commentaries, Vol. 4, (a book, according to Mr. Roper, in the hands of every schoolboy) it would be found that any judge passing or carrying into execution an illegal sentence was guilty of murder, and such would have been Sir John Keane's crime had he so acted, consequently the greater was the magnitude of the individual's offence who attempted audaciously to impute such conduct to him as Mr. Macdonald had done. The letter of Mills would show with what animosity it had been penned, and it was the effusion of selfishness and disappointed vanity, no reliance should have been placed upon any thing coming from that quarter concerning Sir John Keane, as its veracity would be very questionable. An eulogium in this letter was pronounced upon Col. Kennedy, and an attempt was made to depreciate the talent of his successor Major Miller, by stating that it was notorious that previous to his appointment as Judge-Advocate-General he had never turned his attention to the study of military law. In Mr. Roper's opinion, however, if Major Miller was not distinguished as a lawyer, he possessed other qualities equally necessary to constitute a good Judge-Advocate; he was never a partizan in any way in cases that came under his cognizance, but acted impartially and evidently used every exertion to discharge his duty in a conscientious and upright manner. The want of temper which Col. Kennedy frequently displayed was so well known to officers in the army who had seen him officiating at courts-martial as to require nothing more to be said on the subject. (The Court here interrupted Mr. Roper and stated that his opinion of Col. Kennedy's qualification did not bear upon the matter at issue.) The impression which the writer of this libel seemed desirous of conveying was that Sir John Keane, from an arbitrary disposition and impatience of legal restraints, wished to set up his mere pleasure as law, and that for checking him in this course by quoting legal authority in his official capacity, chapter and verse, Col. Kennedy had been removed from the office of Judge-Advocate under the pretence of having been guilty of great perversion of legal ingenuity and learning: an allusion was almost made to the case of Captain Muller from which and the whole tenor of the communication it was visible that this writer Miles, from feelings of personal animosity, was unable to give a true and impartial view of Sir John Keane's conduct. In fact he charged him with having superseded a General order emanating from a higher authority, the Commander-in-Chief in India, but as Sir John was amenable to the same high authority, it was surprising that no notice had been taken of it, if he has so transgressed. The case of Private Wilson was also brought forward, and an inference from it and the other attempted to be drawn that courts-martial under the Bombay Presidency were subservient to Sir John Keane's purposes, who directed them as he thought proper and always found compliance with his wishes. By the greatest accident in the world, Mr. Macdonald had been discovered to be the Editor of the Gazette as by some legislative blunder of the Council of India, only the printers and publishers of a newspaper were obliged to register themselves as such, and in this manner the Editor of the Examiner (in which the slander had also appeared) remained concealed. Mr. Macdonald had somewhat incautiously admitted his liability, but had at the same time set up in his letter to Mr. Morgan, the plaintiff's solicitor, a most untrue defence, couched in a style of shallow cunning, which could be detected by a very small share of penetration. The Counsel then commented in a tone of great irony upon Mr. Macdonald's assertion of his ignorance of having libelled the Commander-in-Chief and his having done so unwittingly, if any thing that he had stated could be so construed. It had been ruled with respect to verbal slander that an individual repeating what he heard from another of any person, and giving up his authority should be held guiltless of an intent to asperse or slander the character of him concerning whom the slander had originated. (The Court wished to know if Mr. Roper could adduce any late decisions which would bear him out in his assertion, as although such an opinion had once been held, it had been very much questioned of late. After some time Sir John Awdry stated that the contrary had been ruled by Mr. Justice Holroyd, a sound judge and a high authority upon all matters of law. Mr. Roper conceded the question and admitted that ass't was of no use to his argument he would proceed.) Mr. Macdonald might deny that he had any attention to libel Sir John Keane; but every man's intentions were to be construed from his acts and their consequences, and so far had this principle been carried, that in Blackstone's Commentaries it was declared that guilt or innocence was to be inferred in cases of murder, manslaughter and justifiable homicide from the consequences which the person's conduct had produced; as if for instance a labourer throwing down his burden upon the street without giving warning, and one being killed thereby, the labourer would be guilty of murder, and if the transaction occurred in a populous city such as London, even if warning were given, the individual killing any of the passengers would be held guilty of manslaughter. Starkie, in his work upon Evidence, had shown in like manner that if expressions were used tending to vilify and injure, from the recklessness of the libeller, or his disregard to the consequences, malice was to be inferred, and the expressions to be accordingly considered libellous. At 1 to 1 Mr. Roper ceased speaking, and called upon Major Keith, who being sworn stated, that he was a Major and Deputy-Adjutant-General of the army. Sir John Keane was Commander-in-Chief of the Bombay army in December last, and still continues to be so. Sir John Keane is a Knight of several military orders, but witness is not certain whether he is a Knight Grand Cross of the Bath or not. The General orders which are now produced were issued by Sir John Keane, and are printed and the manuscripts kept as records in the Adjutant-General's office. (In answer to the Court.) Witness knows of his own official knowledge that the proceedings of Jhora's court-martial were recorded in the Judge-Advocate's office from which he procured them this morning. The signatures attached to the court-martial are those of Sir John Keane and Major Miller, Atmaram Balcrustnaje. A purvoo in the Judge-Advocate's office was called but not sworn nor examined in consequence of Major Keith having further explained in answer to a question from the Court that he knew from his own knowledge as Deputy-Adjutant-General that there were official records kept in the Judge-Advocate's office of all the courts-martial which took place during a year, at the expiration of which time they were bound in a volume similar to that shown in Court and kept in the office.

Manock Ragonath, a purvoo in the office of Mr. Morgan, the solicitor, knows the paper now shown him to be the Bombay Gazette. The same paper has been in his possession before as he procured it from the Gazette office in Nesbitt Lane. He knows the Gazette office to be there situated. Nesbitt Lane is in Bombay behind the Government House. He procured the newspaper; paid two rupees for it and another.

Ragonath Hargee is a purvoo in Mr. Morgan's office, and proved the letter to have been written by Mr. Morgan to Mr. Macdonald at Sir John Keane's instance and copied by himself. The original he delivered to a purvoo at the Gazette office.

Moharow Govindjee, a clerk in Mr. Phillip's office, was called upon to prove Mr. Macdonald's hand writing in his letter to Mr. Morgan, but Mr. Macdonald having admitted that point, his evidence was not required. The General orders and other documents which had formed the subject of the indictment having been read, Mr. Macdonald thus addressed the Jury, as follows:—

* * * * * DEFENCE * * * * *

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR LORDSHIPS,—Gentlemen of the Jury.—In rising to address you I have much occasion to solicit your special indulgence by the adverse circumstances in which I am placed by the present anomalous condition of the Bombay Bar, as there is no barrister here whose services are available to me on the present occasion. This, gentlemen, is the apology I have to tender, if any were necessary, for appearing here in person. To make amends, however, I have a clear case to submit for your consideration, and that, too, with a clear conscience.

You have been already apprized by the Advocate-General with the nature of this prosecution, and with some of the circumstances connected therewith.

You have heard that the publication complained of by the prosecutor is a letter under the signature of MIRA's which appeared in the Bombay Gazette of the 9th April last. It is not pretended, gentlemen, that I am author of this communication; it is admitted, as the fact is, that it was, previous to its insertion in the Bombay Gazette, published in the Calcutta Englishman on the 24th day of March last, to the Editor of which paper you will observe the letter is addressed. Hence it was exhibited in the first instance to the notice of the public through the columns of that journal,—a journal which, as is very well known, is circulated all over India, and by means of which that letter would sooner or later have come before all classes of readers, whether the Gazette had republished it or not. From that paper it was transferred, as a republication merely, to the pages of the Gazette, and it is for this republication I am brought before you to-day.

In reference to the re-publication of this letter I solemnly pledge myself that I was influenced by no selfish feeling, viz. that of discharging a public duty; the act was prompted by no ill will or bad feeling to Sir John Keane or any other individual being; the subject was to lay before the Army of this Presidency a letter which appeared to me to contain some wise and sound comments on the administration of military law in general, and as applicable to certain courts-martial which had taken place in this presidency in particular. You have heard that letter read; you will have heard the lengthened comments it makes on courts-martial which had taken place in this presidency. To republish that letter I, as a public and independent journalist, considered it my duty to do, although those comments were not favorable to Sir John Keane's knowledge of military law as shown in the particular courts-martial referred to. I had no more intention of libeling Sir John Keane or any other person than any of you, gentlemen, now have: I was not then nor am I now conscious that any reflection was thereby cast on that officer to warrant this or any other prosecution, and I trust, gentlemen, that that will be your opinion also. You have heard read portions of my remarks made at the time of publishing Miles's letter, but it will be necessary for me, to enable you to gather my intention in publishing that letter, rightly, to read the whole of that article; it is as follows:

We take from the Englishman of the 24th ultimo, a letter signed MILES. It has reference to the administration of military law in the Bombay Army; and we also give place to some remarks on the subject of that letter contained in the Examiner of yesterday.

The principal points in MILES's letter seem to be—
The alleged illegality of the General Order issued by SIR JOHN KEANE in reference to the inspection of soldiers while in a state of drunkenness.

The illegality of trial by court-martial of Capt. Muller, of H. M.'s 6th Regiment, for disobeying the order so made by SIR JOHN KEANE.

The alleged illegality of the proceedings in the late court-martial held on Gunner Wilson.

On the subject of the order we expressed our views at the time the court-martial was sitting, nor have we seen reason to change the opinion we then gave. Sir John Keane's order is, while that by the Commander-in-Chief of India exists, worth no more than so much waste paper. Such is our opinion, and we are glad to find Miles (of whose identity we have no doubt) support that view. He is an authority to whose judgment every respect is due.

On the subject of Captain Muller's trial Miles expresses himself thus:—

"That however I may not be suspected of giving a prejudiced or untrue view of his (Sir John Keane's) view in this respect, it will be sufficient that I merely refer to the case of brevet Captain Muller of H. M.'s 6th Regiment; for it appeared on that trial that Sir John Keane had superseded an order issued by the Commander-in-Chief in India by a directly contrary one of his own; and that Captain Muller was brought before a general court-martial for having, in consequence of the tempestuousness of the night, highly infringed this last order, and after he had been reprimanded for this neglect of duty by both the officer commanding his regiment and the officer commanding the station. This circumstance the court most correctly considered, prevented it from awarding any further punishment."

To the extent of considering the order to try Capt. Muller by court-martial illegal, we agree with Miles, and we so expressed ourselves at the time. The first reprimand by competent authority which Capt. Muller received, was all the punishment he was bound by law to submit to; the conduct of the officer who gave the second reprimand was as illegal as was the ordering of a court-martial by Sir John Keane, and every step taken beyond the first reprimand was so much distance gone from the legal course. Miles says that the circumstance of Capt. M's. having received a reprimand was correctly considered by the court-martial as preventing it from awarding any further punishment. We don't agree with him in this opinion. He ought to have gone further or not so far. He ought to have told us that a man's receiving a reprimand is not only a bar to further punishment, but a bar to further trial for the same offence; he ought to have told us that the infliction of that punishment termed "reprimand," carries with it that the officer who reprimanded had the power to do so, and that he did so advisedly,—that is, after satisfying himself by such means as he deemed sufficient, that the offender had incurred that penalty. The court-martial therefore, instead of going on with the trial of a case which they knew had already been disposed of, ought to have recorded their judgment in the first instance that the prisoner, having already been tried and punished for the offence then brought before them, they did not deem themselves authorized by law to proceed with the trial.

An objection on that ground must have been taken by Captain Muller, and if so, we are utterly at a loss to divine on what grounds the court could have rejected it and proceeded in the trial, while, when it comes to them to pass sentence in terms of their own finding, they acknowledge the legality of the previous trial and punishment, by setting off that punishment against the offence which they had taken so much trouble to inquire into and prove. We again maintain, notwithstanding the assertion of Miles to the contrary, that as that court-martial rejected the preliminary defence on the part of Captain Muller, of the trial and punishment already had and received, they were not entitled to embrace that punishment in their award. They ought to have assigned such punishment as the law attaches to the offence, and the whole particulars and circumstances ought therefore to have been laid before the superior authority, who no doubt would have detected the error Sir John Keane fell into in ordering a court-martial under the circumstances, and the error that court-martial fell into in proceeding with a trial while they had evidence before them that the offender had already been tried and punished.

Again, Miles says, "Sir John Keane, in the remarks which he made on its decision, affirmed that as the court has found the offence alleged to be proved, it was his duty to have awarded punishment according. It is, however, unquestionably established by the long and unvarying custom of the army, and by numerous precedents of such decisions having been given by general courts-martial which received the King's confirmation, that a reprimand, by whatever authority given, is a punishment." So it is, and would be so in the civil law, but why did the court-martial overlook this? Sir John Keane overlooked it, and did wrong in doing so; but the court was not bound to be led by what Sir John Keane chooses to say or to do. And the court-martial ought also to have known that as a man cannot be punished twice for the same offence, he ought not to be tried twice, and that if they could not punish him on the second trial, there was no use in going on with the solemn farce of an investigation.

The following remark by Miles confirms the view we took of the matter at the time the trial was pending, and as we so then expressed ourselves. He says, "the officer reprimanding may certainly in so doing exceed the power vested in him, but the party reprimanded is undoubtedly entitled to have such reprimand considered as the only punishment which was deemed requisite for the offence committed."

With regard to Wilson's court-martial we have not now time to say much. But the objections made to that course of proceeding appear worthy the best attention of all officers who may have access to sit on courts-martial.

The blunder which Miles says Sir John Keane committed, is, to use Sir John Keane's own language, a "grave" one, (we hope the poor criminal has not found it so,) and one which he had no excuse for committing. To him we may apply the language used by himself in a General Order which was intended to convey to Major Robertson and to the Army at large His Excellency's ideas of the duty of all officers in high command. "The Commander-in-Chief," says the order, "desires it may be understood that when an officer placed in command of a Regiment exceeds his authority, the act cannot, under the most palliating circumstances, be overlooked without a public expression, &c." This order conveys to us the idea that any officer who "exceeds his authority" is guilty of an offence which cannot under any description of circumstances be overlooked. Very good. If this doctrine is held to apply to an officer in command of one regiment a fortiori it must apply to him who commands thirty regiments and upwards. The Commander-in-Chief controls the whole military force, and thus his order (we have quoted his own words) ought in all justice to be applied to himself as well as to those who may have the subordinate commands.

Now, to learn whether Sir John Keane has exceeded his authority in ordering the camp-follower to be hanged, without consulting the pleasure of the Government on the subject, we have just to look at the book wherein is found the Regulations on those matters. Those regulations, are the "authority" by which he, Sir John Keane, is bound to be governed. The clause which refers to the case we are now speaking of is No. 2. of Sec. 10, Regulation 22, of 1827, and is in the following terms:

"And further, if the offence have been committed within the Company's territories, no sentence of death or transportation passed by a court-martial by virtue of Section IX of this Regulation shall be carried into execution until confirmed by the General, or other officers commanding at the Presidency, with the concurrence of the Governor in Council; and if a sentence of death be commuted, according to the preceding clause of the present Section, to transportation, the confirmation by the Governor in Council shall be required for execution of the punishment adjudged in commutation."

By this it will be seen that the "concurrence of the Governor in Council," as well as the confirmation of the Commander-in-Chief, was necessary to the carrying into execution the sentence of death awarded by the court-martial in the case to which we refer; but Sir John Keane, of his own authority, and on his own responsibility, directs the execution to take place. His sentence runs as follows:

"I approve of the finding of the court on the prisoners Jhora and Poonjah,* and the sentence on Jhora is confirmed."

(Signed) JOHN KEANE,

Lieutenant-General, Commander-in-Chief.

The sentence of death passed on Jhora, camp-follower, will be carried into execution at Deesa, under instructions which will be communicated to the general officer commanding the Northern Division of the Army:

(Signed) STRATFORD POWELL, Lieut.-Col.

Adjutant-General of the Army."

There is nothing here of the "concurrence" of the Governor in Council to be seen; it is the mere fiat of the Commander-in-Chief. The above is the "confirmation" by him which the Regulation contemplates, but without the adjunct of "concurrence" which is essential to the validity of the sentence.

There may be doubts raised as to the precise meaning of the portion of the clause which declares the concurrence of the Governor in Council necessary,—that it may be doubted whether the purpose of the regulations would not be answered by the "Commander-in-Chief" writing after his name the words with the concurrence of the Governor in Council, or whether it is necessary that the Governor in Council should give evidence of their concurrence, by signing the sentence along with and at the same time as the Commander-in-Chief. In Bengal the latter practice we believe prevails, the authorities there considering that the best way of signifying their concurrence is by signing the confirmation of the sentence.

But in the present case it is not necessary for us to enter into any speculations on that point. The present confirmation has neither the words "with concurrence of the Governor in Council," nor the names attached, and thus it appears to us that if this camp-follower were hanged under the sentence and confirmation above referred to, his execution was illegal.

From this it will appear, (if our judgment be correct) that Sir John Keane has, to use his own words, "exceeded his authority," and if so, again applying the words used in the General Order about Major Robertson, to which we have already referred, we must say the "act ought not to be overlooked, as no anxiety for the maintenance of discipline or desire to uphold the reputation of the service, forms a justification for furthering such objects by any other means than those which law and the usages of the service warrant."

We do not know whether the camp follower has yet suffered his punishment, but we hope not.

We have been led to dwell on this subject longer than we intended, but our remarks may be of some service. We hold it a good rule to remind men in power of their errors; it may make them more careful.

One word on the complaint by Miles about the Bombay Press. All we can say is that he never applied to us to insert the letter, and therefore his implied censure so far as we are concerned, falls to the ground. What is more, we shall always be most happy to receive such communications from him, as we require the aid of such a man as Miles to enlighten us now and then on military subjects."

I have stated to you that I was not conscious at the time I republished Miles letter, nor am I now, that any reflection was thereby cast on the Commander-in-Chief that could warrant any prosecution, but the Commander-in-Chief, however, had thought otherwise, in as much as his Solicitor addressed a letter to the Proprietors of the Gazette complaining that matter grossly libellous had appeared in that day's paper.

We will pause here for a moment, if you please, gentlemen, and see what my conduct was in reference to that letter; you will please keep in view that malicious intention on my part is the essence—the ground work of this prosecution;—and I will shew you even at this stage of my defence how unfounded that charge is.

You no doubt know that the law respecting the Press in this country has lately been altered. Under the old law it was necessary for an Editor to lodge an affidavit swearing to the fact of his being Editor; thus the Editor became known as such, and incurred the responsibility which attached to the conduct of a public Journal. But under the new law an Editor legally incurs no such responsibility. His name is unknown to the law as Editor. It may also be unknown to the public,—the Advocate-General has alluded to that law,—the proprietors and Printer and publisher are the only parties the law looks to; and by the latter,—that is, the printer and publisher, (if I recollect rightly) an affidavit is required to be lodged with Government, that when occasion may demand the responsible person may be known, and called to account.

Well, gentlemen, it will naturally occur to you that if I had been a malicious and wilful slanderer as you have heard this day alleged against me, I should have availed myself of the cloak which the law had, in the way I have stated, thrown around me; I should have allowed Sir John Keane to make the best of the law as it stood, and left him to his remedy against the printer and publisher and proprietors, who were the only parties legally responsible; I say, if I had been a wilful and malicious slanderer, this is what I naturally would have done. But has it been shown to you that there were any circumstances which would have led me to act maliciously towards Sir John Keane?—I had no knowledge of him; no earthly acquaintance with him—where then was the motive on my part for wilfully libelling him? But, in reference to that letter, what did I do? What course did I adopt on receipt of that letter from Sir John Keane's Solicitor? I did that, gentlemen, which an honorable man, and a man conscious of the total absence of malicious feeling on his part ought to have done; I felt, gentlemen, as no doubt one and all of you would have felt under similar circumstances; I felt myself bound in all justice to my own intentions and to the character of Sir John Keane at once to disclaim the intention imputed to me, and to express my regret that the letter in question should have been viewed as a libel on His Excellency. I felt it due to an individual who considered himself injured by an act of mine, at once to step forward, and remove, as much as in my power lay, the grounds of his grievance.

Having committed no intentional wrong to Sir John Keane, I immediately replied in my own name to that communication, disclaiming any such intention, intimating that if he had been libelled, which I did not then, and do not now, admit, it had been done unwittingly. My letter went on to state, that if the Commander-in-Chief should still think an injustice had been done him by the insertion of Miles's letter I should most gladly take the first opportunity of acknowledging, through the columns of the same paper, that, in giving insertion to that letter, I meant not to attribute to him any improper motive in regard to its contents.

"I went on to state to Sir John Keane's Solicitor that he would do me the favor to submit this explanation to His Excellency, and as I was desirous of justice to all parties, to explain in the columns of the then morrow's papers, the motives which led to the publication of the letter and remarks, I should feel obliged by receiving an answer from him in sufficient time to enable me to accomplish that object, and I intimated that if I should not hear from him in time, I should publish the letter.

I will without further comment, submit the whole contents of that letter for your consideration.

"BOMBAY, 12th April, 1836."

Sir,—In acknowledging the receipt of your letter of yesterday on behalf of the Commander-in-Chief, on the subject of some matter which appeared in the last Gazette, and in which you say that such matter was "grossly libellous," I am at a loss to know to what portion of the paper you allude, unless it be the letter signed "Miles," which was taken from the Calcutta Englishman of the 24th ult. and the editorial remarks made on some portions of that in the Gazette, both having reference to the administration of military law in this Presidency.

I regret that either the letter or remarks should be considered by the Commander-in-Chief as libellous. They did not appear to me to be so when inserted, nor do they now.—If they had, they should not have appeared. They had reference to points of military law in which the Army of this Presidency was much interested, and for that reason, and that alone, did they appear in the Gazette. I therefore utterly disclaim all intention of libelling Sir John Keane by allowing either to appear, or of attributing any motive of action to him other than a wish to conduct the duties of his office faithfully according to the best of his ability.

The Editorial remarks clearly shew the spirit which guides them. A portion justifies the Commander-in-Chief's proceedings, while another portion condemns. The facts of the Commander-in-Chief's official conduct speak for themselves, and the letter and Editorial remarks appear to go not beyond the fair criticism which the public have a right to exercise over the acts of public men. Where those acts appeared not warranted by law or custom, or by the circumstances of the case, they are attributed to ignorance or error of judgment, not design.

Under these circumstances I am at a loss to discover in which way the Gazette has libelled his Excellency, and I again repeat that if it has done so, (which I by no means think) it has done it unwittingly. But if His Excellency should still consider that an injustice has been done him by the insertion of the letter and remarks, I shall most gladly take the first opportunity of acknowledging, through the columns of the same paper, that in giving insertion to either, I meant not to attribute to him any improper motive in regard to the cases referred to.

Such an assurance does, however, appear to me to be as unnecessary on the Commander-in-Chief's account as on that of the Gazette, as I am sure no one who may have read the letter or remarks would think that in the cases referred to, His Excellency was charged with anything else than a want of correct knowledge of military law, while the Gazette and Miles were doing their best to point out his (according to their view) errors, and correct them if possible; it was for the public then to judge between them.

Perhaps you will do me the favor to submit this explanation to His Excellency; and, as I am desirous, in justice to all parties, to explain in the columns of tomorrow's paper the motives which led to the publication of the letter and remarks, I shall feel obliged by receiving an answer from you in sufficient time to enable me to accomplish that object. Should I not hear from you in time I shall publish this letter. I am, &c."

No reply was vouchsafed to this communication; and with the same feelings which prompted that letter, and in accordance with the sentiments therein contained, I caused it to be inserted in the next issue of the paper on the 13th April, with the view to remove any misconception that could by possibility be entertained in reference to Miles's letter.

I solicit, gentlemen, your particular attention to this letter, and I asseverate before you and the public that the sentiments it expresses were as genuine and sincere as truth itself, and as such is the honest fact I claim credit from you and that public in judging of my motives, which were simply those of an honest journalist, influenced by a desire, without reference to parties in power or out of power, to chronicle the public transactions of the day, and thus contribute, as much as in my power lay, to the information and edification of the public.

These having been my intentions, I appeal to you, and through you to the public, whether I have, in the language of the information, unlawfully and maliciously devised or intended to traduce, vilify, and defame Sir John Keane, and expose him to great and public hatred, disgrace, discredit, and contempt, and innuendoes and caused it to be believed that Sir John Keane, wilfully, knowingly, and in contempt of the law intended, wished, and devised that the camp follower Thora should illegally be hanged?

Permit me to ask how and in what manner I have devised and intended to expose General Keane to public hatred, disgrace, discredit and contempt? How I have devised and intended to insinuate, and caused it to be believed that that officer wilfully, knowingly, and in contempt of the law intended or wished or devised that this camp follower should be illegally hanged? Has any individual witness been brought before you to establish the fact of entertaining any such belief? I ask you, gentlemen, how you are to arrive at any such monstrous conclusion?

The whole is mere romance; and nothing of the kind was ever dreamt of by any individual being; nor was ever such opinion expressed, except in the information which you have now heard read. Where and from what part of my conduct in this transaction can you collect any such malicious intention which is the very essence and vitality of this charge? On the contrary, gentlemen, the real fact of the case establish the total absence of malice, and hence, in the full consciousness of entire innocence of any such profligate motives as those ascribed to me by the information, I claim your acquittal on such an accusation.

Though Miles's letter is displeasing to Sir John Keane, it does not follow that it is therefore libellous! And I trust, gentlemen, you will disabuse your minds of any such impression;—the letter is not confined to the subject matter of which the prosecutor complains: it treats upon various topics connected with a subject which does, and I trust will always excite public interest, viz. the administration of military law in India;—what then are the contents of this letter? In the first place it refers to the merits of the then Judge-Advocate-General of the Bombay Army, Col. Kennedy's successor, stating, what was the fact, that that officer, previous to his appointment in March 1835, had never officiated on any occasion as Judge Advocate; it goes on to state that if the manner in which he appeared to perform the duties of that office should be liable to objection, the blame ought not to be ascribed to him but to Sir John Keane for selecting him, and passing over the senior deputy who had belonged to the department for upwards of 12 years, and who was in every respect well qualified to become the head of it.

The letter proceeds, "But it is not in this instance only that Sir John Keane, since assuming the command of the Bombay Army, has obviously shewn that in his opinion no peculiar qualifications are requisite for the situation of Judge-Advocate, and that its duties can be performed by any officer." There is clearly nothing objectionable in this, nor does Sir John Keane venture, in this prosecution, to complain of it, for the information, gentlemen, is confined to other matters. But what he does profess to quarrel with, immediately follows—"to law, in particular Sir John Keane has a decided aversion." Well, gentlemen, what if he had, who would even treat that as a subject of reproach, for is it not an antipathy cherished by nine-tenths of the community? Few men court the reputation of a love for litigation, and I am most willing to believe that Sir John Keane is among that number, though his attachment to the law is recorded by the present prosecution;—and in this particular I will grant that "Miles" was in error.

The next passage in the letter is as follows—"and I have understood that one of the defects ascribed to Colonel Kennedy on recommending his removal from office, was, perversion of legal learning and ingenuity," and these words, gentlemen, are in italics,—that is, as the letter proceeds, "I conclude that Colonel Kennedy was in the habit of quoting chapter and verse, and that His Excellency was by no means pleased at finding his wishes opposed by troublesome authorities."

In reference to the above and other passages of this letter, I am warranted in stating that this prosecution is instituted, not for what is contained within the four corners of the information, but in reference to what it does not relate to, viz. the strictures contained in the letter, of which Sir John Keane does not profess to complain.—I allude, gentlemen, to every part of Miles's letter that is not embraced by the information.

The real offence which Miles has committed against His Excellency virtually consists, not in what is alleged in the information, but in his having taken the liberty of canvassing Sir John Keane's public acts with an unparalleled freedom; and the latent spring which directs the present prosecution, and which those who conduct it ingeniously conceal altogether from your view, is, to punish Miles for this ungracious licence, and that too on my person, if, gentlemen, you will blindly and recklessly sanction such an injustice.

The letter then thus proceeds—"as to rules and regulations also, and the established usage of the King's and Company's service, these are restraints which Sir John Keane bitterly contemns, as his principle of acting is evidently, sic volo, sic jubeo, stat pro ratione voluntas."

Now, gentlemen, in respect to the above passage I submit in perfect confidence you will put a very different construction upon it to that which the Advocate-General has done. There is nothing in the above words that Sir John Keane has any good cause to quarrel with; the rules and regulations of these services might be so radically inefficient that an old experienced General Officer might honestly despise them, and not hesitate to express that such was his opinion. Though "Miles" may have spoken with a greater degree of freedom than is agreeable to Sir John Keane, let it be recollected that that officer is spoken of as a public character, and as such has no fair right to complain, as the acts of public men have ever been considered by the conventional rules of society, legitimate topics for public discussion. The public, since the revolution, have chimed and exercised that right, the possession of which is so essential to the best interests of the country, operating as it does as a salutary check upon the powers which are entrusted to our rulers, for the welfare and good of the people. As to the quotation "sic volo, sic jubeo, stat pro ratione voluntas," it bears no such version, in its application to Sir John Keane, as that which has been given; it is at best mere unmeaning metaphor,—pure hyperbole, and such I have no doubt you will consider and treat it. It has no, and cannot have any application to Sir John Keane,—and for this reason;—elevated as he is in military rank, he is still an Englishman, and as such amenable alike with the high and low, to the operation of the laws; and consequently every one knows that General Keane could not, if he wished, substitute his will for the law.

The letter then refers to the case of Captain Muller who had been some short time before tried by a court-martial in this presidency, and Miles says that it appeared on that trial that Sir John Keane had superseded an order issued by the Commander-in-Chief in India by a directly contrary one of his own. Here, gentlemen, is a direct charge of a direct matter of fact preferred against Sir John Keane, much more grave and serious than any thing charged in the information, yet you find that, direct as this charge is, and open to a refutation, it is not here complained of.

Miles then sets out in his letter a transcript from the General Orders, detailing the proceedings of a court-martial at considerable length, on a Gunner Wilson, which requires no particular comment.

Then comes the concluding paragraph of the letter, on which alone this information is based; Sir John Keane's grievances, as shewn by the information, are limited to the case of the camp-follower Jhora.

Now, gentlemen, what says the letter on this subject? It states as follows:—"On just looking again at the General Order I observe that in a General Order a notice camp-follower, tried and convicted by a native general court-martial of murder, is directed to be executed without the sentence of death having been concurred in by the Governor in Council, according to the provision contained in the regulation, or any which gives such Courts jurisdiction in criminal cases; but it is not yet known whether the Brigadier-General Commanding the Division will proceed to carry this sentence into effect. "Such an omission as this, it will be evident, cannot be ascribed to either the Judge-Advocate-General, or Adjutant-General, as these officers must have been perfectly aware that the concurrence of Government is indispensable for giving effect in such a case to a sentence of death. But, as Sir John Keane has introduced into the Native Army the novel punishment of imprisonment on his own authority, he may think himself at perfect liberty to direct a native camp-follower to be hanged without any reference to the Government on the subject."

In reference to the above extract you will observe, that Miles leaves nothing in doubt regarding the crime charged against the camp-follower; he states also, that he had been actually tried and convicted of murder,—consequently no misapprehension could be entertained by the public in reference to this man's guilt, and that he had, as a murderer, thereby merited the extreme punishment of death. The Government Regulation 22 of 1827, No. 2 of Sec. 10, is in the following words:—"And further, if the offence have been committed within the Company's territories, no sentence of death or transportation passed by a court-martial by virtue of Sec. 1X of this Regulation, shall be carried into execution until confirmed by the General or other officer commanding at the Presidency, with the concurrence of the Governor in Council; and, if a sentence of death be commuted, according to the preceding clause of the present section, to transportation, the confirmation by the Governor in Council shall be required for execution of the punishment adjudged in commutation."

This is the regulation to which Miles refers. It is made to apply to offences committed within the Company's Territories, and directs, in reference thereto, that no sentence of death or transportation passed by a court-martial shall be carried into execution until confirmed by the General or other officer commanding, at the Presidency with the concurrence of the Governor in Council.

This crime was or was not committed within the Company's Territories; if it was, then it is clear the concurrence of the Governor in Council in this sentence was required by the regulation; if the offence was committed beyond the Company's territories, then I ask by what law could this man be tried at all, otherwise than by the laws of that foreign country where the offence was committed? And if he was tried under the Company's regulations, how comes it that the concurrence of the Governor in Council was dispensed with? If the criminal was tried under a certain law,—that law being the Company's regulations, you, gentlemen, will naturally ask yourselves why should one part of that law be held applicable to him and another part not? But these are questions which you and I have the full right to canvass and discuss, and answer according to our individual views, without being liable to the charge of libel; and this is the amount of the offence in the present case.

Miles is perfectly correct in his statement that the man had been directed to be hanged without the sentence of death having been concurred in by the Governor in Council, for it appears that General Keane submitted the sentence for the concurrence of the Governor in Council,—that they actually concurred in it, but afterwards withdrew their concurrence under the impression that it was unnecessary.

What is to be collected from this? It appears that Sir John Keane thought, as Miles thought, that the sentence required the confirmation of the Governor in Council; and if he, who had every opportunity of knowledge and information on the point, thought so, is it to be surprised at that Miles, and I, or even any of you, gentlemen, should be of the same opinion, having no such sources of information at our disposal? And yet, should we happen to be of the same opinion, and publish that opinion to the world, we are to be charged with libelling the Commander-in-Chief!

It further appears that the Governor in Council also thought in the same way, though he afterwards changed his opinion, hence you will observe that the question is one of those fine, technical, indeterminable points of law,—a perfect verata questio, in regard to which Miles and Sir John Keane are very likely to be right, and the Governor in Council mistaken in the conclusion he has come to in deciding that the sentence did not require his concurrence.

What is, however, imputed to Sir John Keane by Miles, is nothing more, gentlemen, than a mere error of judgment,—that is all that is expressed or can be collected by implication from this letter. I have yet to learn, gentlemen, and no doubt so have you, that it is ipso facto criminal to impute to another, whether rightly or wrongly, error of judgment; fallibility is the acknowledged heritage of humanity, and it may be said of Sir John Keane without derogating from his character, that he is not less fallible than his fellow men.

Gentlemen, I entreat you will bear it in your recollection that Miles's letter, as far as it concerns Sir John Keane, is confined to a commentary on his public acts as Commander-in-Chief;—not one syllable is breathed at the expense of his private character; hence I have said and now repeat it, gentlemen, that I have not been—as I never intended to be, in any way instrumental in libelling Sir John Keane.

As the letter of Miles is now, however, the subject of a criminal prosecution, I beg, gentlemen, you will be good enough to contrast it with the productions which issue daily from the English Press. I appeal to your experience, if it be not a matter of fact and history, that the King's Ministers for the last century have been accused by contributors to the Press with specific acts of tyranny, oppression and corruption,—whether the Tory Press—the Standard, the Times, and many other papers do not daily circulate false and defamatory charges against their political opponents? but, gentlemen, you never hear of these distinguished characters filing information for these imaginary wrongs.

It can hardly be conceived that Sir John Keane would wish to stifle public opinion, if he could, or that he would attempt to claim an exemption from its tribunal, to which the most illustrious in the land pay deferential respect; yet, gentlemen, the present prosecution warrants a contrary inference; and this is that important question you are now virtually trying. Press in mind, gentlemen, that the question involved in the present issue is, in every sense, a public one,—a question in which the Press—and that too as the organ and representative of the public, is vitally concerned, and without which right it cannot be usefully or serviceably employed, in as much as it is as essential to its existence as the air we breathe is necessary to human life.

No inconvenience has resulted to the public or to private individuals either in England or in India by a free and unfettered discussion of the public acts of public characters, and I am sorry to observe that this is the first solitary instance on record of an Indian functionary exhibiting himself in a Court of Justice in the invidious character of a prosecutor of the Press, and I trust, gentlemen, it will be the last.

Some few years ago some short-sighted politicians, to whom the Government of this vast country was confided, were haunted with groundless fears that a Free Press,— the Press under which and through which, Britain has gained her present ascendancy and supremacy, was totally incompatible with the interests of India. These narrow principles you are well aware, gentlemen, have been exploded by the force of public opinion, under the joint auspices of the late Governor-General Lord William Bentinck, and the distinguished statesman Sir Charles Metcalfe. Now, gentlemen, what is the fact? Both these highly distinguished Governors have been assailed in turn for the part they have respectively taken in public matters, and that too to a much greater extent and with greater vehemence than in respect to anything Miles has advanced concerning Sir John Keane.

Neither of these statesmen, nor in fact any other public functionary, warred against the press for the freedom with which it has canvassed and criticised their public acts; they submitted in dignified silence to the reproach, whether it was or was not deserved; instead of suppressing the offending press, which they had then the transcendent—fearful power of doing—instead of filing criminal informations against unoffending Editors, each, to their eternal honor be it said, have publicly recorded their unqualified opinions that the then restrictions on the press of the two sister presidencies were impolitic and unnecessary, and ought therefore to be removed; and it has in consequence been released from its shackles.

The Law of Libel, which so seriously affects the liberty and property of the subject, is defined by no legislative provision whatever; there is not one word to be found in any of the numerous existing Acts of Parliament, declaratory of what is to be considered a libel; its elements consist of the crude, conflicting dicta of different Judges, many of whom are known to have been unfavorable to popular rights and free discussion; there is nothing in the whole range of English Jurisprudence so vague, so uncertain and indeterminate as this Libel Law; there is no written standard for the information and guidance of the public; you may take up your pen with the purest, the most inoffensive intention, and though it be guided throughout by these feelings, before it is laid down, you have unconsciously offended against this judge-made law.

The British Constitution, gentlemen, has confided to your charge a sacred trust; it has constituted you and not the Court, to Judge my cause this day. In the full consciousness of innocence I seek at your hands a verdict of acquittal;—nothing less than that can or will satisfy the demands of justice. You, gentlemen, are by the laws of your country—and his Lordship's sense of justice will attest the correctness of my proposition—invested with the sole and exclusive privilege of determining whether the publication in question is or is not a libel. It is for that express purpose that you are here convened,—and permit me to remind you that it is no libel until you pronounce it to be so.

The 32d Geo. III. Cap. 60, better known as Mr. Fox's Act, has secured to Jurys this sacred and important function; that right was theirs by law before, though Judges had attempted to wrest from them that prominent and invaluable privilege.

This Act recites that doubts had arisen, whether on the trial of an indictment or information for the making or publishing any libel, when an issue or issues are joined between the King and the defendant or defendants on the plea of not guilty pleaded, it be competent to the Jury impanelled to try the same, to give their verdict on the whole matter in issue; it is then declared (showing, Gentlemen, that the law before the making of this Act was consonant to and in agreement with the Act itself) it is then declared and enacted that on every such trial, the Jury sworn to try the issue may give a general verdict of guilty or not guilty upon the whole matter put in issue upon such indictment or information, and shall not be required or directed by the Court before whom such indictment or information shall be tried to find the defendant or defendants guilty, merely on the proof of the publication by such defendant or defendants of the paper charged to be a libel; and of the sense ascribed to the same in such indictment or information."

By the second section of this Act it is provided "that on every such trial, the Court or Judge before whom such indictment or information shall be tried shall, according to their or his discretion, give their or his opinion and direction to the Jury on the matter at issue between the King and the defendant or defendants in like manner as in the other criminal cases"—and this, gentlemen, I submit, is all that it is competent to his Lordship to do; you are not, however, bound by any such opinion;—so says De Lolme on the English constitution, page 169. The principle he lays down is acknowledged law, and is as follows;—"As the main object of the Institution of the trial by jury is to guard accused persons against all decisions whatever, from men invested with any permanent official authority, it is not only a settled principle that the opinion which the Judge delivers has no weight but such as the Jury choose to give it, but the verdict must, besides, comprehend the whole matter in trial, and decides as well upon the facts as upon the point of law that may arise out of it; in other words they must pronounce both on the commission of a certain fact, and on the reason which makes such a fact to be contrary to law."

It becomes the more necessary for me to impress upon you, gentlemen, that you are my judges, in as much as the Court, by granting this information, have already recorded an opinion adverse to my cause; that opinion, however, cannot—and ought not,—and will not—I am assured, in any respect influence your verdict, for, if it were to do so, I assert that the circumstance of your being called here this day, from your several avocations, would be a work of mere supererogation.

Before I sit down I beg to notice that this information is the first that has graced the records of this Court since its establishment in 1824 and for how many years before that I cannot take upon myself to say.

The proceeding by information has little to recommend itself to the respect of Englishmen, since it is the most arbitrary specimen of jurisprudence known to our laws. Its lineage is to be traced through the precincts of that Court of ignominious memory—the Court of Star Chamber! yes, gentlemen, information was the favored process of that unconstitutional Court.

* This information differs very essentially, as you are aware, from a proceeding by indictment; if the prosecutor had preferred his bill, you and I would doubtless have been spared the present trial, as the Grand Jury might and no doubt would have ignored any such bill.

I am warranted in surmising that the prosecutor has taken up his present position, simply on the recommendation of its advantages, by dispensing with the interference of the Grand Jury in the matter; and in so far as their services are dispensed with on this occasion, you will perceive that it is a departure from the principles of the Common Law of England established in respect to the proceeding by indictment.

Be it ever remembered, gentlemen, that the publication complained of refers, so far as it is made the subject of complaint, wholly and exclusively to the public acts of Sir John Keane as Commander-in-Chief; he is not followed into private life, in respect to which not one syllable is whispered, hence I contend he has no fair ground of complaint; the gravamen of the offence touching the case of the camp-follower consists in imputing to Sir John Keane nothing more than a mere error of judgment, and that too on a very equivocal, dubious, and unsettled point, so much so, indeed, that, I say again, it is exceedingly questionable whether Miles is not correct in his view of the matter, and the Governor in Council in error in having withdrawn its concurrence from the sentence.

Depend on it, gentlemen, that no inconvenience,—much less wrong, can by any possibility result from a free and unrestrained discussion of the conduct of public characters; believe me it is the inherent right of the British public—and the Press as the organ and instrument of that public—for the truth of which I appeal with pride and satisfaction to our own country, where that right is exerted with a far greater freedom and latitude than it has ever been exercised in India.

Though a portion of you are expatriated, gentlemen, for the present, I am assured you maintain your British feelings in unimpaired integrity, and that you will exhibit it by your verdict this day;—that verdict will not be confined to the four walls of this court; it will be speedily wafted to every part of British India, and to the far off home of your fathers,—the land of freedom and of free discussion. I hope and trust, gentlemen, you will have it in your power, in after years, to reflect with complacency and satisfaction on that verdict: that you will be enabled to tell your children, that you had been called on, during your sojourning in this distant clime, to maintain the freedom and integrity of the Press;—that you had responded to that call, and in so doing had faithfully executed this sacred trust, by preserving inviolate that inalienable right of free discussion in respect to the public acts and conduct of our rulers,—the paid servants of the public; and in the execution of a duty so congenial to the views, the wishes and inclinations of free citizens, you had thereby rescued an offending Editor from the rapacious grasp of relentless power.

Sir JOHN AWDRY, in summing up thought it necessary to inform the Jury that with respect to the well known remark that their verdict would not be confined to the four walls of this Court, but would be known elsewhere, they were bound to decide according to their consciences, without reference to any such feelings or the opinions that might be entertained by others. A remark had also been made that this mode of proceeding by information had been adopted on account of the advantages which it possessed, but as the information had been granted solely upon the affidavits which the prosecutor had made denying the truth of all imputations, no unfair advantage had been taken, and had it been brought before the Grand Jury they would have received instructions from the Court upon points of law that would have guided them in finding or throwing out the bill. The Jury had been told that they were sole judges in this case, and so they were in a great measure, but it would be ridiculous to suppose that they were to exercise an arbitrary power in deciding without any consideration for the laws, as in such a case, laws would be useless. It had been very much doubted whether juries possessed the power in cases of libel of judging both of the law and the fact; the law with respect to written instruments held that the judge should decide upon the point of the instrument being a libel or not, and leave the fact to the Jury, and it was the application of this rule to several cases by Lord Mansfield which led to the framing of the act which as you have been correctly informed gave to a Jury the power of deciding both upon the law and the fact. The act of publication is a moral act and is open to the same construction as may be exercised in cases of theft, killing, murder, manslaughter and justifiable homicide, which are moral acts, not matter of law, and it is left to the jury to decide whether what is alleged to be a libel is defamatory, paying the same attention to the Judge's opinion as they would do in a case where it was necessary to distinguish between murder and manslaughter. To constitute a libel malicious intention (which is here denied) is necessary, but a man must be taken to mean what he says. To take a case free from politics—in a civil action a commercial man whose reputation had been injured by a report spread by another of his insolvency, proved that he had done so of malice, which was decided by Mr. Justice Bailey of the King's Bench to be an intentional doing of wrong. In a common sense malice means ill-will, but in law it is an intentional doing of a wrongful act without a reasonable excuse, equally the same in murder or libel, whether you intended to produce an injury or not, provided that such might have been expected from the result. It is the first principle of law that a man intends the obvious meaning of his act, as has been frequently laid down, I doubt not in the hearing of many of you, in cases of deciding the difference between murder and manslaughter.

After taking the whole matter of the paper, the passages placed in evidence with the context, you find the words of the information proved it will be your duty to find the defendant guilty. If viewing it as ordinary men you are of a contrary opinion, you will of course acquit him. It has been advanced in the defence that the Press has been freed in India, and that in England greater license is indulged in, but what is mischievous in one case, is mischievous in another, and even there we are aware that prosecutions very frequently take place.

The publication has not been made unwittingly as may be gathered from the comments upon Miles's letter, particularly that part which refers to his complaints about the Bombay Press.

Sir JOHN AWDRY here read the remarks in the Gazette of the 9th April, in which it is stated that Miles had never applied to the Gazette to publish the letter which afterwards appeared in the Englishman. The fact of its having been published elsewhere, and the probability that the reason for that letter being refused publication at Bombay arose from an apprehension of its being libellous, coupled with the expression of readiness to hear from the same writer at any time, take away any excuse for its having been published unwittingly. The case, however, gentlemen, is left entirely in your hands.

The Jury retired at 10 minutes to 3, and returned in a few moments with a verdict of NOT GUILTY, which judging from the buzz of gratification which ran through the Court, gave satisfaction to most present.—Bombay Gazette.

INSOLVENT COURT.

SATURDAY, JULY 16.

Mr. Justice Malkin, intimated that as the Supreme Court had set aside the order made by him on the petition of the late Mr. Macintyre in the matter of Grutenden and Co., he would now make the order for the remuneration of the new assignee, having no doubt of the power of the court to do so, without referring the subject to the consideration of the creditors. He was aware that Mr. Holroyd had declined to accept the terms recommended in the report by Mr. Macnaghten, namely, one per cent. on the first dividend, and two and a half per cent. on all subsequent dividends, and he would now make the order somewhat different, namely, that the present assignee should be allowed two and a half per cent. upon all the dividends without distinction, which, as the first dividend was but small, would not make any important difference.

Mr. Turton, on behalf of Mr. Holroyd, declared his willingness to accept what the court now offered.

There were some applications made of a very important description, indeed, this day. The first was one on behalf of Josias Dupre Alexander, for an order that the assignees of Alexander and Co. pay to him a dividend, at the rate now declared, on the sum of fifteen lakhs and thirty-six thousand four hundred and ninety-six rupees, being the amount of his claims on the schedule of the insolvents. The second was a similar application on behalf of Mr. James Alexander for the sum of nine lakhs eighty-one thousand and eight hundred rupees. The third, on behalf of Mr. Henry Alexander for rupees five lakhs and sixty-eight thousand eight hundred. And the last on behalf of Mr. Fullarton for seven lakhs and twenty-one thousand eight hundred and sixty four rupees. These are all orders nisi, and of course no discussion took place.

The applications were accompanied by an affidavit, sworn by Mr. John Abbott, which set forth that the deponent was employed by the late firm of Alexander and Co., from 1812 up to the period of their insolvency, and thereby became well acquainted with their affairs; and that at the periods when Mr. J. Dupre Alexander, Mr. H. Alexander, Mr. J. Alexander and Mr. Fullarton severally retired from the firm, he (the deponent) believed it to be in a solvent and prosperous condition, and that he has seen no reason from any subsequent events to induce him to alter that opinion. There was also an affidavit put in, sworn by Mr. Holroyd, setting forth his belief from an inspection of the books that the firm was in a solvent state when the partners retired; and Mr. Turton was instructed to make a similar declaration on the part of Mr. Hurry.

We give the substance of Mr. Fullarton's affidavit:—Sets forth that he is the constituted attorney of the three other applicants, who were also severally during different periods of time, partners in the firm of Alexander & Co.;—that Mr. James Alexander departed from this country for England in 1810, without having relinquished his interest in the firm or come to any final settlement with his partners, but that his retirement was subsequently arranged by a correspondence which took place between him and the partners in India in 1814-15, and that the same took effect from 30th April 1813, when he, Mr. Fullarton, became a partner, agreeing to release Mr. James Alexander from any further risk or responsibility on account of the debts and concerns then outstanding, on consideration of a certain payment of money to be debited to his account, and of his agreeing to leave with them a capital of six lakhs for a term of years at a moderate interest and giving up all claim to the profits after April 30th, 1813. Further, that Mr. J. Dupre Alexander also retired by agreement made on the 30th June, 1815, fixing retrospectively the date of his retirement the 30th April 1813. That Mr. H. Alexander retired in like manner by an agreement signed the 13th of October 1813, fixing the date the 30th April, 1816. That the deponent, Mr. Fullarton, retired by an agreement executed on the 15th of October 1819, fixing the date the 30th of April in the same year. That the principle of adjustments in each of the three cases last mentioned was the same, the retiring partner in each case accepting a specific sum in compromise of his claim to a share of the profits of the subsisting co-partnership, for three years, and also to the share, by an article in the deed of partnership, he would have been entitled to claim in the partnership next ensuing; the retiring partner further binding himself to leave at interest with his successor, a certain amount of capital, not less than eight lakhs of rupees, for a stipulated term of years; and for their indemnity against loss by bad debts, making over to them a certain percentage, in the shape of what was called the suspense fund, on all debts then outstanding, of which the recovery was at the time considered doubtful or precarious; and the continuing partners upon these conditions releasing the partners retiring from all further risk and responsibility in the debts and responsibility in the concerns of the establishment. In the particular case of the deponent a clause of reservation was introduced into the agreement under which he retired from the firm, having reference to a law suit in which Alexander and Co. were then engaged about the concerns of the Howrah docks, and whereby the deponent submitted in the event of a decree being given against the firm, to forfeit two lakhs and a half. But the decree was given eventually in Alexander and Co.'s favour, and the compromise consequently remained undisturbed. That the successive partnerships of Alexander and Co. were for terms of three years, and that at the expiration of each triennial period, it was the practice of the firm to investigate the state of their balance sheet, to value such debts as had become doubtful or precarious since the triennial period last preceding, and to make such additions to the suspense fund as in the judgment of the firm might be sufficient to cover the risk of such doubtful or precarious balances before dividing off the profits of the co-partnership to the credit of the individual partners. That at different periods subsequent to the execution of the several agreements above mentioned, and to the retirement from the firm of the several partners, notices by advertisement and circulars were given to the creditors, and circular letters addressed to creditors, and correspondents. Further, on the execution of the agreement the accounts of the parties were adjusted in conformity with the conditions of the several agreements, and from that time down to the date of the firm's insolvency the four applicants have continued to keep large though fluctuating balances at the credit of their respective accounts; and that there was due and owing on such accounts the amount for which a dividend is now applied for. Further that these balances were not balances held by the firm at interest under the covenants entered into at the respective periods of these retirements from the firm, the terms for which the several loans were respectively granted having expired, many years ago. That Mr. J. Dupre Alexander and Mr. J. Alexander have long ago, as the deponent believes, received payment in full, not only of these loans but of all the capital which they severally left at interest in the house at the period of their respective retirements, and that the balances they now claim to be due to them are composed exclusively of sums which they have remitted from time to time to this country since their return to England, or which the firm has realized by their order, or on their account from the sale of government securities, recovery of outstanding debts, or the produce of other property. That Mr. J. Dupre Alexander appears to have remitted to the credit of his account since his retirement, Sa. Rs. 9,94,650, in bills and bullion, besides a sum of Sa. Rs. 4,50,131 by transfer, and funds to a considerable amount realized for him in India. That the total amount of items which have been added to the account of Mr. J. Alexander by realizations, exceeds nine lakhs, exclusive of interest. That the validity of the agreements entered into by the respective parties, has in no instance, to deponent's knowledge, been impeached, by the continuing partners, nor the full claims of the retired partners to the balances standing at their credit in any instance called in question. That from the periods of Mr. J. Alexander's and Mr. J. Dupre Alexander's retirement, down to the period of the retirement of the deponent, he believed the concerns of the firm to be in a prosperous and solvent condition, and still believes them to have been so. And his confidence in the prosperity and stability of the firm was derived from the facts that the ascertained net profits of the concern from 1813 to 1819, after writing off all bad debts, and setting apart what was believed to be an adequate percentage by way of guarantee for such as were considered doubtful, amounted to upwards of 40 lakhs of rupees; that the commission and agency business was daily increasing; that its credit was at the highest pitch, and that of the property invested in its concerns, upwards of 60 lakhs, being more than three-tenths of the whole, was the property either of the existing members of the firm or partners who had retired within the preceding five years. Besides which, several of the subsisting partners possessed funds in England and elsewhere to a considerable amount independent of their balances with the house. Further that the total liabilities of the firm, including debts due to retired partners, on the 30th April, 1819, amounted to Sa. Rs. 1,84,13,940, and the assets on the books at the same time were Sa. Rs. 1,96,56,998, of which sum Sa. Rs. 24,60,065, consisted of Government securities, merchandise, and the remaining Sa. Rs. 1,70,3,325 consists of debts variously secured; that of these debts upwards of 77 lakhs comprized under 24 heads of account, were adjudged by the partners to be doubtful or precarious, and that a fund of Sa. Rs. 21,36,950 was made over by the old to the new concern as an indemnity against any losses which they might be liable to sustain from assuming the said debts, and which the deponent believes to have been a sufficient sum, and to have produced an adequate indemnity. That at the time deponent retired, the firm consisted of Arthur Jacob Macan (since deceased), James Young, and Thomas Bracken, and all, with the exception of the last mentioned, were men possessed of some property and holding an independent station in society when they first joined the establishment. That Mr. James Young in particular had only eight months before relinquished, for his place in the house, one of the highest and most important appointments in the Company's service, and brought with him a capital estimated at about one and a half lakhs of rupees; and that the deficiency of capital in the case of Mr. Bracken, was shortly afterwards supplied by a loan to him of two lakhs for a term of years from his brother-in-law, Mr. J. Dupre Alexander, through whose influence he had been introduced into the firm. Further that the four applicants have at all times evinced by their conduct, the unlimited confidence in the stability and resources of the establishment which they quitted, not only by the large amount of capital which they bound themselves to leave at interest, by the whole course of their pecuniary dealings, which the firm from 1813 to 1830;—that exclusive of the large voluntary additions which Mr. J. Alexander, and Mr. J. Dupre Alexander were continually making to the funds at the credit of their respective accounts, and which they still continued to make down to a recent period, Mr. J. Dupre Alexander rejected remittances which were made to him from this country between 1818 and 1829, to the amount of Sa. Rs. 3,38,833; that Mr. H. Alexander, in like manner, rejected Sa. Rs. 1,13,345 by bills transmitted in 1822. That deponent by omitting to avail himself of an annual credit which he held on the firm's London correspondent, has likewise voluntarily added a sum of £20,500, besides interest, to the amount of his claim against the firm. That in his private correspondence with the retired partners in England, (all of which he has offered to submit to the assignees and is ready to produce before the court) repeated proofs will be found of the sincerity of deponent's confidence in the fairness of the arrangements under which the partners had retired, and in the continued prosperity of the general concern. That it can be shown that in 1822, after the deponent's return to England, he made a tender to his late colleagues of all his available funds in that country, in case a certain apprehended financial measure on the part of Government should press inconveniently on their resources. That down to a recent period Mr. J. Alexander and Mr. J. Dupre Alexander continued to look to the firm as a provision for some of their nearest family connexions; that subsequent to the introduction of Mr. T. Bracken, their nephew, Mr. N. Alexander, was admitted to a place in the firm, upon their joint application, and became a sharing partner in 1822, and that at a late period, another still nearer connexion became a candidate also for admission, and would have been admitted in 1832, but for the disasters which were then threatening. That in 1817 Mr. J. Dupre Alexander himself expressed a desire to return. That in 1818, Mr. J. Abbott, who had been the firm's book-keeper from 1812, was a candidate for the vacancy occasioned by Mr. H. Alexander's retirement, and again in 1819 for that produced by the death of Mr. Macan. And lastly, that the decease of Mr. Macan, having taken place in the first year of the partnership of 1819 and 1822, his interest ceased by agreement at the expiration of the first year, and that his estate was credited with the net sum of Sa. Rs. 1,87,015, on account of his share of the net profits of that year; and that his executor, Mr. James Young, eventually accounted to the legatees for assets realized, principally the house account, to the total amount of six rupees 7,36,655.—Englishman.

IN THE MATTER OF JOHN PALMER, &c.

Mr. C. B. Palmer's application for final discharge.

MR. JUSTICE MALKIN.—It may seem hardly necessary in granting a motion, which after the proceedings adopted in the case of Messrs. W. and G. Prinsep has become a motion of course, to enter into any discussion of my reason for the course adopted. But the question involved in these cases is so material for the decision of others, which may arise hereafter, not probably under exactly similar circumstances, but involving the same doubt what items of misconduct exclude from the benefit of the 63d Section of the Insolvent Act, and the first Section of the 4 and 5, W. IV. c. 97, and there is therefore so much probability that the opinion I entertain may come under review, that I think it expedient to explain fully and accurately the extent to which it goes, and the grounds on which it is founded. Having objected to act upon it in the first instance, I then merely intimated its general inclination, without any full declaration of its reasons: and in the subsequent proceedings which have obliged me to act upon it, instead of putting the question in a train for decision in the Court above, the matters under discussion, have related almost entirely to the course of proceeding, and have not given me the opportunity, unless I had postponed the discharge of the Messrs. Prinsep for the purpose of explaining myself on the main question.

In doing so, I must treat the present applicant as disclosing on his schedule a transaction, I believe in the present instance only a single one, which calls for explanation, which is prima facie a breach of trust towards an individual creditor, and which therefore, if unexplained might, at a proper period, have brought him within the provisions of the 58th Section of the Insolvent Act. In the course of proceeding adopted, this transaction has received no explanation; and consequently, as under the sections which give the final discharge, the Court is to be satisfied affirmatively that the Insolvent has acted fairly and honestly, he will not be entitled to this discharge without further explanation, unless it is held that misconduct of this nature, even if it exists, is not an answer to his application. The Court ought, I think, to be satisfied affirmatively that the conduct of the Insolvents has been fair and honest, from the mere fact of there being no opposition, and nothing either fraudulent or suspicious within its own knowledge: it need not enter into an examination of unquestioned facts for the chance of detecting something erroneous; but it has no right to shut its eyes to the existence of circumstances calling for enquiry, and if these exist, is must institute the enquiry, if its result is material. The great difference between the Penal Sections (the 57th and 58th) and the Sections giving the final discharge, is this that for the purposes of each, wherever a doubtful transaction appears, explanation is required, but that on the result of that explanation the Court, in postponing the common discharge, must have ascertained the guilt; in granting the final discharge it must be satisfied of the innocence of the party.

It seems, however, to me, that misconduct which could bring an Insolvent within the scope of the 58th Section, does not furnish any answer to his application for final discharge. The 57th and 58th Sections constitute two clauses of misconduct, each of which subjects the Insolvents to certain, but different, penal consequences. The frauds specified in the 57th Section are all injurious to the general body of the creditors; and the remedy given is by postponing the discharge of the Insolvent from any of his debts, and by leaving him liable to arrest at the suit of any of his creditors. The frauds and wrongs specified in the 58th Section are all injurious to individual creditors only: and they are treated as furnishing no objection to his immediate discharge as to the generality of his debts, but his discharge is postponed and he is left liable to arrest at the suit of the particular creditor whom he has wronged or defrauded.

The provisions for final discharge make no such distinction: if the Court is satisfied, "that the Insolvent has acted fairly and honestly towards his or her creditors," he is discharged finally from all debts established in the Court: if the Court is not so satisfied, he is discharged from none: so that the question really is whether misconduct in a particular instance is to prevent him from obtaining this relief in all others. The hardship of such a construction cannot more strongly appear than in the particular case now before the Court, in which the effect would be, if Mr. C. B. Palmer could not satisfactorily explain a single transaction of no very large amount, he would be left liable, except as far as his person is concerned, to the claims of some thousand creditors, and to an amount exceeding, I believe, £3,000,000 sterling. It is not, however, merely on questions of hardship that this decision must proceed. But I cannot think that such a construction would give effect to the intention of the statute itself. It is clear that all the cases provided for in the 58th Section will not prevent the Insolvent from obtaining his final discharge: that his being indebted for damages for adultery or libel, or malicious trespass would not impeach the "fairness and honesty" of his conduct, and would therefore furnish no objection to his final discharge. It is not, I think, very likely that different kinds of misconduct, which are classed together for the purpose of modifying his original discharge, should be intended to have an entirely different operation with respect to the final discharge. Again, all these cases, as well of debts contracted by fraud as by other misconduct, are declared by the 58th Section to furnish no objection to the party obtaining the full benefit of the Statute as against all creditors, except the individual injured: and it is not, I think, likely that it was meant to operate to their benefit with respect to the final discharge, when it is clear that they were considered to have no interest in the question with respect to the previous one. It seems to me to be at all events doing less violence to the intentions of the Statute to say that even the party aggrieved should lose his remedy by the final discharge, than to say—that the creditors at large, who are declared to be unconcerned in the transaction, should retain their's by the Court's refusing the final discharge, on the ground of injury to a particular individual. Indeed, I do not know that by the construction I adopt, any violence is done to the intention of the Statute; for it might well be considered that the postponement of the original discharge was punishment or remedy sufficient, and that there was no reason for continuing the protection of the particular creditor to an indefinite period. At all events there is no middle course, and I think the balance of difficulty is decidedly less on the construction I put on the Statute than on the other.

It seems to me, therefore, that the words "acting fairly and honestly towards his or her creditors," must be understood of the conduct of the Insolvent towards the general body of the creditors, offence against whom are made the matter of distinct provisions in the 57th Section. The word creditors, it will be observed, is in the plural number: the expression therefore corresponds with that used in the 57th Section: not with those used in the 58th, which speaks of "any of the debts" and "any of the creditors." In this manner the general refusal of the final discharge will correspond with the general postponement of the original discharge: not always depending on the fact, whether such discharge has been postponed or not, but regulated by similar considerations, and grounded on similar misconduct: misconduct, that is to say, affecting the general interests of the creditors, and in most if not in all instances connected with the expectation of insolvency.

The strongest argument that I know against this construction is the circumstance that a case might possibly arise in which, after the Court had postponed the discharge of the Insolvent against a particular creditor on the ground of fraud, he might place himself, within the period of postponement, in a condition to apply for his final discharge. There would probably, however, be no great difficulty in dealing with such a case, if it arose. But at all events the possible occurrence of a particular inconsistency arising out of the provisions of not a very carefully digested Statute, is hardly enough to control its construction: and the difficulty, such as it is, does at all events exist in cases the decision of which would not be affected by it, because the same thing might happen in the case of a discharge postponed on account of libel or trespass, where, as I have already observed, no question of fairness or honesty could be raised.

I have heard it also suggested in a quarter where any intimation of opinion is entitled to the highest consideration, that assuming it to be correct, that a fraud on a particular creditor does not prevent the final discharge on the ground of misconduct towards the individual: yet that a course of dealing irregularly with trust money might be considered as an injury to the general body of the creditors, as enabling parties to carry on business improperly with fictitious funds, and thus to increase the general evil and calamity of their failure. That it might occasionally be misconduct towards the general body of the creditors, as well as towards the individual whose funds are misapplied, I do not dispute, but it does not seem to me to be, in common understanding, an acting unfairly and dishonestly towards them. "The unfairness and dishonesty" is towards the parties defrauded, against whom only, even in cases of intentional fraud, that fraud is directed. But even allowing that the words might fairly be applied in general construction to the case of the body of the creditors also, they cannot, I think, be so treated in this Statute, in which minute provisions are made for the repressing fraud both towards the general body and the particular creditor; but the sort of injury in question is not provided for in the enumeration of frauds on the general body. It is clear, I think, that the framers of this Statute treated such misconduct as affecting the particular creditor only, to whom it directly applies, and that they did not intend to make any provisions for the indirect and somewhat speculative injury suggested.

This question, however, though of some importance with respect to the general construction of the Statute

SATURDAY, JULY 30.

(and I have therefore mentioned it) does not really apply to the particular case now before the Court: for it is impossible to say that the general body of the creditors would be affected; or that the carrying on of the concerns of this enormous Estate could have materially depended on the false or fictitious capital introduced into it by the diversion of the single sum which Mr. C. B. Palmer may perhaps have misapplied.

There is therefore no objection to his discharge.—Calcutta Courier.

Note.—The Trust alluded to in Mr. C. B. Palmer's Schedule is a "Trust for Mrs. J. M. Deterinne," shewing a balance of Rs. 16,477.10—at credit, Mr. C. B. Palmer having been joined in the Trust with two of his partners. This arose out of a sum of Rs. 13,125-4—placed in trust on Mrs. Deverinne's marriage in 1827, with the understanding and consent of all parties that it should be held as a cash balance accumulating with interest. There was no breach of trust in any sense of the word. If the Schedules of the two Mr. Prinsep had been examined, it would also have been found that every cash balance under the head of Trusts was of the same nature without a single exception.—Ed. Cal. Cour.

IN THE MATTER OF JAMES YOUNG AND OTHERS.

The order nisi of the 16th July was made absolute, no cause shewn, that the assignees be at liberty to pay Messrs. James Alexander, Josias Dupre Alexander, Henry Alexander, and John Fullarton respectively, the dividend now due, and payable at rate declared, and dividends which may hereafter become due and payable on the claim appearing admitted in the schedule of the insolvents; viz., James Alexander, dividend on Rs. 9,91,830; J. Dupre Alexander, Rs. 16,14,164; Henry Alexander Rs. 5,68,879; John Fullarton Rs. 7,21,864; total Rs. 38,96,738.

IN THE MATTER OF JAMES CULLEN AND OTHERS.

Mr. Turton moved the rule absolute, that the charges of Mr. D. Macintyre, late assignee, be defrayed out of the assets of the estate. The rule was opposed by Mr. Thompson, on behalf of Mr. Dickens, and it was ordered that the executors be allowed credit in the estate of the insolvents, and by the present assignee, for the fair and reasonable charges and expenses incurred by the late assignee, in the management of the estate during his assigneeship, with liberty to the opposing creditor to attend before the assignee and make such objections as he may think proper.—Englishman.

MISCELLANEOUS NEWS.

CALCUTTA.

SER CHAS. METCALFE.—A private letter from Calpee mentions, that the Sumna, with the Bhagaruttee in tow, having on board the Lieutenant-Governor and suite, passed that station on the 11th July, having left Allahabad on the morning of the 8th and being only three days and a half on the passage.

METCALFE LIBRARY.—A Meeting of the Metcalfe Library Committee took place on the 2d July, for the purpose of considering what should be done with the money subscribed for the erection of the library.

STAFF SALARY TO REGIMENTAL MEDICAL STAFF.—An address to the Government is in circulation for signatures, shewing the hardship of Regimental Medical Staff losing the whole staff salary during leave, while other Regimental Staff and all General Staff continue to receive a moiety.

THE PILOT SERVICE.—It is stated that the Court of Directors have ordered that, in future, Pilots shall be strictly confined to their "proper sphere of occupation," or that if detached to any separate employment, they shall be required to resign all benefits derivable from the Pilot Service, and their places be filled up by the promotion of juniors. The Court expresses great regret that the Service should have been so much numerically reduced, and state their intention of sending out a sufficient number of volunteers to make the total establishment 140; being 10 in excess of the number recommended by the Civil Finance Committee in 1829.

NEW PILOT VESSELS.—The three new pilot vessels building at Bombay for this Presidency, are in a very forward state, and may be looked for in all October. It has been suggested to call them the Safety, Supply and Resource.

SHIPWRECK.—The Bark Ploisitude, on her passage from Mauritius to Calcutta, was totally wrecked on the Northern Atoll of the Maldiv Islands on the evening of the 20th May. The passengers, crew, and treasure, amounting to 80,000 sicca rupees, were saved.

The cargo included thirty hogsheads of Otaheite sugar-cane, besides packages of cassada, maize, specimens of soils, &c. shipped by Mr. Henley, one of the unfortunate passengers, for the Agricultural Society of Calcutta, all of which have been lost. It appears that the crew were in a very mutinous state, and but for the exertions and tact of the passengers would have got rid of the commander and shared the treasure with the natives of the Maldives.

SHIP LAUNCH.—A new vessel just finished, of 479 tons, built by Messrs. Kyd and Co., has been sold by Messrs. Mackenzie, Lyall and Co., for Co.'s Rs. 92,500, to the firm of Messrs. Holladar, Mullick and Co.

A fine teak built ship, of 470 tons burthen, was launched from the building yard of Messrs. Thomas on the 19th July, and named the Christopher Rawson. She is owned by Messrs. Smithson and Co. and destined to transport the produce of the Strand Flour Mills to England.*

MEAN-NOON BALL.—It is stated that the dropping of the mean-noon ball from the crane on the fort telegraph, has been discontinued, in consequence of there being no observatory to shew the true time, the old one having been broken up. A new observatory is however now being erected, which is expected to be ready in three months, and then the ball will again be dropped at noon every day.

MRS. ATKINSON'S SOIRÉE.—Mrs. Atkinson's Soirée attracted a very large audience on the 13th July. Mr. Linton and Mrs. Atkinson were in good voice; but, as the result proved, Artaxerxes is far too ambitious an attempt for our very limited vocal corps. Mr. Hely sang "In infancy our hopes and fears" with some sweetness and delicacy, but his voice is altogether too feeble for such a place as the Town Hall. The second part of the entertainment, which consisted of a brief musical mélange, was, with the exception of Mrs. Atkinson's Black-eyed Susan, pretty considerably bad.

MILITARY.—A local corps of eight companies, to be denominated the Hurriannah Light Infantry Battalion, is ordered to be raised for service in the west of India. An additional or ninth mesalah is ordered to meet the increased duties required from Skinner's Horse.

COL. PASSMORE.—Colonel Passmore has resigned the command of the British detachment in Persia, and upon this event and the late appointment of Captain Shiel as Secretary to the British Legation, Captain Shes and Lieutenants Cameron and Woodfall, of the Madras Infantry, have been appointed, the former to command and the two latter to do duty with the British detachment in Persia.

MR. J. MAXTON.—Government have permitted Mr. J. Maxton, a medical gentleman not in the Service, to prescribe on the Company's dispensary, to covenanted and uncovenanted servants in the employ of Government.

NEW COFFEE HOUSE.—The opening of Messrs. Spence and Wetherill's new Coffee House was celebrated on the 2d July with a dinner by subscription among the merchants, about sixty of whom were entertained in a very excellent style, in the spacious apartment which has been fitted up as a public room, and the party was kept up with spirit till a late hour.

MR. TURTON.—It is said that Mr. Turton, at the express request of Jotaram, has applied to Government for permission to proceed to Jaypore and conduct the Ex-Minister's defence on his approaching arraignment before the Chief Rajpoot tribunal, specially convened for that purpose. The Governor-General has granted his consent to the measure, and it is therefore expected that the learned gentleman will depart as early as possible.

UNIVERSAL LIFE INSURANCE SOCIETY.—There was a half yearly meeting on the 9th July, at the office of the Universal Life Insurance Society, for the purpose of exhibiting the report of the Directors, and passing the accounts. Up to the end of last month 366 policies had been granted by the Indian branch in less than two years, and not a single casualty has yet occurred. Of these there have been issued 154 new policies since the 30th November last, 25 of them last month, shewing a constant progress in the ratio of increase. The amount covered by these policies is 45,78,916 Co's Rs. and the funds arising from Indian premiums and the capital subscribed on 1,000 shares in India, now amount to the sum of Co's Rs. 2,72,549-10-6. The London branch, up to the date of their last report, had issued 180 policies covering an aggregate sum of 174,540-10-0. The joint operations of both branches shew 546 policies on the register, covering 63,28,916 Co's Rs. upon 506 lives; the London premiums and capital of 4,000 shares paid up amounting to £32,025-10-0. So that the funds in hand on both sides amount altogether to Co's Rs. 592,804-10-8. The London branch has had only a lapse of £100 only.

Captain Thomson of the Engineers, and Mr. Beattie, of the firm of Turner, Stopford and Co. were appointed directors.

MEETING OF THE LAUDABLE SOCIETY.—The half yearly meeting of the Laudable Society was held on the 26th July at the Office of the Secretary. The present show of the Society is at least as satisfactory as that of either of the other institutions for Life Insurance. The balance on the 30th June last exhibits a capital of Sa. Rs. 5,10,649-9-4, and deducting therefrom 2,000 Rs. per share on 70 lapsed lives to make up 6,000, there remains a surplus of 3,70,649 Rs. or 7,294 Rs. per lapsed share over and above the advance of 4,000 already paid. This surplus is equal to about 5½ per cent. upon the whole of the outstanding risks at the valuation of 6,000 Rs. per share. The policies which have been adjusted during the last six months, only comprise eight shares on four lives, making up the total number to seventy shares on twenty lives during the eighteen months of the Society's existence. The net amount of subscriptions realized in the half year is Sa. Rs. 2,47,706. The present number of shares is 1,183½ on 471 lives, shewing some reduction since the 31st December last, when the numbers were 1,245 and 490 respectively, but still a very large increase upon the policies on the register a year ago when there were only 873 shares insured upon 351 lives.

Referring to the last resolution of the General Meeting of Subscribers held on the 26th June last, wherein it was stated that modification of the 28th rule was under the consideration of the Directors, which modification the Directors were to submit to a special General Meeting of Subscribers to be called for the purpose, and the directors not having yet been able to give that consideration to the subject which its importance demands, owing to the continued illness of their most able colleague, the following resolution was adopted. "That a Committee of Subscribers be appointed, to take the subject into consideration, and that when their report shall be ready, it be circulated with a special proposition to each subscriber, with a request from the Secretary, that each will be good enough to send to the Meeting a proxy in the affirmative or negative, and that two months after the date of the circulation of such report, a General Meeting of the Subscribers be called to determine on the proposition according to the 34th rule of the Society."

MEETING OF THE ARMENIAN INHABITANTS.—A meeting of the Armenian inhabitants of Calcutta was held on Saturday evening the 2d July, at the apartments of their National Institution.

Mr. C. A. Cavorke being unanimously called to the chair, the following resolutions were proposed and adopted:—

That a respectful petition be presented by the Armenian inhabitants of Calcutta to the Right Honorable the Governor-General of India in Council, humbly bringing to their notice the disabilities under which they are labouring, and praying the recognition of the rights and privileges granted to their ancestors, by the East India Company in an agreement of 1688.

That a Committee be formed of Messrs. M. C. Arakial, A. Apar, M. Gasper, George Aviet, P. J. Sarkies, C. A. Cavorke, and J. G. Bagram, for the purpose of preparing and carrying up the Petition to the Right Honorable the Governor-General of India in Council. The names of Messrs. J. H. Arathoon and Johannes Avdall were also added to the Committee, (the last to act as Secretary).

That Mr. Charles Priusep be entrusted with the task of drawing up the Petition on behalf of the Armenian inhabitants of Calcutta to the Right Honorable the Governor-General of India in Council.

That the thanks of this Meeting are due to the Managers of the Armenian Philanthropic Institution for having kindly allowed the Meeting to be held in its apartments.

That the thanks of this Meeting are due to Mr. M. Gasper, for his patriotic efforts in promoting the national cause, and that in the event of eventual success, a silver vase, bearing a suitable inscription, be presented to him.

That the thanks of this Meeting are due to Mr. C. A. Cavorke for his able conduct in the chair.

MURDERS.—The Commander and chief officer of the Dutch bark Sumatra were killed at sea, on the 17th June, by the Gunner, who states he slew them in self defence. The following is the man's statement of the affair:—"On the 17th June I was about 7 p. m., it being my (Gunner's) watch on deck, the vessel with all studding sails set, the wind suddenly shifting more a head so as to shiver the sails, I at first imagining it to be through the vessel's broaching to, enquired of the sea-cunney at the wheel what he was about, and proceeding to the compass discovered my error. The Captain then came out and seeing the sails shivering, abused the sea-cunney, and complained that they always steered badly. I replied it was not the fault of the sea-cunney but that the wind had blown ahead. After my reply to the Captain I took no further notice of him, but was busy giving the necessary directions from the poop about trimming sails, &c., whilst thus engaged, the Captain, who was standing on the larboard poop-ladder, with a small cutlass in his hand, which I had not noticed before, suddenly stabbed me on the left side. I ran towards the binnacle, bleeding and smarting with the wound, and seeing the Captain stopping on the poop with the intention of repeating his violence, I sprang towards him with the knife I always wore, fended off the cut he made at me with the cutlass, and closed with him, and in the scuffle, both fell off the poop on the quarter-deck, on which we let go our hold of each other, and I discovered my knife was broken. The Captain immediately on recovering himself, made another cut at me with the cutlass, which I fended off with the broken knife I retained in my hand: he then made a stab at me, which I also fended off, but not without receiving a wound on the groin. He then ran inside the cuddy. I, fearing it was with the intention of arming himself with a pistol, (a brace of which I was told he always kept loaded in his cabin) and being apprehensive of my safety, ran in after him and caught him from behind; securing both his hands with mine, I dragged him to the cuddy door and kept my hold, hoping that he would soon be pacified and refrain from further violence—the Captain all the time struggling to get free. Whilst I was holding him, the mate, who had been asleep before, came out from his cabin, which I did not perceive, and stabbed me from behind. On feeling the wound, and despairing of my life, I with my utmost strength threw the Captain on his back on the deck, forced the cutlass out of his hands, and in the act of drawing it backward, cut him across the chest, and I repeated the blow, seeing that I had no other hopes of my life, which killed him. I then turned into the cuddy to expostulate with the mate, but not finding him there, and hearing the exclamation of the sea-cunney (that was before at the wheel, but then, for refuge, on the main rigging) of "Oh! Jesus Christ," I concluded he was on the poop, and went thither accordingly. Immediately on reaching the poop, the mate began to assault me with his cutlass and I, in self-defence, turned upon him with the cutlass I had forced from the Captain, and after a fight of about five minutes, I cut him across the chest, and with a second blow, killed him. A short time after this having assured the crew of their safety, desiring the bodies to be thrown overboard, and giving some other directions, I became insensible through loss of blood, and continued very ill and despaired off, for the following week: after recovering a little, I decided on proceeding to Calcutta. I have been careful of the property on board—what I have done, I was compelled to in self-defence, and I am now here for the trial I must undergo.

This admission of the Gunner and the depositions of the crew of the Sumatra, have been taken before Mr. MacFarlan. The evidence given by the crew is said to corroborate the statement of the principal agent in the unfortunate catastrophe in every material point. All the witnesses agree in deposing to the violent character of the Captain and his frequent recourse to the use of his cutlass on the most trifling provocation.

It is said however that a French apprentice boy belonging to the vessel, has given a very different version of the transaction. According to the statement of the French lad,—strangely corroborated as it is in some very material circumstances,—the murder both of the Captain and the Mate was a very watson piece of business, and took its origin in some liaison in which a mistress of the deceased captain's was a principal actress. The Mate, it is alleged, was thrown overboard alive and fired upon by order of the Gunner when struggling in the water.

On the morning of the 25th July, a native was found murdered on the ground of the Calcutta Cricket Club, under the tree opposite Government House. The head of the deceased was nearly separated from the body. A man is now in custody on suspicion of being the murderer. Four more murders were committed on the night of the 25th July. One was that of a native, who, while sitting conversing with another, was assailed by his companion and had his head nearly severed from the body. The other three were perpetrated by an African in the house of a woman of loose fame. Having a quarrel with a man who was in the brothel, he stabbed him in the side and killed him. The woman to whom the house belonged, alarmed at this occurrence, began to cry out for the chowkedars, when a crowd assembled at the door, and a book-binder endeavoured to seize the murderer, but the villain cut out the bowels of the unfortunate man; a chowkedar then attempted to seize the homicide, who, after a short struggle, stabbed him in the throat and killed him, effected his escape, and remained concealed until the morning of the 26th, when he was captured by Mr. McCann.

SUPPOSED MURDERS.—On the 15th July a peon and a coolie, with a box of wine from Mr. Imlach, were sent to Dum-Dum, and having delivered the box at that place, they set out on their return to Calcutta; but neither of them has since been heard of. The coolie had but three annas on his person. It is supposed they were both waylaid and murdered.

A man is reported to be missing on the Barrackpore road under similar circumstances.

CORONER'S INQUEST.—The Coroner's inquest held on the body of the man who was found murdered on the esplanade near Government house, has returned a verdict of wilful murder against Roshun, the man who was apprehended on suspicion of being concerned in the murder. A similar verdict has been returned against the African who murdered three men.

RAPE.—It is alleged that on the evening of the 5th July, a rape was committed by a young officer in the Fort upon a Mahomedan girl about nine or ten years of age. The girl is now in the native hospital; her life was at first considered in much danger, but she is stated to be now considerably better. The affair has come under the notice of the Police.

NEW FREE SCHOOL.—A new free school for natives, has been established by Baboo Gobind Chunder Mujom, and was opened on the 18th July. There are already about fifty scholars.

FANCY SALE.—The sum realized at the Fancy Sale on the 13th July, was two thousand five hundred rupees. Of this Rs. 1,600 have been appropriated to the purposes of native female education, and Rs. 900 to the orphans under the care of the Society.

THE FEVER HOSPITAL AND TOWN IMPROVEMENT COMMITTEE.—The committee nominated by the Right Hon'ble the Governor-General, for considering the best means of promoting the local improvements in the town and suburbs of Calcutta, and of establishing a Fever Hospital, have divided themselves into three sub-committees, viz. one to ascertain the present state and mode of levying and disbursing the assessments; one to enquire into the condition of conservancy departments of the town in general; and the other to forward the establishment of a fever hospital. They have also agreed that each of these sub-committees shall hold a meeting twice a week, on Wednesdays and Saturdays, at the Town Hall, and a meeting of the general committee on every Monday at the same hour and place.

POMFRET THE KMBEZZLER.—Mr. Pomfret, clerk to the Manchester Royal Infirmary, absconded, carrying with him about £450, belonging to that institution, which was in his care; and Mr. Thomas had pursued him to London, but without being able to find him. It was subsequently ascertained that Pomfret had remained but a very short time in London, and had gone on towards Portsmouth, with the intention of sailing for Calcutta. A police officer was accordingly dispatched to Portsmouth, in the hope that possibly he might arrive there before the ship had sailed in which Pomfret had taken his passage; but he was too late. From the people at the principal inn at Portsmouth, the police officer ascertained that a man answering the description of the person of whom he was in search, sailed in the Juliana, for Calcutta, on Sunday the 20th. On his arrival in Portsmouth he was habited in the undress uniform of a cavalry officer, and represented himself as "the Hon. Captain Pomfret, of the 4th Dragoons," about to join his regiment in India. He paid 10s sovereigns for his passage, and appeared to have about as much more gold with him, and the waiter at the inn stated that he had seen him count over £500 in £5 notes of the District Bank, besides which he displayed a note for £100 of the Portsmouth Bank. He assumed all the airs of a man of high rank in his intercourse with every one who approached him, and so admirably did he acquit himself in his new character, that he was taken on board the ship by the captain, in his own boat, and accompanied by the governor of Portsmouth! Pomfret left the Juliana at the Cape, where the news of his crime had preceded him; but for want of proof of identity, the authorities were unable to arrest him.

FRENCH COMEDIANS.—A company of French actors has come round here from Bourbon on the Harrison.

BORING FOR WATER.—The boring for water in the fort has penetrated to the depth of 178 feet, two feet deeper than any of the former experiments.

WATER-SPOUTS.—The unusual appearance here, of several water-spouts, were observed over Garden-Reach on the 21st July.

THE RUTH POOJAH.—The car of Juggurnath escaped a narrow chance of not making its usual circuit on the day of the Ruth Poojah this year. There was a screw loose in the machine, which was not discovered till almost too late. The case being one of emergency, the Commissioner wrote off in a hurry to Calcutta for the sanction of the Bengal Government, and a reply was sent post haste conveying the necessary orders for the repair of the machine. Such is the empressement of the functionaries of a Christian Government!

ATTEMPT TO POISON.—An attempt was made lately to poison Mr. Hatton, the gun-maker. Suspicion rests on one George Marriot, an apprentice of Mr. Hatton's, who had a short time previously been forbidden Mr. Hatton's table, in consequence of some misconduct on his part.

MERIT-FOSTERING MINUTE.—The merit-fostering minute has been abrogated by orders from the Court of Directors. The Court, however, have directed "the principle of enforcing responsibility in all controlling functionaries, for the incapacity, or neglect, or wrongs committed by the Civil Servants under them, unless these are, as the case may admit, either redressed or reported to Government." They also direct that the following resolution in the above named minute shall remain in full effect, namely:—

"No officer, whatever his standing in relation to a vacant situation, will be appointed to succeed to it, unless he be considered by Government properly qualified to do justice to the trust about to be confided to him; and that in the event of any deficiency in the requisite qualifications, he,—as well as all others in the same predicament,—will be passed over in favor of any junior on the gradation list, competent to discharge the functions of the supposed office with real efficiency.

MEDICAL JOURNAL.—The Medical Journal, for July, has been published. Dr. Corbyn has divided it into two parts, the one part embracing the objects strictly within the title of that work, the second portion being styled the India Review of works on Science, &c.

NAUWAB JALOLL ODD DOWLAH, BHAHADOOR.—The Nauwab Jaloll odd Dowlah, Bhahadoor, uncle of the present King of Oude, was arrested for a debt of about 14,000 rupees, and imprisoned in the great jail. He was, however, shortly released by order of Government, who have ordered payment of the debts for which his Highness was incarcerated; but with a caution to the parties that the Nuwaub is not liable to arrest for debt, and that Government will not in future pay any similar claims.

RAJAH OF TAMLOOK.—It is stated that the Commissioner of Tumlook has been ordered to report upon a petition from the Rajah of that district, the zemindares of which was recently sold for assessment, which sets forth that his estate was disproportionately assessed with reference to other zemindares, and that, moreover, it had lost a large quantity of land by the effect of torrents, &c., under which pleas there is great probability of the sale being cancelled in this case, Government having been the purchaser.

THE BONDING SYSTEM.—A deputation of the merchants waited on Lord Auckland on the 5th July, by appointment, respecting the proposed introduction of the warehousing system into Calcutta. His Lordship expressed himself as generally favorable to the system, but did not think that it could be indiscriminately applied to all imported articles at present. He proposed to allow in the first place tea, coffee, spices, wines, spirits, metals, cotton and woollen goods to be bonded, and after a fair trial of the plan to extend it, as may be found useful to the trade of the port.

SERMON IN BRIDAL OF THE IRISH CLERGY.—On the 17th July a sermon was preached at the Cathedral, by the senior chaplain, for the benefit of the suffering Irish clergy, from the text 'Take heed to thyself that thou forsake not the Levite, as long as thou livest upon earth.' Deut. 12, v. 9. The discourse was appropriate, conveying a pathetic appeal to the feelings; but the congregation was uncommonly thin, especially considering the occasion.

DISTRESSED IRISH CLERGY.—At a meeting held in the Old Church room on the 4th July, to take into consideration the distressed state of the Irish Clergy, and the best means of affording them relief, the following resolutions were unanimously passed:—

1. That the distresses of the Irish Clergy are so great, and so urgent, as to claim the immediate sympathy and help of Protestant Christians in every part of the world.

2. That this meeting, whilst it expresses its sympathy with the worthy and pious clergy in Ireland, who are exposed to want and privation in the discharge of their sacred office, will do all in its power to assist in relieving them.

3. That subscriptions be raised throughout this Presidency, and that the following Committee be formed for the purpose of receiving contributions, viz. The Archdeacon, C. W. Smith, Esq., H. Chapman, Esq., W. Money, Esq., Col. Whish, the Rev. Drs. Mill and Parish, the Rev. Messrs. Boswell, Boyes, Wimberley, and Charles, with power to add to their numbers.

4. That Christian friends in the Mofussil desirous of expressing their sympathy with the object of this meeting, be requested to send their subscriptions without delay to any member of the Committee.

SINGULAR ROBBERY.—A robbery of a singular description was perpetrated on Monday night last, in the office of a respectable attorney. The villain having gained access to the room in which he kept his records, bore every written document from the premises, and succeeded in making their escape, unobserved by the chokeedars, though six persons at least must have been concerned in the robbery.

SEIZURE OF SALT.—A number of natives were recently captured and taken to the Salt Board, who were detected in the act of endeavouring to smuggle salt by filling baskets with it and placing vegetables on the top.

JETTIES.—The plan sometimes since submitted to Government for building four jetties in front of the Custom-house, has been given up, much doubt being entertained as to the practicability of the scheme on account of the loose nature of the foundation.

CANAL TOLLS.—Government have determined on equalizing the tolls of the New and Circular canals, jointly, with that of Tolly's nullah.

ASSAULT.—About 9 o'clock one evening recently as a gentleman and lady were returning from Kidderpore in a buggy, and when they were about two hundred yards on the Calcutta side of the iron suspension bridge, four natives armed with bludgeons rushed from their place of concealment and desired the party to stop. This was done, and the gentleman got down on the off side with the intention of giving battle to the assailants. He was enabled clearly to distinguish the men, who appeared to be up-country burkundazes, and on approaching one for the purpose of wresting his weapon from his hands, one of the villains aimed a blow at him, which he warded off; but considering that the odds were too great, he requested the lady who accompanied him to whip the horse on, which was instantly done, the fellows getting out of the way to avoid being run over. The gentleman then ran for safety, the natives following, until near the turning which branches off to the Great Jail, where some people being observed, they gave up the pursuit.

SUICIDE.—A native committed suicide on the night of the 28th July or the following morning, at Nimtolla Ghaut, by hanging himself by the neck.

A Hindoo woman, aged about 15 or 16 years, belonging to a family of some respectability, residing at Tattoneah, committed suicide on the evening of the 17th July, but what induced her to the act, is yet a mystery.

The body of an European named John Slater, was found in a well in the Turretta Bazaar on the 21st July, in an advanced state of decomposition. No marks of violence appeared on the body; and it is supposed that he perpetrated suicide whilst in a state of delirium, occasioned by fever.

MOFUSSIL.

AGRA—MEDICAL MEETING.—At a meeting of the Medical officers of the Honorable Company's Service, held at Agra on the 20th day of June, 1836, the following resolutions were proposed and carried.

1st.—That as the now available sanction given by the Honorable Court of Directors to the Bengal Medical Retiring Fund is designed to benefit the whole Medical Service, it is the opinion of this meeting that no alterations should be made in the existing regulations of the Fund, without being first submitted to every Medical Officer on the establishment, whether he shall have already subscribed to the Fund or not.

2nd.—That the design of a Retiring Fund being not only to secure increased rates of pension, but to accelerate promotion, there is a class of Officers (it is to be feared a numerous one,) whose cases require indulgent consideration, namely, those who may find themselves unable to join the Fund on its first establishment, either from debt or other causes beyond their control. Should these persons be only permitted hereafter to become subscribers, on paying up all arrears with compound interest, from the date of the formation of the Fund, the whole demand will, in the course of a few years, amount to so large a sum, that few fathers of families will consider it either prudent or just, to sink it in the purchase of an annuity on their own lives. If some reasonable assistance be not given to persons so circumstanced, they will not only be prevented from joining the Fund, but will find themselves obliged to remain in the service, and will thus obstruct promotion, and defeat one of the main objects of the Fund. It is therefore the opinion of this meeting that it would not only enable a numerous body of Medical Officers to share in the favor granted by the Hon'ble Court, but would greatly tend to promote the general interests of the Fund, if some such regulation as the following were passed—viz. That any Medical officer, who now intimates his intention, to join the Fund, but at the same time declares on honor that his debts exceed the sum of Rs.—shall be allowed a period of—years before he is required to commence his subscription, and to pay up all arrears without interest. But if, at the expiration of that time, he fail to comply with the conditions, then he shall only be permitted to become a subscriber, on obtaining the votes of a majority of the service, and paying up all arrears with compound interest from the date of the establishment of the Fund.

3rd.—That it is desirable to ascertain from Government, whether, under the existing regulations of the service, any officer retiring in India can reside and draw his pension there, without obtaining the special sanction of the Court of Directors.

4th.—That looking to the boon now granted by the Hon'ble Court to the Army, of pensions for length of service without reference to rank, as one more peculiarly applicable to the Medical Service, from the fewer grades contained in it, and not less urgently required; and viewing the General Orders by the Right Hon'ble the Governor-General in Council of 22d May last, as not distinctly specifying whether or not it be intended that in their operation they shall include the Medical Department as an integral part of the Military Service, a memorial, in the name of the senior officer present, for him-self and the others, whose names shall be in an annexed list, be forwarded through the proper channels to the Right Hon'ble the Governor-General in Council, soliciting information whether the Medical Service be included in the above indulgence of the Hon'ble Court, and if not, praying that his Lordship in Council will be pleased to recommend their case to the favourable consideration of the Hon'ble the Court of Directors.

5th.—That Mr. Dempster, Surgeon 4th Battalion Artillery, be requested to undertake the Office of Secretary to the present meeting, for the purpose of forwarding a copy of the above resolutions regarding the Medical Retiring Fund to the Secretary, for the information and consideration of the committee of management in Calcutta, and to draw up the memorial which forms the subject of the 4th resolution.

The wife or queen of Sooleeman Shukoo died on the 24th June and was interred at Sekundra. The funeral procession was accompanied by a guard of honour granted by the Brigadier.

A Court Martial is now sitting for the trial of a prisoner on the following charge: "Patrick Kellie, private of the European Regiment, confined by order of His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, on the following charge:—"For having at Dinapore on the 26th of April, 1835, feloniously and of malice aforethought, murdered Muckdoom Bux, a tailor, by fracturing his skull with a bludgeon and thereby inflicting mortal wounds, of which the said Muckdoom Bux then and there instantly died.

The collections on the whole Western Customs line in the year 1835-6, have been 44 lakhs, and the expense of management but a little above 6. Hence the net revenue is realized at a charge of between 15 and 16 per cent.

A person calling himself Pollock, and representing himself to be of Italian extraction in the service of the Nizam, has been levying contributions at Agra on the charitable and unwary. He possesses a good address with a respectable appearance, and has always some urgent necessity for a sum of money; the amount of which he apportions to the situation, manner, or any soft qualities of the person he calls upon. He is a noted swindler.

On Tuesday the 12th of July, the trial of a sweeper named Nunka, on a charge of being a party in the murder of the native doctor and sepahi of the 45th Native Infantry, took place before the Session Judge and a native jury. The jury returned a verdict of guilty of aiding and abetting in the murders on strong presumption. Another sweeper, named Lushkaree was to be tried before the same Court, on his own confession before the Magistrate, he having been admitted as King's evidence by that officer, and having before the Session Court denied all knowledge of the facts of the case, and having thus failed to comply with the conditions on which his pardon was to be granted.

On Thursday, the 7th of July, a theft to the extent of twenty thousand rupees was discovered to have taken place in the city. The property, consisting of money and trinkets, belonged to one Punchkourie, a jemadar of khulashies in the commissariat department, formerly attached to the Agra Magazine, but now stationed at Delhi. The property was locked up in the saikhannuh of a house rented by the agent of the jemadar during his absence to Luchmi Chund, the son of Munnirram Seyth. The key of the saikhannuh was with the jemadar at Delhi. No clue to the offenders has yet been discovered.

A Mooreed, or disciple of the Syed Abmud, by his exhortations to the faithful, recently created considerable ferment in the city of Agra. He endeavoured to persuade all good Mussulmen, that it was sinful to serve the ferunghees, and succeeded in making many converts, particularly among the sepoys. On a report of these proceedings being made to the authorities, search was made for the fakeer, but he had disappeared. Nothing further was heard of him, until he was discovered residing with one of the moolas of the Agra Jumma Musjid, to gain whose good opinion he used the disguise of humility and fair words, but secretly making converts by ones and twos, he was at length emboldened to usurp the place of his patron the mollah, and an opposition being made to his holding forth, he is stated to have threatened the hierarchy of the Jumma Musjid, that he would bring all the Mussulmaun sepoys from the cantonment to install him in the minbar. At this stage of the affair, it appears, intimation of the man's intrusion and the dangerous nature of his threats and tenets was made to the magistrate; who is reported to have allowed the Hadjee the option of quietly yielding the contested pulpit or answering a citation to his Court; he availed himself of the alternative, and leaving the musjid took up his abode with some of his followers in the butcher's mahallah.

The appellate jurisdiction in masfee resumption cases throughout the second or Agra division of revenue has been vested under Reg. 3, 1828, in Mr. Owen, the special Commissioner, already exercising the same power in the 1st and 3rd divisions. A boat has been despatched from Allahabad, laden with coal, to be landed at Luyaruh and Agra, as depots for the steam navigation on the Jumna.

ALLAHABAD.—It is reported that some grasscutters, in the service of the Lieutenant-Governor, were attacked and severely beaten on the Onde side of the Ganges, in consequence of having provoked the people in possession of land on which they trespassed to procure their loads. About fifty of the offenders were brought in under a guard of four or five chuprassees.

A prisoner sentenced to seven years labour, escaped from the guards from a party at work in the Kuttra, but was retaken in a neighbouring nullah, not having been able to rid himself of his irons.

Sad accounts have been received from the fleets of boats proceeding to Agra. Some boats with much property have been entirely lost, and all have suffered more or less; but no lives have been lost. The weather has been very unfavorable, and the great rapidity of the Jumna at this season, renders the navigation of that river hazardous. Some of the passengers are thinking of abandoning the boats, and proceeding overland.

The amount made over to the Blind Asylum, as the proceeds of the fancy sale, is Rs. 390. About Rs. 1,500 are to be invested in the Savings Bank.

The almoners of charitable funds at other stations are cautioned against a man named Phillips, who is now travelling towards Calcutta. He is a dark man, speaks English well, and says he was a drummer in one of H. M.'s regiments. He travelled upwards about a year ago, and then stated that he had charge of an estate in the Soonderbuns, but lost his situation on the death of his employer. He wears blue cotton trousers and a cap.

Mr. Robertson the Aeronaut, with his machine, has passed Allahabad.

The Lieutenant-Governor embarked on the evening of the 7th July, and the Steamer started the following morning on her way to Agra. Mr. Bushby and Mr. Macsween, with his personal suite, accompanied Sir Charles, and a part of the offices proceeded in the Steamer, the business being kept up on the passage.

A sale of fancy articles took place at the Theatre, on the 5th July, and realized about 1,800 rupees, which will be contributed in aid of charitable institutions.

A wolf a few days ago took away the child of a dholabee from a village near Allahabad. The man was coming to Allahabad with his child, and halted at the village for the night. He heard the cry of the child when the wolf seized it, and with several other people went in pursuit, but obtained no trace till the following day, when the remains of the child were discovered, half devoured.

Accounts have been received, from different quarters, of serious accidents on the rivers from the blowing weather that has prevailed lately. Several boats have been lost, and one report states that eleven were swamped in one day at the ghauts off Benares.

A robbery took place a short time ago at Cawnpore of several packages proceeding from Allahabad with coals. The men halted under a tree to the north of the Cavalry lines, which is a place noted for similar depredations, and were plundered during the night. The property taken was of considerable value.

DELHI.—The following is an extract from a private letter lately received from Cawnpore. I presume you have heard of the recent movements of the Baiza Bano? She had made a few marches from Allahabad towards Muttra, where she intended bathing in the Jumna, when orders from our Lieutenant-Governor, the consistent stickler for "non-interference," overtook her, directing her immediate return to Allahabad, and with which the poor old lady was, of course, forced to comply."

Several accidents have occurred since the beginning of the rains. During one of the severe storms, two or three men are said to have been killed by the lightning, and one boy was precipitated from the top of a house, upon which he was standing, by the shock he received from the electric fluid, which skirting his side entered the house, without, however, doing much damage there. The boy was severely scorched, but he has suffered more from the fall than from the lightning. There were two boys drowned also, whilst bathing in the canal.

A leopard recently seized a child at a village, close to Hawul Bhug, in Kumaon: a hue and cry being raised, the animal was scared from its prey, but not until it had killed the child.

The mess godown of the 16th regiment Native Infantry was burnt down on the morning of the 17th July, when property, to the amount of about 800 rupees, was destroyed. Owing to the very active exertions of the sepahies, all the wines and beer, &c. were saved.

Mr. Dyce Sombre, who, is at Delhi, has purchased two tigers, belonging to Shumshooden's estate, with the intention of carrying them to England with him.

Munnee Ram Seth, the rich Banker of Muttra, died at that place on the 5th July.

The subscriptions by private individuals, for the relief of Mr. Blake's family, amount to 21,280 rupees.

The following are presents presented by Mr. Dyce Sombre, to members of the great Moghul's family upon his late visit to the Palace:—A handsome gold box, with a musical bird, &c. &c. to the King. Her late Highness' state carriage, with 4 beautiful English horses, harness, &c. &c. to the Queen. A brass wire bed, &c. &c. to the Heir Apparent. A pair of handsome pistols, mounted in silver, to Prince Saleem. A Calcutta made sawaree tonjaun, to the Prince's wife. Her late Highness' sawaree elephant, with silver howdah, &c. &c. is intended for Runjeet Sing, to whom it will be sent. Besides presents, as tokens, to all her late Highness' and his own European friends.

Baron Hugel was to sail from Bombay for England, in the beginning of June.

Mr. Bohle, the gentleman who has distinguished himself by the introduction of beer brewing into India, has proposed to cut a road from Budraj to the Dhoon, with the view of affording accommodation and comfort to travellers to and from the hills.

Mr. Truscott has been appointed Magistrate and Collector of Mirzapore, and Mr. Colin Lindsay Magistrate and Collector of Delhi.

A steamer will ply as far as Ghurmooktesir Ghant immediately the river becomes sufficiently high to admit of its coming up so far.

An extensive system of forgery has lately been brought to light in one of the native states. A rich and wealthy man, and one who has hitherto borne a high character, is said to be the offender: the system has been going on for years, and was only discovered within the last month; so that, immense sums of money are supposed to have been obtained through this means. The Rajah himself is the principal sufferer, as his seal and signature, forged to a nicety, have been freely used, sometimes in obtaining sums to a very great amount.

During a heavy fall of rain on the 26th June a native of the city was carried away by the force of the torrent, which usually accumulates opposite the Palace, and drowned.

The Jagheer of Thanasie having reverted to the British Government, by the death of the Ranis, who was co-heiress with our Government to the property, it has been quietly taken possession of.

MEERUT.—The roof of the Begum's Catholic Chapel has been declared unsafe, and must be entirely rebuilt. Mr. Dyce Sombre has come forward to defray the expense of doing so.

A murder was recently committed at Meeranpore, originating in a feud: the unfortunate victim was enticed into a house and there attacked and killed, receiving no less than twelve wounds. The principal and his associates have been apprehended and committed for trial.

The appointment of a Regulating Officer at Bhaugulpote being no longer required, has been abolished.

Some misunderstanding has occurred between authorities, on the subject of the Kotwal of the Sudder Bazar, who has been held to bail for a large sum by the Magistrate on a charge of conniving at the abduction of a female Cashmerian by his nephew.

The horticultural garden exhibits some activity; very great exertions are making to be well prepared for the ensuing cold season.

An attempt was lately made at Meerut to ascertain the real wishes of the European soldiers regarding cantons, when almost every man desired their abolition.

KORNAUL. Private Reeves was executed on Friday: the European troops, alone were paraded; drawn up in close columns of companies; the death warrant was read, and the troops deployed into line. The prisoner was carried down the line in a cart; the band playing the dead march. He looked perfectly unconcerned, and retained his usual colour, but it is said he was much broken. The priest walked by the side of the cart, and assisted him out of it; the unfortunate man then knelt down under the gallows tree and prayed. With his own hand he pulled the cap over his eyes; the executioner adjusted the rope, when the signal being given, he was slowly drawn up and struggled most dreadfully.

A soldier of one of the regiments at this station, who had taken himself off without leave, waited on the Magistrate of a neighbouring station, and gave himself up as a deserter from Cawnpore, whither it would seem he had desired to arrive, had his funds been sufficient for the expenses of the road. The Magistrate in due course forwarded him to the proper authorities at Cawnpore, when it was discovered he belonged to the Meerut cantonment, and thither he has been sent to be brought before a court-martial.

DEYRAH.—A person named French, has rented a large tract of land in Deyrah, where he intends to establish himself as a farmer.

LOODIANAH.—Baba Krishna Pundit had arrived at Loodianah, en route to Lahore, whither he is proceeding with presents from his master, Indra Bikrun Shah, the Rajah of Nepal. This chief having heard the British system of jurisprudence much extolled, has sent the Pundit to travel through the provinces, and to make himself thoroughly acquainted with our practice, in order that it may be introduced into his own territories.

The school in Loodehanna is making satisfactory progress. A pauper Persian school is proposed to be established by Captain Wade, at his own expense. A press is also intended to be soon set up, under the superintendence of the American Missionaries, to whose care the printing of the Persian Ukhar will be resigned.

Mohun Lall has been sent on a temporary mission to Multan, on the banks of the Indus, to collect, in that quarter, statistical, commercial, and other information, which will, no doubt, prove highly useful towards the development of the resources of those imperfectly known regions.

The rain commenced here on the 28th June, and fell incessantly for forty-eight hours. Subsequently the Sutlege overflowed a considerable portion of the native town, and caused much loss of property, as well as of life, by the falling of houses.

BHAWULPOOR.—The object of Lieut. Trevelyan, during his recent visit here, has not been gained, as the Nuwab of this country and Noor Moohumud Khan, the Ameer of Huedurabad, are about to contest their right to a small tract of country bordering on the Sinde.

GOWAHATTY.—A private letter mentions that there has been a severe earthquake at Gowahatty, but it does not afford particulars.

FUTTEGHUR.—The iron suspension bridge over the Kulsee Nuddee at Khodlagunge, situated between Futteghur and Cawnpoor, has been completed and is now open to the public. This structure cost its spirited founder, the Nuwab Huokeem Mehndee, Rs. 70,000, and was upwards of seven years in progress.

NAGPOOR.—The annual fire which takes place in this city, has been this year singularly destructive. It raged uninterruptedly for three days, but on the fourth, the people succeeded in extinguishing it, after six thousand dwellings had been consumed, and property to the value of some twenty lakhs destroyed.

MHOW.—A general court-martial has been sitting at Mhow, which has tried Gunner Hardy for striking Lieut. Campbell of the Artillery, and commenced that of another prisoner.

JABOOSH.—This district has been placed under British protection since the termination of the late disturbances. Major Borthwick has been appointed guardian during the minority ministry of the young Raja, whose reinstatement was the object of the Company's interference.

AJMEER.—Saiyud Koramut Ali, now second Suddur Ameen, has recently so far adopted the plan of the English, that he has introduced a chair and table in the hall of justice at which he presides, and insists on all the vakeels standing up to address him. This innovation was at first strenuously opposed by the whole clique of vakeels, one of whom appealed to Mr. Edmonstone, the Judge, against this proceeding of the Ameen, and stated that unless he abandoned the course he was pursuing, the whole of the vakeels would resign their situations. The Judge supported the Ameen, and the vakeels have all quietly succumbed.

BENARES.—Four Europeans, deserters from the Buffs at Meerut, have been apprehended at Benares, and sent under an escort of sepoy's back to their station. Two gunners deserted from Cawnpoor but were taken up at Allahabad and sent back under an escort of sepoy's. On their way when near Cawnpoor, they beat the sepoy's unmercifully and effected their escape; they were retaken and lodged in a guard-house at Cawnpoor. Some nights after they made an opening in the walls of their prison and succeeded in making their escape, taking with them as companions two other prisoners and another European from the barracks, after having equipped themselves with arms and ammunition. They were shortly after taken up for attempts at robbery and safely lodged in jail at Futteypoor.

JULESAR.—The Tuhseeldar of Julesar, Koonwur Zuhoor Ulee Khan, has been suspended in consequence of numerous charges of bribery and extortion having been brought against him by a buniya of that place. The case is now being gone into, and the clique of the Umlah at Muttra are indefatigable in their exertions to protect the Tuhseeldar. The buniya's witnesses have been frightened, it is said, into a denial of all knowledge of the nefarious transactions with which the Julesar Tuhseeldar was charged, but the buniya is a man not to be driven from his point by intrigues. He demanded the protection of the Collector, which has been extended to him, and there is no doubt the case will now be thoroughly sifted.

NATIVE STATES.

LUCKNOW.—The on dit at present is, that the whole of the cash in hand, amounts to 15 lacs; that the treasury has been swept out, and Captian Fatty Ullee after giving up the keys has been placed in confinement. In spite of the low ebb of his finances, the King immediately on coming out from the uchotee, determined on being again married. The lady, of Royal Persian blood, and a pensioner, made extravagant demands: these to the amount of twenty lacs were acceded to, but she not being satisfied, he ordered that she and her adherents should be turned out, and the mahal plundered. On enquiring afterwards for the jewels, the king was informed that his orders had been strictly obeyed and not an article could be recovered. All the Royal pensioners are under the protection of the Resident; the lady dares not complain against the King for some fifteen lacs worth of her own property, which was carried off on the occasion, and H. M. has had to sell out to that amount.

The King's tents are pitched in Dilkhoosha park, as his Majesty intends leaving his domestic recreations for a course of tiger shooting on the 12th. The natives believe that his troops will not allow him till they have received their arrears! It is said the Prime Minister's dak has been long laid for his escape when his time comes; and also that all his women, horses, jewels and furniture have been already dispatched. It is asserted that the King does not remove the barber, as he is the depositary of some precious state and personal secrets.

The new road from cantonments has been dug out of the sand, and will be as good as the old one, or as it was before it was cut, at the end of the rains.

JEYPORE.—It is stated that Colonel Spiers had arrived at Jeypore to preside over the forthcoming investigation, and that the Rawul had waited upon him in state. It is supposed there, that the trial will be carried on in a similar manner to that over which Mr. Colvin presided at Delhi. The first persons to be arraigned were Deewan Umeerschund, Sivu Lal Saboo and Manick Chund: this last individual is one of the two persons who gave Futthi Singh, (the man who assaulted the Resident) his instructions on the night of the 3d of June. The trials of Jotha Ram, Hookam Chund and Futthi Lal will then follow, and afterwards, in succession, those of the agents and immediate actors in the scene. A fine of eleven hundred rupees a day had been levied upon the soucars for their contumacy, and they willingly paid it, in preference to betraying the trust reposed in them. The sum entrusted to them by Jotha Ram is estimated at thirty lacs of Rs. which they stoutly refuse to give up until his fate shall have been decided.

The Artillery and Cavalry at Jeypore marched thence in progress to Nusseerabad, on the 12th June. The Infantry are to remain at Jeypore for the present. The Meenas, and others, have, since the departure of a portion of our troops, again commenced their depredations in the vicinity of Jeypore.

JOUDPORE.—The Marwarree plunderers, undismayed by their recent defeat at Muzzaboo, have again commenced their depredations in the vicinity of the great mart of Palee, from whose merchants they have abstracted goods and specie to the value of forty thousand rupees.

PESHAWUR.—An encounter has taken place in the vicinity of Peshawur between Sadut Khan, the Hakim of Lohpore, a formidable Kuzzak, and Koonwur Shere Sing, in which both parties suffered much, and neither could claim the victory, as they were both obliged to retire from the field of battle,—the one to Peshawur, and the other to his mountain fastnesses.

An encounter has also taken place between Mahomed Ufzul, the son of Dost Mahomed, and Now Nehal Sing, at the ghurry of Delasah Khan; in which thousands are said to have fallen on both sides: Mahomed Ufzul was at the head of 10,000 men, whilst Now Nehal had no more than about half that number: the consequences of this disparity were not long in showing themselves; Now Nehal's troops were completely routed, and himself obliged to fly. On hearing of this disaster, Koonwur Shere Sing sent out a large body of men, headed by Sultan Mahomed, to give battle to Mahomed Ufzul.

DHOLPOOR.—Great confusion prevails in this state, in consequence of continual disputes between the guardian and relations of the young Raja, the possession of whose person would enable either party to display its affection for its prince and to indulge with considerable effect, in the eastern virtues of extortion, bribery, peculation, &c. &c. Some disturbances are expected to take place.

SINDE.—A grandson has been born to Noor Moomud Khan, the Chief of the Sindian Sirdars. The event has filled every bosom with the utmost joy, as the marriage of the parents had long been unproductive of any pledge.

PUTTALAH.—Bhag Chund, a large sahunkar of this town, has just been detected in the commission of extensive forgeries on the Raja's treasury. He has in consequence been deprived of his hand and nose, to prevent a repetition of, or mark the Raja's indignation at, the act.

CABUL.—Dost Mahomed has despatched his two sons, accompanied by 4,000 followers, with an offering to Mahomed Shah, the King of Persia, to propitiate his good will, and to invite him to join issue with him against Runjeet Sing. Mahomed Shah is making his way over heaps of slain, and unheard of difficulties; and a belief prevails, that the next accounts heard of him will be that he is encamped with his Kuzzilbash on the banks of the Attock.

LAHORE.—Maharajah Runjeet Sing having been afflicted with an impediment in his speech, applied to Baba Shookur, a fakir, for a remedy, sending him 500 rupees as a douceur: the fakir has recommended justice, charity and temperance, as the most sovereign specific in the world; for which sage advice he has been rewarded with an allowance of 25 rupees a month.

The Raja, with a spirit of economy, has discontinued the allowance made to the two sons of Shah Zuman, a principal portion of whose inheritance he now holds.

BHURUTPOOR.—The attainment of his sixth year by one of the sons of the Raja has recently been celebrated, with all the pomp and pageantry the Bhurutpore court could display.

ULWAR.—An heir has just been born to the Raja who had long despaired of such an event. Large largesses were distributed on the occasion to the Fuleers of Ulwar; but to the Bramins, who had predicted to a former heir a long and happy reign, but who died as the prophecy passed the lips of the seers, his highness gave nothing.

MADRAS.

MEDICAL SCHOOL.—Dr. Mortimer the Superintendent of the Medical school, has been granted by Government an allowance of 400 rupees, and Dr. Harding one of 300 rupees per mensem.

INFANTICIDE AND SUICIDE.—At Palaveram on the 11th July, the bodies of a woman and child were found hanging in a hut in the lines of the 6th Regt. N. I. From inquiry it appears, the woman was the wife of a sepoy, that she had been quarrelling with him the previous night, and threatened to hang herself, and it is supposed that she first hanged her daughter and then herself in a state of angry vexation.

AN EARTHQUAKE.—On the afternoon of the 13th July, about 4 o'clock, a slight shock of an earthquake was very sensibly felt in a part of the town of Madras: It was but of momentary duration, and not felt beyond the limits of the town.

NEW BRIDGE AT TANJORE.—His Highness, the present Rajah of Tanjore, has recently constructed over the river Vennar, near Tanjore, a bridge of five arches, built of brick, the cost of which has been 30,000 rupees. It adjoins the palace gates, and forms a communication with the opposite bank from the town of Tanjore, a thoroughfare very much frequented, and before independent on the difficult tedious, and sometimes dangerous, passages of ferry boats. The bridge is both an elegant and substantial structure, and when the approaches are finished, it will stand pre-eminent as a work of the greatest public utility.

OPENING OF THE PASS OF ADAM'S BRIDGE.—It is said that in consequence of the repeated suggestions, which have been pressed on the Court of Directors, both by the Madras Government, and by private individuals at home, they have at last determined to do something towards opening the Paumban Pass. An outlay of 5,000 Rs., for blasting the rocks, which now obstruct the centre of the small passage used by dhoneys, has been authorised by them; and it is supposed, that this trifling sum, so employed, will be sufficient to deepen the pass 14 feet: The attention of the Ceylon Government has recently been directed to the same object, and a plan is now under their consideration, for cutting a canal 8 miles in length through the island of Manaar. Even close to the shore on the south side of this island, the soundings are $3\frac{1}{2}$ fathoms, and nearly the same depth at the north side, where the canal is to open on the sea; the highest land through which it will be necessary to cut, is not ten feet high. The work is estimated to cost £20,000, and the Ceylon Government are prepared to recommend an outlay of this extent, from the colonial revenues, if the work is pronounced practicable by competent judges.

CRIMINAL SESSIONS.—The Third Criminal Sessions for the present year, opened at 11 o'clock before Sir Robert Comyn, Kt. Chief Justice, of a very simple character, with the exception of two. The first was the case of Mr. Phillips, and he was sorry to see one who had hitherto been respected, placed in such a situation for the embezzlement of a large sum of money. The second case was, that of a prisoner, escaping from custody while under sentence of the Supreme Court. The Grand Jury found true bills against all the prisoners in the calendar.

The sessions closed on the 6th instant, with the trial of eleven men brought round from the western coast on a charge of piracy. The court was occupied sometime with the investigation of the charge, but that failing in substantiation, the parties were discharged by proclamation. On the sentence of acquittal being recorded, the Chief Justice suggested the propriety of the parties being referred to the Superintendent of Police, with the view to their being furnished with the means for their return to their native village; and that the peon in whose custody they came to Madras should escort and protect them back to their homes.

The case of nine pirates, brought in H. M. ship Wolf, has been abandoned, in consequence of the difficulty of interpreting the evidence of the Cochin

Chinese. The Wolf will proceed to Trincomallee, and abide by the orders of His Excellency the Naval Commander-in-Chief, respecting the future destination of the hupcaners.

THE SCHOONER BARRAKET.—The schooner Burraket, bound to Madras from Moulmeyne, timber laden, sprung a leak on the passage, and became water-logged. In this state she was discovered by a French brig, and the crew taken on board. The brig remained by the Barraket for a night, and next morning finding it impossible to assist her, made sail for Pondicherry, where Capt. Bluet and his crew were landed.

ACQUITTAL OF SOOBAROO.—Soobaroo has been acquitted of every charge, and it is believed, that in consequence of his acquittal, the Prosecutor, Captain Osborne, has thought it his duty to write to Government, to suspend the proceedings against Vencatary Meodelliar, whose trial was appointed to come on immediately after Soobaroo's, in order that the error, if any, might, in the second case, be avoided.

RELEASE OF SOOBAROO.—A division order was published at Bangalore on the morning of the 4th July, directing the release of Soobaroo, he having been acquitted by the general court-martial of the charges brought against him.

FIRM OF MESSRS. GUICHARD AND CO.—Arrangement have been made with the constituents of the firm of Messrs. Guichard and Co. which have enabled that firm to resume its payments under circumstances every way encouraging.

MURDER.—On the morning of the 6th July, a Havildar of the 6th Regiment, shot the "Jemidar Adjutant" in front of the barracks at Palaveram, shortly after the parade was dismissed, and while hundreds of the men were present, and several of the European officers still on the ground. The Havildar is a Rajpoot from the upper provinces of Bengal—it is said that he is senior Havildar, and that he alleges the Jemidar Adjutant endeavoured to stop his promotion.

PORTO NOVO IRON WORKS.—The Porto Novo Iron Works are reported to be getting on exceedingly well. There is now lying on Madras beach, for exportation to England, on the Sir Edward Paget, a large quantity of charcoal iron from the works, which are represented as being in full employment, and, it is said, that vessels proceeding from Madras in future, will be able to procure any quantity of iron of the same description as ballast.

PLAN FOR CLEANSING THE TOWN.—The plan for cleansing the town of Madras, proposed by Mr. Law, has been laid before Government by the Justices in Sessions, and Government have appointed a Committee, to enquire into the practicability of carrying it into effect. The Committee is composed of the Superintending Engineer, Chief Magistrate, and the Civil Auditor.

THE MINT.—It is stated that a despatch has been received from the Court of Directors, in reply to the letter from Bengal, intimating that the Madras Mint had been abolished. The nature of the orders have not transpired, but, it is believed, they are peremptory for the re-establishment of the Mint.

SEIZURE OF OPIUM.—A quantity of opium was seized a day or two since by the officers attached to the Custom House, just as it was on the point of being smuggled on board ship a little way up the coast.

GOOMSOOR AFFAIRS.—The news from Goomsoor is far more satisfactory as to the result of the campaign than was anticipated. Nearly the whole territory has been overrun, and perhaps subdued, but as the chief rebel leader is still at large, another campaign may be necessary after the rains. About the beginning of June, Mr. Russell was about 30 miles west of the farthest point where we have yet held a post, and his position is far advanced in the unexplored tract among the Koomds. He was expected to fall back about the first week in June, and then the troops, with the exception of 3 regiments, would fall into their winter quarters. The sick at Nowgaum, amount to about 1,800.

CAPTAIN FITZGIBBON.—The court-martial on Captain Fitzgibbon has been concluded, and has fully acquitted him of all the charges brought against him.

IRISH CLERGY.—Notwithstanding much ungenerous opposition to the subscription for the Irish clergy, a considerable sum has been already received—nearly seven thousand rupees.

MR. CAMPBELL.—It is rumoured that Mr. Campbell of the Madras Bar, is about to give up his practice as unremunerative and proceed to Bombay in anticipation of his exertions there meeting with more compensatory encouragement.

BOMBAY.

COURTS-MARTIAL.—It is stated that there are three courts martial now under way at Poonah.

THE GUICOWAR AND DHACKJEE DADAJEE.—It is stated, that orders have been received from England, to compel his highness the Guicowar to restore to Dhackjee Dadajee, Esq., his territory, with arrears from the date of resumption.

BRIBERY.—It is said, that the principal native commissioner of Serore, has been suspended from office on a charge of bribery, which bears every appearance of guilt. The matter is now before the Sudder Adawlut.

A DARING TRICK.—An extensive trick has lately been discovered by a mercantile house in Bombay. A letter with the signature of one Cullianjee Kanjee, a respectable Shawuk merchant, was received in England at the latter end of last year, by Messrs. Dirom, Richmond and Co., ordering an extensive supply of brandy, cheese, &c. As the letter apparently bore the signature of an individual, who had been in the habit of commissioning English manufactures, of various sorts, the requisition was unhesitatingly complied with, and the goods were immediately transmitted to the care of Messrs. Dirom, Carter and Co., of Bombay. When the consignment arrived, and Cullianjee was called upon to bear the goods, it was discovered that no order was sent by Cullianjee Kanjee and he could not, even if he were disposed to traffic in brandy, cheese, &c., import those things consistently with the injunctions of his caste. It is reported that suspicion has been attached to a certain individual of the native community, and that Messrs. Dirom, Carter and Co., intend prosecuting the suspected parties; a course equally necessary for the vindication of the character of those concerned as well as for the security of commercial credit.

RED SEA STEAMERS.—A new set of rules for the management of the Red Sea Steamers, promulgated by the Superintendent of the Indian Navy, has been published.

SHIP LAUNCH.—On the 30th of June, a beautiful new barque of 422 tons, was launched, or rather floated, from the upper Bombay dock. The length of her keel is 96 feet,—over all she is 117 feet, and her extreme breadth is 29 feet 6. This vessel was built for Cursetjee Cowasjee, Esq., and by Sir Chas. Malcolm was named the Ardasser, after that highly respectable Parsee gentleman Ardasser Dady. She is intended for the China trade, is a beautiful model, highly finished, and in the opinion of judges will increase the already well earned reputation of the Bombay builders.

MR. W. KENNEDY.—Mr. W. Kennedy, who lately held a sannah of practitioner in the Sudder Adawlut, is appointed Junior Native Commissioner at Kurnool in Ahmednugger.

ORANGE ROBBERIES.—Life and property are reported at present to be in an insecure state at the island of Kurruajah. About three weeks ago, a gang of thirty or fifty armed men, with lighted torches in their hands, entered at that island the house of a carpenter of the name of Yadojee Meetry, and carried away property to the value of four or five thousand rupees. In committing this outrage, the ruffians were guilty of personal violence also. They gave blows with bludgeons to several of the inmates of the house, and wounded one very severely in the head, from which the unfortunate man is stated to be still suffering. Two similar gang robberies have, we understand, occurred since; but on neither occasion was assistance available from any quarter. There is no force whatever at the place, except a few sepoye to guard the public treasury there.

BURMAH.

MOULMEIN—SERIOUS AFFRAY.—The following is an account of a serious affray which took place at Moulmein: "There was a row kicked up here lately between the artillery and the 62d regt., and three of the regiment men were stabbed in the bustle. There were no less than four companies out against one of the artillery; who immediately took to their guns, loaded with grape, and would have let fly at some of their heads had they not been prevented in time. The occasion of all this disturbance was, because two of the artillery soldiers would not drink spirits with two of the regiment men, for which cause they broke the bottles on one of their heads. This was in the evening; as soon as it got dark some of the artillery men pounded the chaps for the mischief. The artillery Sergeant finding his barracks surrounded, warned the crowd to keep back, but to no purpose; he immediately ordered his men to charge, and while thus in command, he was knocked down senseless with a cutgel. However 'tis all now hush'd by the Bugadier."

ASSAM.

The following is an extract from a private letter, dated Jumnalpoore, 17th June, 1836.—"We have had a report of a part of our regiment being likely to proceed to assist the Assam Light Infantry, (though it is some time since its circulation, and very little confided in) in bringing the Singphos to a proper sense of what is due to us as well disposed neighbours. Their country, under the newly talked of tea arrangements, is likely to become a matter of considerable interest. Six Chinese passed this in progress to Suddiya, about a month since, four growers and packers, an interpreter and a merchant, who was to find his way to Afa, overland. Being the first people of this description, Government appear to have behaved very liberally towards them in the way of pecuniary matters. Through the medium of the interpreter, I understood each man had been paid a bonus of Rs 100—the interpreter was long a resident of Malacca and Singapore. They have carried with them various baskets, iron pots and other implements, required in the preparation of the mercantile article."

SINGAPORE.*

AGRICULTURAL AND HORTICULTURAL SOCIETY.—A public meeting was held on the 24th June, at the Singapore Reading Room, for the purpose of forming a Society, the object of which should be the improvement of every branch of Agriculture in the settlement of Singapore. A Committee, consisting of Messrs. Almeida, Balestier, Montgomerie, Brennan, and T. O. Crane, were appointed to draw up a Code of Regulations, to be submitted at the first meeting, which, if approved of by a majority, are to be adopted. These regulations are to be revised half-yearly, and such as stand the test of one year, are to become standing regulations;—but any regulation may be rescinded by a majority of two-thirds of a public meeting called together for the purpose.

The Hon'ble S. G. Bonham, Esq., was requested to become Patron of the Society; Mr. Wingrove President; Mr. Balestier and Dr. Montgomerie, Vice-Presidents; and Mr. T. O. Crane be Secretary and Treasurer, for the ensuing year.

MURDER.—A Malay man was recently murdered at Rochoo by some unknown persons. The body was dreadfully mangled, having no less than eighteen wounds on it, besides the thigh bone being fractured.

STEAMER JARDINE.—The Steamer Jardine had been repaired and had again been plying in the Straits, but had met with another accident, having caught fire when about thirty miles from Malacca. The fire was extinguished with much difficulty by the captain and officers, but not until considerable damage was done.

PIRACY SUPPRESSION COMMISSION.—On the 23d June, the Honorable S. G. Bonham, Esq., embarked on board H. M. ship Andromache, to proceed, with her commander, Captain Chads, in the execution of a joint commission from the Supreme Government for the permanent suppression of piracy in the straits. Nothing authentic has as yet transpired respecting the intended plan of operation determined to be carried into effect by the commissioners, of whether that determination is subject to any conditional contingency.

PIRATES.—The pirates have again appeared in the Straits in considerable numbers. While the bark Donna Carmelita was on her passage from Calcutta to Singapore, and laying becalmed off Pulo Pisang, about midnight an attempt was made to take her by a large pirate boat well manned, which came pulling very quickly towards the vessel. Some musketry loaded with ball were discharged at her by way of intimidation, but without effecting that object. The prahu still continued to pull towards the vessel, and when close at hand some grape shot was discharged at her, and as she sheered off immediately afterwards, it is concluded considerable damage must have been done. Several other large prahus were observed the same day. The Mary Anne, Capt. Aaron Smith, was attacked by a fleet of five pirate prahus off the Mancap Shoals, on the coast of Borneo, but succeeded after a brisk engagement of several hours, to beat them off. The boats of the Andromache had had an engagement with three pirate prahus off the Sambelangs, which they succeeded in capturing, after a most stubborn resistance. The three boats were manned and sent out on a reconnaissance, and they fell in with three prahus, full of pirates, which they immediately attacked. The pirates tried to board the boats, but these latter prudently kept away at pistol-shot distance, pouring grape into the enemy, whose pursuit was rendered unavailing by the circumstance of their guns being lashed to the dock, and incapable therefore of depression or elevation. Rendered at length desperate by the harassing fire of the man-of-war's boats, a number of the pirates sprang overboard and swam to the boats, laying hold of the gunwales and trying to stab the men, neither asking nor receiving quarter. This mode of attack, however, was as unsuccessful as the other. Only one of the boat's crew was wounded, and that by a spear thrown at him by one of the swimming pirates. About one hundred and thirteen pirates were killed in this rencontre, but as a few of them escaped on shore to an island called the Arrowes; the boats of the Andromache remained all night off the island, and beat the jungle the next morning. In this way they took nine prisoners, including the chief of the expedition, who were immediately carried on board the Andromache, and placed in irons. Two of the prisoners confessed that the prahu had been fitted out with two others expressly for a piratical expedition, and that the whole of the crews, with the exception of eight men who had escaped in the jungle, had been annihilated by the fire of the boats or destroyed in the desperate attempt to board. Captain Chads expected to get much information from the prisoners, and through their instrumentality, to capture many other piratical vessels. The Andromache had proceeded to Singapore, with the three prahus in tow. The chief of the pirates, was a prisoner on board the frigate.

JAVA.

JAVA TEA.—The tea plant is now in a flourishing state in Java, much attention being paid to the cultivation of it by the Government. On the 17th of May there were ready for shipment upwards of twenty thousand pounds of tea, and in the course of three or four years, the production is expected to amount to upwards of a million of pounds annually.

DUTIES ON DUTCH MANUFACTURES.—The Java Government have imposed a duty of 12½ per cent. on the manufactures of Holland, with a view, it is supposed, of repairing an infraction of the treaty with Great Britain, under which British goods were liable to be charged with double duties only, or with six per cent. duty when similar goods of Dutch origin were favored with an entire exception, which has been the case lately while British goods were paying twenty-five per cent.

CHINA.

THUNDER STORM.—Macao and Canton were visited between the night of the 6th and morning of the 7th May, with a thunder storm of unprecedented violence and endurance. No lives were lost, though the lightning struck in many quarters both ships and houses, during its terrific raging for not less than eight hours. The Dem. Manuel, in the inner harbour of Macao, was struck, as also were the Monte flag-staff and Mr. Edward's house; and a vessel in the roads had her topmast shattered.

SICKNESS.—The sickness in the northern suburbs of Canton is said to continue, and that many deaths caused by it, do daily occur.

EXECUTIONS.—The Emperor's confirmation of a great many sentences of Canton courts against criminals, having been received, executions have during May been frequent, and from three to five have taken place on every day of the month.

PIRACIES.—The pirates have recently received a very severe castigation off Manila, from Capt. Elliott, who whilst cruising in a government falua, with a crew of forty-three men, one large brass gun, four swivels and small arms, suddenly encountered a fleet of twenty-six double banked pirate prahus, between Cape Capones and Carregidore, and after sinking the two prahus containing the first and second chiefs, put the rest to flight and well riddled some of them in their retreat. A successful expedition has, however, been made by these sanguinary wretches, who landed on the coasts of Pangasinang and Yloco, burned several villages, took a number of natives prisoners, and captured a pontine laden with rice.

GOA.

The frigate which left Lisbon on the 11th October has arrived at Goa. Of three letters by the commander of the vessel, addressed to the present Government of Goa, the first simply reports the arrival of the vessel with the particulars of the voyage; the second that he had left Lisbon without any instructions from the Home Government regarding the political affairs of Goa, and stating that he had heard nothing of the disturbances which had taken place until his arrival at the Mosambique, when and where he received an official letter from the Prefect Bernardo Peres da Silva, directing him to proceed to Damaun to deliver up such official despatches as he might have brought out with him, and to receive instructions with reference to his further conduct, but that he the commander had proceeded direct to Goa according to the instructions from the Home Government; and then requesting to know from the existing Goa Government whether they acknowledged the Queen Donna Maria II. and the Charter, &c., as it was necessary he should be satisfied on that point before he would deliver up his cargo to them; in the third letter the commander gives an account of his passengers, cargo and crew of his vessel. The atrocities in Goa continue unabated; a Bramin zemindar recently expired under the severe flagellation inflicted on him by the orders of the military commandant, because, it is said, he refused to comply with some demands of the arbitrary tyrant.

REVIEW OF THE CALCUTTA MARKET.

(From Kuhn's Monthly Price Current, July 31, 1836.)

Our present publication will present a list of considerable sales of British imports and also purchases of produce to a large amount as returns. The high rates of freights have induced buyers to turn to articles of value such as Silk and Silk Piece Goods, but it has also happened, that notwithstanding the so called scarcity of tonnage, during the last quarter, a larger amount of dead weight and bulk has been shipped to England, than during the corresponding months of the preceding year.

The enormous increase in the produce of the country appears to have been lost sight of, and a scarcity of shipping, as compared with former years, assigned as the cause of the present large gains of the shipowners, this scarcity is however only comparative, the tonnage frequenting this port has been from London and Liverpool alone during the last three months, actually in excess of a like period in 1835-36 by about 4,000 tons.

The Honorable Company's Treasury have raised the Exchange on making advances from 2 0½ per Company's rupee to 2s. 1d., and the amount of capital placed at the disposal of the Commerce of Calcutta, will be less than formerly, the last communication stated the sum to be only fifty lakhs.

The Exchange of good local bills on London has advanced to 3s. 2d. for Sicca Rupee.

INDIGO.—Up to the 27th July, accounts had been received of a most discouraging character from Jessore, Dacca and Mymensing, and the violence of the rains had occasioned a great loss in the produce, so much so that several planters had been obliged to stop the manufacturing, the plant yielding less than sufficient to pay the expenses attending the process. This adverse state of things was followed by three or four days of the sunny weather, but now the rains have again renewed with much violence, and there can be at present but little doubt of a crop much below the average of the last five years. In the Kishnagur districts where from the excessive drought in the early part of the season, the sowing season was completed with great difficulty, the heavy rains have flooded much of the cultivation, and the produce of this important district will be no doubt below that of last year. The prospects of the Tirhoot planters appear on the whole to be equal to that of the preceding season.

We have heard of no transactions since our last report.

OPIUM.—Prices although high, continue firm, however without appearance of rise. It will be observed that the transactions have been on a very limited scale during the whole month. The stock existing at present in the Honorable Company's godowns is about 3,500 chests.

RAW SILK.—There is hardly any thing left in the market of the last bund, and the new will not be in for several weeks to come. The difficulty in making returns in articles of bulk has naturally caused the attention of parties here to be specially directed to Silk and Silk Piece Goods, on which the freight falls proportionably very light.

CORAHs.—Have risen excessively, finest are up at Rs. 160 per corgé, and our Exports to England have been very large, and are still going on briskly.

CHOPPAHS AND BANDANOEs.—Are also in good inquiry, but the manufacture of these has greatly diminished.

RAW COTTON.—Notwithstanding the continued high rates of freight to all parts, our shipments to England, and particularly to China, have gone off with much spirit. To the latter country the Exports during the month amount to 30,000 bales, against 19,700 same time last year. Banda, it will be seen, has slightly advanced. Jalor and Cutchora more so.

SALTPETRE.—Our market remains bare of good and fine qualities. The late very heavy rains may have done some damage in the manufacturing district. The scarcity of tonnage influences this as well as all other description of gruff goods. Since the commencement of our commercial year, the shipments to England have been more than doubled. In consequence of the news brought by the arrival of the June overland dispatch from England, considerable purchases have been made, and the prices have advanced from four to eight annas per factory maund.

SUGAR.—The fine Sugar is becoming scarce, but the good and middling qualities are abundant. Our shipments to England have been very heavy in comparison with last year, even at the late high freights.

RYE.—There continues to be a great deal of speculation in the market, prices have experienced alteration, and are well supported.

SHELL LAC.—A little more demand has arisen, but the stock on hand is large, and the market is, generally speaking, very dull.

RICE.—Our shipments to England have been greater than could have been expected from the scarcity of tonnage. Parties holding this grain have been willing to give Rs. 25 15 as 7 per 20 cwt., but have not been able to load at that rate; to Mauritius the shipments are proceeding actively, as is usual at this season of the year.

WHEAT.—The new arrivals are of a good quality, the crop is stated to have been abundant.

HIDES.—Large quantities have been exported to England since 1st May, at present the high rates of freight depress the prices. The Americans have done but little in this article.

LINSEED.—A freight of no less than £7 per 20 cwt. has been lately paid for this article. The bulk of the crop has just begun to arrive from the interior.

SPICES, DRUGS AND OTHER MISCELLANEOUS PRODUCE.—The market in regard to the articles under this head maintain their prices, and business to some extent have been done last month.

METALS.—Copper.—The market has suffered considerable fluctuations during the month.—14lb. Tile having gone up to Sicca Rupees 37-12, afterwards fell to Sicca Rupees 35, and at present the dealers in the bazar offer no more than Sa. Rs. 34-8, but the holders will not sell at these rates, there being every reason to believe in a re-action, especially as the overland dispatch has made known a considerable advance in England.

Spelter.—Prices have advanced steadily during the progress of the month, and as there is no probability of supplies arriving to any extent from Europe, the rise will probably continue. The sales during the month have been considerable.

Lead.—There have arrived several orders from England for the purchase of this article, but limited all too low. Our stock is much reduced and prices well supported.

Iron.—Our transactions have been moderate, but prices have advanced.

Tin Plates.—Have also advanced.

TWIST.—Our supplies from Liverpool and the Clyde have been very considerable during the last 3 months. The sales have been fully equal to the average consumption, but prices are not very well supported. After receipt of the English news of April last, advising a considerable advance on Cotton and Cotton Piece Goods, the market was not prepared to expect such ample shipments from home.

RED TWIST.—The same remarks apply also to Orange Yarn.

COTTON PIECE GOODS.—Ample supplies of these have also given much life to our transactions, but the price of Mull Mulls, Jaconets, Book Muslin, Lapets and Lencoes have given away. Shirtings and Madapolams have also declined, white Gingham are difficult of sales. The demand for fine imitation Bandanoes has revived a little and several parcels have gone off at a slight advance on previous rates. Bengal stripes continue in demand, and the season for Neutral pines and stripes is approaching. Single colored plates go off steadily at fair prices.

WOOLLENS.—There has been a good deal of activity in the low qualities from Rs. 1-8 at 1-12, and prices will no doubt improve unless the forthcoming supplies should prove considerable. Fine Pelisse and Town Cloths are very difficult of sale at present, but will doubtless rally on the approach of the cold weather. In Flannels some considerable sales have been effected.

STEAM MEETING.

Proceedings of the sixth half yearly General Meeting of the Subscribers to the New Bengal Steam Fund, assembled at the Town Hall, Calcutta, on the 16th August, 1836.

Colonel BEATSON in the Chair.

The Report of the Committee was read by the Secretary.

1. On the motion of Mr. Abbott, seconded by Mr. Earle—

RESOLVED,—That the Report now read be adopted by the Meeting and published.

2. On the motion of Mr. Pattle, seconded by Mr. Abbott—

RESOLVED,—That the thanks of this Meeting be particularly communicated to Mr. Turton for his constant and zealous exertions as a member of the Committee; and that he be assured that the Subscribers confidently rely upon his continued assistance in the same cause on his return to England.

3. On the motion of Mr. Abbott, seconded by Mr. Allan—

RESOLVED, That the thanks of this meeting be given to the Committee and to their Secretary, Mr. Greenlaw, for their valuable services, and for the very satisfactory details communicated in their Report.

4. On the motion of Mr. Pattle, seconded by Dwarkanauth Tagore—

RESOLVED,—That this meeting has observed with great satisfaction the proofs which have been afforded by recent facts of the rapid intercourse between India and England that may be expected to take place when a regular and permanent Steam Communication shall be established. Letters from England have reached Bombay in forty-four days, and Calcutta in fifty-seven days; and the communication from Calcutta to England and back again has taken place in four months and twenty-six days,—between the 5th of March and the 30th of July.

Thanks were then moved to the Chairman, and the meeting broke up.

W. S. BEATSON, Chairman.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE OF THE NEW BENGAL STEAM FUND, to the Subscribers, at a General Meeting, held at the Town Hall, Calcutta, on the 16th August, 1836.

In conformity with the tenth Resolution of the original meeting of the subscribers to the New Bengal Steam Fund, held on the 22d day of June, 1833, the Committee have now the honour to lay before the subscribers the half yearly "report of their proceedings and statement of their accounts."

2. At the conclusion of their last half yearly report the Committee referred to the requisition to the Sheriff of Calcutta in course of publication for a meeting of the inhabitants of Calcutta and its neighbourhood, to be called for the purpose of taking the then existing state of the question into consideration, in the hope of inducing the whole Indian community once more to come forward and express their continued anxiety for the completion of the communication.

3. A meeting of the inhabitants of Calcutta and its neighbourhood was accordingly held on the 5th March last; and although the result of that meeting has been published in detail in all the papers of this Presidency, as well as generally the proceedings had by the Committee consequent thereon, it may not be inexpedient to take advantage of the periodical report to bring the whole under one view; as well for purpose of rendering these proceedings familiar to all who take an interest in the promotion of this most important measure, as to keep alive and strengthen those general feelings in its favor, the continued expression of which cannot fail greatly to advance the completion of the communication.

4. The Committee then beg to report that the duties of causing the petition to the House of Commons and the Memorials to the Right Honorable the Board of Commissioners for the affairs of India and to the Honorable the Court of Directors to be engrossed, as well as that of obtaining signatures to them and forwarding them to their destination having been entrusted to them, they lost no time in fulfilling that duty.

5. The Memorials, after being signed by the Chairman of the Meeting, the Honorable Sir E. Ryan, were according to the Resolution of the Meeting transmitted by him to the Right Honorable the Governor-General of India in Council with the respectful request of the meeting that His Lordship in Council would forward them with such support as their important object might seem to merit. In reply, the Honorable the Chairman was informed that the Memorials would be forwarded to the Hon'ble the Court of Directors by an early opportunity, with a strong recommendation of the subject of them to the favorable consideration of the Court.

6. The original petition to the House of Commons after being signed by 3,542 European and Native inhabitants of Calcutta and its neighbourhood, including the three Judges of the Supreme Court of Judicature, His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, with three other Members of the Supreme Council, Judges of the Sudder Dewanny and Nizamut Adawlut, Members of all the public Boards, and generally the heads of every public department, was forwarded home on the Coromandel, which ship left Saugor on the 10th April last. Duplicate of the same was sent on the barque Jupiter, bound to Liverpool. She went to Sea on the 19th April.

7. The petitions were sent to the care of Captain Grindlay, with a letter to the address of Lord William Cavendish Bentinck, requesting that His Lordship would, if a member of the House of Commons, undertake the presentation of the petition, with an assurance on the part of the Committee that should His Lordship have resumed his seat in the House, the petition would receive at his hands all that the most ardent friends of the measure could desire.

8. The subscribers are aware that His Lordship has returned to the House of Commons, and the Committee cannot but congratulate their constituents on their having so zealous, able and competent an advocate of their cause.

9. It was provided in the event of His Lordship not being a member of the House of Commons, that he should be requested to nominate such an individual member as in his judgment might be most fitly entrusted with the duty of advocating a cause of such importance as that of bringing into closer contact two parts of the world so widely separated by distance yet so intimately connected by mutual interests.

10. At the same time Funds were, under the authority, vested in the Committee by the Resolution of the General Meeting of subscribers called for that purpose after six weeks notice, and held on the 9th April last, remitted to the joint credit of Sir Charles Cockerell, Bart., James McKillop and Edward Fletcher, Esqrs., for the purpose of meeting all necessary expenses in forwarding the objects of the petition and memorials at home.

11. The active agency in this very important matter has been entrusted to Captain Grindlay, under the general superintendence (more especially as regards the expenditure) of the above named gentlemen—and the Committee requested that no time might be lost in endeavouring to create a general interest throughout the mother country in favor of the proposed communication, by publishing an appeal to the public with copy of the Petition and Memorials in all the newspapers of influence in Great Britain and Ireland, and distributing a copy thereof to every member of the House of Commons and proprietor of East India Stock.

12. While the petition was in course of signature, the Committee appealed to the inhabitants of the Mofussil in order to obtain a general concurrence in the Petition and Memorials, the signatures to which concurrence, although they could not technically be received in the House of Commons, yet being produced could not fail to give great general weight to the prayer of the petition. Accordingly signatures to such concurrence to the number of 4,193 have been forwarded home as follows :—

	ORIGINAL	DUPLICATE.
1,551 signatures
European	Per Hindostan	Kyle
and Native	went to sea 30th Apl.	18th June.
from 58 places,
2,539 do. do. from	Per Kyle, 18th June.	Asia
27 places		23d July.
103 do. do. from
3 places.	Per Asia 23d July,...	not gone.

13. Besides the above 176 further signatures from two places have been received, and will be forwarded by the first favorable opportunity.

14. The petition, it is hoped, may reach England before the close of the present session; should it not do so, or should it arrive so late in the session: as to render it advisable to postpone its presentation till the commencement of the next, the declarations from the Mofussil will have all arrived in time to be used in furtherance of the object of the petition.

15. Since the arrangements above pointed out, which the Committee have deemed it right to make at home for the furtherance of the object or their appointment, their colleague, Mr. Turton, has resolved to return to England, and with his accustomed zeal in the promotion of all measures of great public benefit, has promised in communication with the above named gentlemen to continue in England to devote his valuable services to the cause which he has so ably and zealously promoted here.

16. Such indeed have been the zeal, energy, and unwearied assiduity displayed by Mr. Turton, during the whole period of his connection with the Committee, and such the attention evinced by him in furtherance of the objects for which the Committee was formed, even at times when his health was suffering from severe illness, that they consider him entitled not only to their thanks but the gratitude of all who are interested in promoting the cause of Steam Communication with England; and the Committee, while they regret the loss of such a colleague, cannot but congratulate the subscribers on their having on the spot, where alone the object can be fully accomplished, a gentleman at once so deeply interested in the measure, and so well versed in all the details necessary to bring it to bear in the most efficient manner.

17. The Committee cannot close this report without also congratulating the subscribers on the late practical proof of the celerity with which the inter-communication between the two countries can be carried on by means of steam navigation by way of the Red Sea. An interval of only 44 days between England and Calcutta, and of 57 between England and Bombay, reducing the usual period more than one half (independent of the comparative certainty with which the communication can be maintained by steam vessels, is indeed matter of general congratulation, and it cannot but aid the prayer of India for the establishment of a regular communication by means of steam vessels.

The accounts are as usual laid on the table with a summary statement of receipts and expenditure since the last report. They exhibit a balance on hand of Company's rupees 60,367-9-10 exclusive of Company's rupees 597-5-4 interest due on Company's paper, and of Company's rupees 15,291 remitted home in furtherance of the prayer of the Petition and Memorials.

CIVIL FUND MEETING.

We have only time to notice in the most brief way possible, the Quarterly Civil Fund Meeting, held on the 30th of July, which admitted the widow and children of the late Mr. C. G. Blagrove, and elected Messrs. Charles Barwell, W. H. Macnaughten, F. Millet, F. Halliday and R. Houston as Directors for the ensuing year, in place of Messrs. D. C. Smyth, J. A. Dorn, R. Walker, J. R. Colvin and J. P. Grant, out by rotation.

There was a good deal of discussion upon an application from Mr. John Jackson of the China Finance Committee, now at the Cape, to know the terms on which he might be admitted a subscriber, the answer given him not being deemed sufficient by Mr. H. T. Prinsep and others. The following are copies of both the letter and answer :

To the Secretary to the Bengal Civil Fund, Calcutta.

Sir,—Previous to my getting to China, I had the honor to address a letter to the Managers of the Bengal Civil Fund, to request information of the terms upon which I could be admitted to become a Subscriber to that Institution; being then under the impression, that as a Civil Servant of the Company transferred to the Bengal presidency, I had become eligible.

I have since quitted China on account of ill health, and perceive by the report of the Trustees, that my application had been put aside for consideration on my arrival in India; but being informed by a letter from the Secretary at the India House, that the Company's China Agents have been allowed by the Court of Directors to subscribe to the Bengal Fund, without proceeding farther, I am desirous to know the terms and conditions upon which I may be admitted. There appears to be a difficulty attending the Servants of the China Establishment becoming Members of the Fund, in separating the Annuity from the Charitable Branch. The Annuity having been already conferred gratuitously upon the China Servants by the Court of Directors, they can hardly be expected to subscribe for it. It is, however, my wish to become a Subscriber, if the terms and conditions of admission are such as will render it desirable, and I shall feel obliged by your sending me the necessary information at the Cape of Good Hope, where, it is probable, I shall be at the time your letter will reach me.

I am, &c.,

JOHN JACKSON,

East India Company's China Agency.

Cape of Good Hope, 8th April, 1836.

(REPLY.)

Sir,—I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 18th April last, and in reply to forward you a copy of the existing Rule of the Bengal Civil Fund, and to inform you that they are at present undergoing revision, and that when finally passed and agreed to by the Service, a copy thereof will also be sent to you for your information.

I have the honor to be, &c.,

(Signed)

R. B. FITZGERALD,

Civil Fund Office, Calcutta, 23d June, 1836. } Secretary Civil Fund.

Mr. Prinsep explained, that Mr. Jackson's right of admission rested upon a letter from the Court, of which the following is a copy.

PUBLIC DEPARTMENT.

No. 3 of 1836.

OUR GOVERNOR OF THE PRESIDENCY OF FORT WILLIAM IN BENGAL.

LETTER FROM. No. 13, DATED 19th MARCH, 1835. Paras. 89 to 91.—Solicits instructions on the subject of an application from Mr. John Jackson, a Member of the Company's Financial Agency in China, for permission to become a Subscriber to the Bengal Civil Fund.

1. The Members of the late China Factory who became our Agents in China without previously proceeding to Bengal, are to be considered as having belonged to the Bengal Civil Service from the date of their becoming Agents, and they, as well as the other Members of the factory who proceeded to Bengal, are to be entitled to subscribe to the Civil Fund, if they please, and not otherwise.

We are, &c.

(Signed) Wm. Stanley Clarke, J. R. Carnac, W. Astell, H. Lindsay, John Morris, John Shephard, John G. Ravenshaw, J. Petty Muspratt, H. Alexander, N. B. Edmonstone, P. Wans Agnew, Russel Ellice, and R. Jenkins.

London, 13th January, 1836.

(True Copy.)

H. T. PRINSEP, Secy, to Govt.

* Besides this there is interest due on Company's paper up to the 31st ultimo Co.'s Rs. 597-5-4.

And accordingly proposed the following resolution:—

"That Mr. Jackson be further informed, in addition to the reply already transmitted to him, that he will be permitted like other China Servants transferred to Bengal, to subscribe under Article XXXI. of the rules forwarded to him, that is, on paying up his subscriptions from the commencement of any allowances receivable by him as a Civil Servant of the Bengal establishment, in other words, from the date of his appointment as a Member of the Financial Agency in China. That the above is the rule as it stands at present, but the rule is under revision, and if Mr. Jackson's election be not made immediately on receipt of this information, his case may be brought under the new rules that may be established."

To this an amendment was proposed by Mr. D. C. Smyth, and seconded by Mr. Macfarlan:

"That the letter written by order of the Managers to Mr. Jackson of the 23d June, be approved."

The amendment received 3 votes, and the original motion 6, which however being short of 9 could not be recorded as passed.

We left the Meeting discussing a set of New Rules prepared by the Managers.

The Fund balance on the 22d July was sicra rupees 13,00,142-3-6, and the monthly incumbents in England, 41 widows and 116 children, receiving together sa. rupees 17,085-13. In India, 3 widows and 6 children, receiving Sa. Rs. 1,245-10-8; and 1 gentleman in Europe Sa. Rs. 125.

The undermentioned gentlemen have been admitted to pensions on the Civil Service Annuity Fund, paying for the same at one quarter value, under the rules as lately modified by the Court:—

With the privilege of quarterly payments, and payments up to the date of decease.—Messrs. HENRY DOUGLAS—CHARLES BAYLEY—W. B. MARTIN—GEORGE SAUNDERS—THOMAS PAKENHAM—W. T. TOONE—ROBERT BARLOW, SENIOR—RICHARD HUNTER—ROBERT SAUNDERS—H. J. MIDDLETON—G. H. TRAIL.

With annual payments up to the date of decease.—Messrs. J. A. PRINGLE—M. AINSLIE—R. H. TULLOH.

With annual payments excluding the broken portion of the last year of life.—Messrs. CHARLES BECHER—J. H. CUTHBERT—HONORABLE J. E. ELLIOT—CHARLES SMITH, the last gentleman commencing from the 1st of August.

Three other applications are before the Managers—from Mr. J. W. LANGE and Mr. W. GORTON, waiting for certain information required from the parties,—and from Mr. C. J. MIDDLETON now under consideration.—Calcutta Courier.

THE PUBLIC LIBRARY.

Proceedings of a Meeting of the Proprietors and Subscribers of the Calcutta Public Library, held at the Library Rooms, on the 6th August, 1836.

Lieutenant-Colonel Beatson in the Chair.

1.—Proposed by Dr. Pearson and seconded by Dr. Jackson, that Colonel Beatson be appointed a Curator in the room of Colonel Dunlop, who is about to leave the presidency. Carried unanimously.

2.—Proposed by Mr. W. P. Grant and seconded by Colonel Dunlop, that with the view of accommodating strangers or temporary residents, who wish to avail themselves of the Library.—1st Class Subscribers be allowed to pay eight rupees a month and no entrance, and Second Class Subscribers six rupees and no entrance, or to pay the present rates with entrance at their option. Carried unanimously.

3.—Proposed by Colonel Dunlop and seconded by Mr. Gardiner, that in consequence of the monthly subscription falling short of the monthly expenses of the Establishment by the sum of 78 rupees, it be earnestly recommended, by the Proprietors now present to those who are absent, that the Proprietors shall subscribe the sum of four rupees each by the quarter, until the monthly subscriptions equal the expenditure. Carried unanimously.

4.—Proposed by Mr. Gardiner and seconded by Captain Taylor, that in consequence of the rule regarding a deposit having been found inconvenient, it be in abeyance till the General Meeting in February next. To this an amendment was proposed by Mr. W. P. Grant and seconded by Mr. Ochme, that Mr. Gardiner's resolution be advertized in the newspapers, and a Special Meeting called for this day fortnight to consider it. The amendment being put to the vote was rejected, and Mr. Gardiner's proposition was afterwards carried by a majority of votes.

W. S. BEATSON, Chairman.

AGRICULTURAL AND HORTICULTURAL SOCIETY OF INDIA.

A General Meeting was held in the Town Hall, on Wednesday, the 10th August, 1836.

PRESENT.

Colonel Dunlop, Vice-President, in the Chair. The Hon'ble Col. Rehling, Dr. Marshman, D. Hare, Esq., James Kyd, Esq., W. Storm, Esq., Capt. Leach, Mr. Masters, Charles Prinsep, Esq., John Allan, Esq., J. C. Wilson, Esq., H. M. Low, Esq., John Bell, Esq.

Visitor.—G. A. Prinsep, Esq.

The proceedings of last meeting were read and confirmed.

The following gentlemen proposed at last meeting, were elected Members of the Society.

Honorary Member.—Thos. Waghorn, Esq., of Cairo.

Ordinary Members.—Captain W. H. Sleeman, J. P. Marcus, Esq., Charles Deverinne, Esq., R. Savi, Esq., and E. Harding, Esq.

The following gentlemen were proposed as Members, viz.

Henry Walters, Esq., Commissioner at Hooghly, and Thomas Alexander Wise, Esq., M. D., Civil Surgeon Hooghly, proposed by W. Storm, Esq., seconded by Captain Leach.

Dr. G. G. McPherson, Civil Surgeon, Berhampore, proposed by the Hon'ble W. H. L. Melville, seconded by Mr. Bell.

D. McLeod, Esq., of Seonee, proposed by Mr. Bell, seconded by W. Storm, Esq., R. W. Chew, Esq., proposed by Samuel Smith, Esq., seconded by W. Storm, Esq.

A. J. Moffat Mills, Esq., officiating magistrate, collector, &c. of Cuttack, proposed by Mr. Bell, seconded by Dr. Wallich.

Thirty copies of part 2, vol. 3, Society's Transactions, were put on the table as received from the Serampore press.

The Secretary also submitted a lithographed cover, designed for this and succeeding numbers, to give them a more finished appearance.

Two copies of the 2d vol. Transactions in Bengalee were also received from the press, accompanied by an explanatory note from J. Marshman, Esq., regarding the omission of 2 articles, for which it was impossible to find terms suited to convey the literal meaning, so as to be comprehended by the natives. The bill for printing this translated copy was also submitted, amounting to Co.'s Rs. 1,034 10 8, which was ordered to be pass'd.

Mr. Marshman in his letter submitted for the consideration of the meeting, whether it would not be advisable, with reference to the very heavy expense of printing the Bengalee edition, to leave the question to the discretion of the Committee of papers, regarding the propriety of excluding in future all matter, except what is simple and to the point.

Resolved.—That it is not expedient to print all the matter introduced in the English edition, and that in future it be left to the Committee of papers, to determine the quantity of matter applicable to the purpose so as to reduce the expense of printing a work, which at present is a dead letter, as far as the knowledge is interesting or useful to the natives, who have never applied for a copy since the publication of the 1st volume.

With reference to the question agitated at the last general meeting, as to the necessity of inviting other societies, to contribute a certain sum annually to the funds of the Calcutta Society, to meet the expense incurred in the provision of large supplies of garden and flower seeds for the numerous branch institutions now springing up, and to the President's suggestion that the question be referred to a Committee for consideration, the following Resolutions were proposed by a Committee, consisting of Dr. Wallich, Mr. Kyd, Mr. Storm, and the Secretary:—

1st.—That as regards the distribution of seeds ordered from other countries by the Society of India, for the promotion of agriculture, it is not contemplated to require any pecuniary assistance from other or branch societies; but, on the contrary, to urge their strenuous co-operation in the good work, the Calcutta Society undertaking, as heretofore, to procure, entirely with its own funds, regular supplies of what may be considered likely to benefit the country at large.

2d.—With reference to supplies of seed required by other societies for purely horticultural purposes, that regular indents be forwarded to the Secretary of the Calcutta Society, who will undertake to procure from respectable seedsmen in different parts of the world, whatever may be wanted, on such Societies agreeing to defray the cost and charges.

3d. That Members of branch or other Societies, who are, or may become contributing Members of this Society, shall be entitled to double the usual quota of seeds, allowed to local, or distant members who are not attached to such branch or other societies.

Resolved.—That the above propositions be adopted, and that the Secretary be requested to send a copy to each Society in correspondence with the Society of Calcutta.

The following communications were read.

No. 1.—From J. Vaupell, Esq., Secretary to the Agricultural and Horticultural Society of Western India, dated 18th July, 1836., acknowledging the receipt of Mr. Bell's letter of the 23d June, also of the books, and Indian corn forwarded by the ship John Adam, and mentioning that several copies of the former (the 2d vol. Society's transactions) had already been disposed of.

Mr. V., in reference to a request made by the Secretary to send a small supply of Persian Tomato seed, encloses in his letter, all he could procure at that season. He also forwards bills of lading for two casks of Egyptian cotton seed, and one case containing Bombay carrot seed (one cwt.), shipped per John Adam, returning to this port.

Mr. Vaupell could not prevail on the agents of Captain Roche to take also twelve boxes of sugar-cane plants, destined for the Calcutta Society, for want of accommodation; but promises to transmit them by the first opportunity. Mr. V. alludes to a specimen of brown or Waukin cotton, and offers to send some of its seed. He also intimates the intention of the Revenue Commissioner at Bombay, to send one of two American ploughs, to the Madras foundry to have more cast, and suggests this as a good opportunity to obtain one as a model through the assistance of the Madras Society.

No. 2.—From Mr. Thomas Waghorn to the Secretary, dated Cairo, June 25th, referring to the promise contained in a former letter of the 26th April, and regretting his inability to send more Egyptian cotton seed, than that which is now on its way to Calcutta per John Adam.

Mr. Waghorn prepared the Society to expect disappointment, and the exertions he must have made to procure what he did, are duly appreciated.

Mr. W. finds that it would be highly imprudent to attempt sending more, but suggests a channel through which cotton seed may be henceforward obtained, without risk, and for little more than the mere carriage.

Mr. W., in alluding to the former consignment, states that the enormous expense entailed, on account of the secrecy he was compelled to observe, precludes him from making any charge, and therefore very liberally requests the Society's acceptance of it. Mr. Waghorn, at the same time, offers his services to the Society, to procure any other seeds except cotton, the exportation of which is strictly prohibited.

The following is the method pursued in the culture of cotton in Egypt, as given by Mr. Waghorn.

"Maho cotton in Egypt, is sown in tranches about three feet apart—four or five seeds at every 18 inches distance. If they all spring up they take out all but one which they conceive the most healthy.

"It must be sown in a fat soil—a sandy soil will not do. The cotton grounds are situated near the banks of the Nile or some canal near it where there is water the whole year. It must be watered every 3 or 4 days when it first begins to sprout, and afterwards every 10 days.

The crop is gathered from June to January, two crops each year from each plant.

The plants should be renewed every three years."

No. 3.—From R. Lowther, Esq., to the address of Col. Dunlop dated Allahabad 22d July, received through Dr. Wallich, forwarding an account of the Sea Island cotton seed, sent to that gentleman last year, for distribution.

Mr. Lowther appears to have given the seed every chance, by dealing it out to neighbours, and, through the Collector, to zemindars.

Mr. Lowther sowed a few seers in his own garden, of which about a third vegetated. A sample of this trial accompanies the communication, with one of brown Bourbon cotton gathered by that gentleman from plants of three years' growth.

The second trial of Sea Island seed was made by Dr. Beattie, Mr. Lowther's next door neighbour, whose garden stands some feet higher than that of the latter. About $\frac{1}{2}$ of the seed sown vegetated, and produced healthy plants, and to this circumstance Mr. Lowther attributes Dr. Beattie's success.

The third experiment was made by Mr. Mathews, an experienced indigo planter, to whom Mr. Lowther sent 10 seers of the seed.

Mr. Mathews states "that the seed was sown broad cast in June on land previously prepared and manured for the purpose, and although the moisture in the soil was quite sufficient to cause vegetation, it was nevertheless watered and raked on the fourth day, but of the whole quantity sown, not more than a dozen plants sprung up, and they were sickly all along notwithstanding that every care was taken of them. Mr. Mathews is of opinion that the seed was bad."

Mr. Lowther sent supplies by dak banghy to Cols. Presgrave and Colvin. A few seeds sown by the latter at Dadopoor vegetated. The receipt of Col. Presgrave's had not been acknowledged.

The fifth experiment was made by Dr. Stevenson, Secretary to the Agricultural Society of Lucknow, but the excessive rains had completely deluged the grounds, and no result was obtained. Some seed was also sent by Mr. Lowther (5 seers) to Mr. Woodcock, but no report was made by that gentleman, previous to leaving the district.

The reports of the zemindars were all unfavorable, none of the seed having vegetated.

From these data it would seem, that the Sea Island cotton seed sent to Mr. Lowther, although old, had not lost its vegetating powers. This is proved by the partial success which attended the trial made in his own garden, and by the more successful result of Dr. Beattie's experimental plantation.

These circumstances prove also, that the broad cast plan of sowing in India generally, will not answer, unless the seed be perfectly fresh, and the weather extremely favourable.

To the mode of sowing, therefore, and the excessive wet and cloudy weather, must be attributed Mr. Mathews's want of success; and these cause will apply with equal force to the failures of the zemindars.

It would be advisable hereafter that the Society should give every importation of cotton seed a trial, before sending it for distribution to the inferior.

It is only injuring the cause, to send bad seed, as those who are disappointed, will not readily be induced to make a second trial.

Mr. Lowther mentions having succeeded in raising the mangel wurzel from English seed; adding that towards the close of the cold season, he used it as a substitute for best root, without distinguishing any difference, save that it was much sweeter. He was not successful with the tobacco seed.

No. 4.—From Captain Sleeman, general superintendent, to the Secretary, dated Camp Mussoree, July 7th, stating that in Mr. Bell's "practical treatise on the culture of sugar cane," he mentions that the proper season to put in slips is from the 1st August to the end of September, whereas Captain Sleeman has found that the months of December, January and February, are best adapted for planting, and that the canes planted in these months attain maturity in the corresponding months of the year following, and even earlier. Captain Sleeman further adds that these months are also favorable to planting in the Mauritius, and refers the Secretary to his essay on the culture of the cane on that Island, published in Dr. Bryce's magazine in Calcutta in 1827.

Captain Sleeman appears, however, to have overlooked the circumstances, that Mr. Bell's Treatise is strictly confined to operations in the West Indies.

No 5.—From J. Shaw, Esq., to the Secretary, dated Tipperah, July 18th, intimating his intention of sending to the Society a sample and seed of a fine kind of cotton cultivated in the hills, and desiring to have a supply of Guinea grass and garden seed.

No. 6.—From Colonel L. R. Stacy, to the Secretary, dated Allyghur, July 14th, acknowledging receipt of sundry kinds of seeds forwarded via Allahabad.

No. 7.—From Colonel G. E. Gowan, to the Secretary, dated Almorah, July 18th, acknowledging receipt of Mr. Bell's letter of the 2d May, and the arrival of seeds therein referred to, and promising his best attention to the Society's wishes.

No. 8.—From J. Robson, Esq., of Jaunpoor, to the Secretary, dated July 29th, returning thanks for the Egyptian cotton and garden seeds forwarded by the Society, and promising report of the results.

No. 9.—From Dr. N. Wallich, to the Secretary, dated August 4th, acknowledging receipt of Secretary's letter of 3d instant, and annexing extract of a letter from Colonel Dunlop; enclosing, with reference thereto, a report by Mr. J. W. Masters on the state of the oaks and vines brought from the Cape by Mr. Walters, &c.

No. 10.—From Mr. Thomas Payne, forwarding two bottles of rhubarb seed, just received from England, for presentation to the Society.

No. 11.—From T. S. Henley, Esq., forwarding a specimen of Ceylon tobacco.

No. 12.—From M. P. Edgeworth, Esq., to the Secretary, dated Ambulah, July 24th, requesting to be supplied regularly with the Society's transactions as published, and seeking information on the culture of the mulberry for silk worms in India.

No. 13.—From H. Piddington, Esq., dated Chinsurah, 1st August, giving cover to a letter to his address from Lieutenant Blair, in which a request is conveyed for hop seed, or plants, on account of Mr. Bhole at Meerut.

Nos. 14, 15, 16, 17.—From Mr. J. Duhan, of Dinapore, severally dated the 12th and 18th July, 26th and 27th August.

The 1st.—Acknowledging Secretary's letter, advising the execution of his order for seed on account of the Calcutta Society, which he says may be expected to reach the Presidency in all August.

The 2d.—Acknowledging the receipt of the Secretary's letter and order for seed on account of the Madras Society, and advising dispatch of the previous order.

The 3rd.—Advising dispatch of four cases of seeds for the use of the Society, and enclosing memorandum of their contents.

The 4th.—Giving cover to his former letter relative to the dispatch of seeds, &c.

No. 18.—From T. S. Henley, Esq., dated 25th July, enclosing a memorandum of the total amount advanced on account of the Society, exclusive of freight on the sugar-canes, with a request that this last item of expenditure may be again brought to the Society's notice.

No. 19.—From M. Campbell, Esq., dated Cawnpore, July 18, requesting a supply of American cotton seed.

No. 20.—From R. W. Chew, Esq., dated 16th July, forwarding 16 dried mangoes, brought from the Eastward.

The Secretary had also been presented some brought by the same ship, which are at the service of Members.

No. 21.—From D. Macleod, Esq., of Seonee, dated 4th July, acknowledging receipt of Egyptian cotton seed, &c.

No. 22.—From Colonel Torrens, dated 16th July, signifying his intention of withdrawing from the Society, being about to leave the Presidency.

No. 23.—From Mr. C. M. Villet, to the Secretary, dated Cape Town, June 8th, advising the shipment of six cases of seed, in reference to the order conveyed to him in Mr. Bell's letter of the 2d December last. These seeds are on the Struth Eden, now in the river.

No. 24.—From the Hon'ble W. H. L. Melville to the Secretary, dated Meershedabad, August 4, promising to forward soon to the Society some grafts, or cuttings of superior flavored mango trees.

No. 25.—From C. T. Henley, Esq., dated 9th August, forwarding samples of sugar, made from canes grown on the island of Ceylon.

Mr. Henley states, that the sugar-cane grows luxuriantly on that island, but that it is not cultivated for manufacture.

No. 26.—From Baboo Radhakunt Deb, dated 9th August, presenting to the Society a copy of his translation of an Extract from a Horticultural work in Persian.

No. 27.—From F. W. H. Speed, Esq., presenting some very fine specimens of green maize in the husk, from Dasee and Jaunpore seed.

No. 28.—From the Secretary, presenting a bottle containing the nutmeg in its various stages of ripening.

The thanks of the Meeting were ordered in all the foregoing communication and presentations.

JOHN BELL, Secretary.

Culcutta, Town Hall, 10th August, 1836.—Hurkaru.

MEDICAL AND PHYSICAL SOCIETY.

Proceedings of a meeting of the Medical and Physical Society of Culcutta, held at the Asiatic Society's apartments, August 6, 1836.

The following gentlemen proposed at the last meeting were elected members of the Society.

—Drummond, Esq., Surgeon to the Right Hon'ble the Governor-General.

Dr. Marshall and J. Dodgson, Esq., Assistant-Surgeons of the Bengal Presidency.

Letters from the following gentlemen were then read. From C. Ducat and L. Hathway, Esquires, Assistant-Surgeons of the Bombay Presidency, Robert Davis, Esq., H. M. 39th Regt., and G. King, Esq., Surgeon, Chinwar, requesting that their names might be withdrawn from the Society.

From A. Garden, Esq., on behalf of Dr. Guthrie of Allahabad, to the same purport.

From J. Ludlow, Esq., Superintending-Surgeon, Barrackpore, stating his inability to continue a member of the Society and presenting the library with 8 vols. of the London Medical Journal.

From the Royal Medico Chirurgical Society of London, returning thanks for the last number of the transactions presented to them.

From C. Morehead, Esq., M. D., Secretary of the Bombay Medical Society, forwarding the second number of the proceedings of that Society.

From A. Campbell, Esq., M. D., Nipal, stating that it will afford him much pleasure to take charge of such plants as the Society may think advisable to forward to him from amongst those brought to India by the Right Hon'ble Lord Auckland.

From W. Dunbar, Esq., M. D., in charge of the Ramgaur battalion, to the same effect, stating that the climate of Dorunda, where he is stationed, resembles closely that of Hazareebaugh, and presents consequently a favorable opportunity for the cultivation of some of the aforesaid plants, particularly the atropa belladonna and curacum officinale.

From Dr. Smytman, of Bombay, stating that the Society's agents at that place have closed their business, and that there is consequently no person at that presidency to whom the members can pay their subscriptions. A letter was received also from W. Taylor, Esq., of Bombay, to the same effect.

It was consequently determined that Dr. Morehead be requested to point out an agent.

A preparation of scirrhus of the pylorus was presented for the museum by Dr. Beattie of Allahabad, through Dr. Ranken.

Part of a paper on mortification, by T. Wise, Esq., M. D., of Houghly, was then read.

Dr. Wise commences by defining life to be an additional property of organic structure beyond that of simple inorganic matter which pervades in different degrees all its parts, and renders it capable of resisting the physical effects of surrounding agents. The weakening of this principle to a certain degree, causes death, so in like manner the weakening of local vitality may destroy the part so weakened by its irritation, leading to the death of the patient in some cases; in others ending by the removal of the destroyed portion. The partial destruction of vitality is denominated mortification. Dr. W. divides gangrene; 1st, into that which is produced by local diseases or injuries; 2dly, into that which is reduced as a symptom of the state of the constitution; 3dly, the specific action of certain substances, as the ergot of rye, &c.

The causes of accidental gangrene he says act either directly or indirectly. The direct causes are the cessation of circulation, destruction of nervous energy, or the action of sedatives employed to weakened parts, as in violent bruises or extensive wounds including large blood vessels or nerves, tight ligatures, cold, exchorotics, &c. Dr. W. gives several cases illustrative of this variety, consisting of severe injuries of the limbs, chiefly compound fractures followed by mortification.

The indirect causes of accidental gangrene act as stimuli to parts already much weakened, as applying heat to a part weakened by cold, or exciting an action greater than the power of the part can continue to perform. Dr. W. then describes the usual symptom and phenomena of gangrene. He considers the shrinking and dark color to be vital actions. He combats the notion that the filling up of the blood-vessels with a plug of coagulated blood is the effect of mere coagulation of dead blood. He attributes it and the subsequent closure of the vessels to an increase of vitality in the blood, which fluid he says is no longer capable of remaining in a fluid state when its vitality is much encreased, but that it becomes fluid again as soon as the encreased vitality is removed. The excitement of the blood vessels in these cases, he believes, produces the exalted vitality of the contained blood.

The author remarks that the rapidity with which gangrene advances depends on the vitality of the part or of the tissue and its distance from the trunk. From a knowledge of this fact the Surgeon amputates a mortified limb before the line of separation between the living and dead matter is marked; even when the cellular tissue is in a state of gangrene. The indications of cure of this species of mortification are: 1st, removal of the exciting causes; 2nd, removal of distressing symptoms by reducing too great vascular action by means of anti-phlogistics, and allaying irritability and pain by opiates; 3rd, promotion of equable circulation by heat and moisture except in mortification produced by cold, or when opposed to the patient's feeling; 4th, supporting the vigor of the system by tonics and nourishing diet, wine, &c.

With regard to the propriety of amputation, Dr. Wise remarks that each case has its own peculiarities, and the Surgeon must be guided by them in his opinion. The feasibility and advantage of the operation in many cases of traumatic gangrene, there is abundant proof, and in gangrene from cold it is peculiarly applicable, because there is less danger of the disease returning.

The lateness of the hour and the length of the paper, rendered it necessary to postpone the remainder of Dr. Wise's communication till the next meeting.

MEDICAL RETIRING FUND.

Proceedings of a Meeting of Medical Officers assembled at Saugor, to take into consideration the proceedings of a Quarterly General Meeting of the subscribers to the Medical Retiring Fund, held at Calcutta on the 11th July, 1836.

Mr. Superintending-Surgeon H. Hough being unanimously called to the chair, Mr. Assistant-Surgeon R. Foley was requested to act as Secretary to the meeting. The proceedings of the Quarterly General Meeting of subscribers to the fund having been read, it was proposed by Mr. Surgeon Baillie, seconded by Mr. Surgeon Pringle,

That the meeting do resolve to promote by every means in their power the success of the fund, and that in furtherance of this purpose, immediate instructions be given to the Deputy Paymaster, to deduct our monthly subscriptions from 1st July last; and that on being furnished by the Secretary to the fund with statements of account, such of us as have not already paid up our arrears, do take measures to liquidate the same, with the least practicable delay.

Proposed by Dr. Pringle, seconded by Mr. Assistant-Surgeon Dickson,

That monthly subscriptions be henceforth paid in the same number of Company's* rupees as heretofore in sicca rupees, and that the arrears now due, be calculated in the same currency, credit being given to those who have already paid their subscriptions, for the difference between sicca and Company's rupees.

Proposed by Mr. Superintending Surgeon Hough, seconded by Dr. Eccles,

That in the opinion of the Meeting the granting annuities and bonuses at the same time, requires reconsideration, it being stated at Regulation 3d, Section 1st, of the additional appendix to the Regulations, that both are incompatible in the same fund.

Proposed by Mr. Asst.-Surgeon Dickson, seconded by Mr. G. Baillie,

That the managers of the Medical Retiring Fund be requested to memorialize the Honorable Court of Directors, to rescind the order which renders it obligatory on Superintending-Surgeons and Members of the Medical Board, to serve a certain number of years in their respective grades before they can retire upon the pension of their rank, that order being directly opposed to this principle of our fund, which has been instituted for the purpose of accelerating promotion, and raising us to the higher grades of our department, while we are yet capable of discharging our duties, with credit and satisfaction to ourselves, and with advantage to the service; whereas the effect (unintentional no doubt) of the order of the Honorable Court, is to retard promotion, by obliging us to prolong our service, for the purpose of obtaining the superior pension, to a period when, in many instances, infirmities, mental and physical, induced by climate and the fatigue and anxiety attendant on our professional duties, would render it advisable for the efficiency of the service that we should make way for others.

Proposed by Mr. Surgeon Baillie, seconded by Dr. Eccles,

That the Honorable Court of Directors be memorialized to place their medical officers on an equality with the other branches of their service, in respect to reduced period of service, as well as pensions for length of service;* and that as their Chaplains are allowed to retire on Major's pensions, after fifteen years' service, the same indulgence be granted to their no-less-deserving medical servants.

Proposed by Mr. Surgeon Graham, seconded by Dr. Foley,

That a copy of the proceedings of this meeting be circulated to the medical officers of the Saugor division, with a request that they unite with us in supporting the fund, from the operation of which the juniors of our body may expect early promotion, and advancement to the higher grades of our department, while yet in the vigor of life; and the seniors look forward to a handsome and necessary addition to the very inadequate pension at present allowed them for their long and arduous services.

ROBT. FOLEY, Secretary to the Meeting.

Saugor, 1st August, 1836.

Hurkaru.]

* Chaplains and medical officers enter the service about the same age, and after having incurred similar and considerable expense in the study of their professions, neither honors, nor riches, nor rank, nor glory fall to their share; as they came into the service, so they leave it, having merely their professional rank.

† There are Surgeons of thirty-one years' service now on the list, and who are entitled to a retiring pension of only £ 122 a-year.

* The present rate of exchange admits of this.

MEETING OF THE ASIATIC SOCIETY.

At the monthly meeting of the Asiatic Society, which took place on the evening of the 3d August, it was intimated, that, in consequence of the further explanations offered, Government had at length authorised the Society to undertake the printing of 500 copies of the Bishop of Cochin China's Dictionary of the Cochin Chinese language with its Latin version,—at a fixed cost to Government of 5,600 rupees. Of this sum, 3,500 is a personal allowance to the learned Bishop for his expenses during at least a twelve months' superintendence, (his labour of compilation having no other reward than the pride of literary fame); and for the remaining 2,000 rupees only Dr. Marshman has engaged to turn out the work—above 500 pages—at the Serampore Press, though the letters must be cut for the purpose. Dr. Marshman's offer was correctly viewed as one of pure generosity, made in the expectation of actual loss,—not to speak of the value of his personal labour.

A third oriental work of the unfinished publications handed over last year to the Society by Government, was laid upon the table,—NAISHADIA, a Sanscrit Poem, with copious notes by a Pundit of the Sanscrit College, very neatly printed at the Baptist Mission Press, in a thick volume of about 900 pages.

Among the communications to the Society, of which there were a considerable number in the notice, was a letter from Government, asking the opinion of the Society upon a proposition of Sir Alexander Johnston referred here from Madras, that the late Colonel Mackenzie's labours should be followed up by directing attention to the copying of inscriptions in all parts of the country, and pursuing other antiquarian enquiries. Sir Alexander, who has at present the charge of Colonel Mackenzie's manuscripts, seems to attach great importance to the acquisition of these materials of history, and suggests that researches should be made systematically and simultaneously every where at some cost, that is, the question upon which the Government of India may possibly differ from the compiler of Colonel Mackenzie's manuscripts. The matter was ordered to be referred to the Committee of Papers.

The table exhibited proofs that the Society was gaining very rapidly for its museum by the liberality of its contributors. Scores of stuffed birds and animals just received, invited the gaze of the visitors, and there was a live poisonous snake, (of a new species we believe) seven feet long, coiled in a little wire cage, which attracted a great deal of attention. The names of the donors, and the particulars of the valuable papers in the Secretary's box, will of course be given in the regular report which we shall copy from the journal.

Mr. William Speir was elected a Member, and Mr. Serjeant Dawe an assistant Member. The Meeting broke up at near eleven o'clock, having had a very full attendance.—Englishman.

NEW RULES FOR MANAGING THE RED SEA STEAMERS.

We extract from the last Government Gazette a new set of rules for the management of steamers to the Red Sea. This looks well; for unless some intention existed to keep up the communication with Egypt, we conclude that nothing further would have been done to regulate it. Indeed, it is now generally understood that either the Hugh Lindsay, or the new steamers will be dispatched twice at least to Suez during the ensuing season.

The report that positive orders had been sent out by the Court against the employment of the latter as packet boats, appears to have been erroneous. The time, therefore, we believe is not far distant when they will be employed for no other purpose, as the advantages to be derived from them are becoming more and more apparent every day.

It now appears that the Hugh Lindsay, on the occasion of her last arrival, brought bills of exchange to Bombay alone on the governments of the three presidencies, to the extent of at least sixty lakhs of rupees! By some individuals the amount is estimated at a great deal more. What she may have brought for Calcutta we cannot say; but probably not less than the above amount. The greater part of this money was intended for investment either in bills or produce for the China market; and but for the steamer would no doubt have been sent direct to Canton. A new source of trade, therefore, never looked forward to, nor even dreamt of, by the most sanguine advocates of steam navigation, has already sprung up from it; the effect of which, besides throwing business into the hands of the merchants of this place and Calcutta, will be, indeed, we may say, as far as Bombay is concerned, has been, to raise the price of the staple articles of commerce, such as cotton and opium, beyond what it would otherwise have been. And such, it may confidently be predicted, will always be the effect of a rapid communication with England.

As regards the Company, too, the advantages of overland packets are not less obvious. Had the funds which have been remitted to India been forwarded to China direct, the demand at home for bills on the Indian Governments would have been by no means so great as it was, and instead of the court being enabled to raise their price from 1s. 10d. to 1s. 11d. the rupee, as they did in the month of March, the inference is that it would have remained stationary. Now a single penny upon the rupee on 60 lakhs only—the value of the bills forwarded to Bombay—would amount to 2 lakhs and 72 thousand rupees—a sum which the Court of Directors clearly ought to place to the credit of steam navigation by the Red Sea.

The direct returns of the Hugh Lindsay we regret to say, have not been so large as we anticipated. The cause, however, is apparent upon a little examination. The number of passengers she takes is not half so great as a vessel expressly fitted up for the purpose would do; and the rate of postage by her is much too low; amounting to only a third of that charged between Alexandria and London, whereas, taking the expenses attending steam communication on this side the isthmus of Suez into consideration, it ought to be the very reverse; the English postage, however, being reduced to admit of it.

Another cause of the receipts from postage being so small is the abuse of the privilege of franking by the Directors. We understand that a single house in Bombay received packets on a late occasion, all free, the postage on which would have amounted to between six and seven hundred rupees; and the franks to Calcutta we have no doubt were equally numerous. It would be absurd, therefore, to take the receipts from this source as any criterion whatever. The Court, however, we have no doubt, after having done their very best to make them as low as possible, will point triumphantly to them as an argument against the whole scheme to which they are so obnoxious.—Bombay Courier.

Instructions and Regulations for Passengers proceeding in the Honourable Company's Armed Steamers to and from the Red Sea.

1.—Passage can be engaged on application at the Office of the Superintendent of the Indian Navy, when the vessel is in Bombay, or to the Commander when at the ports in the Red Sea, when persons so applying, will be furnished with a copy of these Regulations, to which their attention will be particularly called, and an acknowledgment of their intentions to comply therewith will be required, previous to their being entered on the list of passengers, and it is to be clearly understood, that any applicant for a passage may be rejected without a cause being assigned, the Commander, however, reporting such application and his reasons for rejection to the superintendent. The choice of sleeping berths must (except on an order from Government) be according to the priority of engagement for a passage, but the individual taking a passage must make his choice in person or by his Agent at the time of his engagement.

2.—The rates of passage money are as follows:

A cabin passage,.....	Rupees 800
A deck ditto,.....	600
Children in arms,.....	" "

Ditto from two years old and upwards if they do not sit at the cuddy table, a moiety of the passage money.

European servants,....	" 70
Native,.....	" 40

A passage from Mocha to Suez, .. one half the fixed rate.

A passage from Juddah to Suez, .. one third

" " Juddah to Bombay,..... two thirds

" " Mocha to Bombay,..... one half

For a shorter trip, in proportion to the distance.

3.—The short passages in the Red Sea are to be paid for on the person being received on board. It will be necessary for individuals not belonging to the Honorable Company's service to make the requisite arrangements with the Commander for the payment of the passage money either upon embarkation, or at Bombay on their arrival.

4.—Independent of the table they will have the attendance of a servant.

5.—The Vessel being commanded and officered by Commissioned Officers of the Indian Navy, and navigated under Martial Law, it is expected that all passengers will conduct themselves with the same circumspection as passengers on board His Majesty's or the Honorable Company's vessels of war, at the same time, every indulgence and consideration will be given to their comfort and accommodation, so long as it does not infringe on discipline.

6.—Passengers having occasion to complain of the neglect of servants, or of improper conduct on the part of any individual on board, will make the same known to the Commander, who will adopt such measures as he may deem necessary on the occasion. All complaints to the Commander by passengers must be made either upon the quarter-deck, or by writing to the Commander, who will exert the general control he has over all on board.

7.—The baggage of each passenger must not exceed more than three boxes of the following dimension.

	feet	inches
Length.....	2	6
Breadth.....	1	3

with two three dozen cases, and as there will not be stowage on board the vessel for small tents, those articles will be supplied by Government at Suez and Cairo, at the rate of a small bechova for two persons.

8.—Passengers wishing to invite any of the Officers or Midshipmen to the table, may do so, first obtaining the Commander's consent, when a book will be kept for the purpose of noting such occurrences, when the sum of rupees 6 will be charged to the passengers giving such invitation, who will give the amount, or an order for the same, to the purser.

9.—All passengers who are not unwell, are expected to take their meals at the public table. The breakfast hour will be half past eight, dinner at three, and tea at sunset, with a sandwich at nine p. m.

10.—Passengers will be allowed 24 hours after the arrival of the vessel to make their arrangements, but should they remain any time after that on board, it must be at their own expense, paying at the rate of eight rupees per diem, and the same on embarkation. Should they wish to live on board before the day appointed for sailing, the Commander may receive them upon their paying the same sum.

N. B.—All calculations are in Bombay rupees.

12.—Every passenger will pledge his word (in the letter, stating his intention of complying with the regulations) that he will carry no letter whatever with him on board the steamer, without having paid the usual postage at the Post Office, for letters via the Red Sea.

13.—When an application is made for a passage in Bombay, the applicant must produce a certificate from the Sub-Treasurer that one third of the passage money has been paid into the Treasury, before his name can be entered as a passenger at the Indian Navy Office.

14.—In the event of an individual not proceeding in the steamer after his name is entered as a passenger, he shall forfeit the third of the passage money paid into the Treasury, under the preceding article.

15.—Ten days previous to the period on which the steamer is advertised to depart, each passenger is to pay the remaining two-thirds of his passage money into the Treasury, in default of which his passage will be considered to be forfeited, together with the amount paid into the Treasury under the thirteenth article.

16.—No transfer of accommodation in the steamer by an individual who has taken his passage to one who has not taken his passage will be permitted.

17.—Any officer from another presidency or from an out-station making an application for information, should have his name put down according to the date of that application, and a reasonable time be given for receiving his conclusion.

18.—Each cabin of the "Hugh Lindsay" (excepting the Captain's) is to accommodate two passengers.

19.—The deck passengers who only pay rupees six hundred (600) have no right, it is to be understood, to sleep in the cuddy.

20.—The person who first engages a passage will be entitled to an entire cabin, and so on, for the whole of the cabins allotted for passengers, but should more passengers offer than the allotted number to the cuddy, it will then be necessary for them to share their cabins with another, retaining their choice of whom they will take in, the last passenger getting a cabin being the first to divide his cabin in gradation upwards.

21.—Deck passengers are only to be taken after the cabin and cuddy berths are filled.

* CHARLES MALCOLM.

Instructions for the Commanders of the Hon'ble Company's Armed Steamers relative to the conveyance of Passengers, their accommodations, table, &c. &c.

1.—The Commanders are to attend carefully to the comfort and accommodation of passengers; whilst they do this, they will take care to preserve their characters as Commissioned Officers in the Honorable Company's service.

2.—All complaints from passengers, either against officers, seamen, or servants, are only to be received on the quarter deck, or by letter. If necessary the Commander may have them investigated in private; every attention is to be immediately given to them, and every means taken to give satisfaction.

3.—The Commander will preside at the head of the table, and it is expected that by his example he will prevent any excess of conviviality, which must be preserved on board the steam packets.

4.—The Commander is not to receive any present whatever under any circumstances, without the permission of Government applied for through the Superintendent, and will caution Officers of the service under his command not to receive a present from any passenger on board. A non-compliance with this order, will subject them to a court-martial, and any officers found engaged in any species of trade whatever, or merchandize, will also subject themselves to a trial for disobedience of orders. This will not prevent the Commander himself taking or granting permission to the Officers taking on board any small quantity of coffee or other useful produce, provided it is for their own use; the application for permission to take on board such produce must be made in writing to the Commander, and an account kept of whatever is received on board either for himself or for others by his permission.

5.—The Commander, if there is no agent appointed by Government, will engage passengers in the Red Sea, agreeably to the first article of the Regulations and Instructions, and he will not reject any applicant without some substantial grounds for so doing; however, he will be very careful in ascertaining, that those who apply for passages, and not belonging to the Company's service, have the means of paying for their passage on the arrival at the Presidency, all those taking short passages in the Red Sea will pay the passage money before they are received on board.

6.—The Commander will be particular in directing the Officers of the watch not to speak to the passengers, but give their sole attention to their duty upon which the safety of all vessels (but particularly a steamer) so much depends.

7.—All orders and regulations for the better government of the H. C.'s vessels of war that do not interfere with these instructions will be duly attended to, and the Commander will be held responsible for any breach thereof.

8.—The Commander is to provide and manage the mess table, &c. finding every thing for the passengers according to a proportionate scale drawn up by a Committee, and with which he is furnished by the directions of Government.

9.—The Commander will receive four hundred and fifty rupees for each passenger for whom he provides a table when the number on the voyage to or from Suez does not exceed twelve, exclusive of children, and when above that number, four hundred rupees for each, with reduced rates for such as are taken on board at any of the intermediate ports between Bombay and Suez, viz.

If provided with a passage from Mocha to Suez, one-half the fixed rate; if from Judda one-third, and on the return voyage, if taken up at Judda; if at Mocha one-half, and for a shorter trip, in proportion to the distance.

When Officers proceed on board the steamer on duty, if entertained at table, the Commander will be entitled to receive from Government at a per diem allowance agreeably to the scale laid down by the Government Order of the 18th December, 1834, for the sailing vessels of the Indian Navy.

10.—The cabin furniture, plate, table linen, &c. to be completed so as to fully accommodate at least twelve passengers. The several articles henceforward are to be kept up by the Commander and considered as transferrable in good order to his successors, or to Government when required, the state being in fact subject to no demands whatever on account of the mess, beyond the stipulated rates of rupees four hundred and fifty, or four hundred, agreeably to the number of passengers, and the trifling expense to be incurred by the issue of ship's provisions to the additional servants required to be entertained for each voyage.

11.—Deck passengers are only to be taken after the cabins and cuddy berths are filled.

CHARLES MALCOLM.

THE BLACK ACT COMMITTEE.

WEDNESDAY, 10TH AUGUST, 1836.

At a meeting of the Committee held this day at the office of Mr. Dickens at half past ten o'clock, A. M.

Present.—Mr. Burkingyoung, Mr. Cockerell, Mr. R. S. Thomson, Mr. K. R. Mackenzie, Mr. Speir, Mr. Watson and Mr. Kyd.

The Secretary informed the Members present of Mr. Turton's intended departure on Monday next to Bombay and then to England via Egypt at the end of October or beginning of November, and his anxiety to forward the views of the Petitioners against Act. No. XI. of 1836, and act as their agent (paid or unpaid) in England.

After some conversation respecting the amount realized and the prospects of the subscription which seemed, as far as it had yet gone, to be satisfactory, it was proposed and resolved:—

1.—That a sum of at least Co.'s Rs. 30,000 ought to be raised, and that a sum of not less than £1,000 be appropriated as a yearly salary to Mr. Turton for two years for his services as agent to the Petitioners against Act No. XI. of 1836, and the balance kept as applicable to expenses.

2.—That the amount when realized be remitted to the Committee of the East India and China Commercial Association to be applied for the above purposes.

3.—That the amount of subscriptions already received be published, together with these resolutions; and that the subscriptions of the friends to the cause at the other Presidencies and in the Mofussil, be invited through the medium of the Press.

4.—That the Secretary be authorized to communicate with Mr. Turton to know whether the above arrangement will be agreeable to him, and write him to meet the Committee at an adjourned Meeting on Saturday next, at half past ten o'clock.

5.—That the Union Bank be appointed treasurers, and that a list of the subscribers be sent to the Bank and the Bank be requested to collect the amount.

6.—That the Petitions and Memorials now engrossed and laid before the Meeting having been previously published in the newspapers after revision and adoption by the Committee, the Secretary be now authorized to affix thereto the signatures of all those residents in the Mofussil who have already given their consent to sign a respectful petition to Parliament or who may hereafter do so.

7.—That the petitions now engrossed be first circulated for signature to the different mercantile and other establishments, and individual residents in Calcutta, and finally placed at the Exchange Room, for signature in duplicate.

8.—That the whole of the subscriptions now received be entered in the Secretary's general book immediately, and before any publication be made, and it is requested by the Committee that all the individuals who have kindly taken charge of subscription books, may aid the Secretary by either sending their books to his office, or entering the amount immediately on being applied to for that purpose.

T. DICKENS, Secretary.

THE BLACK ACT PETITION.

To the Clerical, Civil, Military, Planters, Merchants and others, residents of the Mofussil who have testified their desire to petition for a Repeal of Act No. XI. of 1836.

Gentlemen,—If I were able, I would address every one of you in person: I should not grudge the trouble, but it would take more time than I could spare, and the expense would be needlessly incurred; for I am sure those friendly to the cause do not need to be propitiated by the mere compliments of a letter to each: a printed circular would cost money and be of no more use than this address, and I could not for the reason above given, write a thousand letters with my own hand.

The subscription begun in Calcutta, already reaches Rs. 17,000; by the day after to-morrow, I trust it will be 20,000; and as yet, with some few exceptions, we have scarce any thing from the Mofussil: when the subscription becomes known, I am sure the up-country friends to the cause will not disappoint us. I write this letter to make known to you at the earliest period, what is doing and has been done: the larger the subscription, the more complete will be the demonstration of our sincere dislike to this act, the greater the moral effect produced. No man can say the Committee have chosen a bad agent for this purpose; no man can say that £1,000 a year is an extravagant remuneration for a man who is both zealous and able—so fitted for the end in view, that I will venture to say a better could not have been found. Should there be a surplus (as I anticipate) beyond the amount at present voted, you may depend upon the Committee to take honest care that every additional expense shall be accounted for and not a sixpence spent but for the ends the petitioners have all in view.

Should there be an ultimate surplus, we can be under no embarrassment in finding for it a fitting appropriation. In case of a plethora, an "excess de richesses," we might hand it over (with your good leave) to the Committee for the Library which was to have been built to commemorate our thankfulness for the liberation of the Press, and the merit of Sir C. Metcalfe and the Council in passing that bold and honest law: that public undertaking labours under quite a contrary complaint.

You can aid us of Calcutta, striving for the repeal of Act No. XI., in two ways. 1st, by sending to me, as Secretary of the Committee, any further signatures to the petitions, your influence may procure, from parties who really understand the merits of the question; 2dly, and most efficiently, by sending through your agents, or direct to the Union Bank, your subscriptions. The sooner this is done the better; as the proverb says,

"He gives twice who gives quickly."

The Petitions and Memorials for the repeal of Act No. XI. are engrossed in duplicate, in circulation, and are being rapidly and numerously signed: the GENERAL PETITION will be ready in a few days. This has three main objects; 1st, to obtain a Legislative Council sitting with open doors; 2d, a Legislative Council with a more liberal constitution, and which shall contain some members (however appointed,) neither Company's servants nor Crown appointees; 3d, the admission of CHRISTIANS of every class to the benefits of English law and the new code on the footing of Englishmen, and to secure to ALL as well as Englishmen, the benefits of the HABEAS CORPUS and many of the most valuable rights and privileges of our law. When ready, this will be sent to Mr. Turton and reach him at Bombay before he leaves India. AID THE COMMITTEE AND BINK SMALL DIFFERENCES OF OPINION, the great obstacle, (and which I have ever found in this country, peculiarly formidable) to doing real business or success in any public undertaking.

I subscribe myself, Gentlemen, your faithful Servant,

T. DICKENS, Secretary.

ADDITIONAL SIGNATURES AGAINST THE BLACK ACT.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE BENGAL HURKAU AND CHRONICLE.

SIR,—I forward for publication a further list of parties, who have signified their wish to subscribe to the Petition against Act No. XI. of 1836, since the last announcement.

Your's truly,

August 13, 1836.

MRS. LEACH'S DRAMATIC SOIREE.

Leach's name is the best 'Open Sesame' to the purses of the laughter-loving. Her little entertainment on Friday evening, the 5th August, drew together at least five hundred persons, including nearly all the great, the good, the beautiful, and the gallant. For certain reasons we are unable to speak to the merit of the performances, and therefore borrow the following from the Oriental Observer of Saturday evening; but we may be permitted to infer that the representation was, on the whole, satisfactory to the audience, seeing that in spite of the intolerable heat, and the difficulty of hearing distinctly, scarcely any persons left until the performances concluded:—

Mrs. Leach's card was a lucky one, and drawn to a fortunate extent, as it would appear the whole community, among whom were not a few of the highest, club'd together for her benefit; and if an evening happily spent is conducive to the preservation of health, the lieges' coin has answered not only the little prima donna's purpose but their own. Thus spending money well does as much good as giving it.

"The Liar" has been so long a stock farce, that a notice of the plot, if it can be said to have one, would not be a seemingly afterpiece to the performance, which indeed merits a more lengthened notice than we have leisure to bestow. The versatile genius of Master Modus lost nothing of its reputation in Young Wilding: he appeared, as he always does, quite at ease. We may say of his performance last evening, that the truth of the acting admirably displayed the falsehood of the character. Count Almaviva in that 'compound of evil' Papillon, had not half enough to do, but he made the most of what the author had assigned him. Henry the IVth, 'with proviso, and exception', walked the part of Sir James Elliot very creditably: the character itself is 'a fellow of no mark nor likelihood', and does not afford scope for the princely dignity of mounting Bolingbroke. Of Mrs. Leach it is unnecessary to speak, and we may terminate our notice by saying that the farce was excellently performed.

"The Card Party" is an oddity in its way, and a very tolerable holiday affair. We think it would bear a repetition, and certain we are that the splendour of the scenery, the dresses, the new music, composed expressly for the occasion, the ghost, tyrant, plotting, knavery, &c. will not fail to reward the attempt.

The Drama flourishes in Calcutta. We hear that the French performers, who have recently arrived, and regarding whose success some apprehensions were entertained with reference to the present state of the theatre, are likely to meet with as distinguished patronage as the most sanguine well wishers of the drama could have anticipated.—Englishman.

THE FRENCH DRAMATIC COMPANY.

UNE AFFAIRE D'HONNEUR AND VATEL.

The French Company recently arrived, made their debut on the evening of the 23d August, in a little theatre fitted up in one of the large rooms on the second floor at the Government House. The pieces chosen for the occasion were two very humorous one-act Vaudevilles—"Une Affaire d'Honneur," and "Vatel," or the illustrious cook. The principal role in both pieces was taken by M. Fleury, who was very respectably supported by our old friend M. Sivord, and by five others of the corps, namely, Madame Thonon, Mademoiselle Fleury, M. Bonniol, M. Alphonse and M. Charles, the last a young actor, destined, we guess, for the parts that were assigned to M. Minard in the former Company, but, to judge from a first performance, not quite equal to him. The two ladies had not much opportunity of displaying their talents: we prefer them both to the "adorable" Flore of the last Company; but the prima donna we understand to be Madame de Ligny, who is unfortunately still laid up with illness (on which account the performance at first selected for next Friday at the Town Hall has been changed, as she will not be able to appear), and we hear that a lady since arrived, Madame Florival, has also very considerable dramatic powers; they must be something much above par to be equal to those of Madame Isidore, whose brilliant tact and extraordinary vivacity were the life of the former Vaudevilles and the admiration of every body. But of M. Fleury we cannot speak in too much praise; with all the humour of our friend Waleski, he has the advantage over him in voice and a knowledge of music, and perhaps also a greater versatility of comic talent. If it could be made worth the while of Waleski to quit his new occupation in the blus line and join the Vaudevillists, their company would be a strong one, and we might have scenes of inimitable drollery from the regular French Comedy, as well as in the more humble range of the Vaudeville. The invitations were special, but the crowd nevertheless was considerable, and never was a variety of attraction more successfully introduced at the Government House parties, or introduced with more liberal consideration for a class of talented artistes, for whom the Calcutta public is too parrow a field, because there are few who understand the language well enough to appreciate the merits of their performances. But there was laughing enough and unreserved applause too, about the incomparable boudin chigoté, (to which the Swedish Ambassador had helped himself three times) and in other very ludicrous scenes; and if every one did not take the jokes, the example of his Lordship was enough to banish all gravity from the room.—Calcutta Courier.

LES VISITANDINES.

We had the gratification, on the evening of the 30th August, of seeing the second of the two pieces—Les Visitandines—performed by the French Company at the Town Hall, and quite sure are we that the reports of the few who did attend (some seventy or eighty) will spread wide the good fame of the talented corps, and cause many a regret that they were suffered to make their first public exhibition before so scanty an audience—we had ourselves to regret being too late for the first piece. The Visitandines is a lively little comic French Opera of two acts, very popular in France, and full of interests to those who understand the language—when played as it was. In the first place M. Thonon is a capital leader of an Orchestra—in the opinion of the best judges quite as good as Planel, or better. Then M. Fleury is not only an accomplished actor, but he has a very good voice and is a very good singer into the bargain: his song in the disguise of a father confessor was deservedly applauded. M. Bonniol has a good tenor voice, and sung and played with much effect. But we cannot particularize the merits of the performers. They certainly exceeded our expectations, notwithstanding what we had seen and heard about them. We were glad to see Madame Nouveau enlisted in the company, and should be still more pleased to welcome back from the Mofussil our inimitable friend Waleski. But what is the use of these selfish wishes, without audiences that will pay? Can they be gratified unless the lovers of Music and the patrons of the Drama will put their shoulders to the wheel? Unless these, with their own subscriptions and by their example provide grist to the mill, it cannot work. Let them secure a good attendance, by engaging "the beauty and fashion" of the place to resort to the Town Hall, and gratify themselves, which patronizing those whose profession and interest and pride and delight it is to entertain them. We hear talk of an intention to get up a subscription, as was done for the Italian Operas last year, and heartily do we hope the plan may succeed.—Calcutta Courier.

SUPREME COURT.

MONDAY, AUGUST 8, 1836.

A case of larceny was brought to-day before the Supreme Court, under the following circumstances:—A female servant of the zenana, or female apartments, of Peary Mohun Bose, was charged with fraudulently removing from her master's house, sundry valuable ornaments, such as a gold nith, or ring appended to the nose, two pearls, a ruby, one pair of bracelets, a golden necklace, an armlet, nineteen rupees in silver, and various other articles. It appears that the woman, Bhogobutty, had absconded from her master's premises, about the beginning of May last, taking away with her the aforementioned articles, and repaired to the village of Boheety, Zilla of Burdwan, where her domicile is situate, and where she was found by one Atum Sing, in the service of Peary Mohun Bose and a police peon, Anitolla by name, who recovered the stolen property. That part of the stolen articles were deposited in the house of one Nuffruddy, inhabitant of the same village, and both the woman Bhogobutty, and the former, were apprehended. Strong suspicions naturally arose as to Nuffruddy being a particeps criminis. The stolen property was produced and identified by the owner.

The prisoner alledged in her defence, that those ornaments were given to her by a female Brahmin, as she was bathing at the Ghaut, and that she was unaware of their belonging to her master, and further, that as she was about to return to Calcutta after having ascertained the real owner of those articles, she was seized by the Police; and that having been searched by the durwan of her master's house, she could not have been the author of the larceny.

Sir Benjamin Malkin addressed the Jury, and summed up the evidence. The point to be considered was whether there existed sufficient proof of the fact of the woman having absconded from her master's house with his property, or whether there could be any probability in the story of the jewels having been given to her by a female Brahmin, and whether also the prisoner Nuffruddy was not an accessory after the fact, an opinion to which his Lordship seemed to incline. The Jury declared Bhogobutty—guilty, and Nuffruddy—not guilty. Sentence:—transportation.

Another case of larceny occurred. A shopkeeper at Hautcola in Calcutta, went at about the hour of gun-fire in the morning to Balyagat after locking every thing in his house, and returned home at one o'clock. On his return he found the tie or chord of the outward door cut, the staple of the inner one broken, and various utensils and pieces of cloth removed. A chowkeedar, Banny, of the Hautcola thanna, having gone to the complainant's house at nine in the morning, and observing the fastenings of the outer door cut through and the door wide open, called for the inmate, and receiving no answer, went in and saw the prisoner, who beckoned and told him to keep quiet, but being seized hold of, they struggled, when the chowkeedar called aloud for the thannadar, who took away the thief and the property about to be stolen.

Mussram, a ferry man, and Pran, a neighbour of the complainant, testified to the prisoner's having wrapped up various utensils in a cloth, and removed a chest to the door, when he was prevented by the interference of the Police man. On the stolen articles being exhibited, the owner recognized his property.

Sir Benjamin Malkin addressed the Jury, stating that this was a case of theft, or larceny, and not one of burglary, although the theft had not received its complete execution.

The Jury returned a verdict of not guilty of burglary—guilty of stealing.

The Thannadar being called by his Lordship, declared that the prisoner had been, on a former occasion, committed to the House of Correction for three months. Sentence:—eighteen months hard labour.—Hurkaru.

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 10.

The King v. Imaum Selim alias Sidi.

A CASE OF MURDER.

Kistomony, (a native Hindoo female.)—I live in Banstollah lane, and have my own house there. I knew Yessop Khan; he was a friend of mine. I was from my childhood in his keeping. Yessop was murdered about 17 days ago. I saw him on the day of the murder at 10 p. m. when he came to me, and then I went to the part of my house where I sleep and he went in with me. I was sitting when my friend began to undress, and at that time a girl of the name of Madhub ran into my dwelling where she occupies a room. On being asked what was the matter, she answered in a fright, "there is some body," and ran out; when as I was going to shut my door it was forced open by the prisoner here present, who rushed in; on which my friend Yessop said to him, why do you thus abruptly come? Sit down here quietly; the women are frightened. The prisoner replied you are an hurrām xada and struck him with his hand; on which my friend shoved me out and I ran into the street, where I called for help. A person wounded and stabbed ran towards my house followed by others. I did not know that man before. Soon after the prisoner had got out of my house, I returned home and saw my friend lying down, wounded on one side, and another man lying down near him. I knew the face of the man who came to my house, as he had come close to me when I first ran into the street, where I remained at a little distance from my house. I saw about 20 persons run into it, and almost instantly come out. I concealed myself in the street and then saw the prisoner come out of the house a short time after the 20 others had left it; and he ran in the direction of the Mutchua Bazar. There was some moonlight and I observed his dress, as he sped away. I observed his countenance. I have no doubt whatever that this prisoner is the same individual. He wore a sort of coat, with a pajama, the coat hanging about half way down his legs, and he had a cap on his head and a sort of turban tied round it. As the prisoner ran I had him in sight at no great distance. He ran with his arm raised up, but I saw nothing in his hand. When he escaped from the house, after striking my friend, I neither then, nor during the action, remarked any instrument in his hand. I do not recollect when he was taken. I did not observe what may have happened to him in the street on account of the crowd. I returned home, and went upstairs, where in the inner verandah I saw a man lying down: the verandah was deluged with blood. I saw my friend Yessop upstairs lying in the outer verandah. The stranger whom I saw was breathing, but Yessop was lying a corpse, having received a wound in the left breast out of which something had come of a bluish colour. The wound was large; the whole place was drenched with blood. I tried to give my friend some water; I raised his head, but I found him motionless and perfectly gone! near the stranger I perceived the Thanadar take up a sheath or silver scabbard, about ten inches in length and bended. It was neither mine nor Yessop's, and I had never seen any such thing before, nor does it belong to any person in the house where I live.

The corpse of the stranger was removed, that of Yessop was examined by several gentlemen, and a Doctor.

Prisoner declared that he did not know deponent, and never saw her.

Dr. Bain.—I am a Doctor. I saw and examined the body of a man on the 26th July about 2 p. m. I remember seeing the last witness. The body was lying near the threshold of the door, with the head in the room, and the feet in the verandah. It was on its back, and a great deal of coagulated blood was spilt near it. The body was clothed. The wound lay over the seat of the stomach, obliquely from the left to the right side of the body downwards; it measured eight inches and a quarter, and the stomach and the transverse arch of the colon protruded through the wound. I then proceeded to open the body. I saw beneath the integuments a wound corresponding with the external, and dividing the cartilages of the ribs; the 4th and 5th of the left, and 5th and 6th ribs of the right side. I raised the ribs and saw an extensive wound on the right lobe of the liver. The pericardium was also divided to the extent of about three inches, and a wound was perceived extending into the right ventricle of the heart, near its apex. The cavity of the chest was filled with blood from the wound in the heart; and the same wound in the liver integuments and ribs caused the further effusion of blood. I believe it was done at one blow and with a very sharp instrument. I further believe the instrument to be two-edged and flat; but I could not tell its exact breadth. The edges as well as the point must have been very sharp. I think it was plunged into the left side, and then turned downwards and outwards from the body, and that the wound and the consequent hemorrhage were the causes of the death—especially the hemorrhage from the heart. The blood that was effused, proceeded from the wound in the liver and integuments, and not from the wound in the heart. The former wound was mortal, independent of the wound in the heart.

Imaum Box.—I am a thanadar. I know Kistomony. I went to her house, on the 25th July, at 10 o'clock p. m. I saw a chokeedar dead in the street in my way to that place. In the upper story, I saw a man lying near the door of the room, with his bowels ripped open. There was life in him, and I saw a carved silver scabbard lying near the corpse. (Witness exhibits the instrument which appears to be that of a kris, without a handle.) I saw the corpse of another person, part of its body being in the room, and part of it in the verandah. There was a wound in the left side, and something had come out which appeared to have the consistency of fat. I have had the scabbard in my possession ever since. There was no weapon in its sheath (here the thanadar exhibited a silver and a leather sheath.)

Prisoner had no question to put to witness.

Dr. Bain declared that the scabbard was of such a description, that an instrument fitting it would inflict, in his opinion, a wound similar to that he observed, which could not have been inflicted with a small or ordinary knife, but by means of a carving knife; and not, in his opinion also, with a small curved knife exhibited in Court.

Madhub.—(A Hindoo girl of 12 or 13 years.) I live in the same house as Kistomony. A Caffree entered her house, at night, at about 10 o'clock. It was the prisoner who is here. I never saw him before. On that evening he wanted to seize hold of me. He had on an ungurka or peculiar dress, a cap, something like a turban, and a pajama. I ran from him and shut myself up. I only saw him afterwards at the police. I saw the prisoner in the presence of this gentleman, (pointing to Mr. Greenlaw.) I recognize the prisoner at the bar, who had at that time a shawl roomal round his head. Kistomony was sitting with Yessop. I saw this prisoner enter into Kistomony's room, where he followed me, and I then went out of the room, and hid myself. In my hiding place I heard two people struggling in the room of Kistomony. Kistomony went out in the street. I saw people come into the house, as I got a moment out of my hiding place, I saw Yessop lying dead in the verandah with his face downwards: another person was lying near Kistomony's door, wounded but still breathing. His bowels were ripped open; his entrails were all out. There are three rooms opening on the verandah, of which I occupy one and Kistomony two. I observed nothing—no weapon in the hand of the prisoner.

Greesh Chunder.—I keep a shop in the Burra Bazar. I have known Kistomony by sight for these three or four months. I was returning to my house from my shop when I saw Kistomony standing at her door and screaming out, that a murder had been committed in her house. I went in, mounted up the stairs and saw this sailor (pointing to the prisoner) whom I recognize although it was night when I saw him. I could see him by the light of the lamp burning in the house. I heard the prisoner call another man, by the appellation of Muddershe, and saw the prisoner draw some instrument from his side and strike the other man. The wounded person clapped his hand on his left breast, and in the act of falling called out baprae, marae! He staggered and was about to fall when I ran away. There were other persons, strangers to me, standing below me on the stair case at the time.

Mr. Macan.—On the morning of the 26th July, I went into Kistomony's house, Barfuttollah Gully, Burra Bazar. On going upstairs I saw the body of a native, lying partly out and partly in the verandah. He was dead. In an inner verandah, I found a man lying wounded, whom I ordered to be sent to the Native Hospital. I met a chokeedar dead in the street. I proceeded to Mutchua Bazar in search of a man called Imaum Sidi, or Salim, whom I could not find at his house; and then went to another house in the neighbourhood. I found him not; and then proceeded to Amratollah to the house of a Nacoda. I asked the Nacoda if Imaum Sidli was in his house, which he first denied; but afterwards the Nacoda returned, desired me to go with him, and under the stairs on a large chest I found the prisoner and caused him to be taken into custody. On doing so, I observed one of his fingers recently cut; and on my asking him how it had occurred, he replied that he had been cutting meat. Then I proceeded with him to the house of Kistomony, and from thence to the native hospital. With him I brought to the police the large chest whereon he had been found, and two small ones also. The large chest was opened in my presence at the Police office, by constable Stephen, who had a bunch of keys. There were two locks on the chest, one padlock and the other a common chest lock. The padlock and key were peculiar. I heard from the prisoner that those chests were his; I then ordered their removal to the Police. I understood that they were all the prisoner's property. I am certain that the prisoner told me that the large chest was his. The body of the chokeedar was lying in the street. I shewed prisoner that dead body, and he said that he knew nothing about it.

Prisoner had no question to put to Mr. Macan.

Constable Stevens.—I am a police constable. I went to Kistomony's house on the 25th July evening last. I saw in my way a chowkeedar lying dead in the street. I went into the house. On entering the first room where there was a light I saw a man lying on his back and dead. He had a large wound on his breast. In the next room, there was another man, lying on his side, and alive. I saw a large wound on his person, and his bowels partly hanging out. I then went into the room at the door of which he was lying. I took a light, and saw in the outer verandah drops of blood upon the floor. I traced it up to the place where the body rested. About two yards from the door I observed this cloth (cloth produced in Court). I heard a gongling underneath the cloth, and found this bunch of keys (also exhibited) attached to the cloth. I shewed them to the man that was lying wounded, who was apparently sensible. He did not claim those keys, which I took to the police, and which have remained in my custody. The day following I was sent from the police along with the prisoner to his own house. He went from the police to shew me a knife which he stated to belong to him. In his house he lifted a mat and shewed me this knife (exhibiting a curved knife). There was a padlock on the door of the (occupied) room of the house, and I was sure, from the appearance of the lock that I could find a key would fit it. I returned to the police with prisoner, and took the knife with me. Then I confined the prisoner, and took the keys to Mr. Macan. I then went to the place where the prisoner was confined. On exhibiting the keys to the prisoner he said that those keys were his; the same keys found near the dead bodies in Kistomony's house. I then went to the police office where there were three chests. Mr. Macan was there. I opened the largest of those three chests in Mr. Macan's presence, with this brass-key (exhibiting the same). There were attached to the chest an English and a Chinese lock; I opened the Chinese lock with this (exhibiting key); I opened the other lock with this other key (exhibiting it also); and I am certain from my own observation that these keys belong to the bunch which I found in Kistomony's house. With this key I opened the next largest chest (exhibiting the key). [The constable next produced a key opening the smallest box, which key is partly coppered. It is worthy of remark that the knife produced did not fit the silver scabbard nor the sheath.]

[The woman Kistomony was called again, and the keys exhibited to her.] I saw these keys when they were found. I never saw them before. Yessep had no such keys. Madhub declared that she never had any knowledge of the keys.

Gungaram Jumadar.—I know Mr. Stephens the constable. I know the prisoner at the bar. I interpreted between Mr. Stephens and the prisoner. The prisoner once told me I had a bunch of keys tied to a cloth, but know not where they are. Then the keys were produced to him, and he declared them to be his property.

The prisoner had no question to ask.

Azi Illal.—I am a merchant. I know the prisoner; he is also a merchant. I knew him in his own country of Juddah, for long time. I am of the same country as he. I know the business of this day. The day preceding the night when the murder was committed, I saw prisoner in the Mutchwa Bazaar. He was dressed in a white courtah. He had on his head a cloth having the appearance of a half shawl, and worn in the way of a pagree. It was an English shawl. I have no doubt he had a cap. (A shawl being exhibited.) It is something like this. I never saw him with a dagger or side-arm. (On the silver scabbard being exhibited.) All men in my country wear a scabbard like that, and a knife to fit it. Prisoner had purchased a similar one in Juddah, five or six years ago, and wore it there. It had cost 300 rupees. I cannot see the difference between this and other scabbards; they are all of the same shape and fashion. The one he wore was, perhaps, a trifle larger than the one I now see. I have known prisoner in Calcutta these last 10 months. Prisoner is known by many respectable people here, being of a respectable family himself. He had opened a shop where he sold coffee and respectable people resorted there. [Here His Lordship observed to the jury, that on putting these questions, he wished to allow the prisoner the benefit of a good testimony].

Dr. Bain.—(The knife found by constable Stephens is exhibited.) I am of opinion that this knife is not large enough nor sharp enough to inflict such a wound as I saw in the deceased's body.

Prisoner had nothing to say to witness.

A chowkeedar named Durrup. I know the prisoner. I went to his house with Mr. Macan to search it. Prisoner lives alone there. The day after the murder, I found two pieces of clothes under the almogra near the place where the prisoner slept. [Witness then shews a bundle consisting of a cowta and of a pajama, found in prisoner's house.] They were wrapped up together under the almogra. [The great quantity of large blood stains upon them leaves hardly a doubt of the commission of the murder.] When I saw them first the stains on them were fresh.

Prisoner.—I witnessed a quarrel in the streets, at four o'clock in the afternoon of the day, and I went home. In the morning, two persons came to my house, and I offered them some coffee. Those persons wanted to get money from me. They then informed me that unless I paid them a certain sum they would get me put into custody. I then went out with those two men to Amratollah, and told a friend the circumstance. I am not concerned at all in the transaction.

Mursa Ally.—I am a maker of finger-rings. A person came to me and asked me if a Caffere lived there, pointing to your house (addressing himself to the prisoner) and you went away with him. This was on a Tuesday or Wednesday, about 17 days ago, between 7 and 8 A.M. This is all I know.

Agar John was sworn.—Prisoner wished to ask him no question.

Abdul Ruzae.—I am a merchant; I know the prisoner by sight. I heard nothing unfavorable to his character previous to this affair.

Hussen Badwy.—Prisoner arrived here in an Arab ship, nine or ten months ago. I have known him since that time and not before. He was apparently a good man. I never heard or saw anything to his prejudice before.

Verdict : guilty. Sentence : death.

SIR JOHN PETER GRANT, after summing up the evidence, made a most impressive address to the prisoner, and confirming the sentence of the jury, condemned Imaum Selim or Sidi to be hanged on Friday next, between 5 and 7 A. M.—Hurkaru.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 11.

The Court rose to-day at 11 A. M., and Sir John Peter Grant, at Mr. Clarke's request, postponed the hearing of the case till to-morrow, at the usual hour. The reader may recollect, that early in the morning of the 25th July last, an audacious murder was committed in the maidan, on the person of a tailor of Captain Johnson. The chief perpetrator of this horrible deed appears to have been a khudmutgar, in the employ of Captain Johnson, and other menial associates. At a period when domestic discipline is so relaxed, and systematic theft and robbery carried on to so fearful an extent, the community cannot be too often put on their guard against the fraudulent and nefarious character of the native inmates of their houses. We hope and trust that if the circumstances of the case turn out, upon the evidence, to be such as they are stated to be, an exemplary punishment will be awarded by the wisdom of the Court. We shall give our readers the condensed details of to-morrow's proceedings.

The other and last case, to be tried this session, is that of the murder of the Captain of the ship Sumatia, which occurred on the 17th June last. The Gunner of that vessel, a native of the eastern islands, stated that he had killed his Captain, and the Chief mate, only in self-defence. From what we know of the Manila character, and the extraordinary number of judicial records and sentences, testifying to their ferocious dispositions and relentless spirit of revenge, we strongly suspect the veracity of the Gunner, who is reported to be a Manila man—Arcades ambo. The approaching trial will set the matter at rest, as well as the real date of the event's occurrence, whether the 10th or 17th of June.—Hurkaru.

FRIDAY, AUGUST 12.

The King v. Roshun.

Mr. Clarke called the attention of the Court to a passage in the Hurkaru of this day, presuming the guilt of the prisoner.

Mr. Justice Grant.—Do you make any motion? It is not perhaps against any order of the Court, but I have great doubts, if it be not a very great contempt of Court. It leaves on my mind a matter of great doubt, what steps I am to take in order to vindicate public justice. I will consult my brethren. With regard to the nature of the paragraph, I can hardly believe, that any Christian (the Judge was much affected)—that any person of common feeling, would thus poison the source of justice. Writer and publisher, if they reflect on their conduct, their own conscience ought to read them a lesson much more severe than any I could inflict. The Jury, I am sure, from the confidence I have in them, will not allow their minds to be prejudiced.—Englishman.

MURDER.

The King v. Roshun.

Sham Sheer Khan, chowkeedar.—On Sunday, the 24th July, I went my round, from my thanna, and returned at midnight to Chaundgal Ghaut, where the thanna is situated, after having gone as far as the Police Ghaut, and turned the corner of Loll-diggy, and then took a southerly direction, passed by the entrance gate of Government House, and proceeded towards the Fort, as far as the water-gate, and thence to the New Ghaut; thence again to the station at the triangle, opposite to Government House. This completed my round, and took place between the hours of 9 and 12 o'clock. I heard the clock strike, as, on my return to the thanna, I was passing by the Town Hall. During that interval, I heard or saw nothing remarkable. It was a moonlight night, there was some slight rain, but the roads were not slippery. Another chowkeedar went afterwards upon the same round, and I saw him set off. He is present here to-day. His round terminated at three. Then another chowkeedar, or rather a Nayb, Durzen Sing, by name, went upon the same round as I had done, and my turn commenced again at 4 past 5, in the morning, when I took another course. Then I passed before the Court House, and went to Post Office Street, thence before Government House, thence to Loll-diggy, thence to the Exchange Office, and thence along the Strand, and turned through the maidan, and there observed a corpse under a tree. The sun had then just appeared, the clock having struck six. The corpse had its face downwards, resting upon the ground, and the body upon the knees, as in a worshipping posture, and its arms, breast, and clothes were covered with blood. The man's dress consisted of a unggha. His throat was deeply cut from side to side. He was perfectly lifeless. He was lying about a hundred cubits, beyond the Baboo's road, and about three hundred and fifty cubits from the Courser. The next chowkeedar must have passed the same round about three quarters of an hour after me. The next chowkeedar must have followed the preceding during the same space of time. I had two chowkeedars with me, and left one of them with the body, and took the other with me, and gave information to the thannadar. Khodem Bux chowkeedar was left with the corpse, and the other, who came with me, is called Munny Rudderu. Notchan thannadar is the person whom I informed, and who accompanied me back to the place. It is a part of our duty to traverse and examine the place, and I saw the body at about 20 cubits distance. No other object attracted my attention, and on searching near the body, I saw close to it earthen vessels used to drink liquor, a piece of a plantain leaf, a cap, and a black handkerchief torn. I also observed blood in three different places on the ground, and one spot was about two cubits from the body, the head of which was lying towards the east, and the bloody spot towards the west of it. The two other spots of blood were at equal distances, forming a triangle, and a cubit from each other. The grass was covered with blood at each of those places. Drops of blood were observable between these spots. The ground was soft, but there was grass growing upon it, and the place was rather dry. The blood appeared freshly spilt. [The objects found near the body were produced in Court, a chowkeedar had the custody of them. The throat appeared to have been cut with a knife.] A little rain took place about midnight. Birth came to the place, and the body was ordered to be removed under a bhut tree. The man's clothes were put upon him.

Domani chowkeedar.—I recollect to have seen a dead body lately under a tree in the maidan. I know that witness, and was present with him then, when I went after him. Near the body there were two earthen vessels vessels, with a cup and some gunja. I produced these things through the Nayb to Mr. Greenlaw, when he came to the spot. They have been since in my custody. Deponent was then sent to fetch those things. [The two earthen vessels and the gunja were produced]. I found those vessels wet inside; they smelt of spirituous liquor. A turban covered with blue, but having no badge, was found near the corpse, at about five or six cubits from the body. The handkerchief I spoke of, was of cotton, and of a black colour. The grass looked trodden as if many persons had been there before me.

Shum Sheer Khan.—I saw no turban at the place where the murder was committed. (The cap he saw there was produced by him, as well as a thimble and thread, which he says he found in a handkerchief.) The handkerchief was opened before Mr. Greenlaw, and then the contents were first ascertained. I never saw them before; nor did I see any handkerchief. The turban I saw before Mr. Greenlaw, (and I saw none before the Grand Jury,) was not of a blue colour, but white. The moon had then appeared, and at 14 she was darkened. I got the cap and the other articles from the Nayb, Tuffanee Sing.

William Pittree Waugh.—I am a Lieutenant of the 16th Lancers. I was living at Mr. Pearson's, the Advocate-General's, on the 24th and 25th July last. I heard a noise between one and two o'clock, and could not sleep. My room opens upon the place and the tree where the murder was committed. Between one or two o'clock in the morning I heard a noise in the maidan, and as it was a calm night, I could notice it. It was a calling out and screaming. The voice seemed to come from a distance. I could see the crowd gathered round the tree. It was a cloudy night; the night preceding it I think was a moonlit night. About a quarter to two I heard the cry.

Touffanee Sing.—I know Shum Sheer Khan. I saw a dead man in the maidan, on the same day mentioned by the other witnesses, and under a tree. It was in the same posture as described before. Blood was spilt all around it. I staid in the maidan till about 10 o'clock a. m. Many spectators came there. The deceased's corpse was that of a person unknown to me. I sent several chowkedars to ascertain who the deceased was, a long time before Captain Sage's sircar came, and saw the man lying dead. I forget the sircar's name. He said, on seeing the deceased's body, that he was Capt. Sage's durzee. I went on board of Captain Sage's budgerow; and saw a sirdar bearrah, and the dandies, and a gentleman there. (He points to the person).—I saw the kidmutgar on the cook boat, and I saw him at the police, and here he is (pointing to the prisoner). He told me that he had not gone on shore during the whole of the night at any time. I went afterwards to the Chandney Choke in Calcutta. The bearer took me to the house of a consamah, where the deceased, as the bearer says, was in the habit of eating his victuals. I saw there the consamah's, or prisoner's, wife, Ameran. I saw the consamah at the house where he was employed, and spoke to him, and took him to the police.

Woma Churn Bose.—I am a servant of Captain Sage, was a writer. I know the prisoner at the Bar. I knew Lascari tailor who was killed of late, and was also my master's servant. On Monday, 25th July, I heard of a murder, early in the morning as I sat down to write. I questioned the boat people, who said they knew nothing of it. I continued writing. I afterwards heard the murdered man was my master's tailor, and I then went to my master's pinnace and informed him of what I had heard, and, on his order, went to see the corpse, which I found lying under a tree in the plain, where I saw a great number of people. I believe it was near half after eight. I saw Police-men there, Tuffanee Sing and others, whose names I know not. I knew the corpse to be that of Lascari, my master's tailor, which was lying under a tree near the road that goes across the plain, in a position, having the face of the ground. I do not recollect marks of blood on the grass. Then I brought the Nayb to my master. The last time I saw Lascari previous to his murdered body being found, was the preceding Saturday. He was a native of Dinapore. Agreeably to my master's orders, I drew a list of every thing belonging to Lascari. 1 mat, 1 hooka, 1 box, locked, where the deceased's property was. I got the key from Bhekarree, a dandy, and opened the box, where I found a variety of articles, and no money, except a few pice. I saw the prisoner this morning, on board the cook-boat, and then he landed, saying he was going to see the corpse. I met him as he was returning, and I went myself to see the corpse. I heard him regret the man being murdered. He then brought the breakfast plates out of the boat. I observed no difference between his manner then and previously. My master returned on board a little after the evening gun, when I went to bed. I then saw neither the prisoner nor the deceased—whom I saw on the Saturday preceding, and the former at 4 p. m. that day; and only saw him afterwards dead. The night of the murder I was undisturbed—had no conversation with any one, remained fast asleep. I am sure of what I now say. I have been seven years in Captain Sage's service, and the prisoner, for a year and a half. The prisoner said it was matter of great sorrow that the tailor was dead. The deceased lived in friendship with the prisoner. I never observed any disagreement between them. Prisoner, on hearing the murder spoken of, exhibited no symptom of fear. The prisoner is not a quarrelsome man; but, on the contrary, of a mild disposition. For the six months I have known him, since he came from Dinapore he always conducted himself peaceably and with decorum. I did not see any new blue turban exhibited by the police, when they came on board the pinnace.

Dr. Robert Henry Bain, Police Surgeon. I saw a body lying under a tree in the maidan, on the 25th July, at about a quarter before 10 a. m. I did not see Mr. Macan there, he having been there before.

Tuffanee being called. I know Dr. Bain, I saw him there examining the tailor's body.

Dr. Bain.—I do not recollect seeing this man Tuffanee. I saw a body doubled up as it were under a tree with an extensive wound between the lower jaw and the neck extending from ear to ear. The integuments were divided, the superficial muscles, the larynx, completely cut through, and also the asophagus;—both carotid arteries on both sides, along the deep jugular veins. The wound was about six inches in length;—the hemorrhage was considerable. No other marks of violence were observable. The bleeding of the large blood-vessels was the cause of death. I have no doubt of the certainty of this fact. The death must have been instantaneous.

Such was my opinion then and now. The wound must have been inflicted with a cutting instrument. The deceased's hands were situated in a position which I do not exactly remember. I scarcely think that a person could inflict so extensive a wound on himself. I should think it very, very improbable. I only saw the body after its removal from its original place and when under the tree. The wound appeared to be a clean one, and inflicted at one stroke, the edges thereof being sharp cut. The tailor after receiving such a wound, could not, by any possibility, have moved more than one step or two, if at all. I did not see any wound on the left ear, nor any scratch visible below the cut in the neck. I must have seen any such marks, if any had existed.

Belimnath Suaji.—I am a servant of Mr. Sage. I recollect a murder of one of my master's servants. I saw a number of people around a dead body in the maidan, which I recognised to be that of Lascari. Mr. Sage's sircar, or writer, was there. I saw prisoner going through the crowd towards the boat, where I saw him afterwards. Prisoner and deceased lived on the best terms. The night of the murder was a moonlit night, I believe.

Juggur Mangi.—I went to the boat the night preceding the murder, and the night following I went to search for any thing that could have belonged to the deceased, and found some garments. I know Captain Sage's Baboo, or sircar. The sirdar's name is Pulchun. A mangi, Jadagi by name, searched at night the cook boat. A sari was found in the cook house, where prisoner lived, belonging to the dead tailor, who used to keep his clothes in a chest. Rushen, the prisoner, cooked Captain Sage's victuals. The clothes which were found in the cook boat were not screened, and could have been seen easily. Prisoner and deceased messed together, and my dinner was cooked there. The durzee and the consamah were on board the boat, previous to the going of the consamah. Prisoner and tailor lived together like brothers.

Zameer, malli.—I reside in Chadni Choke. I knew a tailor called Lascari, and I know the prisoner. I one evening saw Lascari tailor's body in the maidan. At half past seven, I saw prisoner and deceased walk together hand in hand. The tailor Lascari elbowed me as I passed, and on my asking who he was, answered a tailor. They went on. They were in the habit of going together to Dulwar consamah's house. I have known prisoner for those five months, and their intimacy with Dulwar dated from four months. As they had asked me to do, I gave on the above occasion their compliments to Dulwar consamah. Ameran never said in my hearing that night of the murder how can he be murdered; there were four men with him?

Shaik Dulwar.—I am a kidmutgar. I know Lascari tailor and the prisoner. I know Zameer. I saw the body of Lascari in the maidan, about the hour of ten or eleven a. m. I had not seen him for a month previous to his being murdered. He had ceased to eat in my house for about a month. Zameer told me that the tailor and consamah Rushen sent their salam. My master lives at Lalpookur Lane, and is a musician. I saw Rushen prisoner during the Mohorram. The night of the murder, at about nine o'clock, the moon was shining bright.

Ameran.—I serve as an aya, and know Delawur. He is my husband. I have always described myself as his wife, nor did I ever pass myself for a widow. I knew a man of the name of Lascari; he was with prisoner on the day when the salaam was sent to my husband. Zameer told me that Lascari and Rushen consamah had sent their compliments to my husband, who was then absent at his master's. He did not return to my house that night. He communicated the salaams to my husband and not to me at half past eight p. m. My husband returned at 9 o'clock. Zameer returned subsequently to my house, and communicated the salaams to my husband. I did not say to the nayab at the Chandpaul Ghaut (speaking of the tailor) that there were four persons with him; "he cannot be murdered!" Tuffanee, the Nayab, said at the Police that I had uttered the words. She had a conversation with Tuffanee, on the morning of the murder, and in presence of a bearah. The thanadar went to her house yesterday, to fetch Buxoo, on which, Buxoo, having returned a short time afterwards, was informed of the fact, and absconded.

Muny Ratty, chowkeedar, residing at Chandpaul Ghaut.—I went on board the pinnacle of Captain Sage to look for Rushen consamah, the prisoner. At 10 or 11 a. m. on Monday, 18 or 19 days ago, I went to take him away to the Police, where his attendance was required. I was sent further by Kureem Bux. I caught him on the budgerow, and he came, without hesitation, of his own accord, as I called him. Kureem Bux said to prisoner: "where are the clothes you had yesterday?" The prisoner's shoes were muddy. The prisoner answered: I have left my clothes in the cook boat. Then Kureem sent me to fetch prisoner's clothes, which I found in the cook boat. The sardar, or pilot of that boat, gave me a pair of pajamas from the roof of the boat, and three other pieces of clothes which he took from the top of the box, in the cabin.

The latter were, a long chupkan, a turban, and a cummerbund. The sleeves of the chupkan had the appearance of having been washed but were dry at the time. I observed some stains of blood in the middle part of the prisoner's drawers, which had been partly washed; but spots of blood remained. On the crown of the turban spots were also observable. There were also spots of blood on the cummerbund. The sleeves of the chupkan had slight stains, too, upon them, above the part washed, and also fainter on that part which had been washed. I took the clothes to the thanna along with the mangi, Iidagi. I saw the prisoner on returning from the thanna.

Kureem Bux.—I am a chowkeedar of the Chandpaul division. I know the prisoner. Tofanni Sing, chief naib of the thanna, gave me the order to take prisoner to the police. I came to the thanna and gave directions to Runnymuddy chowkeedar to bring prisoner from the budgerow of Captain Sage. The prisoner came. As I was eating, I observed his eyes were red, and his countenance rather sorrowful. I observed his dress; his shoes were very muddy. His clothes were quite clean, fresh put on, and no marks on them. On seeing prisoner's clothes so clean, I asked him how he was so clean dressed this morning? He merely answered that he had shifted his clothes. On asking where the latter were; he answered, on board of my boat; go and fetch them. Munny Huddin chowkeedar brought them and laid them before me. I looked at the clothes, and found there were stains of blood on all of them. I asked him, why are these marks of blood on your clothes? He answered, "My master told me to bring him a sheep from Durram-tollah bazar, which I dressed and thus got stained." I caused the prisoner then to be bound and taken to the Police. He said why should you bind me? I replied, "If you had cut only a sheep, you might have some blood on your sleeves, but not on the very turban you wear on your head, and over all your body." He replied nothing. The sleeves of the chupkan were wet, and also the drawers. The clothes I now allude to are in the Court. (They were produced, and small stains of blood were visible on the sleeves.)

Mr Clarke observed, that the marks of blood were perceptible, only on the left skirt of the chupkan. Kureem Bux, shewing the pagree to Mr. Clarke, declared that it bore marks of unwashed blood. I asked him again, where did you go last night, he answered I went nowhere; and then said afterwards I went on shore. And I added, surely you must have gone on shore, and he replied: yes! in the evening. I asked him also, why are your shoes muddy consamah? He answered, I walked the streets last night, and they were muddy. The night preceding the morning of the murder it rained; not, however, at the time when I made my round.

Manny Huddin.—I brought the prisoner from the boat, by order of Kureem Bux. I showed the bloody clothes on board the boat. I showed them there to the sirdar and sircar, three persons in all, including the manjee. Captain Sage was not then on board the boat.

Judagi.—I am mangi of Captain Sage. I saw the murdered tailor. I remember the morning when it was reported that the tailor was killed. The tailor, the afternoon before, at half past four, whilst prisoner was attending his master at dinner; and then prisoner, Roshun, went on shore alone, at about sunset. The prisoner, as he went away, took a chataye with him from the cook boat. He had a chapkun and a pair of drawers. His clothes were clean. On Sunday morning at 12 o'clock he went on shore to fetch some meat for his master, such as mutton. I did not see what became of it. It was taken inside of my boat. I then saw a small spot of blood on one sleeve. I know not whence it arose. One of the boatmen of the pinnace, at about eleven or twelve at night, that Sunday night, called me up, and said, a man wants to come on board. It was Roshun, the prisoner. He entered the cabin, and I saw him no more. On the Monday, a chowkeedar came on board at 10 A. M., and asked me for the kidmutgar's clothes, which I gave him. They were stained with blood. The prisoner got up the next day, after dawn. I was already up. I knew him for a month and a half, and I never saw him quarrel with any body. He had no puggies on the night he returned on board. Very little moonlight remained when he returned; and some rain had fallen in the night.

Pulwan.—I know the prisoner; I recollect his return on board. I was sitting on the roof of the boat, and my master had fallen asleep, when the prisoner came in. I saw the prisoner come on board by the moonlight, which was faint. I did not see what clothes he had on. I did not see any turban. I knew the tailor Lascari for seven months. The prisoner made the bazar every day and the prisoner did the joint business of cook, kidmutgar and mussalchie.

Captain Sage.—My name is William Sage, captain in the 48th regiment of native infantry. Prisoner was in my service ever since April 1829. I remember the day of the murder. Prisoner regularly went on shore every day to make the bazar. He went on shore on Sunday the 24th day of July last. I left the boat, at half past six in the evening; and prisoner was not yet gone on shore. I did not see him come on board. I read that night until half past 11, and went to bed. My bearah undressed me. His name is Paul Chaund. He put out the light after I was in bed. I am sure prisoner came at 11½ P. M. The next morning the sircar Womachurn Bosc, told me the tale of the tailor's death. When between 8 and 9 A. M. I had dressed myself, prisoner came into the room, and on my questioning him, answered that he had heard but came away, being afraid. I spoke to him of his friendship towards the tailor; that I had once known them to be drinking together. I then read him a lecture. He said he had never since touched liquor. This occurred about two months ago. I then told him to collect his friends and those of the tailor, and to bury the latter's body respectfully. He replied affirmatively; but that it would prevent his giving me my dinner at 4 P. M. He said he would wait upon me at the Bengal Club. Capt. Birch came on board. The tailor's boxes were brought to me. I ordered them to be broken open, no key being found. The dandy gave a key to Womachurn, the sircar, and it opened the boxes. That key was found by the dandy close to the tailor's bed. I saw the prisoner behave with perfect coolness throughout, which gave me misgiving about his being guilty or not. I found new pieces of cloth in the cook boat, and got them sent to the coroner. No instrument of any kind was found, upon search, to give any clue to the discovery of the author of the murder.

A favorable testimony is given by Captain Sage of the character of his servant—the prisoner. The durzee was a man of 30 or 35, whilst prisoner can hardly be more than 17 or 18 years of age. I saw this handkerchief (exhibited in Court) wrapped round the durzee's throat, after his murder under the tree. There was a blue turban lying close to the body, and when to-day the handkerchief was opened on the table, I found in it a thimble and white thread which I had not seen, nor,

I firmly believe, could have seen in it when it was taken off, by the chowkeedar, from the throat of the tailor.

The prisoner never denied to me that he had been on shore on the Sunday preceding the murder. I never observed the prisoner have any weapon of his own. The prisoner's body was examined at the Police and no mark whatever or scratch was to be found on it. The deceased was a remarkably quiet man, and was loved by all his fellow servants. The prisoner is also an exemplary character.

Mr. Macan.—The event occurred on the 25th of July. Roshun stated to me that on the 24th he went at half past 6 P. M. to his uncle Wahid Khan, where he remained until about half past 8 P. M.; that he got on board at about half past 9, and called the baboo, who replied that he was asleep, and wished to know why he was disturbed.

Captain Birch.—I am Superintendent of the police. I know the prisoner; he was apprehended on the 25th of July. I saw him before he was apprehended. I put various questions to him; nor did I give him any cause to fear that he should be apprehended. He said subsequently to me that he had gone on shore with a vest, a pujama, and a teepe. The prisoner told me that the durzee was addicted to drinking, and that Captains Trower's and Champney's servants could give me accounts about the durzee, which was ascertained by me to the contrary.

Captain Sage.—My kidmutgar was absent for two days having been beaten at the moborum, and would have, perhaps, perished, had he not been rescued by the tailor.

Palchaund.—I am mate bearah to Captain Sage. I remember the murder of the tailor. I do not know when he went on shore, he or the prisoner, nor when they returned. It was a Sunday. Captain Sage returned from Church, after it struck eight. At 11 the Captain went to bed. I put out the lights and went to sleep. Pulwan, the dandy, watched the boat that night.

Wahid Khan.—I am a kidmutgar out of employ. I have known the prisoner for above seven months. I heard the event from prisoner on Monday at about ten in the morning, on board the cook boat. The prisoner, who was in the pinnace, had called for me. Then the prisoner informed me of the event which had happened.

Bustyram.—I am a washerman. I knew Lascari. I had received my wages and had given him 21 rupees to keep, because I had no place to keep it safe. I got only from those 21 rupees 7 rupees; the rest is lost.

The Jury think it unnecessary to hear the prisoner.

Verdict: not guilty.

Neither was Mr. Clarke, counsel for the defence, heard, nor did his Lordship think it necessary to sum up the evidence.

His Lordship advised the prisoner to think how the tailor came by his death. The manner was unknown; but from his habits of drinking he met a mysterious end. Take you care, (concluded his Lordship,) to profit by such an example, and correct those similar vices, to which you were formerly addicted, from a salutary fear of similar unfortunate consequences.—Hurkuru.

MONDAY, AUGUST 15.

Mr. Justice Grant entered the court at 12 o'clock precisely, and after briefly intimating to the Bar that the Sittings were further adjourned to the 29th instant, delivered his charge to the Grand Jury, nearly as follows:—

Gentlemen of the Grand Jury,—I have put you to the trouble of assembling again on account of two cases within the Admiralty jurisdiction of the Court : and which I had not previously an opportunity to bring to your notice.

I have been induced to ask you to attend this day, because the Admiralty jurisdiction of the court is of a totally different nature from that which you have been exercising. It is founded on different principles ; it extends over different persons, and a different region, and therefore administers a different law. Amongst those persons who inhabit the same country, members of the same community, and submitting to the same Government, there is an agreement, express or implied, that all should submit to the laws, enacted by the authority to whom it is entrusted to make laws for the community, and to the jurisdiction of the courts appointed by the authority to whom it is entrusted to appoint judges. As to foreigners who come within that territory, there is an implied agreement to submit to those laws and courts so long as they remain within the territory. The right to enforce compliance with this implied agreement, as well on the part of all citizens as on the part of foreigners, is derived from the first law of nature—self preservation. It is to maintain good order and good government. It is necessary to the peace and welfare of all societies. But the laws of a community, and the jurisdiction of judges appointed by a community, can extend no further than the territory belonging to such community. A citizen leaving his own country and going into the territory of another community, ceases to be subject to his native laws and becomes for a time subject to the laws of such other community. In places not within the territory of any nation, the laws of no particular nation can prevail ; and the citizens or subjects of a state, are as free from subjection to its laws and the jurisdiction of its courts, in such places, as the citizens or subjects of any other state, because its laws do not extend there, nor the jurisdiction of its courts. A law may be made imposing obligations, or laying commands upon a citizen or subject of a state to be binding on him, when out of the territory of the state, and this may be enforced on his return, because the obligation upon him personally to yield obedience to the supreme authority of his country is not limited by place, but the law must expressly bear that obedience is to be paid to it without the territory, for generally the laws of a nation subsist only within its territory, and such law were an exception. When some of the citizens or subjects of a nation, establish themselves in an uninhabited country, or a country inhabited by savages, or barbarians, having no established laws, they take possession of the territory for their nation or sovereign, and it becomes the territory of their nation, and is subject to its laws. But the ocean,—in law language the High Seas,—is said in the Law of Nations to be public, i. e. not belonging to any people or nation, but to the whole human race,—to be within the dominion of none, except of God alone. The laws of no country, therefore, can prevail upon the High Seas : those, however, who traverse them, are not therefore subject to no laws ; for they are subject to the Laws of God stamped by the Creator on the minds and hearts of all men. These are called the law of nature and nations, and are common to all nations of civilized men. By this law we are entitled to repel force and injury by force ; for our own safety and that of others, to punish those who violate this law ; and by this law murder and robbery are especially forbid. Whosoever, therefore, upon the High Seas, where there are no laws but the law of nature, and nations, and no courts nor lawful authority of any government of any nation, to exercise jurisdiction not equally possessed by all other governments and nations, and by all mankind, commits a crime forbidden by the law of nature and nations, may be lawfully there restrained and punished, by those who have been injured, and those who have witnessed the injury, acting on the principle of natural justice, and for the common safety ; as men are by the law of nations entitled to do, in all places not under the dominion of any established government, nor under subjection to any fixed laws, and having no courts of lawful jurisdiction. But the ocean being the common highway of all nations, it is the common interest of all nations, and the common duty of all governments, to protect those who traverse it, for the security of the traffic and intercourse in which all civilized nations are equally concerned, as in that of all things the most essential to their comfort and prosperity. All civilized nations, therefore, have agreed, that the vindication of crimes committed on the High-Seas, contra jus gentium, i. e. against the law of nature and nations, ought not to be left to the sufferers, or to such of the companions of their voyage as might be inclined and able to assist them, for thus many grievous offenders might escape, and the commission of great and frequent injustice, and many scenes of unnecessary bloodshed might ensue, contributing to augment the dangers of voyages by sea. It has, therefore, been agreed, by the common consent of all civilized nations, that certain courts shall be established within each nation, having within its territories coasts and harbours of the sea, appointed by the sovereign authority within each nation, whose duty it shall be to administer in a due course of judicial proceedings, that justice upon offenders upon the unsheltered and unappropriated ocean, which the law of nature permits it to the person injured and the bystanders to administer in all places unsheltered and unappropriated by any nation in a manner more summary and with greater danger of injustice and excess. The jurisdiction of these courts is conferred by the sovereign power of each state. The right in each state to erect courts with such jurisdiction is no other than the right and duty derived from the law of nature to all men to execute justice upon one violating the law of nature in a place where he is subject to no other tribunal. These courts are termed Courts of Admiralty. It follows, first, that their jurisdiction is not founded on any allegiance, permanent or temporary, to the sovereign of the country by whom they are appointed and it therefore extends, by the law of nature and nations, over the subjects of all other countries. Secondly, it is not established for the protection of the subjects or citizens of the state by which these courts are appointed, but for the general protection of all persons passing upon the ocean, and therefore it is immaterial to what country the person injured belongs. Thirdly, it has nothing to do with place or territory, and therefore it is immaterial in what part of the expanse of the ocean the offence has been committed. The King of England claims a peculiar and exclusive right of jurisdiction bestowed on the Admiral of England, over the British seas, as over a province, to maintain the peace in those seas, and to protect those who traverse them. This, which gave rise to much contest and to a very learned disputation between two of the most learned men in a former age, we have no concern with here ; but with that more extensive jurisdiction, common to the courts of Admiralty of England, and of all other civilized countries, which the learned Selden describes “ as extending over the persons and things of the African, Mediterranean, Indian, or any other sea yet more remote, for the space ” says he, “ over which this sort of maritime jurisdiction extends is interminable.” Fourthly, the offences which may be tried by this jurisdiction are those against the jus gentium, or the law of nature and nations. Amongst the most prominent of these are murder and robbery, which latter when committed at sea, assumes the name of piracy. Fifthly, the law which is to be administered, is not the law of England by an English Court of Admiralty ; nor the law of France by a French Court of Admiralty ; nor the law of Spain or of Holland, by a Spanish or Dutch Court of Admiralty ; but the jus gentium or lex maritima, the law of nations or the maritime law which upon questions and crimes arising upon the sea are the same. And by the jus gentium or law of nations is not meant that law with reference to the intercourse of nations or states in their political relations, peaceful or hostile, but with reference to the intercourse of individuals and the duties of man towards man. That law which natural reason hath constituted, and which amongst all civilized nations is preserved and kept—and which is called the law of nations, as being that law whose use is common to all nations. Therefore, whether one who is guilty of a crime at sea, is tried in a Court of Admiralty of one nation or another, he is tried by the same law; nor is there any other difference, but the greater or less learning, the more or less perfect administration of justice, to be found in one court than in another, a difference which from the imperfection of human nature, may be found in an equal degree between different courts of the same country. The law by which the culprit is tried is the same,—a law binding upon the whole human race,—a law deriving its source not from the institution of any one nation, but written by the finger of God upon the hearts of all men. Neither is this law left to the arbitrary interpretation of the judge any more than the municipal laws of the country, administered by the ordinary tribunals, but its doctrines are equally fixed as those of the common and municipal laws, by the common consent, and long and uniform usage of the civilized world, the decisions of the courts administering the law of nations, in the different countries of the civilized world, and the writings of learned men from the time of the Romans downwards received as acknowledged authority, by the concurrence of all modern nations. It is obviously of the utmost importance to the safety of those voyaging by sea, distant frequently from any port or shore, more distant usually from ports and shores belonging to their own country, that crimes committed on the seas, inconsistent with the safety of those who traverse them, should receive adjudication and punishment at the first port and upon the first shore at which the ship arrives. Nor could any thing be more dangerous to the safety of navigators and consequently to the interests of commerce, than that men, who commit these great crimes of murder and robbery at sea, should go without question if they could avoid returning within the limits of their native country. It is therefore necessary to the peaceful intercourse and beneficial commerce of mankind, that these offenders should be brought to trial wherever they are first laid hold of, and their offences judged of by the law which is common to all mankind.

Gentlemen, two sets of offenders will be brought before you. First—certain persons, inhabitants of a country bordering upon the straits of Malacca, accused of piracy committed upon other persons' inhabitants of those shores. The legal definition of piracy which is only a sea term for robbery, is an act of robbery and depredation committed on the High Seas, which, if committed on land, would have amounted to felony there. Now if the persons accused belong to a different nation from the persons who were despoiled, it is equally piracy as if they belonged to the same nation, unless it shall appear that the nations were at war.

The second is a case of a different description; that of a person said to be a settled and resident inhabitant of Calcutta, of what country a native, is not, that I am aware of, distinctly in evidence upon the depositions, but alleging himself to be a Spaniard; and of several persons, apparently inhabitants of Calcutta, having joined the ship here, and in all probability many, if not all of them, born within the British dominions of India and natural born subjects of the King of England, and one a Chinese, as is said, who also joined the ship at Calcutta.

If the country of the accused, therefore, made any difference, no proceedings could be had until the different places of their birth could be ascertained; and this being done they would probably have to be sent to different and very distant places to take their trials. But this I have said is not so, for if they have been guilty of piracy, or of a crime, contra jus gentium, against the law of nations committed upon the High Seas, it is immaterial of what country they are natives,—of what sovereign subjects—they are amenable to the jurisdiction of this court of admiralty. These persons, upon the evidence taken before the magistrate, appear to be charged; the first, the gunner of the vessel, as a chief actor; the rest as aiding and abetting him, some of them by substantive criminal acts, in the murder of the captain and the chief mate, and in the taking unlawful possession of the ship and of the property in her, the same being the property of Dutch Merchants.

Now this is not murder simply, but murder with a piratical intent, for the taking possession of the ship was a direct act of piracy. It is, therefore, little else than a very usual case of piracy accompanied by murder, for piracy in many, if not most cases, is accompanied with murder also. But murder itself is the highest crime by the law of nature and nations, and as such punishable by court of Admiralty.

Murder is defined in the law of nations, as in the English common law homicide proceeding from malice. But there are some distinctions in regard to principal and accessory. By the maritime law, jus gentium, those who command a murder, and those who afford the means, and those who inflict the wound or injury, or wounds and injuries which cause the death, are principals in the murder; but those who stand by, though in the sense of the law of England, aiding and abetting, and so by that law principals in the second degree, are not principals but accessories by the law of nation. Thus if pirates at sea assault a ship, but by force are prevented entering her, and in the attempt a pirate happens to slay a person in the other ship, they are all principals in such a murder, if the common law hath jurisdiction of the cause, but by the law maritime, those who gave the wound only shall be principals, and the rest accessories, and so was determined by the Court of Admiralty of England in 28 Eliz. in the case of Ralph Williams, reported in the Molloy de jure Maritimo, B. 1. ch. 4 s. 14.

Upon the question of piracy I cannot do better than direct your attention to Sir Charles Hedge's charge in 1696, to the Grand Jury at a Sessions of Oyer and Terminer and Goal Delivery for the jurisdiction of the Admiralty of England, in which he lays down the doctrine of the law of nations:—

"Now piracy is only a sea-term for robbery, piracy being a robbery committed within the jurisdiction of the Admiralty. If any man be assaulted within that jurisdiction, and his ship or goods violently taken away without legal authority, this is robbery and piracy. If the marines of any ship shall violently dispossess the master, and afterwards carry away the ship itself, or any of the goods or tackle, apparel or furniture, with a felonious intention, in any place where the Lord Admiral hath, or pretends to have—that is, justly pretends to have jurisdiction, that is also robbery and piracy. The intention will, in these cases, appear by considering the end for which the fact was committed; and the end will be known, if the evidence shall shew you what hath been done."

Gentlemen, I have thought it right to occupy so much of your time in explaining to you the nature of the jurisdiction which you are now to be employed in giving effect to, and the law which it administers, because these cases within the admiralty jurisdiction of this court are of rare occurrence; and the law which governs them is different from that administered in the exercise of the ordinary criminal jurisdiction of the court. I believe there have not been many cases for some time back tried under its admiralty jurisdiction.—Englishman.

TUESDAY, AUGUST 16.

Mr. Advocate-General called the attention of the Court to a paragraph, purporting to be part of a letter in this-day's Hurkaru, which, he said, was likely to pervert the ends of justice. The paragraph not only charged the prisoners with the commission of offences for which they were now about to be tried but also of other offences of which he, the Advocate-General, employed for the prosecution, had never heard. (The learned Advocate then read an extract from the letter, which we think it proper to suppress.) Now, my lord, whoever this man may be, or whatever crime he may have committed, he is surely entitled to have a fair trial, and I think your lordship will agree with me, that even in my office of prosecutor, I should far exceed my duty were I to use such language regarding one who is here called "a miscreant."

Mr. Justice Grant.—Nothing can be more proper than your conduct in bringing this paragraph to the notice of the court, and I am sure you and every English barrister will invariably pursue this course on similar occasions when engaged in the prosecution of unfortunate men. At present it is unnecessary for me to say more than that the paragraph is a high contempt of court, and that it meets my grave and decided disapprobation. Have you any thing to move?

Mr. Advocate-General.—Not at present, my lord, but I will take care that you are provided with evidence on a future occasion.

The jury were then impelled to try a common assault case, but the defendant was permitted to speak with the prosecutrix, and no evidence was offered in support of the charge.—Englishman.

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 17.

At five minutes after ten o'clock, Mr. Justice Grant took his seat on the Bench and opened the Court. No business was done; but the learned judge intimated that to-morrow would be a busy day, and that the Court would sit at eleven o'clock, for the trial of the Gunner of the Sumatra, &c.—Hurkaru.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 18.

The Advocate-General applied to the Court on the subject of a paragraph in a letter signed BLACKWALL POINT, which appeared in the Hurkaru newspaper of the 16th instant, and which, in his opinion, and he thought in the opinion of the Court, must be deemed calculated to interrupt the course of justice. The Advocate-General put in an affidavit of a party who had received a number of the journal containing the paragraph in question, as prima facie evidence of publication, and also an alleged copy of a number of the Hurkaru; upon inspecting which documents, which were not read in Court, Mr. Justice Grant granted the application for a rule calling on the Editor of the Hurkaru to shew cause against the Advocate-General's motion, on Saturday next.

Some few minutes after the Advocate-General had sat down, he rose and stated an objection that had occurred to him, that he knew not how the order should be entitled, as no indictment had been found against the party, to the proceedings against whom, the letter he complained of, had been stated to have referred. He would, therefore, withdraw his application.

The Advocate-General subsequently applied to the same effect as above, at a late hour in the evening, and obtained a similar order for Monday next.

PIRACY CASE.

Nine Malay prisoners were brought into Court, charged with having committed piracies on the High Seas, within the jurisdiction of the Court.

The indictment stated that a case of piracy was committed on the High Seas off the Malay Coast, in which the prisoners were concerned.

Mr. Advocate-General charged the Jury. The boat was carrying a rather important cargo to Singapore, Between Pulo Tinghee and Singapore, the boat was hoarded by the prisoners, and taken. Mr. Advocate-General alluded to the case of the Wolf. The attack on the boat is the main point to be considered.

Dhuholy, A Cochinese, was introduced. I am native of Aynan in the kingdom of Cochinese-China, and a dyer by profession. I know Port Candio, near Cape St. James. I left that Port about seven months ago, and proceeded towards Singapore in a large country boat. It had been hired in the province of Bihikam, and the Port of Fantit. The owner's name was Lipdow.

There was rice, sugar, and silk, &c. in the boat. The cargo was worth about 1,100 or 1,500 dollars, all under the joint management of fourteen Malayan individuals. The rice consisted of 2,000 bundles, about 500 dollars worth; the remainder consisted of more than 2,000 ligatures worth of sugar and sundries. There were 14 Cochinese-Chinamen on board our vessel. We were unarmed, and had no other weapon but some pointed bamboos, and there was no other weapon on board. (The Bishop of Cochinese-China, who interpreted the language to the Court, observed that in their country they are not allowed to carry fire arms in public.) On the 28th of the second moon we saw some Malay prahu, near Pulo Tinghee, coming towards us. On perceiving the Malays, one of the Cochinese-Chinese went up the mast and reported that he had seen 12 boats, one of which approached us and made us a sign to surrender, and by their appearance we concluded that they were pirates. The first boat that came, fired a gun at us, and the discharge killed our pilot and my own brother, who received a ball through his body. The first boat had a fixed and large gun, and other boats had smaller ones mounted on pivots. They fired at us with canon and musketry. After fighting from morning till noon we surrendered. We were then in sight of Pulo Tinghee, at a distance of about three hours' sail. The bodies of our pilot and my brother were thrown over board. I was wounded myself, as well as my companion here present. I received three wounds. The affair took place on the open sea. We were not then at war with any nation. The Malays took possession of us, and took us to Pulo Tinghee. The rice and sugar were left in the boat, but the crape was taken away. My boat remained five or six days at Pulo Tinghee, and was then taken possession of by an English armed boat, in which I remained with my friend Moc seven days. The boats which attacked us can carry about 20 persons each, are called coolaps by the Cochinese-Chinese, and are open. There were 14 oars in each of the boats, and they had fire-arms, lances, javelins, and a swivel-gun. The boats were differently armed. I was wounded on the arm with a lance, and on the breast and on the arm-pit a ball grazed me. We, when on board the Malay boat, were obliged to cook rice for our masters, take out their lice, and shampoo them, for about 7 days. The Malays took us on shore, on Pulo Tinghee, to avoid the English, whose frigate was in sight. The Malays, four in number, kept us, and had daggers or precises in their hands.

As the English boats were nearing the shore, the Malays took us up the mountains, and my companions knew that the English would rescue us from the pirates, and attack the latter. My companion Moc contrived to escape, and ran away. I had two fellow-prisoners who succeeded in running from the Malays, and I endeavoured to abscond like them, and made a noise, and then the Malays put their daggers to my throat. I struggled with the Malays, and was slightly wounded under my ear, and soon after freed myself, fled and entered the English boat. I can recognize five sailors of that boat. (Two sailors were produced). I saw these men on the occasion; they had arms; I saw them on the mountain when I made my escape to the English boat. We hollered when at liberty to call such of our fellows as might happen to be on shore, and then left the island at about midnight.

I went on board an English ship-of-war. [The witness recognized Captain Stanley as the head or Commanding officer of the ship.] We (the Cochinchinese,) lived in a state of community of goods, in our own boat. When the English had taken the pirates, I recognized my trousers on one of the Malay men, and also some other articles in the Malay boat, which belonged to us, and particularly some tobacco which was our property.

I did not until now understand the questions put to me about this affair, neither at Singapore nor at Madras, having been examined by Chinese interpreters at the latter place. I said to the Mandarin at Singapore, pointing to these prisoners, that they were sea-robbers, or pirates.

Mr. Clarke said to witnesses: look at the gentleman, (pointing to Mr. Macfarlan, which witness did.) Did you not hear from Mr. Macfarlan that at Singapore you had only pointed out four prisoners as guilty, instead of nine? Yes, the Mandarin at Singapore told me so, but I did not understand the Mandarin.

Mr. Clarke. Did you not ask the Captain of the Wolf permission to cut the throats of the prisoners? Answer. Yes! I did! On the English taking the pirates I informed them that the prisoners were the very men who had taken my boat. I asked the Captain's permission to kill these men, because they had robbed me of my property and killed my brother. I also asked the Captain's leave to open their bellies. (Observe, said the Bishop of Cochinchina that deponent is a pagan, and unacquainted with the first principles of justice!)

Mr. Clarke. Did you not say at Madras that you could only identify four of the prisoners, and not the nine? Witness. No! I pointed out nine individuals, nor could I understand the Chinese Interpreter at Singapore. I did not point out the prisoner, Tijer, as one of those who held me on the mountain.

Did you point out Omar, another prisoner, at Madras? I swear that I did.

On Sir John Peter Grant's question. When the English had taken the pirates I told them that these nine prisoners had seized our boat. These are the same men whom I pointed out. I swear it on my oath.

Moc, examined by Mr. Advocate-General. I am from Coanum, which is in Cochinchina. I know the last witness; I was in the same boat with him, going to Singapore. It was about seven moons ago. I saw four of these prisoner who had taken hold of me on the mountain, and had also seized my boat. There were twelve pirate ships which attacked mine. These were the people, and others, who are called kiava or Malays, who surrounded my boat. We were fired at with cannon, and javelins and spears were thrown at us, and being unarmed, we were obliged to surrender. We remained in the pirates' boat about ten days. I do not exactly recollect how many; and I am now trembling with fear. It was at three hour's sail distance from Pulo Tinghee.

Before they arrived at Pulo Tinghee we did not see the English ship. On board the Malay boat where we were taken, there were fifteen pirates. At Pulo Tinghee we were forced to cook rice for them, clean the boat, and so forth. I was wounded in the fray, on the hand, on the side, and two javelin wounds on the foot. The last witness was also wounded, his brother killed, and the pilot, too. At Pulo Tinghee I went on shore to fetch wood, water, and other necessaries for the pirates. The Malays had captured seven boats; seeing the English man-of-war at a distance, they dispersed, and I was conducted on shore by four men, who accompanied me to the mountain. (He points out four prisoners as those that were guarding him on the mountain. All the nine were in the same boat with me. There were fifteen of them when they saw the English ship first. Immediately we were taken we were put on the board the Malay boat. When I saw the English ship, I succeeded in running away from the pirates, and made signs to the English to come to me. Mr. Pearson:—look at these two sailors, pointing to two seamen of the ship-of-war.) I saw them on that occasion. I saw mandarins and chiefs on board the English ship, and two days afterwards, the English took one boat and these prisoners, but failed in taking three other boats, which were pirate boats, too, but escaped. Did you point out these prisoners to Captain Stanley, sitting in this Court-house now? Yes, I did. There was a Chinaman on the same island where I was. When I left my country, I had on board rice, sugar, silk, hog's lard, salted meat, &c. and when we were seized, these articles were in our vessel. The pirates shared all those things among themselves, nor did I see our boat any more, which was taken away by them. I was once at Singapore. The value of the articles on board was about 2,600 ligatures. There are four ligatures to a dollar. I am an ignorant man. I do not know the value of our boat. I had heard on a former voyage that there were pirates in the Straits; but we had the good luck to avoid them. The year we went to Singapore I heard that the Malays used to seize Cochinchina boats, and was told that they used also to kidnap the people of Lower Cochinchina. I saw a man of my own country who had been once taken by the Malays and treated like a slave. There is no war between us and the Malays. I heard that the Mandarins had ordered the coast of our country to be guarded. The pirates were hidden behind a part of the island of Pulo Tinghee, and suddenly attacked us. We showed some defence, but it was without avail. The Malays are in the habit of attacking the Siamese, Chinese and others.

FRIDAY, AUGUST 19.

A Cochinchinese named Punchayet. I was examined at the Police. I come from the island of Aynan. I left Cochinchina to go to Singapore, on the eighth of the ninth moon, about six full months ago. During my voyage to Singapore I did not see the first witness Decho, I saw him in the boat, and at the time when the Malays, with whom I happened to be a prisoner, struck me, and made me row, against my will. When the Malays, with their spy-glasses, first descried the boat of Decho, they rowed towards it; and I was with those nine prisoners, now in Court, when they with fifteen others, attacked Decho's boat, and I remained two days more in the same vessel with Decho, and was afterwards put in another boat. I understand the questions put to me, and spoke the same words at the Police as I do now. I know Pulo Tinghee, where the Malays took me. While at Pulo Tinghee, the Malays made us row, take water out of their boat, and beat us if we disobeyed their orders. When they had taken our boats, they put us afterwards in their prahus. These prisoners are some of those same Malays whom I then saw.

The men of the second boat were of the same kind as those of the first. When they saw the English they led me to the mountain at Pulo Tinghee. I was then given in charge to four men by a person belonging to the second boat. My boat was seized six days before that of Decho, and when that of Decho was subsequently taken, I was put with him into another boat, 8 days after being with them. I was at Pulo Tinghee, under the keeping of Ryam, Tungol, and two others, (pointing to four prisoners). I know the five other prisoners, as I have been in the same bark with them. The boat of Decho was taken near Pulo Tinghee, within a spy-glass sight distance. We were lying in a bay of that island, about 12 boats, and some of the Malay boats went after Decho's boat. At Pulo Tinghee, my companion Moc made his escape from the pirates, and I escaped also at the first opportunity. We were received on board the English ship, and (pointing to the gentlemen of the ship), shewed all these Malay pirates here present, making it understood by signs that the Malays were buccancers.

The Bishop of Cochin-China, then stated that the Malay tribes are subject to several petty sovereigns, and carry on systematic plunder.

Deposition of Jean Luiz, Bishop of Cochin-China. I left France in 1820, to go to Cochin-China, where my Apostolic Vicariate is situate, and have remained there since that time till 1836, only occasionally visiting the neighbouring states. Cochin China is only troubled by internal war, and not by foreign hostilities. I know the Malay people but indifferently, having observed their manners only when travelling at Singapore, Sam and Penang. That nation is under the sway of Musulman Rajahs, holding petty principalities, on the Malay Coast, and several islands. They use circumcision. I never heard that they were of another religion, except that of Mahomed, but have heard that some of their Rajahs are pirates, or rather send out pirates on plundering excursions, and divide with them the booty.

The Bishop, as an ecclesiastical man, here declared that he was unwilling to contribute to the condemnation of the prisoners.

I do not know the Rajah of Bentharo; I believe he is tributary to the Birnans. The Rajah was, some years ago, at war with the Siamese. I do not know to what Rajah the prisoners are subjects, nor was I ever acquainted with them. I believe the Malay Rajahs carry on a predatory warfare with the people of the coast of Siam, and have heard that the Malays had made a descent on Pulo Condor and taken away 60 or 70 inhabitants. The great Mandarin sent troops against these pirates, caused them to be beheaded, and their heads exposed on the sea-shore, to frighten away other robbers.

Sir John Peter Grant. Does the Bishop recollect that peace was made between the Siamese and the Rajah of Paham?

Bishop. I believe that he has made himself tributary to the Siamese. I have no knowledge of any treaties between the Malay Rajahs and their neighbours.

Captain Stanley. I am Captain of H. M.'s ship Wolf. I recollect that about the 20th of April last I was off Pulo Tinghee. I brought these prisoners on board after taking them in a prahu. I know these prisoners. I know Decho who, on seeing this prisoner Draman, took off his outer garments, and his trousers, and put them on. Decho pointed four prisoners out as having known them before. The Chinese and Malays could not speak each other's language. Moc recognized four of the prisoners, but did not seem so inveterate as the first witness. The Chinese came on board our ship's boat at Pulo Tinghee. My second Lieutenant, Mr. James, took the Malays' boat. Two jolly boats were sent after them. They had kreeses and javelins on board. I found rice, tobacco and salt in their boat, and also some papers, which they considered as charms calculated to render their undertakings prosperous. I left them at Singapore, with a turban sash, and looking-glass. The Malays always pretend to be nothing but traders when they happen to fall in with us.

Mr. James. I am second Lieutenant of the Wolf, and saw the first witness Decho brought on board. I was the person who captured the prisoners at the bar, on the 26th of April last, near Pulo Tinghee. I saw these weapons (produced in court) when they were found on board the Malay boat. I boarded three boats on that day. I did not detain more than one, where I found the prisoners. The boats carried about 10 men each. We found kreeses on board the boat we detained. Most Malays wear these weapons, and also use javelins at sea. I boarded the boat about one mile astern of the ship Zephyr. They were making in for the land and approaching our ship. The three boats were in company; but the two other boats had regular papers, and I allowed them to pass. The boat which I detained was the weathermost of the rest. I saw no ammunition on board, nor any swivel.

Mr. Macdonald, first Lieutenant of the Wolf. I saw a man at Pulo Tinghee run toward my boat, from on shore. I told him to shout out; he did so, and another man came from the jungle, and then a third man; and I took them all three on board the ship. I did not observe any of the prisoners on the island. I saw wounds on the neck and on the wrist of one of the Chinamen.

George Curtis. I am a seaman on board the Wolf. I know Pulo Tinghee, where first I saw Moc the witness; and also the second witness Shaget. I did not see he third at that time. Decho, the first witness, came to me then and was bleeding under the ear.

Andrew Hurn. I know these witnesses (pointing to the Cochin-Chinese.) Moc first came to me, as I went into the jungle. These witnesses came out of the jungle to me, and I took them on board.

Mr. Clarke said, there is no case to go to a jury. The Cochin-Chinese and Malays are at war, therefore this is no act of piracy; it is warfare. Besides, the prisoners are here destitute and friendless, and can produce no witnesses; and there is proof by the Bishop's declaration and the whole evidence, that the tribe were at war, and the Cochin-Chinese mandarin obliged to guard the coast.

This Court has no jurisdiction in the matter; but the Malay Rajah has, and to him the affair ought to be referred.

Sir John Peter Grant. There is no doubt, that when two nations are in a state of hostility any such collision between them on the high seas can be no piracy.

Mr. Clarke quoted an instance of a case of a Chinaman called Appu, who had been accused of murder and was acquitted, the event having taken place on the high seas.

Mr. Advocate-General. The man was not acquitted but transported to Penang, where he destroyed himself.

Mr. Clarke. There can be no doubt that the property of Decho belonged to a joint partnership; and yet there is no proof as to whom, according to the indictment, the property belongs. How then can piracy be charged on the prisoners, jointly or severally?

Mr. Osborne supported the defence. He entered on the details of the case, alluded to the law of marine jurisdiction, as applicable to the point at issue.

Sir John Peter Grant. In this Court, the Common Law of England is not always applicable to such cases as the present one.

Mr. Osborne stated that the evidence did not seem to support this indictment.

Mr. Advocate-General. The boat is the property of Dhoe; and the cargo belongs to persons unknown.

Sir John Peter Grant referred in substance to the instance of mutual war, when the seizure of a ship would be no case of robbery or piracy. It is to be considered whether there is any proof of the fact of any legitimate war, or whether it was an instance of spoliation.

Verdict. Prisoners guilty of piracy, excluding 1st count, and admitting the subsequent ones.

Sir John Peter Grant.—Let the prisoners be brought up on the last day of the sessions.

The interest felt by the public in this case was very obviously manifested, by a numerous attendance on both days of the trial.

The Court rose after five p. m. and adjourned till Monday, at 10 o'clock.—Hurkaru.

MONDAY, AUGUST 22.

THE HURKARU CASE.

Shortly after the sitting of the Court, Mr. Justice Grant addressed the Advocate-General and said, in regard to the motion for a contempt of this Court which ought to come on to-day, I have given it much consideration, and I am desirous that a case of so grave a nature should not be brought before me sitting alone on this Bench. I would therefore suggest to you, Mr. Advocate-General, that it would be a preferable course to apply for a criminal information before the full Bench, from which the censure will have the due weight which so grave an offence requires. In pointing this out to you I am not prejudging the case or giving any opinion on it; but I must also say, that I do not entertain the smallest doubt, that in sitting herein Session I have the fullest power to entertain your motion, and that this Court can punish as a high contempt any act tending to bias or prejudice either the Petty or the Grand Jury—on that point I have no doubt.

The Advocate-General.—After this intimation from your Lordship I shall not press my motion, and I shall most seriously consider whether I ought not to apply to the Court in another form as your Lordship suggests. I have no doubt that had I proceeded I could have fully established that the Court has jurisdiction to make the order I apply for.

Mr. Clarke.—I came here prepared, to oppose my friend's application. Had I addressed the Court I should have commenced by stating that I had affidavits to offer and explanations to make regarding what I may term the merits of the case and quite distinct from the legal points. But it would have been my duty as an Advocate of the Court, before I went into these merits, to have shewn that my friend asked your Lordship to exercise a jurisdiction which, as a Court of Admiralty and as a Court of Oyer and Terminer, you did not possess.

The Advocate-General.—If my friend denies the jurisdiction, and goes into a discussion of the question, I shall press my motion.

Mr. Clarke.—I am not going to discuss the question, I am merely mentioning the course I should have taken had my friend pressed for his order. And as I would then have previously stated that I had affidavits on the merits independent of the legal points, so now that these legal points cannot be discussed, I think it due to my client to state that these affidavits distinctly deny the slightest intention on his part to attempt to bias the Jury or prejudice the prisoners. They also state that should the Court be of opinion that such was the tendency of the publication that my client regrets deeply that it should have appeared, and that it is solely attributable to inadvertency occasioned by a serious press of business.

The Advocate-General.—I have no doubt that my motion was right and the Court have the power.

Mr. Clarke.—I cannot discuss that now, but as you do not press it, the regular course is to discharge the order.

Mr. Justice Grant.—It is; let the order be discharged.

The Advocate-General.—A mistake, my Lord, has been made in drawing up the order, which it is as well I should correct. The Attorney's name is to it as the Attorney of the Hon'ble Company. Now, the Government have nothing to do with the motion I made on my own responsibility, not as Advocate-General but as a Counsel engaged in the cause, considering that a contempt of Court had been committed in the cause; just as my friend Mr. Clarke the other day complained to the Court of a similar publication. The Government have nothing to do with the matter. I have thought it advisable to set this right.

Mr. Clarke.—It was hardly necessary for the Advocate-General to take the trouble of assuring either me or any one who knows the Government, that they could have had nothing to do with such a motion.

THE AFFIDAVITS.

Samuel Smith, of Hare Street, in the city of Calcutta, maketh oath and saith, that he, this deponent, is the printer and publisher of the Bengal Hurkaru and Chronicle daily newspaper. And this deponent further saith, that he, this deponent, received, on Monday the 15th day of August instant, a certain letter signed BLACKWALL POINT, which said letter was personally delivered to this deponent by Mr. ———, with whom he, this deponent, has for the last five years been well acquainted. And this deponent further saith that he, this deponent, held a conversation with the said Mr. ———, the principal subject of which was concerning a certain tale or story entitled "A tale of the Java Clipper" which had appeared in a publication called the Bengal Annual and in the weekly newspaper called the Bengal Herald.

And this deponent further saith, that he, this deponent, is from an early hour in the morning until very late hours at night, incessantly employed with a variety of business in editing the said newspaper and conducting a very extensive business as a publisher, and that as the Editor of a public Journal he, this deponent, receives every day numerous letters from anonymous and also from known correspondents for insertion in the said newspaper. And this deponent further saith, that at the time of his receiving the said letter signed BLACKWALL POINT, he, this deponent, was indisposed and suffering from severe fatigue, and partly from such circumstance and partly from the letter having been given to him by a gentleman with whom he was well acquainted, he, this deponent, did not read the said letter through, but only looked at parts of it paying but very slight attention to the same. And this deponent saith that under the circumstances aforesaid of this deponent's fatigue, indisposition, and acquaintance with the gentleman giving him the letter, and more especially the said conversation regarding the said tale published in the Bengal Annual, and Bengal Herald, and this deponent knowing that he, Mr. ———, had often commanded in a ship in the Eastern seas, the impression on this deponent's mind was, that the said letter was principally a criticism on the said "A tale of the Java Clipper," and that under such impression he, this deponent, sent the said letter to this deponent's deputy printer for insertion in the said journal. And this deponent positively swears, that this deponent did not believe or suspect that there was any thing whatsoever in the said letter calculated to prejudice the prisoners or bias the jury or in any way impede the course of justice. And this deponent saith that had any such suspicion occurred to this deponent, he would not have permitted the said letter to be published, he, this deponent, fully admitting that any such attempts, are most injurious and criminal. And this deponent lastly saith, that if this honorable Court should be of opinion that the publication of the letter in question is calculated to prejudice the minds of the jury and obstruct the course of justice, he, this deponent, begs to express his most sincere regret and solemnly swears that he had no such intention in publishing the said letter.

THE AFFIDAVIT OF THE WRITER OF THE LETTER.

—in the city of Calcutta, Manner, maketh oath and saith, that he, this deponent, hath for upwards of twenty years been engaged in a seafaring life and hath also been a commander of a ship during different periods of the last twelve years, and during which time he has made ten or twelve voyages to the Straits and the countries lying to the Eastern Coast of the Bay of Bengal. And this deponent further saith, that he, this deponent, is the author of, and wrote, a certain letter signed BLACKWALL POINT published in the Hurkaru newspaper of Tuesday the 16th of the present inst. And this deponent saith, that he, this deponent, personally gave the manuscript of the said letter to Mr. Samuel Smith, the publisher and proprietor of the said Hurkaru newspaper, to whom this deponent hath been well known for about 5 years. And this deponent saith, that it did not appear to this deponent that the said letter was calculated to prejudice the trial of the persons accused of murder on board of the ship Sumatra, the real object of this deponent being to ensure their being tried in Calcutta in which he considered justice would be more certainly administered than if they were sent to a foreign Court. And this deponent saith, that he did not, and he doth not believe that any anonymous statement in a newspaper could in any way operate on the gentlemen composing the Calcutta juries to bias their verdicts. And this deponent saith, that if there be any thing in the said letter which could affect the minds of the jurymen, it was not written by this deponent with any such object or intention, but under a directly contrary persuasion. And this deponent further saith, that he fully admits the great criminality of intentionally making any such attempt; but, he swears positively, that intentionally he never did so, and that if this Honorable Court should be of opinion, that such is the tendency of the said letter, that the same has arisen solely from inadvertency, for which this deponent expresses the most sincere regret.—Hurkaru.

CASE OF THE GUNNER AND OTHERS OF THE SHIP SUMATRA.

The prisoners attempted to challenge the whole Jury, without stating any reason for the same, which was overruled. Mr. Advocate-General, addressing the Jury, said, that it was not necessary for them to consider the point of law, but the law so far only as the charge of piracy was concerned. He quoted a similar case in which the prisoner was condemned, and impugned some of the witnesses brought into Court. The learned gentleman laid great stress on discrepancies between their testimony at the police and that to be given in Court.

The Ship Sumatra belongs to a country dependent on the Dutch. In March last year, the Captain shipped a crew in Calcutta for a voyage in the Straits. They were to sail to Padang and then to Pondicherry. Why they came hither in preference to going to Pondicherry, said the learned Advocate, is for you to determine. About the middle of June the murderous transaction took place. A quarrel happened on board between the Captain and the Gunner in the morning; and in the evening, the Gunner went down among the Sea-cunnies; he afterwards brought up a sword. Whether the Sea-cunnies and Gunner were parties to the deed is also to be ascertained. The ship was taken aboard, and the Captain came up and was struck with a sword by the Gunner, who soon after wounded the Captain again with a deadly weapon. The Gunner then exclaimed "Hurrah! I am Captain of the ship now!" which will be confirmed by many witnesses. The Mate soon after the shout, was wounded; and the Gunner said to him, "I am Captain now!" If these facts, gentlemen, are proved to you, give a verdict accordingly. The Gunner gave directions to throw the Mate overboard, which was done from cowardice by the men. The Mate swam towards the ship, and was ordered to be shot whilst hanging by a rope half in the sea. Another man shot at him again and killed him. The Gunner's clothes were bloody, and he ordered the Captain's mistress to give him the Captain's clothes, which she did; and finally he took her for his mistress.

Bombace Buddeville sworn. I was employed on the 7th of March last in Calcutta as steward on board the ship Sumatra, Captain Harmoni. Mr. Roos was the Mate of the ship, which was to go from hence to Batavia. I went in the ship. Mr. Roos was discharged when I joined the ship, and another European was employed on board. The Gunner's name was Agapito de los Reis. The ship went to Padang. Captain Harmoni and Mr. Roos were the first and second men of the ship there, and when she sailed thence. The prisoners present, Agapito de los Reis, Mariano Francisco, Clementi Marco, Augustin Moni, Reyneau Antonio, were sea-cunnies, or steersmen. I heard that we were hired to go to Pondicherry, and from thence to Coringa. I do not know whether we were steering from Padang, and after leaving it. The murders took place on the 17th of July last, on a Friday, nine or ten days after our departure. We were at sea—no land in sight. A quarrel commenced about 10 in the morning, the Captain was making a noise with the boys, and then came out of the cuddy and said, you Gunner, you b—g—r, bring the key; you and I have done. I was sitting down and picking oakum at the time. The Gunner or Seiang ordered me down to tar a rope. After taking the altitude, the Gunner went down also. It was not yet three bells (or half past 7) when, as I was lying on the fore-castle, the Gunner came forward, and went below, and then came up again and went aft, and two sea-cunnies came up after him, Reyneau Mariano and Moni. These prisoners are here at the bar. Mariano Francisco was sitting on the bits, and Reyneau on the fore-castle ladder. The former was crying, and I asked the cause, when he said, "O! God, it will be done," and I asked "what?" He answered "you will see!" The ship was coming to, and I was forward. I only saw then on deck Reyneau Mariano and Moni. The Gunner made a sign to the steersman Marco, then at the wheel, and held a sword behind him in his right hand. The sails were flapping considerably, and the Captain came out, ran on the poop to look at the compass, and said, "Holloah! Gunner, you b—g—r, where are you going to?"—and while he was looking at the compass, was cut down by the Gunner with a sword belonging to Clementi Marco, which I had seen in his chest, and with which the Gunner used to cut fish when on shore. I cannot say whether the Captain was struck on his shoulder or on his head; or whether the sword flew from the Gunner's hand and was broken. The Gunner drew out his knife and stabbed the Captain, and they both rolled down the poop ladder. The Captain ran into the cuddy; the Mate came up and followed him;—and the Gunner also went after them both into the cuddy. The sea-cunny Moni made a stab with a knife which was used to kill swine, but I do not know who received it. The Mate went inside the Captain's cabin and shut the door; then the Gunner laid hold of the Captain from behind, and dragged him out of the cuddy door, threw him down, and taking a sword in his hand, gave him two cuts with it. The Gunner said sneeringly, "You are a very good Captain! I am commander!" and exclaimed "Hurrah!" Every one on deck answered Hurrah! At the time the Captain was wounded, Mariano, Reyneau, Francisco and John

Lawrence, were down near the pantry, which is close to the poop ladder. The Gunner then went into the cuddy, put his sword on the cuddy table, and pulling down the bayonets placed there, he said: "Mr. Roos, you are a good Captain! I am commander." Mr. Roos answered: "I'll do every thing—navigate the ship for you, or any thing." Mr. Roos was then speaking from the venetians of the Captain's cabin. The Gunner went on the poop, and called out, "Mr. Roos! Mr. Roos! I want to speak to you!" When Mr. Roos came out, I saw that his right side was covered with blood, and his shoulder in a state of apparent dislocation. He went on the poop. The Gunner repeated again: "A very good Captain you are, yes! I am commander." Mr. Roos replied—"I will do every thing—navigate the ship for you, wherever you wish to go." Roos added, "I have two sisters;" but the Gunner took no notice of what he said and went below. The Mate then spoke to Adrian and Reyneau, in an entreating manner, addressing them in the French language. Then Clementi Marco, with a drawn sword in his hand, ordered three lascars to throw the Mate alive overboard. The lascars were Ali Arab, Dina and Sounga. The Mate cried out loud, in a moaning tone, as he was dragged along by the lascars, who threw him overboard. I was then aft on the poop and saw the Mate thrown from the poop, although he had laid hold of the driver sheet. Clementi Marco ordered Ali Arab to cut away the driver sheet, which he did. I then saw the Mate swimming in the water, when Mariano, who is here at the bar, shot at him with a musket. The shot did not take effect. John Lawrence, one of the prisoners at the bar, then took the musket and shot at the Mate. I did not see whether the shot took effect or not. I then saw the Mate take hold of the main sheet, which was hanging in the water on the starboard side of the ship, which was ordered to be cut off, and Mariano cut it away; and, as the breeze freshened, I saw the unfortunate man no more. The Gunner was all this while in the Captain's cabin. The Captain rose no more after receiving the two cuts with the sword, as I said before. I believe the Captain was also thrown overboard, as I saw him no more after that evening. After some time I came down to put away the muskets, and the Gunner asked me "Where is the girl?" alluding to the Captain's girl. I answered "I know not." He said "then go and look for her;" which order I obeyed, and went from cabin to cabin but could not find her. I went forward, and Reyneau told me "do not go empty handed." I asked why? He said "who knows?" Then dreading something, I took a sword and fetched the girl, who was delivered to me by Bastian. I took her into the Captain's cabin to the Gunner, who said to her in Portuguese: "For the sake of you I have done the deed." She replied "I do not understand—I am frightened." Which was spoken in Malay: "Sia trada tawó—sia tawó." At the Gunner's command I translated her words to him in Portuguese. She then smiled and told me to bring a piece of cloth from outside. I went but could not find it. I called John Lawrence to clean the place, according to the Gunner's order, and Lawrence brought a bucket. I was there with the girl, Lawrence and the Gunner; a little boy was standing at the door. I opened a trunk, of which the girl gave me the key. Her room opened into that of the Captain. Out of the trunk I took two towels and banians, the latter of which the Gunner put on. I then perceived that he had a wound in his side. The trunk I had opened was the Captain's property. The Gunner had on a sarong, canvas trousers and a shirt, and was afterwards dressed in the Captain's shirt and the girl's clothes. The Gunner uniformly lived in the Captain's cabin after the latter was thrown overboard, for a space of 15 or 16 days. He took command of the ship after the murders had been committed, and gave orders to the Seacunnies to steer in an unknown direction—to Reyneau Mariano, Clementi Marco, and two others. I learned that the ship made sail towards Calcutta. The Gunner spoke to me about gold-dust. I never went in that ship to Pondicherry, but, as I said, came towards Calcutta, the first place where I landed since the transaction took place. (Two cutlasses are produced in Court, two table-knives, one of which is broken, and also a fork.) The largest of the two knives is the knife which Marco wore, the smaller that of the Gunner, with which he struck the Captain. These sabres belonged to the ship Sumatra, where I saw them. With one of these sabres the Gunner also struck the Captain.

Mr. Leith put questions to witness, to ascertain whether he understood the nature of an oath? Witness did not answer directly to the question, but said afterwards—"it is to speak the truth."

Q. "Then did you speak the truth at the police?"

A. "Very little truth and a great deal of falsehood."

Q. "What is your religion?"

A. "The Roman Catholic."

Q. "Was then your oath before Mr. McFarlan binding on your conscience?"

A. "I spoke under the influence of fear, and told more lies than truths. The Gunner told me not to be afraid, and I knew no law. In fact, the whole crew spoke nothing but falsehoods. I applied to be a witness in this court while in prison. I told Mr. King my desire, and asked him to separate me from the other prisoners that I might tell the truth now."

Q. "So you volunteered to give a new evidence, subsequent to that before Mr. McFarlan?"

A. "I had no reason to be afraid. I had done nothing."

Q. "Then you perjured yourself?"

A. "All the rest did the same! I was taught to speak lies from morning till evening every day, by the prisoners. The Gunner, Agapito, thus instructed me."

Q. "Then you will perjure yourself on the suggestion of an individual?"

A. "I cannot help it. I am like a blind fowl, for I know no law."

Q. "Yet you understand enough of law to apply when in jail to become king's evidence, to wipe away every suspicion?"

A. "European soldiers in the jail advised me to speak the truth."

Examination continued.—The sails began to flap on board, and the Captain came up and said to the Gunner, "You b—g—r what noise is this?" They both rolled down the ladder. They went into the cuddy, the Gunner dragged the Captain out and killed him, and he was thrown overboard. The Mate, too, was thrown overboard. After this had been done, we saw the Gunner fall; we undressed him and saw he was wounded in the side. I did say to the Magistrate that I had not seen the Mate until he was lying upon the poop. I saw the Gunner go from the foresail abaft. The Sumatra is a bark; she was then running under the studding sails. The lower, top-gallant, and top-mast studding sails were taken aback when the Captain went himself on the poop, and ran to the compass on hearing the flapping of the sails. The Gunner was standing on the starboard side close to the man at the helm, to whom he waved his hand and made signs. I could have seen the steersman, if I had chosen, by inclining my body. The Gunner was near the ladder. I do not know how large the ship is. It was the duty of the Gunner to tell the Captain in the cuddy of any sudden emergency. The Captain came out instantly, and found fault with the Gunner, and abused him in the words I have said in my examination; viz., "Holloa! Gunner, you b—g—r, what are you doing?" Then, after these expressions, the Gunner cut the Captain with a sword.* It was with that sword which belonged to Marco, and with which the Gunner used to cut fish, that he cut the Captain. I did not know to steer before the Captain died; five days after I knew how to do it, and did it. I am very little acquainted with the compass. All I know about the course of the vessel I heard from other people. Immediately after Reyneau said to me "it shall be done," and "you will see!" I saw the ship taken aback, and a waiving of the hand by the Gunner. I then thought there was something wrong about Reyneau himself, something wicked in his heart.

Mr. Leith.—"You mentioned before the Magistrate that four individuals, including yourself, had thrown the Mate overboard, and in this Court you mentioned to-day that four others did so."

The Gunner instructed me so to speak at the police. I was not one of those who committed that deed. The Gunner ranks always next after the Mate, or Mates, and failing him, or them, must take the command of the ship. Bastian staunch the blood from the Gunner's side; I did not assist my Captain against the Gunner; for if I had, they would have killed me. Nor did I inform the Mate in his cabin of the deadly struggle between the Captain and the Gunner. I was not bold enough to attempt it. All was then in confusion. What could I do?

Mr. Leith. "Then you were a passive spectator of that atrocious murder, whilst eight swords were at your and the Mate's disposal in the cuddy?"

A. "It was then somewhat dark. But how many more questions do you mean to put to me?"

Examination continued.—We sailed under Dutch colours. The Captain and Mate were Dutch. The ship was made of wood! I do not know what countryman the Gunner is, but he speaks Manilla. I am a native of Penang. When we were boarded by the pilot the Gunner told him the same story which I told at the police. We called at no intermediate port. In the way we met a brig, but did not speak to her. We held on our course without any communication with the shore or any craft whatsoever.

Cross-examined by Mr. Cochrane.—I believe no shift of wind caused the ship to be taken aback, but that it was in consequence of the helm being put down; and my belief is founded on my seeing the sign made by the Gunner to the steersman. It was rather a dark night. If a needle had fallen down you could not have found it; and yet there was light enough to recognize people at a short distance!

Sir John Peter Grant. What did you state to the Magistrate about the Captain's body being thrown overboard?

A. That I and Antonio had done the deed, for so the Gunner instructed me to say.

The prisoners, (excepting the Gunner) whose Counsel has been heard, had no questions to put to witness, and only said that he did not speak the truth.

To a jurymen. The Gunner ordered a knife (produced in court) to be exhibited to the constable.

Amedee Reyneau, (a French boy of about 15 or 16 years of age). Being a Roman Catholic, a difficulty arose how he should take his oath before the Court. A cross, however, being made on a sheet of paper, he consented to swear. He spoke through an interpreter. In March last I was in Calcutta. My parents are alive at Coringa. I know the ship called Sumatra. I was only an apprentice on board. We sailed from Calcutta to Batavia. We were nearly a month going to Batavia, where we remained seven or eight days. From Batavia we went to Padang, and were fifteen days on the voyage. We remained twenty days at Padang, a Dutch settlement, I believe. From Padang we were bound to Pondicherry, and not to Calcutta. We took in a cargo of cow hides at Padang. From Batavia we had gin, iron and pigs of lead. We landed those articles at Padang. About ten or fifteen days after we had left Padang, the Captain was killed. On the morning of that day, nothing important happened that I know of. I was lying below, when I heard, at about 6 or 7 a. m. a dispute between the Captain and the Gunner. I slept till eight. I heard, whilst lying down, the Captain disputing about spirits with the Gunner, saying to him, "Gunner, you and your sea-cunnies have been drinking a great deal!" The Gunner said, "No, Sir." After that the Captain asked him for the keys of the gun-room, which the Gunner immediately delivered. At twelve I saw them take an observation. The Captain called Adrian Van Sosten to give the sea-cunnies grog, which he refused to do. Then the Captain called me to give the grog to them, which I did. Then again the Captain called the Gunner to give twine to the sea-cunnies; on which the Gunner said, "You have taken the keys from me, I am now only a passenger." The Captain replied, "Gunner, we have done with each other." I was lying on the fore part of the ship after 7½ p. m. when I heard a hurrah. I then heard from Adrian Van Sosten that the Captain was dead. I ran below; and the Gunner told us to come up and throw the dog overboard. I then saw the Captain lying on the deck and groaning, and the Gunner was at the same time insulting him in English. The Gunner next called the Mate, who was in the Captain's cabin; who said to him, "forgive me!" The Gunner replied, "I will—come out." When the Mate came out the Gunner ordered the sea-cunnies to seize him, which they did. After a while they released him again, and he reclined on a buncop on the poop; whereupon the Gunner went down into the cuddy. I was close to the main-mast. I saw the Gunner again near the compass. I did not see the Mate again. The Gunner told Clementi de Marco, in my hearing, in the Manilla language, to throw the Mate overboard, and Marco called to the lascars in the Hindoostanee tongue to assist him in doing so.

The Mate begged hard for his life, saying "I have a little sister to support," and such words of entreaty. Then the lascars hove him overboard. Those lascars were Sungor, Mahomed and Dina. The Mate swam in the sea, caught a rope called the main sheet, and swam towards the ship; when a Malay boy named Kutchel saw him, and cried out, here is the Mate! Mariano (whom I see here) told John Lawrence to load a musket with ball; which Lawrence did and handed the musket to Mariano, who fired at the Mate; but as the shot missed, he told John Lawrence to load another musket, which the latter did, but added, "you will miss him again, let me have a shot at him." Lawrence then fired, and exclaimed in Portuguese, "I have killed him! I have killed him!" I saw the Mate no more. The Captain, during this time, was still lying on his side and groaning. Mariano then ordered John Lawrence to fire, with a musket loaded with powder at the Captain's face, at about nine inches distance. This occurred immediately after throwing the Mate overboard. On the powder being fired at the Captain he groaned most piteously, struggled, and died. Mariano ordered Philip Bastian and Antonio de Cruz to go and fetch stones; Mariano also asked Ismael, the cook's-mate, for an empty bag. Antonio de Cruz put the stones into the bag and tied it to the Captain's feet, and the Captain was then thrown over-board by Comnodoo, the cook, Philip Bastian and Antonio de Cruz. I saw the Captain no more. The Gunner was at that time in the Captain's cabin with the Captain's woman, or girl, who was cleaning his body. The Captain's cabin was on the poop, and I could see inside well; but the Gunner could not see any thing on the deck or observe when the Captain was thrown overboard. The woman was cleaning the Gunner's body with a towell, and he had only a pair of trowsers on, and no shirt. The Gunner's clothes, just before the cleansing operation, were covered with blood. He afterwards put on one of the Captain's shirts and a garment belonging to the girl. Towards eleven p. m. the Gunner took the altitude, ordered the Cassab to load a cannon and prepare a match, and told the Tindel to be ready with his whistle. The Tindel, or boatswain's mate, received from him the order to fire the gun, ring the bell at 12 p. m. and call, "all hands up;" and all this was done by the Tindel, at the hour mentioned, according to directions. The crew assembled, and the Gunner called them before him one by one. The Gunner told them and me, "we now are going to Calcutta; if you are asked there what you know about this business, say you know nothing about it." At first, having taken no oath at the police, I did not tell the truth, and said that I knew nothing; but when I had been sworn, I related the same story as to-day, in this court. The Gunner took the command of the ship immediately after the death of the Captain and Mate. The ship was running S. E. previously, and afterwards and since the event N. E. We tacked about as we came near Calcutta. The Gunner occupied the Captain's cabin, but when the pilot was expected he removed to another. The night he expected to have the pilot on board, he fired guns and lighted lights on board. The Captain's girl lived with the Gunner in the Captain's cabin; but they parted, from prudence, when nearing Calcutta. The butler went into the Captain's room after the Captain's death, with Antonio and others.

Cross-examined by Mr. Leith.—I am 15 years old. I know a little of navigation. I am not very certain whether we went S. E. or S. S. E. I took the helm occasionally with a sea-cunny, and steered in that way, after leaving Padang. Every thing I have said is true. The event happened about 12 or 15 days after we left Padang. The Captain was a violent man at sea, but not so violent before as after he had come to Calcutta and had taken these lascars and sea-cunnies. Formerly he had a good crew and never shewed any passion.

Q. Mr. Leith. "Have you lost one tooth?"

A. "Yes."

Q. "Did the Captain break that tooth?"

A. "Yes, but unintentionally, and by throwing me down."

Before we reached Calcutta we saw Nicobar, Acheen and some small islands, but did not land. On the pilot coming on board, I heard the Gunner say, I am the MURDERER! I am the MURDERER! but I did not understand of whom. I can swear to this. The butler and the lascars were there, and almost all the crew. Adrian and Moni were there and within hearing as well as Bastian, Philip and Agripa. The pilot heard the words.

The Court rose at past 8 p. m. and adjourned the trial till 10 a. m. the next day.

TUESDAY, AUGUST 23.

The trial was resumed this-day.

Amédée Reyneau.—I did not hear the butler called by the Gunner.—I was near the Captain. Here is the brother of the Gunner who frightened me last night, (pointing to the Gunner's brother.) I was obliged to apply to Serjeant Clarkson for protection. He (the Gunner's brother) said to the Captain's woman, that if I told the truth I would be hanged! The man did nothing to me. This is all I have to say.

Prisoners had no questions to put to witness.

John Maddock said the boy is telling stories.

Meena, a Malay girl of about fourteen years of age.—My name is Meena; I do not know that man. No man came to me last night. I had no conversation with Amédée Reyneau last night.

Constable Clarkson.—The boy said to me last night, in great fright, that he had much to apprehend.

Amédée Reyneau.—Meena told me some words of fear in this Court house. Adrian Van Sosten heard the words.

Adrian Van Sosten.—I am a Protestant, and I only speak French. I did not hear that woman, Meena, speak any thing last night.

Sir J. P. Grant.—If you speak truth you are safe. You are under the Court's protection; but you should beware of speaking untruth.

Meena to Mr. Advocate-General.—I went from Batavia on board the Sumatra, where I lived with Captain Harmoni. I occupied the same cabin as the Captain. On the morning of the day on which the murders were perpetrated, my master was very angry with the Gunner, on account of having smelt the fumes of some liquor. My master abused the Gunner in Malay and Bengalee. At eight in the evening my master was reading in his cabin, and perceived some lights above near the compass; he then went on deck, and had no arms with him. He fell on the quarter-deck over the ladder from the poop. The Mate ran into my master's cabin and my master did not rise any more! I saw the Gunner on my master, stabbing him and my master breathing hard! The Mate was in my master's cabin. I then ran away. I saw the Mate no more afterwards, nor the Captain, who were both thrown overboard. I went forehead, and staid there for about one hour. I saw the sea-cunnies, as I came back, with swords in their hands. I saw the Gunner covered with blood, and he said to me, "If you will not take care of me, I will kill you!" I fell on the Gunner's feet and remained with him all that night. The Gunner changed his clothes—his bloody clothes, and put on others. He afterwards put on my sarong, and he had a shirt of his own on. The Captain's clothes were kept in a box. The Gunner used the Captain's cabin and my own after the Captain's death. I was obliged to live with the Gunner to save my life. I was obliged to tell lies at the police, having been frightened by the Gunner.

To Mr. Leith.—I am a native of Batavia. I only know the Captain's name to be Harmoni; I do not know his Christian name. I know that the ship belongs to a merchant at Batavia, but do not know his name. I saw the Gunner bloody, and with wounds on his body, on the left side. He bled a great deal. There was a piece of white cloth applied to the wound, and some medicine, which were both taken from the Captain's box, and with which a plaster was made. I applied nothing to his wounds; but all the sea-cunnies applied medicine to them. I was sitting at his feet at that time. I had no part in it at all. The butler came to me and I gave him the keys for medicine. The butler brought the medicine to the Gunner. It was the butler who applied the medicine. I know of three persons, one named Kutchell, another John, and a third Curran, who only attended on the sails. This Curran is outside this room, in the Court House. All the sea-cunnies were present during the treatment of the wound of the Gunner. The night was very dark. My master was reading below. On hearing the Captain breathe hard three or four times I ran away. About five minutes after my master went upon the poop, he fell, as he came down the ladder, on putting his foot on the first step; and the Gunner was behind him, and as my master fell, the Gunner tumbled upon him, and began to stab him. The Gunner had several times threatened to kill me! One of these sea-cunnies—the one with a blue jacket, (Mariano Francisco, and witness pointed to this prisoner) also threatened to kill me! The Gunner said to me, "the Captain's mouth is very bad, I will cut it!" Clementi Marco also said, "the Captain is bad for saying we drank arrack, we shall kill him!" I told lies at the police after I had been sworn. When my master was reading he saw a light on deck as if somebody had been burning paper, and he dropped his book and went up. About a quarter of an hour after I had taken my meal the event took place. I could see through the sky-light over the Captain's cabin whatever was done on deck, but I could not see the binnacle.

A Juryman.—“Did you hear, when the Captain went on deck, any fluttering of the sails?”

A.—“No, my master went up on account of the light.”

The prisoners had no question to put to witness.

Robert Henry Bain.—I am Surgeon of the police, and examined the witness Agripa. He is not of sound mind, and I have no doubt of it.

Lionel Goddard.—I knew the late Mate of the Sumatra. He lived with me about three weeks. His name was Roos. He left this on board the bark Sumatra, Captain Harmoni, and I have not seen him since. I know his signature. I heard from Mr. Roos that the Sumatra belonged to the Dutch Company.

John Hurluck.—I am a Captain. My ship is at sea at present. I believe Padang is in Sumatra.

Mr. Mackenzie, examined by Mr. Cochrane.—I belong to the firm of Macintyre and Co. (Mr. Cochrane observed: “This is a very bad Court for hearing. Speak louder!”) I have a bill of lading, also a parcel from the Sumatra, addressed to Mr. Defriez, living at Pondicherry. The bill of lading was addressed to Mr. Defriez. I broke open an envelope containing several letters, &c.

Kutchell. My name is Kutchell and I am a native of Java. I am about 12 or 14 years of age. I was born at Sooropir. I do not know the nature of an oath. I am a Mussulman. I was sworn just now on a prayer book with the name of Allah! I know it will be wrong if I speak falsehood. If I do so, God will notice it. I was on board the Sumatra, when she sailed from Padang to Pondicherry. The Captain's mistress was sitting in a small cabin. I saw her in Court to-day. Her name is Meena. I heard that the wind had come from ahead. Then the Captain dropped the book he was reading and took a sword. I told Meena of it. Meena did not see the Captain leave the cuddy. (Meena is called to hear the boy's evidence). Meena, at the time of the affray was in the pantry. The Captain, sword in hand, ascended the ladder, and immediately stabbed the Gunner. The Gunner had at that time no arms in his hand. He closed with the Captain and both fell together on deck. The Gunner took the sword out of the Captain's hand and struck him three or four times with it, and I heard the Captain exclaim, “oh! oh!” The Mate, Mr. Roos, was then asleep in his cabin. He came out, went to the place where the swords were, took a sword and went and stabbed the Gunner behind. The Mate entered into the woman's cabin. The same evening the Gunner cried out from above, “Mr. Ross! Mr. Ross! come up!” The Mate then said to the Gunner, Mauf koru (Pardon me). Clementi Marco was there, on the poop. Mariano, Clementi Marco, Moni and Reyneau, (the prisoners present are the men I name) Dina, Mahomed and John (who are also in the Court house) heard Clementi call out, “pukro! pukro!” to lay hold of the Mate. John, Dina and another, obeyed the order. The Mate called out “mercy! mercy!” I could hear the words distinctly. Then they took the Mate aft, (these men here present) and the Mate was silent. Then Clementi with a sword cut him across the legs, the three people who had hold of him let him go, and he fell into the sea. I then saw the Mate swim in the sea and lay hold of the main sheet. I said, “here is the mate” and John descended to the main chains, and fired upon the Mate, who let go his hold and sunk. Two sea-cunnies afterwards fired at the Mate, and he was to be seen no more. The Captain died that night before the Mate was thrown over-board. Bastian and Mahomed put stones into a bag. I saw nothing remarkable after that evening. I did not see the Captain's body any more.

The next day at twelve o'clock they fired a gun, and afterwards the Gunner called the people one by one. I was called by the Gunner, who said to me, “what will you say when you arrive at the country?” I answered, “I will relate what I saw!” Then the Gunner said, “if you speak so I shall kill you.” The Gunner instructed and advised me thus:—“If the great men ask you if I slept with the Captain's mistress, reply no!” On the night of the Captain's death the Gunner slept in the girl's room, and every night afterwards. I saw the Captain breathe a little, and heard him groan while he was stretched on deck.

After that, I believed that he was dead, as I did not see him move.

Prisoners had no questions to put to witness.

Adrian Van Sostien.—We had rice and gin on board, and I heard also of there being some gold dust. The butler informed me that he had come to me to desire me to throw the officer overboard, and advised me to say, if we were asked about it afterwards, that we acted only from fear. This, and similar advice, was given us about the time we met the pilot at Kedgerce. I saw the Mate on the hen-coop. The butler was then in the cuddy. I saw the Gunner just after his wounds were dressed. Bastian gave me some burnt paper, and I handed it inside the Captain's cabin, where the Captain's girl was at the time. I helped to throw the Mate overboard. I did not go into the cabin. I knew of the murderous transaction by hearing the hurrah! I did not give any grog to the sea-cunnies on that day; nor did I see it given.

Witness, who spoke through a French interpreter, appeared to be a lad of 18 or 19 years of age.

Prisoners had no question to put to witness.

Antonio De Cruz.—My name is Antonio De Cruz. I was employed on board of the ship Sumatra. I was in her when she was bound from Penang to Pondicherry, and recollect when the Captain was killed. I was then ill and below deck. I was sleeping at 7 o'clock p. m., when I heard the crew making a noise, and I came up and stood near the caboose, or cook-room, and heard the Gunner using abusive language to the Captain. The lascars were then fast getting on the rigging. I went down again for about half an hour, when the butler called me up, and I went with him to the Gunner, who had sent for me. The butler was near the long-boat with a sword in his hand. Mariano told me not to be alarmed, as nothing would be done to me. Mariano and Moni, who are here, were then standing near the capstan, each of them holding a musket and a sword in their hands. Two lascars were there also. The Captain was stretched out at full length near the ladder. The Gunner was in the cuddy. Mariano told me to go with Adrian Van Sostien and fetch stones, which I did.

I passed the stones from below to Adrian, and saw, on coming up that those stones had been put into a bag which was tied to the Captain's feet. Then we lifted up the Captain's body and threw it overboard. I did not see the Captain again. The sea-cunnies ordered me to do the deed. I was commanded by Clementi Marco to go to the helm, with whom I remonstrated. The Mate was then lying upon the hen-coop. He was wounded. An order was given to throw him overboard. The order seemed to be given from below. Then the Gunner told me and John Lawrence to throw the Mate overboard. I replied, “how can I do so? I am now at the helm.” “Remain then where you are,” he said. Mahomed, Dina, Sungoor, Ali and John Lawrence came to take hold of the Mate, and then the Mate spoke a few words in French to John Lawrence, who abstained from seizing him. The other four did so, and the Mate struggled with them. Then Clementi, the sea-cunny, struck him a blow with a sword across his chest, and he was launched into the sea. He got hold of a rope, but the rope was cut away by Clementi! The ship was then taken aback, and the Mate had time to reach her again. The Malay boy (who was just now in court) Kutchell, chanced to see the Mate, and cried aloud that he had got alongside! Mariano immediately came with a musket and fired at the Mate. Then the Mate cried aloud; the rope which he held was cut away, and the ship got ahead and left him behind struggling in the waves! I did not speak at the police what I do now; I was kept from doing so from fear. The Gunner and the sea-cunnies persuaded me to deviate from the truth before the magistrate. Here (pointing to them) are these men in this Court,—the Gunner and the others. The day following the one on which the murders were committed, the Gunner called us up and said, "Do not suffer this matter to transpire; whoever does so I will destroy him, his family and children." Lawrence said that he was born at the Mauritius; Mariano, Moni and Clementi that they (and the Gunner had mentioned the same of himself) were born at Manila. I told lies at the police. I thus acted from fear of the sea-cunnies, and not of the Gunner, who was then in custody. I know that there was a parcel of gold dust on board.

Prisoners had no question to put to witness.

Captain Edward Follens.—I have been thirty years in the sea service. When a Captain dies, or is incapacitated from illness or otherwise from acting, the first Mate, or the Mate, takes the command of the ship. Such is the sea custom. The Captain, if only bodily incapacitated, may appoint any officer he chooses, or any man of the crew, to succeed him for the time.

Philip Bastiau.—I embarked on the Sumatra in Calcutta four or five months ago. I was topas on board; I was a witness of almost every circumstance that has been stated before by other witnesses, relative to the lascar's going up the rigging, &c. I heard the clashing of metal. I concealed myself in the life chains, and from thence I could see nothing. I remained there about half an hour, and then the Captain's girl called out to me, coki! coki! (which means cook in Malay) I then assisted the sailors in hauling some ropes. I saw the Captain's girl forehead, and she was trembling. She was near the fore-mast, and said in Malay, Cabetan sudi mathé—mathé!—the Captain is dead—dead! Antonio De Cruz and John Lawrence went towards the stern. I brought a stone near the Captain, who was lying near the ladder with his head reclining on his gun, and groaning very piteously. I did not hear him speak. I then went near the long boat. The Gunner called out, "Mr. Roos! Mr. Roos! come here!" The Mate then said, "forgive me; I have done nothing!" and added something in French. I heard him mention the names of "Adrien, John and Reyneau," but I could not understand his words. I heard his voice no more, until the Malay boy Kutchell cried out, looking over the ship's side, "Signor! Signor! Mate hean hie!"—Sir! Sir! the Mate is here. I next heard two musket reports, but am not aware who fired them. The Gunner said to me, "On our return to Calcutta, if you mention these things, you and all of us will be beaten and punished; therefore, from fear I told lies at the police."

Mariano Francisco, to prisoner.—"Did any one, I or any other, tell you to repeat a preconcerted story?"

A. Yes; you did, you, the Gunner and the other sea-cunnies.

Prisoners had no other question to ask.

The pilot, (another witness) did not appear. As he had not appeared before the Grand Jury, Sir J. P. Grant said there was no necessity for calling him.

John Mathew Dove.—I am an assistant of Messrs. Cockerell and Co. I know the bark Sumatra, and went on board of her when she was anchored here. Cockerell and Co. received from that ship two parcels of gold dust, of the value of about 4,000 rupees.

(A Dutch register of the ship Sumatra is produced, and Mr. Advocate-General objects to Mr. Leith's reading the documents.)

Mr. Advocate-General.—"My Lord, these papers do not prove themselves."

Sir John Peter Grant.—"I cannot tell whether those papers are genuine."

Mr. Dove.—On the ship's arrival here, I went on board to search for the Captain's papers, in my capacity as assistant, or clerk, to Messrs. Cockerell and Co. I found the keys of the Captain's boxes, got them opened, and found printed papers in the Dutch language, which I took for legal documents. I do not know what individuals compose the Netherlands trading Society.

Mr. Leith questioned the jurisdiction of the Court and required that the documents be read and translated first, for the information of the Jury.

Mr. Advocate-General.—The papers seem to me perfectly legal; there is a seal and signatures of the Governor and Secretary.

Mr. Robert Swinhoe.—I am not acquainted with Mr. John Bartlet, nor was any such person ever sworn or examined before the Grand Jury.

Daniel Dissandt, sworn. I am a Dutch translator. I have translated Dutch papers relative to the ship Sumatra. (The Ship's log book was then exhibited.)

The Court rose at 8 p. m. and adjourned till to-morrow at 10.

WEDNESDAY AUGUST 24.

The Court sat at ten a. m. and the trial recommenced.

Mr. Leith discussed the question of jurisdiction, and maintained, after citing various statutes, that the Court had no jurisdiction in this matter, the prisoner being a foreigner. In this case, he said, there was no piratical act, no attack of other vessels by the rebellious crew of the ship Sumatra. The learned gentleman then cited a case of an English ship, which was feloniously taken possession of by her crew, who then attacked other ships belonging to foreign nations, and which, he urged, was robbery and piracy. The case before the Court, he said, essentially differed from the one he quoted, and maintained that it was not against the peace of His Majesty the King, as was stated in the indictment.

Sir J. P. Grant.—This Court, as a Court of Admiralty of England, has jurisdiction over piracies committed on the high seas. This case is a robbery at sea, or piracy. Mr. Leith's statement goes to maintain that the Sumatra is a foreign ship, sailing under Dutch colours, and that the prisoners are foreigners; but this does not take the case out of the statute; for the nationality makes no difference. Every Admiralty Court has cognizance of any piracy committed at sea by any men of any nation whatsoever. His Lordship commended the research and talent displayed by Mr. Leith in advocating the case of his unfortunate client. Unfortunate I call him, added the learned judge, not in reference to what may be the eventual decision of this case, but from the nature of the charge brought against him.

The Gunner stated that all the witnesses had been previously taught to speak falsehood against him. Reyneau Antonio stated that when the event took place he was asleep, and therefore could have no knowledge of it. The other prisoners said that they had defended themselves at the police on a previous occasion.

Sir J. P. Grant.—But the jury were not present there; and, therefore, they must mention in this Court, whatever they think proper to alledge in their own behalf. Besides, their statements at the police consisted, with only one exception, of mere denials.

Clementi Marco.—I engaged myself at Calcutta on board the Sumatra. Our destination was Batavia. I was taken ill with fever and cold twenty days after I left Calcutta, and have been indisposed ever since; and yet the Captain gave me no medicine and forced me to work, which I did unwillingly. I was unwell at Batavia, and do not know how long the vessel stayed there; but we there took on board convicts for Padang. One night, after we sailed from Padang to Pondicherry, and I was at the helm, the wind headed and took the ship aback. The Gunner was then on deck and upbraided me and told the tindel to take down the lower studding sails. The Captain came up and spoke in Dutch and English. The Gunner was then on the poop at a little distance from me, and the Captain coming up the ladder, spoke in English to the Gunner, but I did not hear what he said. The Gunner came up close to me; and the Captain put one of his feet on the poop and the other on the ladder. The Captain then ran after the Gunner, caught hold of him, and they struggled and both fell down on the quarter-deck. I saw nothing more of the struggle. The Mate came on the poop after a while and spoke to me in Dutch. He had a sword in his hand, and I cried "Jesus! Jesus! he is come to kill me!" Then I let go the helm and ascended a short way up the shrouds, but could not from fear either ascend or come down. It was night when this took place. Shortly after the Gunner came on the poop with a sword in his hand. The Gunner said "Mr. Roos! Mr. Roos! let us speak together." Whereupon Mr. Roos gave him a blow with the sword which the Gunner returned and the Mate fell on the hen-coop. I was all that time holding the shrouds. The Gunner called aloud, "Sea-cunnies! Sea-cunnies! Buttlr! Buttlr!" The buttlr answerd and said "what do you want?" "Come up, said the Gunner, I will not hurt you, and throw that body overboard—the body of the Mate." The buttlr then called me to assist him. I then went to the wheel, and called Antonio to relieve me. He came. I went down to call Mariano, and met the buttlr coming up. I went to the cuddy door, and heard the Gunner in the cuddy, who asked me to assist him; he said "I am dying; If I live I will go to Calcutta, and surrender myself to justice. The Captain and Mate were the aggressors, and I killed them both." The buttlr then came and undressed the Gunner. I again went on the poop, and found the Mate lying in the same place. I heard the Gunner speak from the cuddy and order the Mate's body to be thrown overboard. Mariano ordered me to call Dina, Mahomd and Ali, lascars, to whom I said, throw the body overboard. As the body was thrown, it hung by a rope. I then told Dina to take a knife and cut away the rope! Boniface came up with a sword. I told him to cut the rope. He hesitated, and I cut it. Mariano had then a musket in his hand. I then took my station at the cuddy door. All who gave evidence against me told lies. The police can testify that I am weak, ill, and suffering all over my body. I had no ill-will against the Captain or Mate.

James Taylor.—I have been in command of several vessels. The prisoner at the bar sailed with me as Gunner; I first employed him in April or May 1830. He remained in my service about five months. I again employed him in December 1832, and shipped him in Calcutta. He remained sixteen months with me. He bore a very good character and behaved very well, doing his duty very willingly and with great alacrity. He had charge of the stores and of very valuable articles; yet I never lost any thing during the whole time he was with me. He was always sober. I ordered my servants in rainy or blowing weather to give him a glass of grog, and he rarely, if ever, accepted it. I consider him a very peaceable man. I am not aware of his having any property in Manilla, but when he was there, several of his relations came on board to visit him. He belongs to the middling class of the natives of Manilla, which place I always understood to be his country. I have heard that a person of the name of Captain Taylor was murdered on board of the Diaderina, at the beginning of the year 1832. I saw at Singapore the murderer of Captain Taylor, or at least a person was pointed out to me as such. The Gunner is not the man I saw.

Reyneau Antonio to Amédée Reyno. Q.—You said that I had broken open a box or boxes?

A. Yes; you opened the boxes, in company with the buttlr and Augustin Moni. There were three of you handling the boxes, and they were opened in the Captain's cabin, and in the cabin next to the Captain's. This you did the same night the Captain was killed. I was then in the same place near the capstan.

Q. Finding the Captain a corpse, where did you go?

A. You came near me with a sword in your hand, and I begged you pardon. The tindel, the tindel's wife and I, all fell at your feet, begging mercy from you! So did Adrian Van Sosten.

Q. You made a false statement yesterday, having mentioned other names, how was that?

A. No; I mentioned Reyno Antonio and Augustin Moni, as may be found by a reference to notes taken in Court.

Q. I came on deck from below, and was all night on the watch: is it not so?

A. You lie; you were drinking and smoking on the poop.

Q. Were you not drinking with us?

A. You lie; 12 or 15 days after the Captain's death you gave me and Adrian Van Sosten gin to drink.

Q. On the night when the murder took place how was I dressed?

A. You had on the Captain's red-cap; I do not remember the rest.

Q. What more shall I say, since you contradict every word that utter?

Francisco washed his deposition at the Police to be read.

Sir John Peter Grant, addressing Mr. Advocate-General.—No evidence, whatever, once given before the Police Magistrate, can be read here; either in favour of, or against the prisoners. Neither the Jury nor myself have any need of it.

Meena is called into Court. His Lordship told the witness through the interpreter, that she must now, as she did the day before, speak under the solemn pledge of an oath, the same as was administered yesterday.

Mariano Francisco to Meena. Q. Why did you say that I threatened to kill you—for what reason?

A. Yes; you threatened to do so. I said to you, Signor, I have done no wrong; I am a woman.

Q. At what place and at what hour did I threaten you?

A. At the time I was going to give tea to you, as you were smoking your cheroot, and to your friends here (pointing to the prisoners). The Gunner was there; but it was you that threatened to kill me.

Q. Are you not telling lies ?

A. No. You all made a slave of me. (Francisco then insulted witness, who looked in great anger at him.)

Q. Did you not behave like a queen on board ?

A. I only lay down when my work was finished. Was I to kiss your feet ?

Adrian Van Sosten is called, at the request of prisoner John Lawrence. Q. You said yesterday that I shot some one ; pray how did you know it ?

A. I only said that you had fired at somebody.

Q. Where was I then ?

A. You were near the main-sheet.

Q. Did I actually fire ?

A. You did, and with a musket. I saw you do so.

Boniface Buddeville is called by Augustin Moni. Q. How come you to be a witness in this case ?

A. I became a witness of what I saw. I know that I was forward, smoking my cheroot.

The Judge. Why do your depositions differ ?

A. I am ignorant of the law ; I am a blind fowl. I thought it, however, my duty to speak the truth.

Augustin Moni. No ; you speak falsehoods.

Sir John Peter Grant summed up the evidence. We wish we could give verbatim some passages of His Lordship's admirable address to the Jury. The following is a mere outline sketch :—

Gentlemen—I have already alluded to the extent of the jurisdiction of this Court, on the Admiralty side, in all cases of piracy committed on the high seas. This is not a question of nationality. Under whatever colours the ship may sail,—whatever may be the place of nativity of those who man her, still, in all such instances as the present one, the King's Courts have, for a long series of years, assumed it as their right to take cognizance of any robbery committed by her Captain or crew. In regard to the point of law, it will be a matter well worthy of consideration to weigh, whether, by reason of the importance of this case, it will not be advisable to adopt the suggestion of the learned Counsel for the defence, and to reserve the settlement of this specific point for a more full Court. Piracy, gentlemen, technically speaking, is robbery at sea ; and whatever other considerations may arise in your minds as to this subject, it is the end for which the piracy was committed—the intention of the perpetrators of it, which chiefly deserves your serious attention. It must be an intention of unlawful appropriation. Thus it happens, that if a man commits murder, or some such heinous crime, with the intent of unlawfully possessing another's property, however soon after he may repent, or restore what is not his own, nevertheless this act would remain a complete and perfect robbery. Gentlemen, as to the evidence before you, it is calamitous and painful. Yet discard from your minds every impression which may have been made upon you by a recollection of the atrocity of the means which you may consider as having been employed by the prisoners, and confine yourselves to the end. This is no trial of murder. You have only to satisfy yourselves whether or not these men appropriated the ship with felonious intention to retain the same, and to direct your investigation to three principal points : 1st, how much of the evidence you will believe ; 2d, what that evidence does prove ; and 3d, what it does prove against these prisoners.

His Lordship then examined the evidence, and remarked, in regard to first witness, Boniface Buddeville ; that there were discrepancies between his deposition at the police, and before the Court. Therefore, gentlemen, said his Lordship, receive his statement cautiously, as he stands in a situation different from that of the other witnesses ; and be pleased to bear in mind the very just observation for which we are indebted to the learned Advocate-General, and in which I perfectly concur, respecting the degree of credibility to be granted to a suspected witness. Such a witness's deposition may be entitled to some credence, and is not to be rejected, when corroborated by other evidence of unquestionable veracity.

In Amédée Reyneau's evidence, the Court pointed out to the jury various discrepancies with his former statement, and offered a similar remark respecting the deposition of Van Sosten ; and in commenting on that of Antonio De Cruz, adverted to the important question of how far a man's judgment may be biased by the influence of fear. The cause of fear, he said, must be immediate, and its effect may vary according to various circumstances, of natural courage, of time, of place, of the difference of sex, and cannot be judged of, therefore, by unerring and immutable rules.

Gentlemen, at the period of the arrival of the ship Sumatra in this country, and when the pilot went first on board, you have no doubt collected from the evidence, that the Gunner, Agapito de los Reis, is reported to have exclaimed, " I am the murderer ! I am the murderer ! " But, I leave it to your judgment and your charitable feelings, to consider whether that unfortunate individual actually conveyed a confession of the crime, or only meant that he was merely the accidental cause of its commission. Nor can I refrain, in alluding to the evidence given by Captain Tayler, from impressing on your minds and most seriously remarking, that in the performance of your sacred duty, you must remain entirely free from any preconceived opinion which you may have entertained, by the perusal of publications relative to this case, and to which I would not thus advert again, were I not deeply sensible how far they must prove detrimental to the great purposes of justice.

The jury retired, and then delivered the following verdict :—" The prisoners are guilty, on the first and second counts, of piracy."

Sir J. P. Grant.—Let them be brought up to hear their sentence on the 5th day of September next.

The learned judge concluded by addressing congratulatory remarks to the jury for their exemplary and conscientious discharge of their arduous duties.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 25.

THE SESSIONS TERMINATED THIS DAY.

Cossinauth Chatterjee, convicted of stealing from the office of Messrs. Carr, Tagore and Co., bank-notes to the amount of Rs. 6,688, was sentenced to imprisonment for 12 calendar months in the common jail of Calcutta, and, during the first and last month, to be kept in solitary confinement. Puttoo, Mirza Jaun, Fuzyb Ally and Fuzally, were committed to the house of correction to be kept to hard labour for 12 calendar months, for keeping in their possession property stolen from Sheik Munna, in Burra Bazar.

Gunga Ram, found guilty of assaulting Comole, and taking from her a gold necklace, value 40 Rs., was sentenced to death, which was commuted to transportation for 7 years to the Eastern Coast of the Bay of Bengal.

The following were discharged :—

Cartick, Rampersaud Doss, Sadoo, Horo, George Walker, Saugur, Mudden, Lockun, Boniface Buddvill, Ally Arab, Singoo Arab, Deena Mahomed, Meeran, Mahomed, Kumroo, Ameer, Bastian, Kingoo, Sidi Humba, Syed Ally, Sherajee, Jamal, Attay, Francis De Rozario.

The Court rose at half past one p. m., and will sit again at eleven o'clock on Monday next.—Hurkaru.

MONDAY, AUGUST 29.

At about half past eleven o'clock, the Chief Justice, who we were glad to see had recovered from his recent illness, took his seat on the Bench and opened the Court. His Lordship intimated, that in consequence of the Sessions of Oyer and Terminer having been continued so much longer than the usual time, Sir John Grant had not had leisure to devote sufficient attention to the judgments which were to be pronounced this-day; he was therefore obliged to postpone them, as well as other proceedings, until Monday next, the 5th proximo.

IN CHAMBERS.—(Sittings after 3d Term, 1836.)

Before Mr. Justice Malkin.

On the 13th August last, pursuant to a rule nisi, Mr. Leith, on behalf of Raja Kalikrishna and brothers, and the Executors (defendants), attended to shew cause against an order obtained by the plaintiff Raja Shikrishna, to bring into the Court all the real and personal property of Raja Rajkrishna deceased. Messrs. Pearson and Clarke for the plaintiff were in support of the rule.

On a motion to that effect, Raja Kalikrishna and others were allowed to sit and hear the proceedings.

Upon hearing the arguments by the Advocate on both sides, the Judge took time to consider; and in the afternoon of the same day, gave an order to the following effect:—That all the Company's Papers should be immediately brought into Court; and that the Master should enquire and report respecting a proper person to be appointed receiver of the estate of the late Rajah, and what will be a fit remuneration to be allowed to the said receiver.

In this cause, the Judge was engaged almost the whole day.—Hurkaru.

MADRAS SUPREME COURT.

MONDAY, AUGUST 1.

The Court was occupied from 2 o'clock to the time of its rising with the trial of an action of trover, brought by Colonel Conway against Manulla Lutchmana Chitty, for two pier glasses.

Mr. Minchin appeared for the plaintiff and said that his client was exceedingly sorry to be compelled to bring this action, but was compelled to do so, inasmuch as he had taken the house in which he now lived from one Permaul, who had subsequently sold the house to Lutchmana who became the landlord, and who, during Col. C.'s absence, took the glasses under a pretence of cleaning them and has since refused to deliver them to the plaintiff, demanding an additional rent of 50 rupees a month for the use of them.

The principal witness on the part of the plaintiff was Permaul Naick, who deposed to having let Dunmore House, together with many articles of furniture, and among them the pier glasses, which were the subject of this action, to the plaintiff, so long as he should remain at Madras, under an agreement which was produced and read; that he purchased the house with the glasses in question and other furniture, in one lot at a Sheriff's sale under an execution against the present defendant, and that it was a bonâ fide purchase—and that he had subsequently sold the same again to the present defendant, subject to his agreement with Colonel Conway. This witness underwent a long cross-examination by the Advocate-General on the part of the defendant, in which he endeavoured to elicit from him the fact that he was merely a name-lender, at the alleged sale, for the present defendant, and had been supplied by him with money to effect the purchase, and that therefore as the property had in point of fact never passed from the defendant, he had no authority to make the agreement in question with the plaintiff. Some circumstance, which came out on this cross-examination relative to some accounts of the witness with the defendant, gave a color to this view of the subject.

Some of the plaintiff's servants then proved the taking away the glasses, under the pretext of repairing them, and the detaining and refusal to return the same by the defendant.

Mr. Advocate-General then addressed the Court for the defence, which he grounded principally on the fact of the witness Permaul having acted in the purchase merely as a name-lender on behalf of Lutchmana, against whom an execution had been issued under which the house in question was seized, and contended that at all events the glasses and other furniture had not been sold with it.

On the conclusion of the Advocate-General's address, the Court rose, and the examination of the witnesses for the defence was postponed till the following morning.

TUESDAY, AUGUST 2.

The examination of the witnesses for the defence in the above cause took place this morning, but they failed in proving the case set up by the defendant, and a verdict was returned for the plaintiff—Damages 1,400 rupees and costs.—Madras Gazette.

FRIDAY, AUGUST 5.

CONWAY, Esq., v. LUTCHMANA MOODELLY.

The Advocate-General rose to move for a rule to shew cause, why the verdict on this case, should not be set aside, and a new trial granted upon two points; first, that there was no evidence against the defendant Lutchmana; and secondly, on the amount of the damages. The Court had decided that the question depended on the acts of Purnall, who was the agent of Lutchmana, but he contended that on the introduction of Lutchmana to Colonel Conway, a new contract commenced. The Court thought that the same right to the glasses survived in the new contract as was raised by the former; which in his opinion was a misconception of the law. As to the second point, the evidence was, that the value of the glasses had been admitted by the defendant to be some thousands of rupees, and that as the damages were only laid at 1,400 rupees, that amount had been given. This he contended was quite unjustifiable. The case was opened by his learned friend, that the special occupation of a furnished house was sufficient to enable such occupier to maintain trover, and this he admitted, that the fallacy of the plaintiff's was this, that although such occupation would constitute a sufficient title against a stranger, it would not be such against the owner. The special property might be in one the absolute right in another. The learned Counsel here stated several sales in support of his position. If the lessor takes away the property leased, he can only have an action brought against him under the lease. The Court had decided, the value of the glasses to be the criterion of damages. Was it the law of England that a party who had only one form or right of action, could by changing that form be permitted to recover ten times as much damages as he would have done in the proper form; yet if the present verdict should stand, that must be taken to be the law.

The Chief Justice repudiated the idea that the form of action would have any weight with the Court in deciding the amount of damages.

The Advocate-General continued, according to the present verdict if a livery stable-keeper let a horse worth 1,000 rupees for a day, and took him back before the day was out, then the party who had hired the horse might maintain the horse and recover the value of the horse;—it was impossible to make any distinction between such a case and the letting of the glasses. If the horse died, or the glasses were destroyed, could the law depend on that, it was the use and not the value of the property which should have been the criterion of the damages.

The Chief Justice.—If I were inclined to deal harshly with this misguided man, I should grant a rule nisi, which would be discharged with costs. On the trial of this action, it appeared that Col. Conway took the house with the glasses on a lease from Pemmell, who acted as agent to Lutchmana, and that lease is good as against his principal. Colonel Conway has brought this action to recover damages for the conversion of the glasses by Lutchmana. The Advocate-General has cited cases which in my opinion do not apply;—the rights of landlord and tenant are clearly defined, and as soon as the lease is signed, the tenant has a right of action against his landlord for taking away any goods which have been leased.

With respect to damages, I cannot say Colonel Conway has recovered too much for such a tort. I could not lay out of my mind the conduct of this defendant; in the first place he attempts to get possession of the glasses by a fraud; he comes to Colonel Conway's butler with a lie in his mouth; and finding that he did not succeed, he makes an unlawful entry into the dwelling house, brings coolies, proceeds to take down the glasses from the walls, and carries them away out of the compound. The circumstances under which the conversion takes place must always affect the question of damages. His Lordship then referred to several cases.

Fisher v. Prince, before Lord Mansfield, and the Court of King's Bench in 1762, in which it was expressly laid down that "where the real and ascertained value must be the sole measure of damages, then the specific thing demanded might be brought into Court; but where there is an uncertainty either as to the quantity or quality of the thing demanded, or that there is any tort accompanying it that may enhance the damage of the real value of the thing, and there is no rule whereby to estimate the additional value, then it shall not be brought in,—the value may be brought in, yet the Jury may give more in damages;" also the case of Merest v. Harvey, which was one of trespass for breaking and entering plaintiff's closet and sporting over them. The Jury had given £500 damages, which the defendant thought excessive. His Counsel moved to set aside the verdict. Mr. Justice Heath, before whom the damages had been assessed, stated the circumstances, which shewed that the defendant was a Magistrate, and had committed the trespass before the plaintiff's face and in defiance of his notice. Lord Chief Justice Gibbs said, "when a man disregards the conduct and principles of a gentleman and of a Magistrate, what is to prevent the reputation of such conduct but large damages? what should we say to a man in an inferior situation in life, who should so conduct himself? I know not on what principle we could grant a rule in this case, except on the ground that the Jury should only have found to the extent of the actual pecuniary damages sustained by the plaintiff. Suppose I had a walk before my house, which I had pleasure in looking at, or in walking upon, would it be allowed that a man should come and walk there to my annoyance, and then offer me one half-penny in satisfaction, alleging that I had received no damage?"

If Colonel Conway had brought an action of trespass, could any Jury have thought that 1,400 rupees were aggravated damages? certainly not: and if so, why should not that amount be given in the present case? Looking at the value of this property, and that Colonel Conway had taken the house on a lease, for as long as he remains at Madras, which may be for the rest of his life, I cannot say these damages are at all too large, more particularly, when the defendant had at the trial the option of returning the glasses. On the whole, I cannot see the slightest ground for disturbing the verdict, and therefore must refuse the rule.

DESILVA v. P. E. MORIARTY.

This was an action of trespass brought by the plaintiff, a Roman Catholic priest, appointed by the Bishop of St. Thomé, to do duty at the Boatmen's Church in Royapooram, against the defendant P. E. Moriarty, the Secretary of Dr. O'Connor, the Vicar Apostolic of Madras, and several others who had broken into the plaintiff's house and dispossessed him.

The question of contested jurisdiction between the Bishop of St. Thomé and the Vicar Apostolic, was only partially discussed. The necessity of a resort to it was obviated by the plaintiff's own proceedings, for it came out in evidence that he had recognized the authority of the Vicar Apostolic, and had given up possession to him both of Church and house, reserving a right to a room which he promised to vacate.

"The promise not having been carried into effect, the defendants kicked open the doors one day while plaintiff was absent, and possessed themselves of the apartment.

The Court gave damages 1 rupee, and in accordance with the practice at home, of no more costs than damages, where the damages were under 40 shillings, left the matter of costs to be paid by each party.—Madras Conservative.

INSOLVENT COURT.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 13.

There was little business of importance in the Insolvent Court this day, the attention of the sitting judge, Mr. B. Martin, having been mainly confined to the consideration of a few writs of attachment moved against several uncovenanted servants who have neglected to comply with the Court's order directing them to pay to their assignee one-third of their salary. Several of the insolvents pleaded poverty, the incurring of necessary debts subsequent to their discharge, and in consequence thereof. It was urged, however, by the assignee, that the order of the court did not inflict a hardship so great on the uncovenanted as it did on insolvent military officers, many of the latter being in the receipt of salaries much smaller in amount than those enjoyed by the former. The learned gentleman might have added that, with a very few exceptions, the debts of military officers are much less in amount than those of uncovenanted servants. It is a fact not generally known that many officers have been put to the inconvenience of imprisonment, the hardship of subsequent stoppages from their pay, for debts, the total amount of which, if we except those incurred in consequence of legal proceedings, do not amount to more than rupees 2,000 on each schedule. The learned judge discharged one of the orders, the insolvent promising to pay to his assignee the accumulated arrears by monthly instalments.

Mr. Thomas Holroyd resigned the appointment of special assignee, and Mr. J. W. Alexander was appointed to the office.—Oriental Observer.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 27.

In the matter of John Francis Spiller.

Mr. Strettell, on the part of Major Spiller, moved for a commission directed to certain persons at Sultanpore to swear the insolvent to a certain affidavit explanatory of a contempt of court for non-payment of the apportionment of his pay and allowances, as directed by the court on the 23d August, 1834, and for which an attachment had issued against the insolvent; and for an order, that the insolvent, who had been arrested under the attachment, should not be removed from his station until the return of the commission, and the motion was finally disposed of. It was urged that the affidavit disclosed circumstances of considerable difficulty over which the insolvent had no controul, and which would extenuate the insolvent's disobedience of the order of the Court, and which it was hoped would remove the process which had issued.

Mr. Sandes, on the part of the assignee, urged in opposition to the motion, that heavy expenses would fall on the estate by the continuance of the Sheriff's officer at Sultanpore, which was answered by the fact that the Sheriff's officer resided at Benares, and the expenses would be lighter by the stay of the process, than if the insolvent were brought to Calcutta, which would entail the necessity of conveyance to Calcutta, and back, and that the motion in that respect was of advantage to the creditor.

Sir B. Malkin stated, without affidavit of the probability that the insolvent would swear to the affidavit proposed to be sent up with the commission, he could not pass any order, nor without the consent of the assignee who was the best judge of the interests of the creditors, would he pass the order in reference to the costs of the detention of the writ.

Mr. Strettell expressed his readiness to put in an affidavit of his belief, that the insolvent would depose to the affidavit then offered to accompany the commission, inasmuch as it was in strict conformity to instruction he had received from the insolvent. As to the costs, he was ready to undertake to pay all costs incident to the delay sought by him, and he hoped in reference to the interests of the creditors, the assignee would accept of that undertaking.

The motion was granted on consent to the terms proposed.—Englishman.

MISCELLANEOUS NEWS.

CALCUTTA.

THE METCALFE LIBRARY.—It has been somewhat erroneously given out, that the Metcalfe Library Committee had been offered a piece of land for their building in Tank-Square, at the north side of the green. The answer they have received from Government is merely a request that they will first furnish a plan of the building they propose to erect.

THE BORING EXPERIMENT.—It has been mentioned that the progress of the boring experiment in the fort is suspended for want of tubes. This cause of delay, however, is expected to be very soon removed, the Committee having written to Delhi to order back a large quantity of tubes, part of their supply from England, which had been sent up there for experiments in the Upper Provinces.

ABOLITION OF GURRAWARRAH AND BAITOOL STATIONS.—It is reported that the stations of Gurrawarra and Baitool are to be abolished in the cold season. The 46th Regt. N. I., it is said, are, upon this arrangement taking effect, to go to Jubbulpore, leaving two companies at Gurrawarra while the 66th N. I. move to Hoshungabad.

UNFORTUNATE ACCIDENT.—The Looknautpore stables tumbled down on the 18th of June, and Mr. Alexander's horse Kalmia and his syce, were killed by the fall; several other men and horses, which were buried in the ruins, escaped with a few bruises.

MELANCHOLY ACCIDENTS.—An apprentice belonging to a vessel moored off Coila Ghaut, was drowned on the 12th August, while bathing in the river, a short distance from the shore. An English boy, has also been drowned, while crossing the river in a darghy.

MILITARY.—It is stated that Brigadier Clem. Brown, C. B., Commandant of Artillery, and Colonel Sir T. Anbury, C. B., Chief Engineer, are nominated by the Commander-in-Chief to Government, for the General Staff, as Brigadier-Generals, to succeed Brigadier-Generals M. White and N. Smith in command of the Benares and Saugor divisions of the Army.

It is said, that the court-martial assembled for the trial of Capt. Ford, has terminated in a verdict cashiering.

Capt. P. Grant, who has been ordered to Hansi, by the Commander-in-Chief, it is said, is to raise and command the new Hurrianah corps.

The Head-Quarters fleet made a move on the 15th August, with the flood tide, on its way to the upper provinces. The fleet consists of nearly one hundred boats, budgerows and pinnaces, public and private, and will be escorted by detachments from the 10th and 43rd regiments of native infantry. The officers who proceeded with the fleet are Colonel Lumley, Colonel Torrens, C. B., Colonel Sir Jeremiah Dickson, K. C. B., Colonel Dunlop, Captains Craigie, Welchman and Garden, and Dr. Sibbald.

THE MILITARY FUND.—The Meerut Observer speaks of a Memorial being in circulation, praying that the Court of Directors would authorize subscriptions to the Military Fund without reference to Regimental or Army rank, but to length of service, at the option of the subscribers. The prayer of the proposed Memorial has already been conceded, in reply to an application from the Directors of the Military Fund. The details are now under consideration, and will soon be submitted for the vote of the Army.

MILITARY FUND.—The following is a prospectus of the suggested change in the principle of subscription to the Military Fund, which will be forthwith submitted for adoption by the Army.

First.—That all Members who have served 32 years may subscribe as Colonels, all who have served 27 as Lieutenant-Colonels, all who have served 22 as Majors, all who have served 12 as Captains, and all junior officers as Lieutenants.

Second.—That Medical Officers may subscribe as Colonels after 27 years service, as Lieutenant-Colonels after 22 years, as Majors after 17 years, and after 10 years as Captains.

Third.—That Chaplains may subscribe after fifteen years as Lieutenant-Colonels, after twenty years as Colonels.

Fourth.—That admission to subscribe in any higher rank, to which his service may render an officer eligible, shall depend on the payment of the increased donation within the period prescribed by regulation 10 of the existing rules. Further, the claim must be made within 3 months, if he be in India, or, if at home, within 12 months, from the date of these 5 new rules, or from the completion of the qualifying service.

Fifth.—If the privilege to subscribe in any higher rank be not embraced within the above periods, the application, whenever subsequently made, must be accompanied by a health certificate, and compound interest, at 8 per cent. per annum, shall be charged upon the additional donation and arrears of subscription accumulated half yearly, (as by article 2d of existing rules) from the date of these rules taking effect, or from the completion of the qualifying service.

CAPTAIN HAWKINS AND THE CALCUTTA INSURANCE OFFICES.—It is said that the long disputed question between Captain Hawkins and the Calcutta Insurance Offices, relative to the salvage on the Sylph, has been recently settled by a compromise, the Insurance Offices consenting to pay 16,000 rupees in addition to the sum (between 80,000 and 90,000 rupees) which they deposited in the Treasury last year, as an eighth of the proceeds of the opium saved. The Insurance Offices made this sacrifice because they were fairly tired out, Government giving them no assistance in the matter, but continuing to hold both stakes, the deposit of the proprietors, and the sequestered third of the proceeds remitted from China, and leaving both parties their remedy at law, a course threatened by Captain Hawkins, but without any apparent intention to proceed to issue.

GENERAL ALLARD.—Private letters from General Allard mention, that that officer is coming out in a French ship-of-war, to Pondicherry, from whence the Marquess of St. Simon, Governor of the French possessions in India, will accompany the General to Calcutta. The contemplated trip up the Indus, therefore, is a mistake.

RETIRING FUND FOR THE UNCOVENANTED.—The Committee appointed to devise a scheme of a Retiring Fund for the Uncovenanted service, have at length agreed upon a plan which is now before the Government for its ultimate sanction. The calculations on which the proposed amount of subscription has been based have been prepared by Mr. J. B. Plumb, and are certified by a highly competent officer to be as accurate as can be desired.

DEFALCATION IN THE SYLHET TREASURY.—It is said that another instance of defalcation in the treasury of the Sylhet Collectorate has lately been discovered, the native treasurer having embezzled the public money placed in his hands to the extent of several thousand rupees.

The Sudder Board has convicted and sentenced the Treasurer to five years' imprisonment.

TEA FORESTS.—It is stated that Mr. Bruce, of Sudeya, has discovered ten tea forests in the Singpho country, where the tea is growing luxuriantly, and has employed men to clear them. He has also made the important discovery, that about twenty-five miles directly west of Ningrew, the sands of a small river, called the Powee-panee, is so very rich in gold ore, that the people who wash it for gold generally find a rupee's worth per diem.

FEVER HOSPITAL.—The donations to the Fever Hospital now amount to 36,250 rupees, and the annual subscriptions to the amount of 1,873 rupees.

STEAM COMMUNICATION WITH BOURBON.—It is stated that a Company has been formed at the Mauritius to establish a steam communication with Bourbon, Madagascar and the Cape; the capital of the Company being £25,000 in shares of £100 each. The shares are said to have been nearly all taken.

THE IRON STEAMERS.—The Jellinghee (flat) and Megna, arrived off Calcutta at seven o'clock on the morning of the 2d August, from Allahabad the 26th July, having beaten the dak and made the passage in little more than half the usual time. The Jellinghee has brought ten lakhs of old coin.

THE STEAMER JUMNA.—The Jumna, steamer, in consequence of the river Jumna having shoaled considerably, stuck fast in the return trip on the sand, at a place distant about seventy miles from Agra. Her commander, Mr. Scott, however, succeeded in getting her off, and she has reached Calcutta in safety.

EUPHRATES EXPEDITION.—Intelligence has been received by the Cavendish Bentinck, which vessel arrived from Bushier on the 24th August, that a portion of the Euphrates expedition had arrived at Bussorah on the 19th of June, viz. the steamer Euphrates, with Colonel Chesney. The other steamer, the Tigris, was lost in a violent gale near Arrah, on the 21st of May. Lieutenants H. B. Lynch, 26th B. N. I., and R. Cockburn, Royal Artillery, and nineteen men, are said to have perished in the steamer. Captain Macdonald, 8th B. L. C., came passenger in the Bentinck, and brought dispatches from Persia.

SAVINGS' BANK.—The quarterly Savings' Bank statement, exhibited a very remarkable increase in the number and amount of deposits, the monthly average of these being 46 per cent. and their aggregate amount 14 per cent. in excess of the previous monthly averages of the whole period from the commencement of the institution. The average monthly number of new accounts opened during the quarter, is 74 against 66 the former average, the total monthly subscriptions amounting to Cy.'s Rs. 54,600 against 38,900 the former monthly average. The last quarterly statement shewed a net balance of Sa. Rs. 7,52,522-1-7, whereas the present balance is Cy.'s Rs. 9,15,870-1-1.

FORGED BANK OF BENGAL NOTES.—Forged Bank of Bengal notes have been in circulation so adroitly executed as to baffle detection, except by those who are perfectly conversant with every sign and symbol on genuine notes. Unlike former cases, these are totally counterfeit, and not an alteration of the genuine notes. The engraving is fairly and well executed, the paper alone showing an easily perceptible difference.

ICE.—Another cargo of ice has been imported on the Ruthelia, which is expected to last until Christmas.

THE WAREHOUSING ACT.—A draft of the intended Warehousing Act has been communicated to the Chamber of Commerce, with an intimation that it has been framed with a view to the supposed necessity of allowing selected private warehouses to have the bonding privilege as a temporary measure, it having been found that there are no Government buildings available that will sufficiently answer the purpose. But a suggestion is thrown out to the merchants, that if a joint stock association would undertake to erect proper buildings, Government would facilitate the object by providing ground at a moderate rent.

ADVANCE UPON COTTON.—It is stated that a reference has already been made to this Government from Madras in consequence of an application for an advance upon cotton for China.

THE SALT MERCHANTS.—The salt merchants have been attempting a combination to force this Government to give up the plan of open golas and return to the old system of monthly sales. They hope to do this by deterring the inferior dealers, who to a certain degree are under their controul, from taking advantage of the opportunity to apply according to their wants, and have hitherto succeeded in preventing application for purchase.

M. PASTORAL.—M. Pastoral, a French gentleman and a sculptor of cameos, has just arrived from the Mauriuis, and will shortly put his art in operation here.

THE HOOGHLY COLLEGE.—The Hooghly College was opened on the 1st August, and 1,500 students enrolled their names in the first four days.

HINDU COLLEGE.—The Governor-General, accompanied by Sir Edward Ryan, visited the Hindu College on the 5th Aug., and spent the greater part of the morning in hearing the different classes examined in English Literature, and the Mathematics. His Lordship expressed himself particularly gratified, and Sir Edward Ryan was also greatly pleased in observing the manner in which the students acquitted themselves.

THE RAJAH OF BURDWAN.—The putative Rajah of Burdwan, was brought to trial at Hooghly on the 3rd and 4th August, for creating a disturbance in Burdwan, with armed followers, and the greatest popular excitement existed during the trial. Upwards of 10,000 persons were present on each day. The charge being fully proved, the reputed Rajah was condemned to six months imprisonment, and to find security to the amount of 40,000 rupees.

MAHOMEDAN PETITION.—An important petition from the Moosulman population has been presented to the Governor-General of India in Council, bearing 18,171 signatures of persons resident in Calcutta and its environs and in other towns of Bengal as far as Patna. The sole prayer of the petition is that the jagiteers or stipends which until last year were allowed to the students of the Madrassa, and of which they were deprived by one of the last acts of Lord William Bentinck, may be restored to them.

SALE OF ZEMINDARIES.—About thirty Zemindaries had been advertised for sale on the 11th August, by the Collector, and some of the zemindars almost despaired of saving their property from the hammer. Only one estate, however, was actually sold, a zemindaree belonging to the family of the late Cossinauth Bouterjee, assessed at about eleven thousand rupees, which is also about the sum bid for it.

ORIENTAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY.—The proprietors of the Oriental Life Insurance Company have resolved not to admit any more subscriptions for shares, the large amount of the present accumulated fund rendering any further addition of capital quite unnecessary.

RELIEF OF THE IRISH CLERGY.—The subscription for the relief of the Irish Clergy, it is said, has increased to more than 6,000 rupees.

ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.—A very beautifully written manuscript copy of the Arabian Nights' Entertainments, complete, is now in Calcutta, and to be seen at Messrs. Thacker and Co's.

MOFUSSIL.

MURDER.—A prisoner named Jooglee, was recently executed for the murder of a Buniah at Meeranpore. He was taken from the jail at sunrise, and on his way to the gallows, was evidently struggling with his fears, calling out Ram, Ram, Seeta, Ram! On arriving at the fatal spot he objected to the touch of the executioner, but his scruples were momentary; the rope being adjusted he was launched into eternity and died almost instantly.

Mr. Dyce Sombre will leave Sirdhanah about the 1st of next October, for Calcutta. Almost the whole of the moveable property is sold, and the fortune of this gentleman exceeds 50 lakhs, besides his claim on the Badshahpore Jageer, which it is his intention to prosecute in England, before the King in Council. Almost the whole of the intimate friends of her late illness, have been presented with some memorial.

The following are the charges, on which Captain Ford will be tried, before a court-martial, of which Colonel Pollock, C. B., is President, Colonels Dick, Perse, Piesgrave, and Major Carnegie, the field officers composing a part of the court.

1st.—For having embezzled the sum of company's rupees 39,869-10-5, more or less, the property of Government.

2nd.—For conduct unbecoming an officer and gentleman, in having embezzled various sums, deposited with him by officers, non-commissioned officers, privates, and women of the same regiment, and others, amounting to Company's rupees 6,858-2-11 more or less.

KURNAUL.—A sporting major has purchased for the station, the Barrieli pack of dogs. A subscription is in circulation to assist his exertions. Many names are already on the list.

MIRZAPORE.—Nunkoo Loll, the Nazir, has been dismissed, and it is expected that one or two others will follow.

ALLAHABAD.—The wife of a man named Dabiah, accused the wife of a neighbour named Bechoo, of adultery; a panchait of the caste was assembled, and the offender, with her husband, her husband's father, and her husband's father's wife, were all expelled from caste. A day or two thereafter the whole four swallowed poison, from the effects of which three died.

The splendid bequest to Government by the late Joykissun Doss, the Benares Banker, is to be contested by the father of the deceased, who denies that his son had any power so to will away the property. It is ruled, that Joykissun obtained possession of his wealth after an unsuccessful attempt to gain the inheritance, by poisoning his father, who, to save his life, immediately put him in possession of the wealth, to remove any inducement to a repetition of the offence. The case is now before the Sudder Court.

LOODIANAH.—Accounts have been received, that Mr. Vigne had reached the Cabul frontier in safety, and may hence be considered to have made out the most dangerous part of the trip.

MUSSEERABAD.—The Cavalry and Auxiliary returned on the 18th July, from Jutpore, but the 52nd still remain to prevent any disturbance; the Regts. joined camp, about 5 miles, from the Residency.

CANPORE.—A dreadful accident occurred at Canpoore on the night of the 12th July. Nuwab Meer Ruiseed went out a pleasuring, in a ten-oared bauleah, with a set of nautch girls, attendants, &c. On their return, about seven o'clock, in attempting to track round a temple near the General's garden, the tracking line broke and all the people crowding on one side, the boat was upset, and the Nawab, his son-in-law, and eleven people, were drowned.

On the morning of the 18th July, between the hours of two and three, the house of Mr. P. W. Powers, tailor, was entered by a daring gang of thieves and property stolen to the amount of upwards of 4,000 Rs. The circumstance that renders the loss so distressing, is that among the articles were gentlemen's and ladies' dresses received from, or ordered by, his customers; some completely finished, and others cut and partly sewn.

DELHI.—It is said that several old Captains intend to avail themselves of the Boon, especially in the 51st, 70th, and 44th Regiments; but no mention is made of Majors or Lieutenant-Colonels wishing to retire. It is asserted that no less than six officers in the 44th Regiment alone will immediately take advantage of the Boon—and, doubtless, many other old Captains will follow the example.

Mr. W. B. Wright has been appointed Superintendent of the Hurriana Line.

A jemadar, a retainer of Tigpaur Shah, one of the Princes of the Palace, having occasion recently to censure a sepoy for negligence of duty, brought the man so severely to task, that he drew his sword and wounded the jemadar. The sepoy has been committed to prison.

A robbery was committed in the City some time ago, to the extent of 14,000 rupees, but no clue has as yet been obtained of the perpetrators.

NERMUTCH.—A court-martial will shortly convene for the trial of Lieut. Wilcox of the 49th Regiment N. I. who is now under arrest.

SIMLA.—A hostile meeting took place recently at this station between Mr. Fraser of the 7th Cavalry, and Mr. Rose of H. M. 11th Dragoons, in which the latter gentleman was wounded in the thigh, and so severely as to fracture the limb. His recovery is, however, expected to be rapid.

AGRA.—In consequence of the promotion of the pundit of the civil court of Agra to the situation of munsiff, the Lieut. Governor has directed that the vacant situation of court pundit shall not be filled up, but that the Judge of Agra, when he requires vaisthas on points of Hindu law, shall apply for them, to the pundits of the surrounding districts.

Begum Sumroo has left thirty thousand rupees to the Propaganda Chapel at Agra, for the purpose of founding a College of young men to serve in the Apostolic Mission of Thibet and Hindustan. The funds are to be placed in the hands of three trustees, one of whom is to be the Bishop, A. Pezzoni, and the other two laymen.

On the morning of the 21st of July, a young woman, the wife of one Kunai, a kumar in the village of Khevriya, about 14 miles from Agra, on the left bank of the Jumna, went out of the village about fifty paces, when several wolves set upon her, tore open the poor creature's stomach, and then attacked her head and throat. She died soon after of the wounds.

HISSAR.—It is said, that a great deal of rain has fallen near Hissar during the last month, and that from the 18th July, it has poured more or less. The crops are getting on finely: the bajera is 2½ feet high, and the other crops are equally strong and promising. The zemindars are all actively employed.

MOORSHEDEABAD.—The Collector of the place, Mr. Torrens, on the 22nd Srabun, was seeing the money put into the chest when he ordered the podar, Gourisoondur, to take up one of the toras of rupees. The podar refused doing so, stating that it was not his business, and that a duftry was appointed for the purpose. The Collector gave him a blow for this reply, to which five or six blows were given in return. The Collector was going to give a second, when a sepoy interfered and kept the peace between them. Soon after the Collector deposed on oath before the Joint Magistrate of the place, Mr. Leicester, to the effect above stated, when the podar was sentenced to be confined for a period of three months.

NATIVE STATES.

SHEKAWATTEE.—Recent accounts from Shekawattee are highly satisfactory; Major Forster has, it seems, put an entire stop to all plundering; and the Kuzzaks have been driven beyond the limits of his command. So highly sensible are the Bickaneer Government of the able management of Major Forster, in Shekawattee, that they have applied to our Government, to obtain the services of that officer, for the express purpose of suppressing plundering, within the limits of the Bickaneer State.

CABOOL.—Runjeet Sing is steadily progressing towards the final subjection of Cabool: his recent conquest of Tonk, has brought him within 70 coss of it, and he has little to apprehend from Dost Mahomed's opposition; for, surrounded by difficulties of every kind, both at home and from abroad, Dost Mahomed is no longer formidable. Indeed, accounts from Cabool give a most melancholy picture of this once powerful chief; his troops, from want of pay, mutiny upon every occasion; and his subjects are daily deserting him: so that, in a very short time, Runjeet will be very probably in possession of Cabool.

Dost Mahomed has been involved in a scrape, through his affection for a fiddler, who played his part so well, that the ruler of Kabul raised him to rank, and bestowed on him every mark of his esteem. However, the lady of the fiddler contrived to pass the time of her lord's absence, in the society of a Persian, and even indulged herself with the forbidden juice of the grape. One night the musician surprised the amorous pair, and cut off their heads. The Umeer supported his favorite, but the companions of the Persian attacked the royal cavalcade one morning, and murdered the fiddler, while the Ameer was content to save his life by flight.

LUCKNOW.—The barber Derusett, it is said, has retired from the service of the King, taking with him several lakhs of rupees. The jeweller, the coachman, &c. &c. will migrate shortly. His Excellency Roshun Ood Doulah, too, is preparing for the evil day, by remitting enormous sums—some say to the extent of a million and a half, out of the country, and by attempting to conciliate the Feringees by feasting the society of Canpoore. Other favourites are following the example of the light of the state, and though not robbing to an equal extent, display at least equal energy and address.

It is said that a crisis is now at hand, and that all the Europeans are to be discharged for their. The Pashah Begum is engaging troops to resist the determination of her son to turn her out of the city.

JEYPORE.—The Jeypore trials were terminated on the 4th August, and both Jota Ram and Hookam Ghed have been convicted of aiding and abetting in the murder of Mr. Blake.

HAMPOOR.—The Nuwab, lately, while tiger-shooting in the Serai, narrowly escaped being killed by a large tiger, which exasperated at a wound it had received, attacked the Nuwab's elephant, killed the mahout and was in the act of springing at the Nuwab, when he received a second and fatal gun shot wound. The animal measured from head to tail 18 feet.

GWALIOR.—The father of the Rajah died on the 9th July. An embassy is about to be organized to wait upon the Lieutenant-Governor of the N. W. Provinces, of which the Mama Sahib will be the chief.

BHURTPUR.—A large reservoir outside the city gave way under the heavy rain of the 20th July, and flooded a considerable portion of the town. Numbers of the houses of the inhabitants were undermined by it, and the houseless wretches left to the mercy of the weather, and the Maharaja, the father of whom, however, directed Rs. 1,000 to be distributed amongst them.

L AHORE.—The Maharajah made heavy complaints to his durbar, of the dishonesty and idleness of the various collectors—that rents, which were always paid before the present time of the year, still remained in arrear, that a heavy drain on the royal treasury was necessary for the pay of troops.

Monsieur Ventura mentioned the receipt of letters from General Allard, who hoped to reach Lahore by the Do-eruh. The Rajah expressed his pleasure, and said the General should be reinstated in his old command. The Akabes are inclined to mutiny, for want of pay, and threaten to cross the river. Intercepted letters were produced to the durbar, purporting to be offers of assistance from Nuwaz Shah Nuwaz Khan to Shah Shujah. The vakeel of the former denied their authenticity. Monsieur Ventura proposed a clear rent of 15 lakhs for Cashmere, if Mahan Sing were recalled. The durbar remarked such a proceeding would be unjust, as Mahan Sing had greatly improved the resources of the country, and increased its population. Mention was made, that the troops of Dost Mohammed Khan were also in a state of mutiny for want of pay.

LOSS OF TREASURY.—A boat laden with treasure to the amount of 80,000 rupees, was upset on the 5th July, in the gulf at Pooree. The Master Attendant at Ganjain has gone up to Pooree with divers, for the purpose of raising the money.

A letter has been received from Now Nehal Singh, informing the Mr. Rajah that he had seized upon Derā Ismail Khan and imprisoned Nawab Shah Nawaz Khan, the chief of the country; and that he had achieved this great victory without a drop of blood being spilt on either side. The Maharajah sent orders to Now Nehal Singh, to make arrangements for sending the Nawab to Lahore, where he would be cared for; to provide his sons with jagheers upon the spot, or else send them to Lahore, to be provided for; and to raise to the grade of all the petty fairs in Derā Ismail Khan, Tank, and Doorebanoor.

Budget King has bestowed a reward, yielding 100 rupees, per annum, upon the family of the late Jondh Rajah.

Mrs. Keweenaw, one of the salaried of the Delhi Palace, has had an audience of His Highness, who received him with great honour, and questioned him closely regarding every thing connected with Delhi.

...succeeded in securing the canvas. The crew, who were on the quarter-deck, were obliged to be in to lighten and relieve the barque. On the 28th and 29th the vessel was under bare poles; on the 30th the gale abated.

EXECUTION OF DEATH SENTENCE.—Gaston Sney, the Havillair who shot the native adjutant of the 6th Regiment at Palaveram, according to the sentence of a European general court-martial. He did not at any period express contrition for the crime for which he paid the forfeit of his life; on the contrary, he appeared to have remained in an extreme hardened state of mind to the very last. The troops were paraded, and formed three sides of a square, and the murderer, adorned with a garland of flowers, was marched along the front, the band playing the dead march—he kept screaming to all as he passed along the line, and on ascending the scaffold put his head into the noose, and requested that his legs might not be cut, alluding to the practice of dividing the tendon achilles sometimes observed by the native tribes. His last words were the expression of a diabolical wish, that a certain officer might not be permitted to remain in the regiment.

SERIOUS ACCIDENT.—On Wednesday morning a canoe with six lascars, belonging to one of the dhows, attempted to come on shore when the surf was rather high. The canoe was upset and turned over several times in the surf, and one of the crew was drowned. The body was taken out almost immediately, but owing to the severe contusions he had received, life was extinct.

BOMBAY.

COURT-MARTIAL OF COL. V. KENNEDY.—The court-martial assembled at Poonah for the trial of Col. Vans Kennedy for systematic absence from parade and disobedience of orders, have found him guilty of the charges, but putting a mild construction on his conduct, have merely sentenced him to be reprimanded.

RUNJEST SENG'S DECEIT.—It is stated, that there is a person in Bombay, representing himself as agent and special messenger of Runjest Seng, who has been endeavouring to induce two or three gentlemen to accompany him to Lahore on the promise of procuring lucrative employments for them,—but of what nature he does not mention. Although he has promised to defray the expenses of the journey, provide horses, &c., he believed he has not been able to induce any body to accompany him thither.

SHIPWRECK.—A grab brig called the Two Brothers, commanded by a nardah, got ashore somewhere on the coast of Orissa, and immediately went to pieces. This accident occurred, it is said, about 2 o'clock in the afternoon. The moment the vessel struck the boat was lifted up and all on board got into her, but, unfortunately, the heavy sea which was then running, upset the boat, and the lives of all were placed in imminent peril, and two persons were drowned.—the one a Mr. Inverarity, an officer of country service, who had been a passenger on board the vessel, and the other a lascar.

THE SANDS OF THE SEAS.—which forms a boundary line between the British and the Sattaga territories, swelled up by the rains, from an excessive fall of rain in its vicinity, and several of the banian trees on its bank were swept away, which coming in contact with the bridge over the river, destroyed it, and twelve of the arches, and stopped the communication between the two parts, which is dangerous in this season of the year, and the loss of which, though small, are too heavy for the poor to afford. The injury done to this work has attracted the early attention of the authorities, and some engineer officers have been sent down to survey it.

SINGAPORE.

SIR E. GAMBIER.—Sir E. and Lady Gambier were to leave Malacca on the 28th of July, on the Brig Sir A. Campbell, for Penang, and intend visiting Calcutta before proceeding to Madras.

MURDER.—On the 4th July, an inquest was held at the Pauper Hospital on the body of Estriano Pedro Rodrigues who had been murdered by her husband while in a state of intoxication, it is alleged, through jealousy, and intoxication combined. Their neighbours, on the day on which the fatal act was perpetrated, had been more than once disturbed by the noise of strife and wrangling between the man and his wife. None saw the wounds inflicted, though he was discovered inhumanly slumping upon the expiring body of his wife. He did not deny having been the cause of her death to the bystanders.

THE PIRATES.—Letters had been received at Singapore on the 22d of July from Mr. Bonham, acting Governor of the Straits, on board the Andromachi, mentioning that Capt. Chads had fallen in with another nest of pirates at a place called Gallang, on the East Coast of the Malay Peninsula, and destroyed 27 of their prahus. One had been preserved measuring 60 feet in length with 42 oars. The pirates showed fight but were soon compelled to strike. The Dutch Government at Java declined according to the Governor General's request to co-operate with Capt. Chads, they having just entered into a treaty with the principal Rajah, (of Lingin) by which they have stipulated to pay him 40,000 rupees a year for the suppression of piracy.

Minor piracy still continues unabated in the Straits. A man named Dool was killed in attempting to rob a boat of some durians, by the owner of the fruit, after a hard fight, in which he also suffered severely. A Malay named Karrim deposed that he recently left Si-Galup (in Singapore district) and proceeded in a boat with 3 other men, to the river Keng-Kin, for the purpose of cutting rattans. Having loaded the boat, he was returning homewards, when a large Malay prahu came up and having made enquiries whether there were any more boats up to the river, and being answered in the negative, went away. Soon after 3 other prahus came up, when the boat was boarded by men armed with krisses and spears, and Karrim and his companions were made captives and carried to a place called Kosog-Koong up the Johore river, where they were detained until the arrival of another boat, commanded by a friend, when Karrim and one of his companions (who had been wounded) effected their escape on board of her to Singapore. The former declares the name of the man who captured him to be Batti Nachi, who is well known in Singapore, and that he could recognise many of those who were under his command.

CEYLON.

EXTRAORDINARY AFFAIR.—On the 3d June last, a small Maldivian boat (not bigger than a large turtle-shell, and very much resembling it in shape) containing a single Maldivian, whose only visible property was five chopping knives, came on shore at Minnerly Moondal about 15 miles S. W. of Calcutta. The poverty of such a boat and the appearance of the individual, attracted the notice of the neighbouring inhabitants, the man, however, offered no explanations as to who he was, whence he came, or whither he was going; but having effected a landing, abandoned his boat and took the road to Colombo. A few days after he was brought up before the Superintendent of Police at Colombo, and stated that he and another man were going to a neighbouring island to cut firewood, but that a storm had driven them out to sea; that his companion had died of starvation, but that he had subsisted on twelve coconuts, and some rain water during the forty-five days he had been on the high seas.

NEW CHURCH.—The Protestant inhabitants of Calcutta are engaged in building a new church on the site of the old one. Government has given a donation of £ 60 towards the undertaking, and the inhabitants have, by their own private contributions, raised nearly an equal sum; but it is understood that the entire is not sufficient to complete the building, and that an appeal is about to be again made to Government in its behalf.

FURIOUS ATTACK BY BEES.—A curious statement has been made by a Sergeant J. Comlan, regarding a furious attack made by large swarms of bees on a company of cafers, natives, &c. who were, under his superintendence, cutting the bark and felling trees on the road between Balacuda and Matelo. The bees issued in innumerable swarms from a tree that was about to be felled, which approximated to a large tree, called the bee tree from the great number of holes in it, and covered every person of the party, except the Sergeant, stung them most dreadfully, put them to flight and pursued them for about a quarter of a mile. After some time the party were brought back to the spot, when not a single bee being observed, they proceeded to work and were a second time assailed and dispersed, and the bees remained on the road for three quarters of an hour afterwards, in such very great numbers, that no passenger could pass. It is strange that the Sergeant, the only European of the party, although surrounded by bees, did not receive a single sting, while all the black men, and even the cattle, were most dreadfully stung.

CHINA.

OPIMUM TRADE AUTHORIZED.—It was said that an edict had been passed by the Emperor, at the recommendation of the Governor of Canton, legalizing the sale of opium, or rather, removing the prohibition.

REVIEW OF THE CALCUTTA MARKET.

(From Kuhn's Monthly Price Current, August 30, 1836.)

INDIGO.—Advices of an unfavourable nature continue to arrive from almost every district, and the prospects of the planters are in general much below the last season, in regard the smallness of the produce. The rains have been heavy during the whole month, and in some parts with much violence. The general opinion seems to fix upon a crop of about 100,000 maunds. Amongst the few sales occurred since our last, we have to notice a parcel of middling indigo brought up for public sale on the 5th instant, and which obtained from 170 to 175 Sa. Re. per factory maund.

63 chests Allahabad indigo obtained last week Sa. Re. 150 per factory maund.

The advices from the home markets continue very encouraging.

OPIMUM.—Prices have experienced no further advance since our last, and holders are not willing to sell at present rates, expecting more favourable news from China.

RAW SILK.—Transactions have been on the whole much reduced, owing to the scarcity of the article in the market, large orders continue to be executed from the aurangs, what arrives from the interior is eagerly purchased and is for the most part of inferior quality; some purchases of these sorts have been made for Bombay. Cultivation is greatly increasing and many contracts continue to be made for the supply of the home markets.

SILK PIECE GOODS.—Cottons experienced some decline since our last, the demand continues, however, steady for England, but the absence of good qualities restrains transactions, and orders continue to be executed directly from the depots in the interior.

Shipments of Choppahs to America continue in active progress.

RAW COTTON.—Operations for England are restrained by the high rates of freight. The regular season for shipments to China being at its close, the speculation has been active these last weeks for this destination, but prices are likely to decline afterwards, should tonnage for England not become more available, as our stock is daily increasing and already heavy.

We have no alteration to report in our prices; the operations for China having been executed for the most part directly from the depots in the interior.

SALTPETRE.—Has been in fair inquiry during the whole month, particularly for the English markets, in consequence of the favourable advices received by the last overland dispatch and prices are well supported.

SUGAR.—The scarcity of available tonnage for England continues to depress upon this article, the more so as the demand for the home markets is very active. Fine Benares continues scarce and is eagerly purchased. Cultivation is reported on the increase.

LAC DYE.—In steady inquiry for good Dyes, with improvement in prices; inferior is abundant and neglected.

SHELL LAC.—The demand in this article is growing for shipments to England, but without any alteration in prices.

TEA.—Purchases of fine qualities for England are in progress, and would be still more extensive, were business not arrested by the high rates of freights: shipments of Munghy rice continue also for the Mauritius.

WHEAT.—Continues in good enquiry, at steady prices.

HIDES.—Demand continues chiefly for England, our stock is becoming heavy and prices are depressed.

LINSEED.—The arrivals from the interior are about on the same proportion as last year, but little doing in consequence of the high rates of freights, which would leave no chance of profit to the exporter.

SPICES, DRUGS AND OTHER MISCELLANEOUS PRODUCE.—Business to some extent have been transacted for articles under this head.

METALS.—The Copper market has been more steady this month than during the last, owing to the considerable advance in prices in England, which will naturally tend to depress shipments, and our prices have been maintained notwithstanding the late rather heavy arrivals, which are reported as follows:—

Per Hellas.....	{	Braziers Copper.....	54	boxes
		Tile ditto.....	20	tons
		Nails.....	15	casks
Per Strath Eden..	{	Copper Bolts.....	17	bilts
		Nails.....	30	casks
		Copper.....	54	cases
Per Baboo, from Liverpool, Sheathing Copper			10	tons
		Tile ditto..	60	"
Per Bengal, from London, Copper			7	c-ks
Per Maulmein from Moulmein, Old Copper {		Bolts {	7	boxes
Per Orient from London, Sheathing Copper,			103	cases
		Cake ditto.....	830	cakes
		Copper Rods ...	96
		Copper Nails ..	26	cask-
		Unwrought Copper	49	cases

Spelter.—Continues steady in regard to prices, with every tendency to improve, as shipments from the home markets will be very largely on a reduced scale as long as prices are kept up in England. The demand for the interior is however dull for the present.

Lead.—Prices are expected to rise, our stock being very reduced.

Iron.—Consumption is increasing and our stock becoming small, our prices may therefore be considered safe.

Arrivals since our last has been as follow.

Per Strath Eden from London.....	2149	bolts
	1007	sq. brs.
Per Baboo, from Liverpool, Bar Iron..	28	tons
	124	kgs
Per Bengal, from London, Iron.....	1810	bars
	1296	bolts
Per Orient, from London, Sundries Iron	24	boxes
	24	boxes
	19	casks

TWIST.—White.—Transactions have been active during the whole month, however, without any particular alteration in prices, our supplies from the home market are for the present large, and reported as follows:—

THE JEYPOOR TRIALS.

Minutes containing Abstract of Proceedings in the Trial of Deewan Umur Chund, Sivu Lal Sahoo, and Manik Chund Bhaosa Sravugees, with a documentary Appendix.

Thursday, June 30th, 1836, Natanee-ka-bagh, near the City of Juepoor, 9 o'clock, A. M.

The Court constituted for the trial of the Prisoners who may be arraigned before it on charges connected in any way with the atrocious acts perpetrated at Juepoor, on the 4th June, 1835, is assembled. The Members of it are :—

- 1.—Thakoor Prithee Singh of Toruree, Khungarot.
- 2.—Thakoor Madhoo Singh of Mundhawa in Shekhwatee, Shekhwat.
- 3.—Thakoor Bukhtawur Singh, son of Soomer Singh, Thakoor of Puchewur, Khungarot.
- 4.—Hindoo Muljee, Vuheel of Bikaner, of the Juen faith, tribe Oswel.
- 5.—Sirdar Muljee Poorohit, Vuheel of Jesulmer, Brumun.

Lieutenant Colonel Spiers, P. A. and Captain Thoresby, P. A. are present.

Prisoners Deewan Umur Chund, Sivu Lal Sahoo and Manik Chund Bhaosa, are brought into Court.

The warrant constituting the Court is read aloud as follows :—

Translation of the Warrant constituting the Court.

Pursuant to instructions proceeding from the Governor-General of India in Council, Thakoor Prithee Singh, Thakoor Madhoo Singh, Bukhtawur Singh, son of Soomer Singh, Thakoor of Puchewur, and Hindoo Muljee, Vuheels of Bikaner and Jesulmer, are appointed by Lieutenant Colonel Alves, Agent to the Governor-General and the Juepoor Government, conjointly, Members of a Court convened to inquire into matters connected with the treachery manifested and the atrocious acts perpetrated at Juepoor on the 4th June, 1835; and to sentence, according to their several degrees of guilt, all such persons as shall be convicted before it of having been implicated in any way whatsoever with reference to the aforesaid occurrences. You are commanded and exhorted to investigate and decide according to the dictates of truth and justice.

(The original has the Seal of the Raj and the counter signature of Lieut. Colonel Alves, A. G. G.)

An address to the Members of the Court read and entered in the Minutes.

Address to the Court.

The Court has been convened, pursuant to instructions emanating from the Governor-General of India in Council, for the performance of duties of an arduous and important nature; in entrusting you with the discharge of which the British and Juepoor Governments expect that you will spare yourselves no expense of labor and attention, but use every exertion practicable to acquire a thorough and efficient knowledge of the whole of the evidence, documentary and oral, criminatory or exculpatory, which shall be adduced before you, with respect to each of the prisoners brought forward for trial: and to appreciate the several portions of it at their true and just value, according to the best of your judgment and belief. In cases wherein you may decide upon the guilt of the accused, it will also be your duty to award such penalties as you shall judge to be commensurate with the extent and nature of each conviction.

You are particularly and earnestly enjoined not to allow your minds to be biased in any way by the condition or circumstances of any of the parties connected with the approaching trials; but to judge fairly and impartially, and with reference only to the peculiar charges or charges preferred against each individual; bearing in mind that, though it is of great importance that none of those really guilty of instigating or participating in the atrocious plot which originated and prompted the detestable acts of violence and bloodshed committed in the city of Juepoor, on the 4th of June, 1835, should escape the punishment due to their crimes, yet that it is essentially requisite to guard against the condemnation of persons who may be innocent, on insufficient grounds.

The proceedings of this Court will be submitted to the British Government, besides which, no doubt care will be taken to disseminate a correct knowledge of them throughout Rajwara and other countries, whereby thousands will be enabled to learn how you have discharged the high trust reposed in you.

(Signed) C. THORESBY, P. A.

The charges against three prisoners Deewan Umur Chund, Sivu Lal Sahoo and Manik Chund, are read.

Deewan Umur Chund Sravugee, Sivu Lal Sahoo Sravugee, and Manick Chund Bhaosa Sravugee, arraigned on the following several charges:

Charges preferred against Deewan Umur Chund.

1st. Deewan Umur Chund Sravugee, charged with having in concert with Sivu Lal Sahoo and others, conspired against and plotted to subvert, by violent and criminal means, the existing administration of the country of Juepoor; and in furtherance of that object, instigated and employed a man named Futih Singh, alias Futih Dom, to assault with his naked sword, at the Sird-kee-Deorhee, on the morning of the 8th Jeth, Soodi 1892, (4th June, 1835,) one or more of the gentlemen attached to the British Agency then at Juepoor, as they were quitting the Palace after having been present at a Durbar held therein, which assault was actually made by the said Futih, who severely wounded Major Alves, Agent to the Governor-General of India, at the time and place above designated.

2d.—Having instigated and employed a man named Futih Singh alias Futih Dom, to commit the atrocious act of attacking with his naked sword one or more of the gentlemen attached to the British Agency then at Juepoor, at the Sird-kee-Deorhee, on the morning of the 8th Jeth, Soodi 1892, (4th June, 1835,) with the further criminal intent to cause or promote a sanguinary conflict and riot in the City of Juepoor, which assault followed by a tumult and the shedding of blood did actually take place as intended by the accused in the forenoon of the 4th of June, 1835.

(Signed) N. ALVES,

A. G. G. for Rajpootana.

Charges preferred against Sivu Lal Sahoo.

1st.—Sivu Lal Sahoo Sravugee, charged with having conspired against and plotted to subvert, by violent and criminal means, the existing administration of the country of Juepoor in furtherance of which he instigated and employed a soldier named Hidayut Khan, or the said Hidayut Khan with another or others, to join in and promote a sanguinary affray and riot which was to originate in an atrocious assault to be made by a dependent of Deewan Umur Chund, at the Deorhee of the Palace, on the morning of the 8th of Jeth, Soodi 1892, (4th June, 1835.)

2d.—Having instigated and employed a soldier named Hidayut Khan, with another or others, to commit the atrocious act of joining in and furthering a scheme to produce or commence a sanguinary conflict and riot in the City of Juepoor, on the morning of the 8th Jeth, Soodi 1892, (4th June, 1835,) in consequence of which investigation, the said Hidayut Khan did actually take an active part in the violent and treacherous proceedings of the aforesaid day, including the perpetration of murders and the infliction of wounds.

(Signed) N. ALVES,
A. G. G. for Rajpootana.

Charge preferred against Manik Chund Bhoana.

Manik Chund Bhoana Sravugee, charged with having wickedly and criminally, at the instigation of Deewan Umur Chund Sravugee, or of Deewan Umur Chund and Sivu Lal Sahoo, or of the aforesaid individuals and others, incited and urged one Futih Singh, alias Futih Dom, in the night intervening between the 7th and 8th of Jeth, Soodi 1892 (3d and 4th of June, 1835) to assault with his naked sword one or more of the gentlemen attached to the British Agency then at Juepoor, as they quitted the Palace after a Durbar held therein, on the 8th of Jeth 1892 (4th June, 1835).

(Signed) N. ALVES,
A. G. G. for Rajpootana.

Depositions respecting an assemblage of Sravugees in the Chatsoo Munder, and the subject of a consultation held at the Meeting read:—Vide Documents appended. Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4.

Ram Lal Daemu Bruhmun, called before the Court and questioned. Briefly details the circumstances attending the aforesaid meeting at the Chatsoo Munder.

It was some five or six days after the arrival of the Rawul at Juepoor that Tun Sagur Juti was mobbed, and the Sravugees held the meeting to which allusion is made in the night of the same day. Cannot name the precise day, but it was in Budi-Chuet 1892—(March 1835.)

Former depositions of Ram Lal Daemu are read over again in his presence. Witness avers solemnly that they are correct. Cross-examined by the Court.

The prisoners are asked whether they have any questions to put to witness, or remarks to make upon his evidence, when Deewan Umur Chund and Sivu Lal declare that all he has said is false; that they knew nothing of witness and believe he is unacquainted with them. They were not at the Chatsoo Munder on the night in question.

Witness says that he has lived all his life in Juepoor and knows most of the Sravugees of any note residing in the city, though the want of sufficient light in the Temple prevented him from ascertaining the persons of more of the large party composing the meeting than are specified in his depositions: moreover, there could be no mistake regarding the prisoners, who were generally known in consequence of being servants of Government.

The documents read as a communication from Jothb Ram was not a long letter but a note. Witness had often before visited Munders of the Jews, but on this occasion he concealed himself, because he felt curiosity to learn the motives of those who attended, and the subject of their consultation. The prisoners having no questions to put to witness he withdraws.

Punna Durree called in, states to the Court that Ram Lal called upon him at night on the day that dust was thrown at Tun Sagur Juti, and told him that he was going to attend a meeting at the Chatsoo Munder, in order to learn the purport of it. Witness accompanied him to the door of the Temple and there left him. Saw a crowd about the Munder and heard a buzzing noise, as though many people were collected; but can say nothing as to the object of the assemblage or what took place at it. Declares solemnly that the deposition he before gave (which is read over to him) is true. The prisoners have no questions to ask the witness, and he withdraws.

Jue Chund, father of Ram Lal Daemu, called in and questioned. His account agrees with his former deposition. Is cross-examined by the members of the Court. Former examination read over to him:—declares solemnly that he has deposed to the truth. Is an old man, being upwards of 70 years of age; expects naught from any one in this life, and would not compromise his future fate by telling a falsehood in so grave a matter. Deewan Umur Chund and Sivu Lal declare vehemently that they know nothing of this accusation, but that the Sravugees and the Poojaree of the Munder can bear witness to the falsehood of it. Are told that they shall have any witnesses they please, and that the subject of this meeting does not form a distinct charge against them, but is exhibited, with the evidence there is for it, because there is an apparent connection between the resolution then avowed to have been formed and what did in reality subsequently take place.

The first deposition of Futih Singh (Ap. No. 5) read over,—also those of Hidayut Khan and Shunker (Ap. Nos. 6, 7, 8, 9). The Court adjourns to 8 o'clock to-morrow.

Friday, 1st July, 1836, 8 o'clock A. M.

The Court having met pursuant to adjournment, and the three prisoners under trial being present:—Futih Singh who assaulted the Agent to the Governor-General on the 4th June, 1835, is called before the Court.

Q.—Was it you who attacked and wounded with a sword the Agent to the Governor-General in front of the Surd-kee-Deorhee on the morning of the 4th June last year?

A. Yes, I acknowledge having done so.

Q.—What is your name, and of what caste are you?

A.—My name is Futih Singh and I am a Tawur Rajpoot.

Q.—What was your motive for assaulting the Agent to the Governor-General?

A.—I was servant of Deewan Umur Chund—(witness here enters into a long account of the occurrences of several years; of the way in which he became a soldier in the service of Deewan Umur Chund,—for duty in the district of Madhoopoor; and of many subsequent events; at length, getting to Juepoor, he details the manner in which he was instigated to make the attack upon one of the gentlemen at the Deorhee, and gives a narrative of what occurred to him on the morning of the 4th June,—all agreeing most minutely with the substance of his former several depositions). When he came to Juepoor pay was due to him for two months, and twenty-five days after his arrival he received one rupee through Gopal Singh who told him it was given on account,—as subsistence money; but never hinted to him that he was discharged; at that time nearly three months' wages were owing to him. The Deewan's Amil at Madhoopoor told him, Gopal Singh, Rutun Singh and Ram Singh, that the Deewan had sent for them; and when they asked for their wages, answered that they would be paid at Juepoor by the Deewan. Was told to use his sword upon the gentlemen of the Agency, or any one of them; and made the assault on the Bura Sahib, merely because he happened to be the nearest to him, without being aware of his rank. When the Begrees threw down the Charpae upon which he was tied, after getting out of the Tripolya, several men whom he knew to be sepahees of Deewan Umur Chund, having seen them often before, began to loose his bonds, exclaiming—run off, run off: these men were Shekhawats. There were several sepahees belonging to the Battalion of Captain Peer Khan present when Moonna Lal Darogha told witness that he should be cut up piece-meal, if he disclosed names.

Prisoners have no questions to put to witness; but Deewan Umur Chund observes, that deponent has not taken his name, as having received his instructions direct from him.

Futih Singh goes out of Court, after hearing his former deposition read, and declaring that it is correct in substance.

Hidayut Khan called in.

(Hidayut Khan is under sentence of death passed upon him for actually participating in the murder of Mr. Blake and his chuprassee in the Munder: he was respited because he had made partial confessions and promised to tell all he knew connected with the part he performed on the 4th of June.)

Q.—State your name and calling?

A.—My name is Hidayut Khan—I am a Puthan, and a sepahie in the Battalion of Jubangeer Khan.

Q.—With whom were you on duty in Jeth 1892?

A.—With Sivu Lal Sahoo.

Q.—How long had you been attached to him?

A.—About four years altogether. Though attached to Sivu Lal, Gyanjee Buguro used to give me instructions on matters connected with my duties, and I received my monthly pay through him. Being told to relate what occurred on the morning of 4th June, 1835,—he says that there was a disturbance in the City on that day, and on hearing of it he ran out from Sivu Lal's house to see what was the matter. Saw a gentleman going through the street upon an elephant, and in consequence of the general exclamations of the people, drew his sword and cut the elephant in the hind leg. Afterwards went home, and knows nothing more of what took place. Was not told by Sivu Lal, or any one else, to join in a disturbance that was expected to occur: never received gold-mohurs or a promise of money from Sivu Lal. His former depositions in the City and at the Residency, are untrue in a great measure, they were made in conformity with instructions given to him in the City, after he was taken up. The depositions are read over to him, but he still persists in his assertion. Shunkur Brulmun, Khuwas, is called into Court in his presence. The latter deposes, that he saw Hidayut Khan in the Poorohit's Munder on the morning of 4th June, and was witness to his stripping Mr. Blake's hat or cap of a gold or silver band, which he took away with him. That some days afterwards, being desired by Captain Nuwul Singh to visit Hidayut Khan, and obtain information from him, if possible, respecting his motive for having acted in the way he had done, witness, who had known Hidayut Khan for a considerable period, went to him, and after some conversation, received from him, to take care of, nine gold mohurs, which Hidayut Khan said Sivu Lal Sahoo had given to him, and which he had secreted by fastening them between his legs. The former deposition of witness is read over and he declares solemnly that it contains the truth. Hidayut Khan now acknowledges that he was in possession of nine gold mohurs and had given them to Shunkur, but declares they were his own property and had not been given to him by any one. Cannot account for the way he became possessed of them. Is ordered out of Court, and Shunkur Brulmun retires.

Depositions of Deewan Umur Chund (No. 10) read.

Deposition respecting the way in which Document (No. 11) was found amongst the papers of Deewan Umur Chund, read.

Seeta Meenee called into Court and her former deposition read over (No. 12):—declares that the statement is correct; the bag of papers was deposited in her house and taken away as explained by her. Cross-examined.

Kaloo Bunea called in:—Verifies his former deposition (No. 13), which he declares to detail all he knows regarding the matter.

Mahdoob Oollu questioned as to his former deposition (No. 14), which he acknowledges to be correct.

Moonna Lal Sravugee describes the way in which the papers of Deewan Umur Chund were examined, and the note bearing the hand-writing of Jootha Ram taken out of them by himself. The note (No. 11), now in his hand, is the paper to which he alludes. (The latter acknowledgment, though made distinctly and positively at last, was not obtained till after a great deal of shuffling, in which he would neither affirm nor deny.)

Thakoor Juton Singh details the way in which the said bag of papers was opened, and the note found by Moonna Lal. The autograph of the superscribed lines was recognised immediately by several of the party, as that of Sunghee Jootha Ram.

Hur Lal Sravugee details that he was present when the papers of Deewan Umur Chund were examined and the note was taken out. After much hesitation and evasion, avows distinctly that the paper in this hand is the one that was found on the occasion.

Examination of Deewan Umur Chund (No. 15) read.

Deewan Umur Chund observes to the Court that he has not positively declared the document in question to be a note of Jootha Ram.

To testify to hand-writing.—Esurdass Sah, Sravugee, and Suda Sookh Sunghee, Sravugee, servants of the Rajah the public Duffer, who have transacted business with Joota Ram during many years: the latter is connected with Hookum Chand by an intermarriage.

Q.—According to the best of your judgment and belief whose hand-writing is this upon the front of the note now given to you?

A.—It exactly resembles the hand of Jootha Ram. It is his writing: look at this specimen, (holding up a letter of former date, written by the ex-minister, which one of them had brought with him) and compare the two. There can be no doubt on the subject, and there is no denying the identity of the hand. Both witnesses agree in the foregoing declaration in substance. The Members of the court make their own comparison by other papers exhibiting the hand-writing of Jootha Ram. There are more witnesses to prove the hand-writing, but the Court appear to be perfectly satisfied on the point and do not require them. (The style of Jootha Ram's hand-writing is peculiar and strongly marked.)

The letter of Gyan Chund (No. 16) produced and read. (From the hand-writing and contents attributed to Gyan Chund, son of Deewan Umur Chund.) It is stated to the Court that this letter, with many others, was found amongst the papers of Sunghee Hookum Chund at Agra; and that it has the signature of Mr. Mansel, Magistrate of Agra, and the initials of Lieut. Conolly, assistant Agent of the Governor-General, which were put upon it in presence of Hookum Chund, so that there could be no doubt entertained as to its identity. Thakoor Juton Sing and Seeta Ram Lala, also depose that they were present when the papers of Hookum Chund were examined at Agra, and that the document now produced was taken from amongst them.

Other letters of Gyan Chund, who is son of Deewan Umur Chund, and son-in-law of Hookum Chund, are handed to the Court, and the Members compare the hand-writing of the several papers.

The Court adjourns to eight o'clock to-morrow forenoon.

Saturday, 2d July, 1836.

The Court assemble, pursuant to adjournment yesterday, at 8 o'clock, A. M.

The prisoners are present.

Deposition (No. 17) read to the Court in presence of Futih Singh, who acknowledges its correctness and goes out.

Depositions of Rutun Singh, Ram Singh, (Nos. 18 and 19) read to the Court.

Rutun Singh called in (to prove Futih Singh's being on watch before midnight of the 3d June, 1835); hears his former deposition read, and acknowledges it to be correct.

Ram Singh brought into Court, verifies the correctness of his former statement (No. 19.)

The letter of Manik Chund, produced in the Court—shown to Manik Chund, who acknowledges that he wrote it. The letter is read, (vide No. 20) several questions proposed to Manik Chund at his own request by the Court, and in explanation the former talks at great length but somewhat irrelevantly. The letter is again read. Manik Chund's examination on it in September last is read, (vide No. 21.) The following inconsistency noticed.

In the letter for your wife you say, "you must manage to get to the ghat, in any way you can; and for this purpose you may feign a desire to make a holy visit to Hunoomanjee, or to the ghat itself;"—and, "if the road of the ghat is not practicable, then, under the pretext of a pilgrimage to Anber, contrive to get to that place and sojourn at Kookis: this is not a time to be inattentive to one's safety." In your examination: "Q.—You wrote to your father-in-law thus: 'call upon Hurchundjee Sah, and send intelligence quickly.' What intelligence was he to send quickly?"

A.—I mean this: Hurchundjee is my friend; call upon him, and write accounts of the house.

Q.—Say, why did you write to your father-in-law to call upon Hurchundjee?

A.—Hurchundjee used to attend the Rawuljee Sahib on the part of the Dewanjee: I wrote in order that he might obtain from the Rawul a hurkaru and pass, as security on the road.

Thus, your wife was to be brought away by stealth, and yet you expected to procure a public hurkaru and a pass!

(The obvious inference is, that the information expected from Hurchundjee, who was connected with Deewan Umur Chund, was of a peculiar nature.)

Deposition of Tara Chund Sravugee, Naib Foujdar of the City of Juepoor.

Q.—What is your name and what office do you hold at Juepoor?

A.—My name is Tara Chund, and I have been Naib Foujdar of Juepoor for about eleven years.

Q.—What orders were given, and what new forms were directed to be observed after the events of the 4th June, 1835, with reference to either quitting or entering the city?

A.—No fresh orders were issued after the 4th June, 1835, people came and went as they pleased. The form which has been many years in force is, that such persons as wish to go away with carriages and property, or to send off property of any kind, apply to me, or some one in my department for a chit or pass to exhibit to the Chuokee at the gateway by which they quit the City.

Manik Chund observes that, whether it were the case or not they had the report at Ulwur that people were not permitted to leave the City of Juepoor.

Jeewan Singh Jumadar of Foujdaree, Juepoor, called into Court. States his name and office.

Q.—As put to Tara Chund Sravugee?

A.—There were no new orders given on the occasion, and people were not prevented from leaving the City.

The following passage (from examination of Manik Chund on his letter from Ulwur,) read to witness.—"All persons of whatever condition feared, and all desired to get away, but no one's family was allowed to go."—Some one has written thus, what could he allude to?

A.—No fresh orders prohibiting people from quitting the City were issued, and the constant regulation is, that notice be given and a pass for the gateway received, on account of carts, baggage, &c.

Memorandum (No. 22) read in Court.

Statements made by Deewan Umur Chund, (No. 23.)

Examination of Manik Chund (No. 24) read, and Futh Singh called in to hear that portion of it wherein he was engaged. Noticed that Manik Chund says he was discharged by the Deewan because he became remiss in attendance, owing to the sickness of his mother, about two years since; whereas, the Deewan deposed that Manik Chund left him of his own accord, about one year ago, because he could get higher pay elsewhere—also that Manik Chund, before being made aware of the seizure of his letter, stated that his cause of apprehension for the safety of his family, proceeded from the circumstance of some Sravugee Mundurs having been plundered.*—and that his fears were caused by any increase of expense being incurred, and his mother being blind and feeble.

Memorandum (No. 25) read and shown to the Court.

Manik Chund acknowledges that he wrote it, but says the intended meaning of what he wrote has been misconstrued: told to take the note into his own hand and explain the purport of it to the Court, which he does accordingly.

Deposition of Deewan Umur Chund (No. 26) read in Court.

Examination of Manik Chund. (No. 27.)

Deposition of Moonna Lal Bruhmun read over to the Court. (No. 28)

Moonna Lal Bruhmun called in and questioned by the Court;—deposes as to the way in which he saw Manik Chund at Juepoor on the 7th Soodi, Jeth, 3d June, 1835.

His former deposition read to him:—averts solemnly that his statements are true and correct.

Manik Chund attacks him violently, accusing him of falsehood, but does not cross-examine him in any way or make any remark that can be considered to impeach his testimony.

Deposition of Bruhmun Ram Lal Daemu read in Court, (vide No. 29)

The deponent is called into Court and questioned.

Answers correspond with the tenor of his statement, which he avers solemnly to be true in every point on hearing it read.

Deposition of Jugunnath (No. 30) read over. The deponent called in and questioned: answers confirmatory of former statement, the record of which is read to him, and declared by him to be correct and consistent with truth.

Deposition of Arut Ram (No. 31) read—Deponent sent for and questioned:—his former recorded examination read to him, and avers solemnly to be agreeable to truth.

Deposition (No. 32) of Jokee Lal Godoka Sravugee read—Deponent called in and questioned by Court. Former deposition read to him and declared solemnly to be a record of facts, truly stated.

Tara Chund Sravugee, Naib Foujdar, called into Court and questioned as to the mode in which Hidayut Khan was examined by the Raj authorities in the City:—Deposes, that the examinations were conducted in a public Kuchherree, that scores of people were present at them before whom he (Hidayut Khan) was urged to confess the truth, but that no promises were held out to him, as there was abundant proof of his guilty participation and perseverance in the attack, on Mr. Blake.

Jeewan Singh and Thakoor Jutun Singh depose to the same effect as the preceding witness.

Sivu Purshad Moonshree, attached to the Duffur of Agent to the Governor-General, deposes, that the examinations of Hidayut Khan and others were taken at the Majee-ke-Bagh in a room with open doors; there were dozens of people in the room and in the doorways and verandas; Hidayut Khan was told to confess the truth and tell all he knew, and his answers were recorded correctly. Captains Thoresby and Ludlow were the examiners. Other gentlemen, who belonged to the Army, were also continually coming in and going out.

Captain Thoresby, Political Agent, confirms the foregoing statement.

At this point the prosecution was nearly brought to a close, and less than another hour's sitting would have seen the conclusion of it; but mention having been made of witnesses, the prisoners are asked if they have any in readiness for the defence, upon which they burst forth, in tone, language and manner, vehement and indecorous to a high degree, starting up from their seats and vociferating, without any reasonable cause whatever, language that was both incoherent and wholly inappropriate to the occasion, Deewan Umur Chund, among other things, set the Court at defiance: declared that he would be tried by a Panchaet of his own selection; that he would appeal to the Sudur, (British Government) who would never allow them to be condemned; and proposed summoning the Rao Rajah of Ulwur and his two Vukeels * Ram Sing and Bal Mookoond, on account of Manik Chund.

Manik Chund talked of calling all the inhabitants of Juepoor and Ulwur to give evidence in his favor, and, if the Rao Rajah could not be summoned, he proposed that the statement of the Panch which superintended the affairs of the temple at Ulwur as to his being present there on the 4th June, should be procured through the Raja and his Vukeels.

Sivu Lal was the first to be exhausted, when he sat down and remained silent.

The Court treated the indecent and useless intemperance of the prisoners with great forbearance, trying to reason with and draw from them the names of witnesses they wished to have: at length it was settled that five persons (being all that was named by him) should be summoned on account of Deewan Umur Chund, if they could be found; and that Manik Chund should have eleven witnesses from Juepoor and five from Ulwur. Sivul Lal declined calling any witnesses.

The time of adjournment having arrived, the prosecution is left unfinished and the Court adjourns to seven A. M. on Monday next.

Observation.—The prisoners had been repeatedly questioned as to persons they would wish to call in their defence previously to the commencement of the trial, on which occasions Manik Chund merely noticed his intention of calling for individuals residing in his Mahalla, Juepoor.

Monday, 4th July, 1836, 8 o'clock A. M.

The Court being assembled and the prisoners present—

Deposition of Manik Chund, taken 26th August 1835, before Captains Thoresby, Ludlow and Conolly, read, and with the subsequent cross examination and examination of individuals belonging to Ulwur, to whom reference had been made by Manik Chund, recorded with a view to their use, in case of need to invalidate the testimony of the majority of witnesses now summoned from Ulwur, in pursuance of the application of Manik Chund, preferred only on Saturday.

Extract from cross-examination of Manik Chund respecting the number of Bululs, and the individuals they carried (on his alleged journey to Ulwur,) read to the Court, and acknowledged by the said prisoner to be correct, and according to fact.

Extract from cross-examination (No. 33) shewing that Manik Chund kept back the names of the three copyists, Moona Lal, Jugunnath and Arat Ram, who have given evidence to his presence at Juepoor on the 7th Badi, Jeth (3d June, 1835), when enumerating the names of writers who had been employed by him, though he afterwards acknowledged that they also had written for him.

No. 6 of Agra papers shown to the Court; verified and read—It is a letter from Gyan Chund to Jotha Ram (attributed to him from the hand-writing and contents of it) which was sent on to Agra and found in the house of Hookum Chund.

The following extract is recorded:

"Lukshman Singh (Thakoor of Choumoo and son of the Rawul) says,—'If the time of our end is approaching, we will put to death the four Savagees (Deewan Umur Chund, &c.) who are in confinement, before dying ourselves.' Let it not happen that he shall have it in his power to put an end to these persons without our being able to prevent it:—devise some sure means in this matter."

No. 28 of Agra papers.—A letter from Jotha Ram to Hookum Chund, written by the hand of Mungees Poorohit, Secretary of the former at Deosa, exhibited.

The following extract is entered:

'Receive my blessing.—Intelligence has been received from Juepoor, that on the 13th Soodi Srawun (8th July). So—, U— Dec²—, Gya²—, Rajoo⁴—, these four individuals were placed in confinement, and guards were quartered at their houses. In the afternoon, the Thakoor or Rawul, assembled every one, and sending for the abovementioned persons told them through Moona Lal that they were all four prisoners; that such was the order of the Majee; having said this he confined them.'

Sivu Lal Sahoo.—² Umur Chund Deewan.—³ Gyanjee, Buguro.—⁴ Rajoo Lal Chudhuree.

Deposition of Mungees Poorohit (No. 34) read to the Court.

Mungees Poorohit from severe illness is unable to attend the Court at present, but the deposition is authenticated.

No. 33 of Agra papers.—A letter written under the same circumstances as the former, or No. 28 read.

The following extract is entered:

'On the 12th or 13th I wrote and despatched a letter to Nunda: I have also written other letters, both to the interior and to Sivul Laljee, but have not sent them, because of the dread that they might fall into the hands of some one, when I (or we) should assuredly suffer death. There is great cause for apprehension in the existence of his Honor's hand-writing, wherefore, Nunda's letter was forwarded to Sivul Laljee, and the others were not sent. Sivul Laljee gave the letter to Nunda, and he read it and made the contents known in the interior of the palace.'

No. 11 of Agra papers.—A letter written under the same circumstances as the last.

The following extract from it is recorded:

'We have huddled lost office, and there is no want of money or adherents; in short, there is no serious obstacle to our success whatever. See Gyanjee, the Deewanjee's son, and Kalo Ram, Sivul Laljee's brother;—I hear that it is said they are both gone to Calcutta; now, did they see you before starting, or did they proceed without coming near you? If the latter, you are to blame, for you ought to have sent for them and given them encouragement, by telling them that if they required money or servants you would supply them; and you should have ascertained many things from them, and told them much in return.'

No. 8 of Agra papers.—A letter of Juwahir Singh, son of Chunnu Singh, written to his father, and, by the latter, forwarded to Deosa and Agra, or to Agra direct, exhibited and read (No. 35.)

No. 43 of Agra papers.—Letter from Chimun Singh, shown in Court and read (No. 36.)

Evidence respecting the disappearance of Gyan Chund, son of Deewan Umur Chund; Mohunjee, brother of Sivul Lal Sahoo; and Kalo Ram, brother of Sivul Lal Sahoo, viz. that they absconded when the prisoners Umur Chund and Sivul Lal were first placed under surveillance on suspicion, before they were closely confined; given by Thakoor Jutan Singh and Lala Seeta Ram.

The Court being now in possession of as much evidence available as it has been judged requisite to bring forward for the substantiation of the charges under investigation, the prisoners are told to say what they please in their defence, and call for their Juepoore witnesses, most of whom have been summoned through a harkaru of Captain Thoresby, with the assistance of a harkaru of the Raj; which plan was adopted, to prevent mistakes and leave no opening for the prisoners to assert that they had been dealt with unfairly.

The prisoners speak sometimes simultaneously at times severally, but their remarks are very incoherent, and as they cannot be induced by the Court to observe anything like order and method, there is some difficulty in deducing from their random declamations any definite points; but at length Manik Chund declares that he left Juepoor for Ulwur on the 7th of Jeth, Budi 1892, (19th May, 1835), and that his witnesses from Ulwur would depose to his having been in that City. Deewan Umur Chund acknowledges nothing,—neither depositions, documents, oral evidence, nor the Court or its proceedings. Sivu Lal has nothing particular to say, but denies all guilt.

First Witness of Deewan Umur Chund, Roroo, Malee—Deposes, that he has been a servant of Deewan Umur Chund for ten years. Was formerly attached to the new temple in the Chorvokay ka-Muhullu, but for about two years past, from this date, has been fixed at the old temple near the Deewan's dwelling house, in the Munesana-ka-rusta. Never met Manik Chund anywhere except in the street. There were no soldiers in the temple, and no watch was kept there at any time.

Occasionally, when Manik Chund came to worship at the temple, on an Ushtumu or Chuodus, (8th or 14th of the half month,) may have seen him; but it was seldom, and deponent did not often go to the Deewan's dwelling house. Does not know Gopal Singh or Futih Singh, and cannot tell anything about them. The Dhurm Salu is close to the Mundur; some persons of low degree and women live in it, paying hire for their lodging; but well conditioned people never go there. The Deewan scarcely ever went into the Dhurm Salu.

Gopal Singh, Futih Singh, Ram Singh and Rutun Singh did not remain in the Dhurm Salu, and deponent never saw them any where else. Deponent went to Chatsoo previously to the Gun-Gor (16th March.) There were soldiers sent to the Mundur to take care of it sometimes before that. Deponent staid away 7 or 8 days fully and returned before the Gun-Gor (16th March), when the sepahees were gone. They must have been gone; because they did not show themselves; they had been stationed at the temple four or five days at the time deponent started for Chatsoo as mentioned. It was about two months after the death of the late Muhurnj that deponent first saw them. They lodged in a muhul over the doorway. Is positive that no sepahees were seen by him at the temple after the Gun-Gor (16th March.) Deponent's duty at the temple is, to take care of the shoes of those who visit it, and sweep the floors outside the inner apartment of the temple. The Shastrus were read twice a day, morning and evening, for about two ghurrees each time, and four or five persons used to attend.

(Note.—Gopal Singh and his companions sojourned at the temple in May and the beginning of June has been stated by themselves, the Deewan and others.)

The Deewan often came, for a ghurree or so, to hear the Shastrus read, but did not sit late. Sivu Lal did not visit the temple except on very extraordinary occasions, nor did he go to the other temple of the Deewanjee. Had heard that he did not go to the latter temple from friends who were stationed there. Deponent also adds, of his own accord, that Gyanjee, Buguro and Rajoo Lal Sah never came to the temple.

Second Witness. Motee Lal, reader of the Shastrus.—Read at the temple daily in the evening before the ~~temple in the City.~~ Has gone to the temple to read the Shastrus since Bravah fast (August), but did not read there before that month.

Third Witness. Dadoo Punthee, Futih Ram.—Deponent complains that he is aged, blind and very deaf, lodges in the muhul over the gate of the Deewan's temple and obtains his food by alms. Some four or five persons come to hear the Shastrus read in the temple. Formerly ten, fifteen, or twenty used to attend occasionally. Cannot say whether the Deewan frequented the temple, in consequence of his physical faculties being greatly impaired; Sonjee Pandeo Sravugee is the Poojaree of the temple.

Fourth Witness. Sonjee Pandeo Sravugee.—Is servant of Deewan Umur Chund, and performs duties in the temple as Poojaree, sweeps the inner part of it, and does other work there, as did his father before him for 30 years. The inner temple is closed when one puhur of night has past; the outer rooms are always open. To the best of his knowledge Motee Lal (the second witness) has read the Shastrus there on an evening for three years past. Trilok Jee Punsaree, Chandjee Chadoowar, Saligrum, himself, and Motee Lal reader, attend the meetings, and no one else.

There were four or five soldiers at the temple in Chuet, Buesakh, and Jeth 1892. They were sometimes changed. Does not know why they remained there. They belonged to Madhoopoore; came about pay and other matters. A great many men were accustomed to go backwards and forwards between Madhoopoore and Juepoor, and they put up at the temple over the door way. The four sepahees were present the night before the 4th June. They did not keep watch, and Deponent does not know who they were. Is not acquainted with Manik Chund, and knows nothing of Gopal Singh, Rutun Singh, Ram Singh, or Futih Singh. Should not recognise them if he saw them.

Fifth Witness. Eesa, Munihar or Bracelet manufacturer—Lives near the temple. This was kept open, and the readings in it lasted till one puhur of night was gone. Occasionally the party rose later, and the lectures sometimes continued till mid-night and were accompanied with singing: such was the practice on the 11th of each half month.

In general only women and children used to attend. To the best of his knowledge can say that he never saw sepahees at the temple, and believes that they were sojourned over the gateway of it. Deewan Umur Chund and Gyanjee used to attend. Sivu Lal, Rajoo Lal and Gyanjee Buguro never once came. Never went inside the gateway, being a Mohummadan.

Deewan Umur Chund's witnesses have all been heard. The Deewan himself had not a single question to propose to any one of them.

Evidence called by Manik Chund.

First Witness. Ubhuae Chund Bhaosa Sravugee, residing in the same muhulu:—out of work for the last year and half; sometimes obtains employment for a short time but is miserably poor. Distantly connected with Manik Chund and lives close to his house in Juepoor; saw Manik Chund set off for Ulwur on 7th Budi Jeth with Hansooka-ka Qubeela, and did not see him again till he was brought back a prisoner. Knows nothing more respecting Manik Chund or his movements.

Second Witness. Dhun Raj, Teeskee-Walu (maker of teekas): Is distantly related to Manik Chund—lives in a chuk of the same house—knows that Manik Chund left Juepoor for Ulwur on 7th Budi Jeth, and that he came to Juepoor to have the Shastrus copied, but cannot tell when he arrived—nor how long he remained; it may have been two or four months; saw him at the Hoollee, and in Buesakh, and Jeth Budi; can tell nothing more about him.

Third Witness. Sivu Lal, Bruhmun, is acquainted with astrology. Was consulted respecting the departure of Manik Chund from Juepoor, and told him not to start on 7th Budi Jeth 1892. Cannot tell whether he did set out or not, but heard that he was gone a day or two afterwards from children in the street. The stars were unpropitious, therefore he had forbidden him to go on Jeth Budi 7th. Manik Chund's nativity document is in the possession of deponent.

Fourth Witness. Chuenoo, Patunee, Sravugee :—Saw Manik Chund set off for Ulwur on the morning of 7th Budi Jeth—his mother and daughter were seated in a Buhul, and Manik Chund himself was following on foot. Saw him walking, he is certain, knows nothing more regarding him.

Fifth Witness. Hur Lal, Bhaosa, Sravugee :—Heard that Manik Chund set off for Ulwur on 7th or 8th Budi Jeth, but did not see him start, being ill in bed at the time—heard that his mother and daughter had gone, and that his wife and son remained behind.

Sixth Witness. Motee Lal Patunee, Sravugee :—Saw Manik Chund with his mother and daughter start on the morning of 7th Budi Jeth : they were all seated on one Buhul—saw them within a few paces of their own door; Manik Chund was then upon the Buhul with his mother and daughter. He went to Ulwur with the family of Hansooka.

Seventh Witness. Lukshmun Das, Bhaosa, Sravugee, Vukeel of Bhart Singhee, Thakoor of Ludana :—Is related distantly to Manik Chund, and resided in the same muhulla.

Manik Chund, with mother and daughter, started for Ulwur on the 7th Budi Jeth, 1892 : the mother and daughter were sitting in the Buhul; Manik Chund followed on foot : he had come to Juepoor to get the Shastras transcribed : does not know when he came from Ulwur for that purpose.

Eighth Witness. Heera Lal, Bhaosa, Sravugee :—Saw Manik Chund with his mother and daughter set off for Ulwur on 7th Budi Jeth, when four ghurroes of day were gone. Deponent saw them from a distance, start—Manik Chund was in a hired Buhul—he was by the side of it—he followed it with a stick in his hand—Manik Chund returned to his house after having gone a few paces; deponent then went to take his meal and did not see Manik Chund again, therefore knows not when he rejoined the Buhul—does not know how long he had been at Juepoor when he went to Ulwur : there is only the road between the two houses; but deponent cannot speak as to the number of months Manik Chund had been at Juepoor, nor on what business he came—Manik Chund's mother and daughter went to Ulwur, his wife did not go.

Manik Chund had put down the names of three more individuals, but these are absent from Juepoor and cannot be obtained at present; if they are to be found before the trials are over they will be duly summoned.

Manik Chund has throughout declined proposing, from himself, any questions to his witnesses.

The Court now proceed to declare their sittings suspended until such time as the attendance of the witnesses summoned from Ulwar can be had, or certain information respecting them shall arrive.

When the prisoners have retired, before the Court rises, a small red bag is produced and papers taken out of it are read aloud—(vide No. 37.)

Friday, 15th July, 1836.

The Court assemble to-day at 7 o'clock A. M.

Before the prisoners are sent for, a piece of paper covered with numeral cyphers is exhibited to the court, and the interpretation of the writing is read; as are also the depositions of several persons connected with the circumstances attending the discovery of this note, which appears to have been written by Gyan Chund, from his place of concealment in the city, to the family of the Seth Muni Ram at Muthura—(vide No. 38.)

A daughter of Deewan Umur Chund is married to Lukshmee Chund, one of the sons of Muni Ram, as noticed to the court.

Two of the prisoners, Deewan Umur Chund and Manik Chund, are brought into court; the third, Siva Lal Sahoo, is reported to have remained behind for a short time, in consequence of being rather unwell.

The witnesses summoned from Ulwur are stated to be in attendance in the Bagh. Doolue Chund Sah, Hansooka Sravugee is sent for, and examined, at considerable length, with reference to all that he knows of his alleged servant Manik Chund; with the various incidents relating to the visit of the latter to Juepoor when in his service, and his asserted return to Ulwur in company of the family of Doolue Chund.

[Document No. 39 gives a general outline of the story told by Manik Chund himself, which he afterwards endeavoured to support, and invest with verisimilitude by entering readily or spontaneously into details, with a minuteness and circumstantiality characteristic of reality, through a very long and tedious cross-examination, adhering no doubt, as well as he could, to the arrangement made between himself and his friends at Ulwur, during the twelve or fifteen days that he was detained in the place after he was known to be a suspected man, and application had been made for his transmission to Juepoor. The line of defence adopted by, and for, Manik Chund, was, of course, to be corroborated, in case of need, by his confederates at Ulwur, more especially by those whose names appear in the deposition and cross-examination.]

[Manik Chund's plea of alibi was to be made out by the substantiation of the journey to Ulwur in Jeth Budi; the want of proof of his having returned to Juepoor; and his own assertion, to be affirmed by his supporters, that he remained at Ulwur.]

[Such being the state of the case, notwithstanding the great deficiency in the evidence adduced by him with reference to his having actually quitted Juepoor and proceeded to any specific distance on the road towards Ulwur, when witnesses from the latter place, who it was well known were both inclined and bound to afford him all the aid their ingenuity could suggest, were summoned and appeared in Court, it became expedient to conduct their examination with more than ordinary caution, so that it might be made clearly manifest how utterly worthless was their bare assertion of having seen Manik Chund in this and that place at Ulwur on the 7th or 8th of Jeth Soodi. There was no leisure for recording much of what passed in English, but notes were taken down in Hindlee of a great deal of what the witnesses said including every point of importance : a translation of these notes would, however, convey but little correct information to those not thoroughly conversant in the details of the extensive cross-examination of Manik Chund, and the still more voluminous record of the examinations of individuals belonging to Ulwur, who were introduced in Manik Chund's narrative, which took place in January and February last; whilst the insertion of all the documents referred to, would swell this record of proceedings, and its appendix, to an enormous extent. But the notes taken will be reperused in court on the morrow, when some of the inconsistencies and contradictions remarked shall be entered in the minutes.]

When the examination of Doolue Chund is drawing towards a close, he is questioned as to the members of his family, coming under the head of Qubeelu, who had made the journey from Juepoor to Ulwur, and is told that he had before deposed to their comprehending his grand-mother, mother, wife, and child, and the wife of his cousin Ubbue Chund; whereas he now states that only his grand-mother, mother and child were of the party, and that his own wife and the wife of Ubbue Chund had not gone to Juepoor;—asked again if the two wives were or were not of the party that came from Juepoor :— declares that they were not—hesitates—stammers—says he does not recollect. The Court express their opinion that it is incredible, quiet impossible, a householder should forget whether his own wife did or did not quit home and remain away a month and a half, if asked the question some months, a year, or years afterwards ; and propose to witness that he should recollect himself as to the point, and then speak decidedly. Deponent becomes more confused—says nothing—answers in a low tone that he does not remember. The Court say they require no further information from such a witness.

Note.—Siva Lal, prisoner, entered the court in the commencement of the examination of Doolue Chund.

Second Witness. Gopal Sogante, Sravugee, called in and examined.

Third Witness. Chagoo Ram Chundowar, Sravugee, deposes that he saw Manik Chund at Ulwur after his return from Juepoor—lodged in the same house with him and his mother—has no recollection of dates, but it was some day in the month of Jeth that Manik Chund arrived—is pretty sure that it was in Jeth—cannot remember what took place in other months—never met Manik Chund in any Mundur, indeed saw him but very seldom whilst he remained at Ulwur—can give no sort of account of him.

Fourth Witness. Rutun Singh Moghuree, Sravugee, is next examined.

Fifth Witness. Harnarayan Pandyo, Sravugee's examination closes the evidence from Ulwur adduced on the application of Manik Chund prisoner.

When in the midst of the trial, witnesses were summoned from Ulwur on account of Manik Chund, and the Court adjourned ; three other names were added to the list on the part of the prosecution.

First.—Bachhoo Lal Sethee, Sravugee, called for the specific purpose of disproving an allegation of some importance made by Manik Chund, the purport of which will appear in the proceedings of to-morrow.

Second.—Girdharee Misr, Bruhmun, called in and examined, declares that the last deposition he gave is according to facts—expresses contrition for having been induced to say what was not true in the first instance, agreeably to instructions given to him by Moonna Lal, Sravugee, nephew of Doolue Chund.—(Vide No. 40.)

Manik Chund has no questions to propose to any of his own witnesses, but he remarked that Bachhoo Lal must have forgotten what took place on the day that he (Manik Chund) reached Ulwur ; and he attacks Girdharee Misr for the testimony he has given, and endeavours to prompt him : the latter remains firm, denies the truth of Manik Chund's suggestions, and avers solemnly to the Court that he has told the truth in their presence.

It is now drawing towards 2 o'clock, and the Members of the Court, most of whom have taken no sustenance to-day, are somewhat exhausted ; the examination of Moonna Lal, Sravugee, is therefore dispensed with altogether by the prosecution, and the Court adjourns to 7 o'clock to-morrow morning.

Saturday, 16th July, 1836, 7½ o'clock A. M.

The Court having met pursuant to adjournment, and the prisoners being sent for, Manik Chund enters the room alone, upon which enquiry is made respecting the other two, and it is reported that they had refused to attend. Deewan Umur Chund having assigned as a reason that several of the Ulwur witnesses, yesterday had been allowed chairs, whilst he was seated upon a mat—Siva Lal, who has been slightly indisposed, does not come on the plea of his having no more business with the Court. Instructions for enforcing their attendance by such means as may be found expedient are immediately despatched by the Court ; and as the matter about to come on relates to Manik Chund only, the proceedings of the day commence.

It is stated that of the eleven individuals named by Manik Chund as evidences to his quitting Juepoor on Jeth Budi 7th, one of the three who were formerly absent from Juepoor, has been found, and was in waiting : the remaining two have not yet returned to their homes.

Witness. Punna Lal Pautnee, Sravugee, lives in the Chorookan-ka Muhullu—is servant of Umeeo Chand Seth Sravugee, his duties are of a miscellaneous nature, cooking and giving to drink being amongst them—has known Manik Chund for many years (ten, twenty or five.) On the 7th of Jeth Budi, Manik Chund went away : his cart was standing in the Muhullu. Deponent knows very little about Manik Chund—cannot tell when he came from Ulwur or how long he had been at Juepoor—saw the cart standing, but has no knowledge respecting its coming or going, and cannot say who mounted it—alludes to an occurrence of fifteen months ago—works for his subsistence therefore should not be expected to possess much intelligence—it was a hired cart, and had a chutree : it stood at the door of Manik Chund's house—does not know well in whose service Manik Chund was formerly, but has heard that they said he was servant of Deewan Umur Chund : they also said that he was in the service of others. Manik Chund transcribed and procured copies of books for all who would employ him in that way.

Manik Chund has no questions to propose to witness, but says that he is a silly lad and knows nothing, and that his mother is very well acquainted with all that took place at the time under consideration.

The record of the depositions of the witnesses from Ulwur, whose examination took place yesterday, is looked over ; and with reference to the former statements of some of them, and the narrative of Manik Chund himself, the following discrepant statements are noticed.

First. Doolue Chund.—Doolue Chund Sravugee deposes that Manik Chund came to Ulwur from Tijara is Usrah 1891—that he had not known him before, but when he came to deponent's house, like many other strangers visiting Ulwur, deponent first learnt that he came from Tijara and had been in the service of Futih Chund, by asking him who he was and whence he came. Manik Chund put up in an apartment that was attached to the larger Puncharote Temple. Deponent retained him, and fixed his salary at fifteen rupees a month, in Srawun or Bhadon, intending that he should instruct children. Entertained him at the request of the Punch of the Mundur. Futih Chund sent him to reside at Ulwur. When Futih Chund died at Dihlee, Manik Chund said he should go to Juepoor, upon which the Punch recommended him, and deponent entertained him. Before that he was the servant of another, having declared that Futih Chund had desired him to remain at Ulwur until himself returned to Tijara from Dihlee.*

Manik Chund.—Manik Chund has deposed that Futih Chund sent him to reside at Buswa and assist Pain Rāj his agent there in his business ; but that upon his representing, that, when on his way to Tijara, Doolue Chund, Ram Rutun and Chutoor Bhooj expressed a wish to retain him, and asking how he should act if those persons were still of the same mind, Futih Chund told him he might remain with them. They kept him at Ulwur, and writing to Futih Chund procured permission for him to stay with them. During the period that Futih Chund was alive he considered himself his servant, though he performed service, with his permission, for Doolue Chund.

Second. Doolue Chund.—States that though he paid Manik Chund his salary, yet that the half of it was subscribed by Chutoor Bhooj.

Chutoor Bhooj.—In his deposition taken at Ulwur in January last, declared that he gave nothing towards the stipend fixed for Manik Chund.

* In his former deposition Doolue Chund stated that Manik Chund was not employed by him in any way before the death of Futih Chund.

Third. Doolue Chund.—Deposes that Manik Chund obtained leave of absence for two months to bring his family to Ulwur, the occasion being rendered available for procuring books from Juepoor, but that he staid away eight months. Deponent visited Juepoor in November 1834, and then wished Manik Chund to return to Ulwur, but the latter declined doing so, because there was a planet in opposition. Does not know how long the planet retained its influence; but, subsequently, some temples were plundered and the Muharaj of Juepoor died, which circumstance prevented him from coming back.

Manik Chund.—Has Deposed that he was detained at Juepoor by the difficulty of getting the books finished which he had been desired to have transcribed, and also on account of a fire, but has not assigned any of the foregoing occurrences as causes of detention.

Fourth. Doolue Chund.—Deposes that the members of his own family who had gone to Juepoor, and with whom Manik Chund returned to Ulwur, were his grandmother, mother, and a son, five or six years old, named Sookh Devu. That his wife was not of the party, nor does he remember that the wife of his cousin Ubhue Chund was.

In his former deposition Doolue Chund stated repeatedly that his own wife and the wife of Ubhue Chund were both of the party. This is brought to his recollection and portions of his first deposition are read to him. He says again that they were not on the journey, and had not gone to Juepoor—hesitates—becomes confused—declares that he does not remember how it was, and cannot recollect.

Manik Chund.—Has stated distinctly that only the grandmother and mother of Doolue Chund were on the journey,—and that the wife of Doolue Chund and the wife of Ubhue Chund should not have gone to Juepoor, is essential to the train of his story.

Fifth. Doolue Chund.—Deposes that some of the books commissioned through Manik Chund were sent to Ulwur before his family went to Juepoor, and Manik Chund brought the rest with him. Those which were sent to Ulwur arrived there two or three months previously to the return of Manik Chund with the remainder.

Manik Chund.—Has stated that after the arrival of Doolue Chund Hiansooka's family at Juepoor, the whole of the books were despatched, at once, upon one of the Buhuls belonging to Doolue Chund which returned to Ulwur; and that he received notice of their having arrived by a letter in which Doolue Chund told him to come back with the Majee, (Doolue Chund's grandmother.)

Sixth. Doolue Chund.—Deposes that in the afternoon of the day on which the party from Juepoor reached Rajghur, (where Doolue Chund met his family,) four Buhuls proceeded towards Ulwur, one of which belonged to Manik Chund. He names the individuals who went on in these Buhuls, declaring that they took leave of him, and that he saw the four carts set off together.

Manik Chund.—Has stated over and over again, that only two of the Buhuls proceeded to Ulwur, viz. his own and Moonna Lal's—and the other four remained at Rajghur in the Chouk of Doolue Chund's house.

Seventh. Doolue Chund.—Deposes that he wrote a letter from Rajghur to his Goomashtu Ubhue Chund at Ulwur, desiring that he would see Manik Chund accommodated with lodging-room in deponent's old house, and gave it to Manik Chund to take with him.

Manik Chund. Has declared that a letter was written by Doolue Chund, but has also stated that it was given to Moonna Lal to convey to Ulwur.

Moonna Lal Sravujee.—Deposed that Doolue Chund gave him some verbal message about providing Manik Chund with lodging at hire, which he did not act on, and averred that he never heard of any arrangement about the old house.

Uthue Chund, Sravujee Goomashtu.—Deposed to his having received a letter from Doolue Chund, brought by a Qasid; in consequence of which he sent a Brahman servant to conduct Manik Chund to the old house; but in this assertion he is directly contradicted by Manik Chund in his original cross-examination.

Eighth. Doolue Chund.—Deposes to the arrival of Poorun Mul Kisleewal (whose movements and progress the cross examination of Manik Chund rendered of some importance) at Rajghur from Juepoor, only one puhur and a half after the rest of the party; whereas, in his former deposition he stated, that though he remained several days at Rajghur, Poorun Mul did not arrive, and he first saw him about ten days subsequently to his return to Ulwur.

Poorun Mul's wife is sister of Doolue Chund's mother; and her Buhul was among the four stated by Doolue Chund to have gone on to Ulwur. Poorun Mul, the husband, stayed behind at Rajghur. Deponent knows not how many days, or for what reason.

Manik Chund.—Has stated that he saw Poorun Mul at Rajghur.

1st. Gopal Soganeer, Sravujee.—Owner of that portion of the house at Ulwur, in which Manik Chund is said to have lodged after his return from Juepoor; deposes that Manik Chund resided in the house three months, and that he actually received 1 rupee 2 annas for that period, at 6 annas a month, which was the rent fixed.

Manik Chund.—Has stated that in the month following that of his arrival at Ulwur, he removed into the house of one Ghasee Gundhee, and some days after, or on Srawun Biddi 4th or 5th took his mother there, that is, one month and twenty-two or three days after hiring rooms in Gopal Soganeer's house he gave them up again.

Gopal Soganeer acknowledges, first, that in the course of the three months Manik Chund remained at Ulwur, he merely met him accidentally three or four times; then, after further cross-questioning, that he never saw him at all, excepting the day on which Manik Chund called upon him, in the house he himself occupies outside the town, to hire apartments in his house within the town: that day was the 12th or 13th of Jeth Budi, and Manik Chund, at the interview, mentioned that he had arrived at Ulwur the day before.

Rutum Singh Meghuree, Sravujee.—Deposes that he is a Tulseeldar under the Rao Raja of Ulwur, at fifteen rupees a month salary. Collects the revenue of Kothar Tallooku, and generally resides in the district committed to his charge, but visits Ulwur on the 8th and 4th of each half month, for the purpose of making his devotions at one of the two public temples of the Sravujees. That Bees Punthee ka Mundur is the one he usually attends:—Jue Chund Sravujee reads there the Suktas in Bhassha: and when Manik Chund Bhaoosa was at Ulwur he used to read in Sanskrit. Deponent saw him there on Jeth Budi 14th, in 1892 (10th June 1835) Manik Chund came from Tijara to Ulwur in Bhaddon, and deponent saw him at that period. Heard that Manik Chund said, when he first came to Ulwur, that he was no longer the servant of Futh Chund, upon which the Punch entertained him as reader and teacher through Doolue Chundjee. Deponent was present when Manik Chund arrived at Ulwur from Tijara in the month of Bhaddon, and knows that he was retained a few days after that event.

Manik Chund.—The statement of Manik Chund is much at variance with the foregoing account of the manner in which he came to enter the service of Doolue Chund at Ulwur: moreover, Manik Chund, according to his own account, went to Ulwur, in Jeth, between which and Bhaddon there are two intervening months.

Hurnarayan Pandye.—Deposes that though sometimes stricken in years, he used to receive lessons in Sanskrit from Manik Chund, and that he perfectly recollects receiving his first lesson on the 13th of Jeth Budi 1892, is positive as to the day. There were many students about Manik Chund at the time.

Manik Chund.—Has stated that he was unable to attend to his duties as a teacher for some days after reaching Ulwur, in consequence of being troubled with bad, but that he gave his first lessons on the 2d of Jeth Soodi.

Bachhoo Lal Sethes.—Deposes that he was in the Bazar when Manik Chund took possession of his apartments in the house of Gopal Sogane, where he himself also lodged; and that when he went home he met Manik Chund for the first time in his life.

Manik Chund.—Has stated repeatedly, that when, not knowing what to do for a lodging, he was sitting in the Mundur at Ulwur, two persons, Punna Lal and Bachhoo Lal Sethes, said to him, come with us and we will show you a place: they accordingly took him to the house of Gopal Sogane.

Rutun Singh Meghuree.—Manik Chund was retained in Bhadon, and deponent is positive that he saw him in the Mundur at Ulwur until the Umawasya of Kartik inclusive (the Diwalee.) There was a grand meeting held at the temple on the last mentioned day, at which Manik Chund was present: deponent is most positive respecting the presence of Manik Chund on that occasion. Saw him again on Jeth Budi 14th, also on the 8th and 14th of Jeth Soodi, (the 4th and 10th of June 1835.) Does not remember whether he met Manik Chund again after the 14th of Jeth Soodi, nor even if he himself did or did not revisit the Mundur. May have seen Manik Chund on the 8th and 14th of Usarh Budi, but cannot say that he did.

Manik Chund.—Has stated that he reached Juepoor from Ulwur in Usaj Budi, and most of the Ulwur witnesses have deposed to his setting out for Juepoor in the month Usaj; yet Rutun Singh Meghuree is most positive as to having seen him in the Mundur at Ulwur on the 16th of the following month, or on the Umawasya of Kartik.

All the witnesses from Ulwur, excepting Girdharee Misar, have either deposed positively to Manik Chund's presence at Ulwur on the 8th Jeth Soodi (4th June); or to his arrival there in the latter part of Jeth Budi, with other matter tending to establish the inference that he remained there subsequently: the general intention of the deponents to make it appear that Manik Chund was at Ulwur on or about the 8th Jeth Budi is fully recognised.

The prisoners were told yesterday that the Court would attend to any thing they might wish to say to day, and it was directed that they should be supplied with pens, ink and paper, to write if they pleased.

A written paper on the part of Manik Chund is produced in Court and read:—It states, that he and his father-in-law, Deep Chund Buj, have been confined unjustly and without cause since the month of Srawun last. That there is a family of five persons depending upon the writer's exertions for food and raiment. A year since he was in the receipt of fifteen rupees a month, but now, until justice shall be done, there will be the annoyance arising from the claims of creditors, and the distress caused by want of food and clothing. That his legs are hurt by the fetters upon them. Has made his petition to the Court. His father-in-law is almost blind, and there can be no reason for detaining him in confinement. Moreover, there can be no occasion for keeping a guard at his house when the writer himself is present in person.

Note.—Manik Chund is in fetters, the other two prisoners are free in their persons.

Manik Chund addressing the Court, says, that he is an injured man; and has been calumniated and brought into trouble by the falsehood and wickedness of others. That his master has deposed to his being present at Ulwur, and if all which should have been remembered by his witnesses was not fresh in their recollection, his destiny only is in fault.

The Court have to wait some time for the arrival of Deewan Umur Chund and Siva Lal Sahoo. At length they enter and take their seat as usual upon morbas.

Being asked if they have any thing further to say to the Court in their defence, Siva Lal Sahoo answers. What is there against me that I should have any thin to say?

Deewan Umur Chund replies:—What is it to me? If I die, my son and grandson will derive their support from the Raj: but, as the Muharaj, Ram Singh, and the Majee have been taken by the hand and protected, continue to act so that their welfare and that of the Raj may be ensured. There are witnesses on the one side as well as the other, therefore execute justice: this is all I have to say.

The prisoners are directed to retire and it is announced that the present trials are brought to a close.

The Court is cleared, in order that it may be suggested to the Members of the Tribunal, that as their verdicts, whatever may be the nature of them, are to be submitted to the consideration of the Governor-General of India in Council, it might be expedient that they should not be publicly divulged until the instructions of His Lordship in Council are received. The Court concur entirely in the expediency of the view of their proceedings which is suggested.

The Court are now asked if they are prepared to come to a decision, and it is proposed that they shall be left to themselves for the purpose of consultation. The two European Political officers who have attended the trials officially, withdraw, and the Court remains closed.

In about half an hour a message is received from the Court, which being answered—the following judgment is delivered.

The Court, having anxiously investigated the matters at issue in the present trials, and given their utmost attention to the whole of the evidence brought forward, with the various circumstances relative to the production of the several portions of it,—and considering that Futih Singh and Hidayat Khan, whose confessions have been before the Court, were intimately connected with Deewan Umur Chund and Siva Lal Sahoo: that the plea of alibi set up for Manik Chund has not, in any degree, been borne out and established by the imperfect, contradictory and tainted testimony advanced in support of it; and that there is a total deficiency on the part of the prisoners of any plausible defence, allegation or explanation going to rebut or weaken the force of any part of the evidence for the prosecution—are unanimously agreed upon the following verdict:

That the whole of the charges preferred against the prisoners Deewan Umur Chund Sravugee, Siva Lal Sahoo Sravugee, and Manik Chund Bhaoosa Sravugee, as set forth against each of them, individually, in the several indictments, are fully proved: and the Court do accordingly pronounce the prisoners guilty, and sentence them to suffer death as the penalty of their crimes.

The Court adjourn to Monday next.

Monday, the 18th of July, 1836.

The Court meet to day at 8 o'clock in the morning, with closed doors; and the Members affix their signatures to the verdict given on Saturday last, engrossed in the Hindee character and language.

OBSERVATIONS RESPECTING THE JOINT TRIALS OF DEEWAN UMUR CHUND, SIVU LAL SAKOO AND MANIK CHUND BHOSA.

The proceedings in these trials have been conducted with a due regard to their regularity and to the substantial ends of justice, and the few unimportant variations from stricter forms which may have taken place, have arisen from the peculiar nature of the investigation, and of the circumstances connected with the constitution of the Tribunal trying the matters at issue. There has been every disposition manifested by the members of the Court to preserve order and decorum, and where these have suffered infringement, it has always been on the part of the prisoners, whom it would have been impossible, probably, to control by any common means when they chose to break out; and the best mode of treating whom, therefore, on such occasions, appeared to be the allowing them to go on unchecked until their first impulses were exhausted. Every possible opportunity of making their defence, whether relating to particular points of evidence, or bearing upon the whole of their several cases as brought forward in the prosecution, has been accorded to them; and if they have failed to rebut effectually any portion of the accumulative body of testimony and official support of the charges, the defect has proceeded from other causes than a want of liberality and leniency on the part of the Court.

The examination of most of the witnesses who have appeared on both sides has been chiefly left to the Court as the person on whom devolved the duty of arranging the production of evidence for the prosecution, refrained from interfering without obvious cause, and the prisoners declined questions to be put to their own witnesses, though Manik Chund did sometimes put in a leading observation about the date and manner of his departure from Juepoor, or those of his arrival at Ulwur. The witnesses from Ulwur are to be expected from the foregoing remark: in their case it was desirable, (though not probably necessary to the general result), that regard being had to the quality of their testimony, some one well acquainted with all that had been previously elicited respecting Manik Chund's connection with Ulwur, and his alleged journey to that place from Juepoor, in Jeth Budi 1892, upon which he rested so large a portion of his plea of alibi, should take a prominent part in the examination; although it by means followed that, because he made a journey of about seventy-five miles in the middle of Jeth Budi he could not have been at Juepoor in the following half month.

The mode adopted with reference to many of the Juepoore witnesses for the prosecution, of reading over depositions formerly made by them, before they were called into Court, placed the members of the Panchaet in possession of a previous knowledge of the nature of their evidence, and prepared them to enter at once into the examination of the individuals to great advantage, and without loss of time: such depositions only as were judged to contain matter of importance were submitted to the Court.

Deewan Umr Chund and Sivu Lal called no witnesses to invalidate the evidence of Ram Lal Dramu Bruhman respecting the meeting of Sravugees at the Chatsoo Mundur, in the end of March or early in April 1835, and the subject of their consultation, and they assigned no reason for neglecting to do so. Much stress need not be laid upon this point, indeed the whole of this incipient portion of the prosecution might be omitted without the slightest injury to the strength of the other parts of it, with which it is not necessarily connected, but the inference is obvious, that they may have thought it more prudent to content themselves with a bare denial of the truth of the allegation, than to trust their exculpation from it to the depositions of witnesses before the Court, who would be subjected to a cross-examination. The prisoners, who have not been closely confined and deprived of the means of communication, aboard until very lately, must have been well aware of the discovery made respecting the Chatsoo Mundur meeting, since it was notorious in the City and has been alluded to in several of the Deosa and Agra letters.

As there is no regular Jail in Juepoor for the safe custody of criminals, it is quite impracticable to keep prisoners so closely confined for any considerable length of time, as to prevent their receiving and forwarding messages, where there is adequate temptation for carrying on intercourse in that mode; and to this circumstance should be referred the tergiversation of Hidayat Khan, who must have had some motives held out to him as inducement to depart from the tenor of his former depositions. This man once succeeded in effecting his escape (the men in whose charge he was were probably bribed on the occasion,) but was retaken somewhere between Juepoor and Amber. As no doubt can be entertained with respect to his having been one of the immediate murderers of the late Mr. Blake and his chuprassee, in the Poorohit's Mundur, and he was respited from death merely because it was thought he might know more than he had confessed, and would be induced in the course of time to divulge all that he had kept back, it would seem to be expedient that his execution should now take place as speedily as possible.

Barring the oral statement of Hidayat Khan there was nothing to the best of my judgment and belief to impeach the truth of the testimony of any one of the witnesses in chief on the side of the prosecution; and with respect to the evidence of a documentary nature, this was in every case tested and verified to the complete satisfaction of the Court.

Among the witnesses for the defence, Doolue Chund Hansooka is a highly respectable man in point of external circumstances, being a wealthy Muhujun and Banker at Ulwur. He made his appearance before the Court perfectly cool and collected, and was supported by the presence of the Vukeel of his Prince; but he was subjected to a strict examination, which resulted in the complete exposure of his falsehood and his retiring with much confusion.

Manik Chund might very well have made the journey to Ulwur in Jeth Budi and returned to Juepoor early in Soodi (the 4th of June coincided with the 8th Jeth Soodi), but there is no proof whatever of his having executed the journey in question—no direct evidence to the point that can be deemed worthy of credit. One of his own witnesses, Sivu Lal Bruhman, Jyotishsee, deposed that when consulted by Manik Chund as to his departure, he (after inspecting his horoscope) expressly forbade him to set out on the 7th of Jeth Budi. Now, to neglect proper observances previously to the commencement of an undertaking is one thing, and is nothing more than a venial fault; but to set at naught the advice of one's astrologer and defy fate, and that without any urgent reason, for Manik Chund might have gone through the ceremony of making the start on the 5th or 6th if he was desirous of accompanying the family of Doolue Chund; or, as his Buhul was a hired one, and it appears from his own account that he was perfectly independent of the rest of the party upon the road, there is no assignable strong motive for his proceeding at all just at that time;—to act thus would be viewed in a very different light, and would amount to a serious moral offence, without reference to the immediate result.

Nearly the whole of the imperfect evidence of the man called by Manik Chund to prove his departure from Juepoor, may be reconciled with truth on the supposition, that he sent off his mother and daughter to Ulwur on the 7th of Jeth Budi, and according to the custom of the country in similar circumstance, accompanied them to a short distance, having previously given out that he was going to Ulwur; after which, that he returned to Juepoor and remained there privately, residing probably in the house of Munder, of Deewan Umur Chund, till after the 4th of June.

With reference to the exertions that have been made by a strong party of the Ulwur Sravugees, and those they could induce to second them in the attempt to procure the acquittal of Manik Chund; it should be borne in mind, that, besides the great interest supposed by the Sravugees to be involved in the question of his guilt or innocence, they most probably, in accordance with prevailing views and sentiments, deem themselves meritoriously employed whilst endeavouring, by the means within their power to assist in releasing from a state of difficulty and danger one who has received a literary education and is employed in teaching, reading and interpreting the sacred Sanskrit language, the actual tutor or spiritual instructor, indeed, to some extent, of most of those who have deposed in favor of circumstances connected more or less with the plea of a ibi as set forth by Manik Chund himself. The Sravugee interest is evidently very strong at Ulwur; and through the great wealth, the activity and the tact appertaining to the sect, its influence is considerable throughout Rajwarra and in many parts of the Western Provinces.

The minutes of these trials were not intended to comprehend every thing that took place in Court, but to denote the general course of procedure, and record all points of importance or interest.

DEPOSITIONS OF THE WITNESSES TAKEN BEFORE THE TRIALS.

No. 1.—Translation of a statement made by Ram Lal Bruhmun before the Raj authorities, Sawun Budi, 19th July, 1835.

On the day that a mob assaulted Tun Sagur Jati, outside one of the gateways of the city, and threw dust and sand at him, forty or fifty Sravugees assembled in the evening at the Chatsoo Munder, where meetings are frequently held by people of this tribe; I went into the temple from curiosity, and sat down amongst them without being noticed, having drawn my dupatta over my head in order to escape recognition. The following persons of note who were there were distinguished by me:—Umur Chund Deewan, Gyanjee Buguro, Sivu Lal Sahoo, Rajoo Lal Chudhuree, Ubbue Chund Chudhuree, Ubbue Chund Rinaika, Sumpot Ram Bilale, Hookumjee Khindooka, Ghasee Ram and his son Rajoo Duljee Bhaoosa, who is Goomashtu of Bura Sunghree, (Hookum Chund, elder brother of Joota Ram) and Moosna Lal Sanga. The light in the temple was not good, which prevented me from detecting the features of others present. There was something like a consultation took place in the party assembled, and Umur Chund said what has happened to Tun Sagurjee to-day may occur to any of us to-morrow: a great injury has therefore, been inflicted on us. What shall we decide on doing? Sivu Lal observed that they must consult as to the course to be pursued, and mentioned that there was a letter arrived from Sungherjee. Umur Chund, Sivu Lal, Gyanjee and Rajoo Lal then rose and went towards a lamp to read the letter. I caught a few words as the paper was read in a low tone, but did not hear much of the contents. They then went before the Thakoorjee and made a vow that, though their lives should be sacrificed they would execute their purpose. Sivu Lal afterwards remarked, that bold men were equal to any undertaking, and that some plan must be devised for shaking the authority of the Rawuljee, when it would soon appear that he could not retain his situation of Moosahib. Gyanchund spoke in the propriety of this measure, and the four rose again, separating from the rest of the party, sat down to consult together. I moved also, and took my seat at the distance of a few cubits from them. At first he said to the other, do you propose something? Umur Chund then said that in case of fifty thousand or a lakh of rupees being required for expenditure they must make up the sum amongst them, the object in view being the downfall of Rawuljee. Upon this Sivu Lal remarked that they should turn their designs towards the serungees, instead of conspiring directly against the Rawuljee, as that was the surest way of procuring the removal of the latter. Umur Chund replied, that each of the four must think of a plan to act on. They then pledged themselves to forfeit their lives rather than divulge the secret of their design; after which all rose, and I can give no account of what may have been said subsequently.

The letter from Joota Ram was read by Sivu Lal, and I recollect having heard so much of it you have gained laks of rupees and are now rich in proportion: I am here alone, and you are where you were. Do something that shall be long had in remembrance.

I declare solemnly that what I have related is true, and that I have told all I am acquainted with.

Being asked if he can produce evidence to any portion of his statement, Ram Lal says that one Punyoo, a durzee, saw him enter the temple of the Sravugees.

No. 2.—With reference to the deposition made before the Raj authorities by Ram Lal Bruhmun, this man was sent for and examined at the Residency, on the 22d July, 1835, (Sawun Budi 12th.)

His main statement corresponds with that given in the city, but it is fuller, as many new questions were put.

The following details the additional information obtained from him:

At the time they were in consultation, Umur Chund Deewan said—"shall we cause Rawuljee to be killed?" to which Sivu Lal Sahoo replied—"If the Rawul is put to death he will be insensible to remorse, and unable to reflect thus—"I have met with a just retribution for my acts—(muen ne uih kam kuratha jiska yih phul paya*)."
Umur Chund answered—"Do you then devise something"—then Sivu Lal said—"Make an assault upon and wound treacherously one or more of the Sahib log, in such way that death may not ensue, but that, as a consequence, the Rawul's future life may be embittered." The other three approved this suggestion, and it was agreed that the four should each find a man fit to act a part in the plot. It was thus that the scheme was proposed and decided on; and it was then settled that each should commence to perform what he had undertaken the next morning, Sivu Lal said, "Do you then find each a man to use his sword, and give me warning of your success, I will look out for my own man."

Being asked why he did not make known what he heard, on the above occasion to the Rawul and the Agent to the Governor-General, Ram Lal answers that he mentioned the matter in his own house and proposed giving information, but that his father forbade his saying aught about it; telling him that there was no use in it, he would merely bring himself into trouble; would be accused of calumny and disbelieved; that the Sravugees were possessed of power and influence, therefore it was dangerous to make enemies among them; moreover, that it was all talk on their part and they would never dare to act as had been proposed.

No. 3.—Punyoo Durzee, inhabitant of Juepoor, called in and questioned.

Ram Lal came to my house when about four ghurrees of the evening had passed on the day that Tun Sagur was ill used, and sat down; he told me that the Sravugees were to assemble in the Chatsoo Munder that night, and that he was going to see the fun. We rose soon afterwards and both walked towards the said Munder; when we got up to it Ram Lal went inside and I came back. I do not know what Ram Lal heard or saw in the Munder.

* Literally I have acted thus and this is the fruit I have reaped.

No. 4.—Jus Chund, father of Ram Lal, aged about 73 called in and examined.

Q.—Did Ram Lal tell you regarding a meeting of Sravugees at the Chatsoo Mundur, that any design of importance had been under deliberation?

A.—The day that Tun Sagur was assaulted, Ram Lal came home very late at night indeed he did not arrive till about one puhur after midnight—I asked him where he had been, and he told me he had attended a meeting of Sravugees at the Chatsoo Mundur; and that it was proposed and determined there that swords should be set agoing—I answered that there was no probability of such an event, and desired him not to mention what he might have heard.

Q.—Did Ram Lal explain to you upon whom it had been proposed that swords should be used?

A.—He said they were to be set agoing in a great place.

No. 5.—Translation of the deposition of Futih Singh, on the 8th of June, 1835.

My name is Futih Singh. I am by caste a Toowur—I was born at the village of Jeeloo in Toorawatee; the name of my mother is Sooja, who is still living at Jeeloo. I entered the service of Deewan Umur Chund in the month of Usaj. I was first employed with other persons in preventing robbery in the Perginna Madhoo-poor; and there I was told by the Amil of that place that my services were dispensed with, upon which I came to Juepoor about twenty or twenty-five days since. On reaching the capital I waited upon the Deewan, who told me that I had not been discharged and ordered me to keep guard in the Mundur. The guard was composed of myself, Gopul Singh, Ram Singh and Ratun Singh; and in the Mundur where we were on duty, the Shastrus were read every evening, and Sravugees attended to hear them.

The Shastrus were read as usual in the Mundur on the night preceding the outrage which took place, and Deewan Umur Chund, Sivu Lal Sahoo, Rajoo Lal Chuduree, Gyan Chund Buguero, and several other persons were listening to them. They sat among themselves that they had fallen upon evil days, and in consequence that they would attack the ferungees. I was on watch at the time they were discoursing after this manner. When it wanted four ghunices of midnight, Manik Chund and Koonj Lal came to me on the part of the persons who held the above mentioned conversation, and asked me—"are you a man or a woman?" I answered that I was a man—They then said to me—"to-morrow there will be a Durbar held, and the sahib log will be in attendance; now, when they come out into the Deorhee on their return, do you fall upon them with your sword; strike at all events, and wound them more or less, you will thereby become famous, and your stipend shall be doubled."

According to their bidding I went to the Deorhee and attacked the sahib with my sword.

Q.—You state that Deewan Umur Chund and others were in consultation relative to an attack upon the ferungees. How do you know this?

A.—Manik Chund and Koonj Lal came to me and said that Deewan Umur Chund, Sivu Lal, Gyanjee Buguero and Rajoo Lal Chuduree had desired that I should attack the sahibs with my sword on the morrow, and promised that I should thereby obtain a great name and increase of pay. I understood from this, that having determined upon the measure, they sent me this message.

No. 6.—Deposition taken in the City of Juepoor on the 9th June, 1835.

Hidayut Khan Puthan, states that he has been a sepahce in the Battalion of Juhangeer Khan since eleven years, and that for the last eight years he has been stationed at the house of Sivu Lal Sravugee, where he remained day and night. Ten days before the disturbance in the city took place, Sivu Lal told him that there was to be a Durbar, at which Rawuljee and the ferungees would be present, and that Rawuljee would receive an honorary dress, that after the Durbar a servant of Deewan Umur Chund would seize an opportunity of attacking the Rawul or the ferungee, when he (Hidayut Khan) must also do his best. Sivu Lal told him the above, at eleven o'clock at night when there was no one else present, having called him into a private room for the purpose; he added, "We are the masters of the Raj—they will pass away like a hot wind; they come to the Bagh (alluding to the Majee ka Bagh or Residency) before, and went away again: what injury did we then suffer? You will not be hurt by doing as you are bid." On being talked to in this way, Hidayut Khan agreed to the proposition of Sivu Lal, who told him to keep silence as to what had passed between them. The day previous to the Durbar, Sivu Lal reminded him of what was to be done, and told him that the ferungee was to come to the Durbar the next day and he, deponent, was to be in readiness. On the morning of the 4th, about half-past six o'clock, Sivu Lal set off for the palace in a bulbul; but, before starting, he told deponent to remain where he was for the present, and follow when the disturbance began. Nujeeb Khan Jumadar and Meer Buksh accompanied Sivu Lal; deponent and Phool Khan staid behind. Between eight and nine, deponent heard a noise and was told that swords had been used, and either the Rawul or the ferungee had been killed: deponent and Phool Khan immediately ran to the Tripolya; a gentleman upon an elephant was at that time going along as fast the animal could move, and people were exclaiming, "swords have been at work in the palace, and it is ordered that this person (the sahib) shall not be permitted to get away!"—deponent went on with the elephant, throwing stones: he also gave the elephant a wound in the leg with his sword, which broke. The crowd went on until the sahib got into Ram Nath Poorohit's temple: when this was stormed and broken into by the mob, deponent says, that he also went in, and stood near a small flight of steps close to the room in which Mr. Blake had sought refuge; that the walls of the chamber were opened, and that Mr. Blake and a chuprassee were killed with spears and swords. Hidayut Khan afterwards went to Sivu Lal's house, washed his clothes which were bloody in consequence of the wounded chuprassee, who was with Mr. Blake, having clung to him for protection, and went to the quarters of Captain Juhangeer Khan where he took his meal. Sivu Lal then sent Meer Khan to desire him to go to his home for four days. The message was brought to him on the following day, deponent said he would go to ascertain that there was no mistake in regard to what Meer Khan had told him, but the latter forbade him from going again to Sivu Lal's, he therefore waited till night, and then proceeding to the house, enquired of Unwur Khan, Saynd Ukkur Ulie and Noorkhan, if he ought to go away; they said he should ask the Jumadar; deponent went to the Jumadar Nujeeb Khan, who told him to go home for four days and return when all was quiet again. Deponent went to his home where he was apprehended subsequently.

No. 7.—Evidence of Hidayut Khan, sepahce in the service of the Raj; taken before Captains Thoresby and Ludlow, 14th June.

I am a sepahce in the corps commanded by Juhangeer Khan, and have been under the orders of Sivu Lal during the last eight years; seven other sepahces are attached to Sivu Lal. Eleven days prior to the attack upon the English gentlemen, Sivu Lal told me that a disturbance would take place shortly at the Deorhee, and desired me to join the sepahce appointed by Deewan Umur Chund, in fomenting the tumult. Sivu Lal was at the Deorhee when the attack was made upon Major Ayles, and Mohunjee, the brother of Sivu Lal, was at his own house; he sent me off to the Deorhee to bring tidings of what had taken place. Sivu Lal sent a message to Mohunjee that a conflict with sworls had taken place between the Rawul and the English gentleman when I reached the Deorhee the attack was over, and Mr. Blake upon his elephant was proceeding through the Bazar; the people fired matchlocks, threw spears and stones at him and at the elephant, and attacked him with their swords. I wounded the elephant in the leg and the elbow with my sword; I then went to the Hareestonee, a distance of an hundred paces from the Tripolya. I afterwards went to Sivu Lal's house, and thence to Mohunjee, to tell him that the gentleman had been killed. Mohunjee sent me back to ascertain the fact, and I went to the Mundur and saw Mr. Blake lying dead; I went back to tell Mohunjee—Mohunjee then sent me to Sivu Lal at the Deorhee; I saw by the way, a chuprassee lying dead; I took him up and carried him into the shade, and went to Sivu Lal; at noon I returned with Sivu Lal to his house.

I joined the mob by the direction of Sivu Lal. I went alone there: Mohunjee sent Phool Khan and myself to join in the tumult, but Phool Khan preceded me. I saw Phool Khan in the crowd near the elephant, but I did not see him use his sword, though I certainly saw that he carried it drawn. Phool Khan is now at Sivu Lal's house: Sivu Lal went to the Deorhee four ghurrees after day-break, and four ghurrees afterwards the tumult arose.

My sword is at my house: I wounded the elephant by the direction of Sivu Lal; Sivu Lal's house is quarter of a koss from the Deorhee: when Sivu Lal gave me his instructions there were twenty persons present, but he whispered his wishes to me: he told me on the day of the tumult, when about to go to the Deorhee, to be on the alert: two ghurrees after day-break Sivu Lal went to the Deorhee, and two days before the attack upon the gentleman, (meaning the day preceding) Sivu Lal told me that the gentlemen would proceed to the Muhul on the morrow, when an attack upon them would take place; he told me also that the Rawul would receive a killut on the occasion. I saw no corpse lying near Mr. Blake's body, but I heard that six persons had been killed. After I had seen Mr. Blake's body in the Mundur I returned. I said in my evidence taken by the Raj authorities, that I did not know where Phool Khan had remained behind, but I am sure that he preceded me, and I was confused at the time I made the opposite statement. I threw two stones at the sahib after I had struck the elephant.

Q.—You stated before the Raj authorities that you went with the mob into the Mundur, and now you say that you went there after Mr. Blake had been killed; what is the meaning of this contradictory statement?

A.—What I now declare is correct.

Q.—You stated before, that a chuprassee who was wounded seized hold of you and that your clothes were covered with his blood; you now state that you saw only one body lying there?

A.—A ghurree after the gentleman had been killed, I went to the Mundur and there was a wounded chuprassee there; the mob were killing him: he seized hold of my person and his blood stained my clothes. Two chuprassees were killed with the gentleman.

Q.—How many bodies did you see in the Mundur?

A.—I saw three corpses in the Mundur: I saw the body of the sahib lying there, and two men were going up the steps, perhaps they were killed upon the roof.

Q.—Did you see the bodies of the two chuprassees in the Mundur?

A.—Yes, I did: I saw three bodies lying there. After the sahib was killed, I endeavoured to assist the two men, one was a chuprassee, the other apparently a Baboo, that they might get up the stairs and escape, but the people on the roof killed them. I went into the Mundur after the gentleman had been killed: at that time the two men who were with the sahib were wounded; they supplicated for their lives, and their lives were in consequence spared for a space of one ghurree.

After the gentleman was killed Sivu Lal told me to go home to my village, and I went there two days afterwards; Nujeeb Khan told me that Sivu Lal had ordered me to go home; Juhangee Khan sent for me from my home; Sivu Lal sent a message to Goffoor Khan, the brother of Juhangee Khan, desiring him to send for me.

Q.—At the time that the two men attempted to escape by the stairs to the roof were you in the mundur.

A.—Yes, I was in the Mundur; but the sahib was then lying dead: I then went away home.

Q.—Who came first out of the room?

A.—A Bengallee and a chuprassee first came forth; I helped them both towards the stairs, at that time the sahib was in the room, which he presently afterwards came out of; when I returned from the stairs I saw the sahib lying dead.

Q.—You formerly stated that when you returned to the Mundur you saw Mr. Blake lying dead, and that the tumult had subsided; you now state the contrary?

A.—When I went to the Mundur the tumult was raging and I took the two men to the stairs: on returning from the stairs I found that the sahib had been killed; when I went to the Mundur the sahib was alive and in the room; the people said he was in there; I went to the stairs and on coming back I found him lying dead.

No. 8.—Deposition of Shunkur, Bruhmun, June 1835.

Q.—State whatever you may know concerning Hidayut Khan?

A.—My house is near Sivu Lal's, and from that circumstance I am acquainted with Hidayut Khan.

On the day that the outrage was perpetrated in the City, I went out into the Bazar, where I saw thousands of persons collected at the Mundur of Manjee Das Poorobit: I got upon a roof near the Mundur, whence I saw that Mr. Blake was in a room of the Mundur. The populace broke the wall, offered him assurances of safety to induce him to come forth, and then fell upon him and killed him; Hidayut Khan took the sahib's hat-band and went away; when I saw Hidayut Khan a prisoner, I mentioned the circumstances of his taking the hat-band to Captain Nuwul Sing; Hidayut Khan afterwards, in the course of a conversation I had with him, produced nine gold-mohurs and said that they had been given to him by Sivu Lal.

Q.—At the time that Mr. Blake was attacked in the Mundur, what other persons were present and recognized by you.

A.—I recognized no other person, excepting one Buldeo, a Goojur, who joined in the attack, with whom I have some acquaintance. The said Buldeo took something from the waist-band of a chuprassee.

No. 9.—Deposition of Hidayut Khan, June 1835.

Q.—How did these gold-mohurs come into your possession, and why did you not allude to the circumstances connected therewith before?

A.—To save my life I will declare the truth; Sivu Lal Sahoo gave me the gold mohurs; one day he gave me two, and four days subsequently he placed seven more into my hands. The two gold mohurs were given to me by Sivu Lal Sahoo in presence of Ubhase Chand Buneea and the other Sivu Lal; he engaged to give me 300 Rs after the business should be completed. He also said that whatever good or evil might result from the act would fall upon himself; I therefore did the work.

Q.—At the time that he promised you 300 Rs did you make any remark to him.

A.—I said to him, should my life be forfeited in the act I am about to perform, to whom will you pay the amount? Sivu Lal Sahoo replied, I will give it over to your relations, and I will make further provision for them; but should you survive, I will pay the sum to you, and will further provide for your comfort.

Q.—Who are your relations.

A.—I have a brother named Buhadeer Khan, who is a soldier in the corps of Jhangheer Khan; that corps has been long since at Dhanta Ramguth. He fled towards Kota through apprehension after the perpetration of the outrages. My mother and my sister-in-law reside at my house.

Q.—In what village is your house situated?

A.—In the village Tikrea.

No 10.—Translation of Examination of Umur Chund Deewan, taken on the 9th June, 1835, before Captains Thoresby and Ludlow.

Q.—Do you know Futih Singh, and was he in your service?

A.—He obtained service in my Ilaga through Gopal Singh, who, with Futih Singh and two others, was a servant of the state. There are two Amils in Madhoo-poor, one by name Roop Chund, the other Umur Chund of the tribe Sravugee; the latter is in my Ilaga, the former in Sunghee Jotha Ram and Hookum Chund's Ilaga: the abovenamed Amils discharged them.

Q.—At what period were Futih Singh and his three comrades entertained, and when were they discharged?

A.—I do not remember; the four men came to me here from Madhoo-poor, but the precise day I do not recollect.

Q.—When these men arrived at Juepoor what did they say to you?

A.—Gopal Singh alone came to me, and said that he had been removed from service and begged my interest to get them into employment again; and asked me to write to the Amils with that view. I told them that I would ask the Rawul to write in their behalf to that effect, as their disappointment rested with him. Gopal Singh and the rest of them put up in my Mundur, where Rehroo Gardener also lives; they came sometimes to my house, and when I went out they sometimes accompanied me. I do not know whether they kept guard at night in the Mundur, but my servant paid them all up to the Juet Soodi 5, (1st June.) I do not know from what period he paid them: Gopal Singh wrote the receipt in full, for wages for the whole: Futih Singh was in the Mundur the evening previous to his attack upon Major Alves, and I have placed Gopal Singh in confinement, because Futih Singh who has done this evil was entertained through him: the names of the four persons are Futih Singh, Gopal Singh, Rutun Singh, and Ram Singh. The two last named are at the present time also staying with me, and I have in my possession the receipt written by Gopal Singh.

Q.—Futih Singh states that Sivu Lal, yourself, Gyan Chund Buguro and Rajoo Lal Chuduree, having consulted together sent to him, and that the messenger told him to cut down the sahib in the morning when a Durbar would be held; what have you to state on this head?

A.—I sent no one to Futih Singh, and I am ignorant of all that he alludes to in the matter.

Q.—Did Futih Singh keep guard, or perform any service for you?

A.—I do not know whether he stood guard, but he performed service and remained with me.

Q.—On the evening when Futih Singh represents the two men to have come to him, where the Shustirus read in the Mundur or not?

A.—The Shastras are always read in the evening at the Mundur: the reading commences two ghurrees after the dusk, and occupies about three ghurrees.

Q.—Were you, Sivu Lal and the others before mentioned, in the Mundur or not?

A.—I was not there on that evening, but I cannot answer for the rest.

Q.—Were Koonj Lal and Manik Chund that evening in the Mundur?

A.—I am not acquainted with those persons.

Referring to No. 11.—Statement respecting the discovery of a Note, exhibiting the handwriting of Sunghee Jotha Ram upon its front, in a bag of papers belonging to Deewan Umur Chund.

On the 3d Buli Usa (10th September 1835) a bag containing papers belonging to Deewan Umur Chund was seized and brought to Rawuljee Sahib, who forwarded it to Thakoor Lukshman Singhee to be examined. When the bag was unfasted for the contents to be inspected, we the undersigned were all present; and the bag was opened before us, in order that we should look over the papers. Some sheets examined at Agra, and sheets upon which was written, 'the account of wages of Manik Chund, servant of Deewan Umur Chundjee,' were taken out of the bag, and with them was a note, which first came into the hands of Munna Lal, son of Bijdee Ram Bandoo Sravugee. The note was looked at and read by the whole of us: it proved to have been written on the part of Sunghee Jotha Ram, whose hand writing was recognised in the following words above the rest of the writing—"Kam kur lejeeo, dheel mut keejeeo."

(Signed)

Jutan Sing Rajawut.	Sungum Lal Bhuya.
Govind Ram Kiwut.	Hur Lal Sravugee.
Chutoor Bhoj Sahoo.	Chadoo Lal Bhuya.
Munna Lal Sravugee.

No. 11. (In the hand writing of Sunghee Jotha Ram)
—"Kam kur lejeeo, dheel mut keejeeo"—Perform the work and be not negligent.

Accept my salutation:—Your letter and that of Bindarunjee (Roopa) reached me and I have read the contents.

I have settled every thing in Calcutta—now do you act according to what you have decided there (where you are or at Juepoor.) You have deliberated much, but as yet have done nothing. From the execution of your design we shall obtain the highest benefit. If (there is good reason to believe the Rawul is alluded to) has been the sole cause of our ruin. You have discernment and there is no occasion to say more. Sreejee knows all. I have appraised the Budarunjee get whatever you want from her.

Date the present hour.

No. 12.—Deposition of Seeta Meenee, taken at the Residency, 1835.

Q.—Did you ever receive a bag containing papers from anyone?

A.—Yes, about the period that the Deewanjee was put in confinement, his kotharee (steward) brought a large bag of papers to my house and threw it down upon the floor. My children who were amusing themselves at play, said to him,—"Why do you throw this bundle of papers down here, when our mother is gone to the bazar to follow her work of grinding meal?" The kotharee answered, that he would take it away on some future day. Afterwards the kotharee, for some reason or other, absconded, and then the bundle was taken to the Raj authorities, who sent for me, and to-day they have forwarded me to your presence.

Q.—Do you know the name of the kotharee.

A.—His name is Goomanee.

Q.—How long after the bag of papers was thrown into your house was it taken to the Raj?

A.—The Deewan was confined in the month of Sravun, and in the first part of Usoj th bundle was taken out of my house and carried to the Raj.

Q.—Did you give information respecting it to the Raj?

A.—No, I am a poor woman, gaining my livelihood by grinding corn, and am intent only on the means of subsistence. Some one had heard that the bag was deposited in my house, and made the circumstance known to the Raj.

Q.—When did you first learn that the papers had been put into your house.

A.—On the same day, when I returned from my work, my children told me that Goomanee had placed a bundle of papers in the house and gone away. I asked them why he had done so, and they told me that they had spoken to him, but he paid no attention to what they said, throwing down the bundle and saying that he would come for it on some future day.

Q.—How did you become acquainted with Goomancee?

A.—From living in the same neighbourhood.

Q.—Did any one ever open the bag whilst it remained in your house?

A.—Nobody opened it as long as it was in my house.

Q.—When you heard the Deewan was put in confinement, why did you not give information concerning the bag of papers?

A.—I gain my subsistence by daily work as a grinder of corn in the bazar, and do not trouble myself about matters of which I know nothing.

Q.—Who came to your house to take away the papers?

A.—A hurkaru of the establishment of Suntokh Ram came, and there were with him several other men sent by Rawuljee. They arrived when about one and a quarter pulurs of day had passed.

No. 13.—Deposition of Kaloo Ugurwala, son of Seeta, an inhabitant of Juepoor, taken 16th November, 1835.

Q.—State what you know relative to the discovery of Dewan Umur Chund's papers in the house of Seeta Meenee?

A.—Seeta's little girl said to me that there were papers in her house, upon which I went and told Muhboolu that there were papers deposited in the Meenee's dwelling—Muhboolu desired me to ascertain the point in the first instance, as it was an affair connected with the Raj, and it would not be well to act upon an uncertainty, I then went to the Meenee's house to ask for orders to light my hooku. In her house there are two rooms, and I went into the outer one, from which place I saw a red bag upon a bedstead in the inner apartment, and it occurred to me that it must contain the papers alluded to by the little girl: I then came away. About twenty days subsequently Muhboolu came to my shop and asked me if I had made inquiries regarding the papers. I replied that I had done so, and satisfactorily ascertained that there were papers there deposited. In about a month Muhboolu reported the circumstance to the Raj; then, bringing with him a servant of the Juepoor Government, he came to me and desired me to go and point out the papers. I indicated the Meenee's house in the distance, and the Raj servant went there with Muhboolu, and taking possession of the red bag in question they carried it to the Raj authorities: of this I was an eye witness.

Q.—When the little girl informed you that there were papers in her house, did she also mention that they belonged to Deewan Umur Chund?

A.—She did not state to whom they belonged, but merely observed that there were papers there. I did not myself know whose papers they might be.

Q.—If you did not know whose they were, whose did you suspect them of being, that you were induced to report the circumstance to the Raj? What did you imagine to be the import of them that you communicated the particulars regarding them to Muhboolu?

A.—When the little girl told me there were papers at her house, I could not comprehend why papers should be placed in the house of a grinder of meal. Her house too is but a short distance from the Deewan's, and it occurred to me that they must have reference to the Sirkar, and would probably belong to the Deewan.

Q.—How soon after the Deewan's being placed in confinement did the little girl communicate the tidings to you?

A.—About ten days subsequently.

Muhboolu's deposition having been read over to Kaloo he is asked—

Q.—You state the point relative to time at twenty days or a month, and Muhboolu at five or ten days with the cause of this disagreement?

A.—I have not a correct recollection as to the exact time.

Q.—Reflect, and declare how soon after the confinement of Deewan Umur Chund, the little girl told you of the papers; and also at what period subsequent to the Deewan's imprisonment they were taken away?

A.—The little girl spoke to me about the papers about ten days after the apprehension of the Deewan, and after a further lapse of about ten days the papers were seized.

No. 14.—Deposition of Muhboolu, sepahce, who has been in the corps of Captain Ram Bukhsh, Jirpooree Pultun, for a period of five years—taken 16th November, 1835.

Q.—State what you know concerning the discovery of Deewan Umur Chund's papers in the house of Seeta Meenee?

A.—Kaloo Buncea told me that there were papers in the Meenee's house, upon which I desired him to obtain certain intelligence on the subject; five or ten days subsequently, he said to me that he had ascertained the fact of papers being there, and after some days I went and informed the Rawul, who ordered me to go with four sepahces, and bring away the papers; I accordingly proceeded with the four men to Kaloo's house and said to him, show me where the papers are deposited. Kaloo pointed out the Meenee's house in the distance, and I went there, with the four sepahces, and brought away the papers, which were contained in a red cloth.

No. 15.—Note of Statements made by Deewan Umur Chund at the British Residency, in the presence of Captains Thoresby and Ludlow, and Lieutenant Conolly, on the 15th September, 1835, Usqj, Rudi 8th.

Being shewn the letter apparently superscribed by Jootha Ram, which was found among his papers, the Deewan denied all knowledge of it. He admitted that the writing at the top of the letter was like Jootha Ram's hand, but would not say that it was his. Being asked how he could account for the letter being among his papers, the Deewan said, he had heard that some time back the Rawul's hurkarus posted in the ghat, had intercepted several letters written by Jootha Ram; that this might be one of them; and that some enemy might have put it among his papers. Being asked to whom it was likely that such a letter would be addressed, he answered that he could not say. When asked how long it was since Manik Chund had left his service, the Deewan said he could not tell without examining his papers.

Q.—Where are your papers?

A.—The Rawul has them.

Q.—In whose care did you leave them?

A.—With Oudus Ram, Mootsoddee.

Q.—What did he do with them?

A.—He gave them to Chectur Meena, who gave them to a Meenee woman. I hear they were found in her hut.

No. 16.—Letter marked No. 4. at Agra, written from Juepoor by Gyan Chund, son of Deewan Umur Chund, for Jootha Ram at Dossu, and subsequently transmitted to Agra.

Peruse the following intelligence; all the things you wrote for I have forwarded. The Majee has said from the interior, through Kesur (a female attendant), "what benefit will result from bringing matters to a termination when Ma* shall be no more? My language is of the same tenor, and my determination is as strong as formerly; therefore make your arrangements with the Sudder (British Government) speedily, for our antagonist (the Rawul) is acquiring strength.

All the Nagas here, the Battalions, Hunwunt Singh and Bhart Singhjee; and these, likewise, who were with us before, have been engaged to fidelity in our cause through Bhuttachajee (Daya Ram) Maharaj.

* Reepa termed Ma in former letters written in this sense, or it may be "when I shall be no more."

Ten thousand rupees will be required for expenses, as I told you before, write what your pleasure is in this matter.

It was settled with Maje Sahib that we should, with out fail, seize the adversary (Rawul) and put him to death, but the Maje says, "it Babjee (Jutha Ram) has arranged with the Sudder let him write me truly to that effect." If therefore you have accomplished this object, write the fact in a few words, that we may communicate the information (to the Maje) and convey the Balaun from the garden into the interior. On the fugitive subject your honor wrote formerly to Dalajee (my father), telling him that the arrangement was effected, and giving him encouragement and confidence, and he sent the paper for the perusal of the Deelan (Maje), who derived consolation and assurance therefrom.

After destroying the adversary, answer may be made, that the order was given by our chief authority, therefore it was obeyed.

To the English it will be appropriate to say, "you do what you are ordered by your Government, and we also are servants."

There will be no expenditure of our money until the business is completed, therefore our cash will not be wasted.

You sent a verbal message by Sewagu, that you are ready to join in any pecuniary outlay, with reference to Calcutta or even to England, but you do not understand how to make an advantageous compromise. — Laks of rupees are lying here abroad, surely the obtaining the favor of the foreigner in order to recover these sums would be a profitable transaction. The adversary has included all this money in the account for moon tax, — (in liquidation of the amount of tribute due to the British Government)

It is my (or our) advice that we destroy all those who have combined against us, but whatever you may recommend, with reference to the Sudder, shall be represented to the Maje — your reply, comprised in a written note, will obtain attention and respect.

No. 17.—Ishar of Futh Singh, given before Captains Tinsley and Lidlow, 9th June, 1855.

Q.—What are the names of the two persons who came to you in the night?

A.—One told me that his name was Koonj Lal, and the other said that he was named Manik Chund they both told me to wound some chib on the morrow.

Q.—At the time when the above-named persons went to you where were Gopal Singh, Ram Singh and Rutun Singh?

A.—When Koonj Lal and Manik Chund came to me, I was on guard, and the three persons Gopal Singh, Ram Singh and Rutun Singh were asleep not far from me.

Q.—Did you tell any one of Koonj Lal and Manik Chund living come to you?

A.—No. I told none of it.

No. 18.—Ishar of Rutun Singh.

Q.—Do you know Futh Singh?

A.—I have known him eight months.

Q.—Of what caste is he?

A.—He calls himself a Toowar, but I do not know where he comes from, he and I do eat and drink together.

Q.—On the Juet Soodi 7th, who kept watch in the Munder?

A.—On that night Futh was on watch till midnight, afterwards I relieved him at a puhur before daylight I awoke Ram Singh, who kept watch till morning.

* That allusion is here made to the identical paper superscribed by the ex-minister found among the papers of Deewan Umar Chund in the house of a Moosce woman is an obvious conjecture.

No. 19.—Ishar of Ram Singh, taken 9th June, 1855.

Q.—How long have you known Futh Singh?

A.—I have known him eight months.

Q.—Of what caste is he?

A.—He calls himself a Toowar, and I believe he is of that caste. I do not know what place he comes from or where he lives.

Q.—Did Futh Singh eat and drink with you?

A.—No.

Q.—On the night of Juet Soodi 7th, who were the watch at the Munder?

A.—Futh Singh was on watch from evening till midnight he was then relieved by Rutun Singh, whom I relieved. I went to sleep six ghurees after dark, previously to which Gopal Singh had been singing.

No. 20.—Translation of a letter addressed by Manik Chund at Ulwar to Sangherjee Deep Chundjee, his father-in-law, and Chirunjee Rukhee Chund, his son, at Juepoor, found in his house at the latter place.

To Sangherjee Deep Chund and Chirunjee Rukhee Chund, salutation and benediction from Manik Chund at Ulwar. The bahuhs of Sangherjee Sree Doolee Chundjee are gone to Juepoor for the families of his relatives, and Girdharjee Mair is gone with them. Ten rupees are sent to you for road expenses, including hire, so do you and Sangherjee (Manik Chund's wife, and his wife's mother) and Rukhee Chund, come here in company with Hansooka's family. I take no heed about the household furniture and petty stores, abundance of such things will be procured hereafter. Matters will not always remain as they are, (literally, the present wind will not last forever) but the ferment will subside in the course of one or two months. You must manage to get to the ghāt in any way you can, and for this purpose you may forego a desire to make a holy visit to Hanoomanjee or to the ghāt itself. I have much anxiety about you here. Write and send your letter through the house of Hansookah, forwarding a receipt for the rupees, on account of the risk involved more money is not sent. The Maje (Manik Chund's mother, who had one to Ulwar,) is perpetually thinking of home. Should you (Manik Chund's father-in-law) daughter have produced a child, in that case, hire a dooly, but do not tarry in Juepoor. If the road of the ghāt is not practicable, then under the pretext of a pilgrimage to Amber, continue going to that place, and sojourn at Kookees; this is not a time to be inattentive to one's safety, as I have explained to Sahjee Sahib Girdharjee. The bahuhs did not leave this till the night of the day before yesterday, which is the cause of the delay in making the communication. Lalajee's Poonur Muljee Kasteelwal, of Bhutpoor, is here, and his mother is at Juepoor, where she is residing in the house of Rukhee Chund Kasteelwal, near the mansion of Futh Chund Gungah; as she is coming here you can accompany her. Lalajee's Ram Mahajan is gone hence on her account, and Rukhee Chund (son of Manik Chund) and others may travel with her. If it be in your power to come here so much the better, if not, you must get to Kookees in the best way you can, when, after the full moon of Sawun (8th of August) you can send them (the wife and child) here. There will be no scarcity of money for expenses whether you come here or go to Kookees. The sum that may be required shall be sent to the latter place if you stay there. That which is to happen will occur before the full moon of Sawun (8th of August). Call upon Harchundjee Sah. and send intelligence quickly: we shall rejoice to see your handwriting. At present we are in great distress of mind here, but Bhugwan is the saviour of lakhs of human beings! We are in every respect helpless, wherefore we have reason to fear: it may be difficult for us ever to meet again.

The period was unfortunate; to this may be attributed her (Manik Chund's wife,) not setting out when the necessary preparations had been made; she was Spanish and her advisers were bad. Now that the family of Hansooka is coming here, do you avail yourselves of the opportunity and accompany them; otherwise, take Sungkhunjee and Rukhee (her, &c.,) to Kookees. My mother's relations, — Kishunjee Dado, Dalo Rim Dido and Peiso, are in your neighbourhood. Write an answer immediately, and deliver it at the house of Hansooka. Give my blessing to Mohun Baer, and to Sungkhunjee offer my respects. All this trouble has been occasioned by the bad advice she gave, but for that, my family would not have been in difficulties, and double expenses would not have been incurred. She (Manik Chund's wife,) must now act circumspectly in every way, so as to get out of her troubles.

Date. — Usarh Budh Sumbut, 1892, (13th of June)

1st P. S. When you shall arrive here with my family, or get to Kookees or Sangauer, then I shall be at ease. Your wife's relations are at Sangauer, send information speedily of what you desire on.

2nd P. S. — Give my Jeejee father or other near female relative your love is (8 p.) do not forget this.

Take great care of Rukhee (her) and the rest upon the road, and never mind though a rupee or eight annas more or less should be expended. Have the armet and dressing in your own keeping.

No. 21. — Examination of Manik Chund with reference to the letter written from Ulwur and found in his house at Juepoor.

The intercepted letter was here shewn to Manik Chund, and he was asked, — "Is this your letter or not?" He answered, — "Yes, it is my letter, and my writing."

Q. — How can what you said about your not wishing your wife to travel for a month after her confinement be true, since you write in this letter that your wife was brought away in a dooly in the event of her having borne a child?

A. — My idea was this, that, in the event of her having borne a child, my father and mother-in-law would take her in a dooly to Kookees, and leave her there, and that in the event of a child not having been born, they would take her to Ulwur and return.

Q. — What was the reason of your writing so strongly to urge your wife's being taken away from Juepoor when she was in such a state? and what was to be gained by her going to Kookees, which is only four kos from?

A. — For a month after the day on which she was used in Juepoor this apprehension prevailed, that they would be slaughtered from the Tripolya to the gate of the salt market. In this dread I hastily called her.

Q. — When Doobus Chund's sister Gindharee with buhul, to bring away some of his relations, did he openly order that they should be brought away, or did he give secret orders to the drivers?

A. He did not give the order openly. It was not an arrangement suggested from his family, but it was not generally known to others: for on those days at the Juepoor gates there was hindrance to the departure of respectable men's families.

Q. — You are in a humbled condition, who would have prevented your wife's going? did you write that she was not got out by mistake?

A. — All persons, of whatever condition, feared, and all desired to get away; but no one's family was allowed to go. Moreover they knew of me, that "he was formerly a servant of the Deewan," so I also feared that out of enmity they would injure me.

Q. — In those days what sin had the Deewan committed that you should have feared on account of your having served him formerly?

A. I thought this — "the Sunghee's eldest brother's daughter and the Deewan's son are married together, and in consequence of the Sunghee's ruin, the Deewan also will be seized in a month or two; and I, by reason of my service to him, may be seized." 'Tis true that after a month or so I shall be released, but there will be the evil of present imprisonment to suffer.

Q. — If you had this fear, why, when you yourself went, did you not urge your wife's departure as strongly as you did when she was nearer her confinement?

A. — My wife's father and mother kept her by them in Juepoor, because the stars were not propitious.

Q. — When you were examined before the Raj, you were asked it at the time of your going to Ulwur you had any fear, and you answered that you had no fear, either for yourself or for your family then, how can what you now say be true about your fearing that in consequence of the Sungheer's ruin, the Deewan would be ruined in a month or two, and that you might be seized, because you had served the latter?

A. — I then answered them (the Raj inquirers) that (at the time alluded to) there was fear, but I can't say what they have written. If your object is to ascertain truth, call up the two Lalas (scribes) and confront me with them.

Note. — The part of Manik Chund's letter which alluded to the remittance of ten rupees was read to him, and he was asked, — Is this the letter with which you sent ten rupees?

A. — Yes, this is the letter.

Q. — On your writing that you sent these ten rupees, for the expenses of your wife's escape from Juepoor, what did your father-in-law do and say? what communication had he received from Gindharee Mahar?

A. — Gindharee on returning to Ulwur said to me — "I did not meet your father-in-law, I went to nobody's house in the day, at night I saw some person, but at all other times I remained in the Huvilee."

Q. — On receiving your letter, what arrangements did your father-in-law make for getting your wife out to Ulwur or to Kookees?

A. — On receiving my letter, my father-in-law went to Kookees, to the family of my mother's mother, and said, "I am about to bring to you my daughter, who is married to Manik Chund your sister's son." Then my grandmother's family said — "At present there is no fear, the whole city is full yet, when you see much fear and sorrow then send her."

Q. — How do you know this?

A. — My father-in-law wrote me in a letter that my grandmother's family had given this answer, thus I knew it.

Q. — Did your father-in-law write you any thing about the ten rupees which you sent him for the expenses of the journey?

A. — I don't remember.

Q. — You before said your father-in-law wrote that he had received the ten rupees from Doobus Chund's Dukhan, but that Mohna Lal when giving them had taken five tukkas batta: also that we wrote you nothing about your wife; for that if he had written any thing of consequence, you would have remembered it. Now you say your father-in-law wrote about your wife, but that you don't remember his writing anything about the ten rupees, which of the two statements is the true one?

A. — I don't retain full recollection of former and latter circumstances, when you demand answers, I then

What I remember; I don't remember every thing.

Q.—You before said you wrote to your father-in-law with regard to the ten rupees, that three-fourths of a pie were to be spent in the place of a pie, that he was to spend wisely (economically) what he expended now in your letter you write to him, "never mind about household furniture and petty stores, abundance of such things will be procurable hereafter," also "there will be no scarcity of money for expenses, whether you come to Ulwur or go to Koonkee, never mind if eight annas more or less be expended." What is the meaning of this difference?

A.—Of this I have not full recollection.

Q.—You formerly said you had no recollection of having written anything regarding the expenses of your wife's journey, but that you thought they would either take five or seven rupees from Rikabb Das Nayak, or sell your wife's silver ornaments to defray the expenses of the journey, now, in your letter is plainly written—"Ten rupees are sent to you for your expenses, including hire." What is the meaning of this contradiction?

A.—I did not at all remember having sent ten rupees. This idea came into my mind, that they would take five or seven rupees from Rikabb Das or sell her ornaments. I thought that, and I did not remember the rupees.

Q.—From your letter it plainly appears that these ten rupees were sent for the expenses of your wife's journey, now when you are asked for how many days' expenses these rupees were intended you answered, "I thought that five rupees would go in the outfit of my wife's confinement, gratuity to nurse, rejoicers, &c., and that five rupees would serve for one month's expense," how come your deposition to be at variance with your letter?

A.—I thought thus—"If she comes, those ten rupees will serve for the expenses of the month, including carriage, and if she has been delivered five rupees will serve for the nurse, rejoicers, &c., and five for a month's expenses."

Q.—In your letter is written, "never mind household furniture and petty stores, abundance of such things will be procurable hereafter." What is the meaning of this?

A.—I wrote this (thinking), that if she were to bring with her such things as chuchla (a round stone or block, on which dough is rolled), belung, a wooden roller, pate (mools), and wearing and sleeping apparel there would not be room for her to sit in another person's buhul, (with regard to) old clothes, &c., (Goodree un Ghural, since I had bread to eat, (or a provision) plenty of such things would be forthcoming.

Q.—You have written in your letter—"this wind will not last for ever, it will subside in a month or two." What wind was this? and how was it to subside in a month or two?

A.—By "this wind" I meant (the consequences of) swords having been used in Juepoor, and with regard to its subsiding (I meant) that the sahibs would institute justice, and that those found guilty would be punished, that thus it would subside in a month or two.

Q.—What is the meaning of this passage in your letter—"on account of risk more money is not sent." What risk was there?

A.—There was this risk that, in my house my wife is foolish, and my father and mother-in-law are without (pecuniary) means—and I saw that if I sent more they would expend more (than necessary).

Q.—What was the cause of your writing that the Maje was perpetually thinking of home?

A.—My wife was enfeebled, and about to be confined. My wife is not on friendly terms with any member of my house, on this account the Maje always kept thinking about her. I and my mother keep on good terms with all, and she is averse to them all, this was the cause of her (the Maje's) anxiety.

Q.—Who is the Ghasee Ram mentioned in your letter?

A.—I know no more about him than that he is a Bunee; I know his name from having heard Poorun Mul's son mention it; I have never seen him.

Q.—Why did Poorun Mul's son take his name?

A.—Poorun Mul's son said, Ghasee Ram is going to fetch my Maje, so write a letter, it will reach (i.e., here is a good opportunity for you to send a letter to Juepoor).

Q.—In your letter you wrote—"If you go to Koonkee there will be no scarcity of money for expenses." Whence were your means of extra expenditure to come?

A.—I was a servant at Ulwur, and in event of the money running short could take from Doobus Chund on account.

Q.—You write—"That which is to happen will occur before the full moon of Srawun."—What was the meaning of this?

A.—I had in twenty days or in a month or two, that is, by the full moon of Srawun that which was to happen for good or evil would occur, and that afterwards all would be quiet and well on this account I wrote the end of Srawun.

Q.—Upon what conclusion then did you fix the full moon of Srawun?

A.—I am hearing the conversations of various persons at Ulwur, who said some that in twenty or twenty-five days—others, that in month, but all, by the full moon of Srawun, that which was to happen would happen.

Q.—Who is Hurchundjee Sah?

A.—Deewan Umur Chund's servant.

Q.—You wrote to your father-in-law—"Call upon Hurchundjee Sah, and send intelligence quickly." What intelligence was he to send quickly?

A.—(I meant that) Hurchundjee is my friend, call upon him and write accounts of the house.

Q.—Say, why did you write to your father-in-law to call upon Hurchundjee?

A.—Hurchundjee used to attend the Rawuljee Sahib on the part of the Deewanjee. I wrote in order that he might obtain from the Rawul a burkaku and a pass as security on the road.

Q.—You write in your letter—"Bhugwan (God) is the saviour of lakhs of human beings, we are in every respect helpless, wherefore we have reason to fear—it may be difficult for us to meet again." Say what was the cause of your thus writing?

A.—At Ulwur all persons said—"See what will be the issue of this bing of sword."—Again, they would say—"God is the saviour of lakhs of human beings, he will not permit slaughter. Those who have committed the crime will be punished." In my letter wrote what men said. The meaning of our being helpless was that we had no money by us, that we were poor, and in saying "it might be difficult again to meet such companions for the journey," I meant that carriage and burkas were to be had with these (Doobus Chund's family).

Q.—Who is Mohun Baee?

A.—The younger sister of my wife.

Q.—You write—"Offer my respects to Sungunjee (mother-in-law), all this trouble has been occasioned by the advice she gave." To what trouble, and to what advice did this allude?

A.—The advice was keeping my wife, not allowing her to go the trouble, the incurring of extra expenses, and anxiety about her, during her absence.

No. 22.—Memorandum received from the Rawul.

On the 14th of month Jeth (10th June) I saw Deewan Umur Chund (who was not then in *deewan*ment) inquiring in there was a person called Mahant Chund among his servants, connections, or those who frequented his house, to which the Deewan returned answer, that there was no person of that name among his servants, that one Manik Chund Kamdar, of Rao Jeevan Singh, was related to him, and that he was the only person of that name with whom he had any thing to do.

Translation of a note written by Deswan Umur Chund.

Accept my salutation—I have received your note addressed to me, and have to state that at this time Manik Chund and Koonj Lal are not my servants. There was a Manik Chund Bhaosa a year ago.

The above note was written on the 1st Budi Srawan, 1891, or 11th August 1835.

No. 23.—Note of Statements made by Deswan Umur Chund at the British Residency, in the presence of Captains Thoresby and Ludlow, and Lieutenant Connolly, on the 15th September, 1835, Usuj Budi 8th.

Q.—Why did Manik Chund quit your service?

A.—He left me of his own accord for inter-est's sake, he became the servant of Futh Chund Gungwul, who paid his debts. I used to give him eight rupees per mensem, indeed sometimes less.

Q.—Did he commit no fault to cause his leaving you?

A.—No fault at all—he was dissatisfied at not getting higher pay.

Q.—Did Manik Chund go to Ulwur in your bulbul?

A.—Yes, in one of the Raj bulbuls of which I had charge. I don't know the name of the grieve-man I had no occasion to know it. Manik Chund took leave of me four or five days before the day on which swords were used.

Q.—Then it was in the month Jeth Soodi that he took leave of you?

A.—Yes, about the third or fourth.

Q.—When did the bulbul return?

A.—I saw it eight, nine or ten days afterwards.

Being asked, why, in his first deposition, he said that he knew no person named Manik Chund, he answers that he did not conceive the question could refer to this Manik Chund, and that he meant to declare his ignorance of any person of the name who could have been concerned in any plot,—“of course there are many Manik Chunds.”

No. 24.—Examination of Manik Chund, Bhaosa, Sravgee, on the 14th August, 1835.

Q.—Relate the purport of the message that may have been sent through you?

A.—No one sent any message by me, and I never delivered one to any person.

Q.—What did Umur Chund, &c. desire you to say, and what did you say to Futh?

A.—Umur Chund never desired me to give any message, nor did I say any thing to Futh.

Q.—Do you know Futh?

A.—I do not know him.

Q.—How long were you in the service of Umur Chund?

A.—I was in his service from the time I became ten years old until about two years ago, that I left him.

Q.—Did you go to Ulwur after the events that occurred here?

A.—I went away before they occurred on the Jeth Budi 7th (19th May.)

Q.—Why did you go to Ulwur?

A.—I am the servant of Doolus Chund Hansooka at Ulwur.

Q.—When you went to Ulwur were you apprehensive of anything?

A.—I was apprehensive of nothing, on my own account, or that of my family.

Q.—Were you in the habit of going to Umur Chund's house after leaving his service?

A.—I used to go to the Deswanjee's every day for two or four ghunnam.

Q.—What was the nature of your duties with Umur Chund?

A.—To read and write books, and instruct boys in writing; and whatever else he desired me to do, I did. Also two years before I left him, he gave me a situation in the Dewanee Kucheres.

Q.—For what fault did he discharge you afterwards?—you were an old servant and had been with him from childhood?

A.—My mother fell sick and I was unable to attend him on that account, wherefore he discharged me.

Q.—People will fall sick and sickness must prevent attendance—old servants are not discharged for such a reason—your house was not far distant from his, and servants obtain leave of absence from foreign countries without being discharged—then why should he turn you away? This appears improbable.

A.—It was his pleasure, he knows why.

Q.—From what cause of apprehension did you write home desiring your family to make their escape?

A.—The Siavgees's Mundurs had been plundered, and from that time I feared that there would be another disturbance.

Q.—What had your family to fear from the Mundurs being plundered?

A.—My fears sprung from the circumstance of an increased expense being incurred here and moreover, I was distressed on account of my mother being blind and feeble.

Q.—What you have just said about an increase of expense, and the helpless condition of your mother, furnishes no reason for urging your wife to flight?

A.—I have obtained advice at Ulwur, and subsequently I wished my wife to join me that I might live in comfort.

Q.—You wrote for your wife to manage to get away from Juepoor, and in case of difficulty to feign a pilgrimage to Hinnoominger in order to get to the ghat (situated a mile and half east of that City) but by all means to quit Juepoor. What was the meaning of this?

A.—I foresaw that there would be a disturbance at Juepoor.

Q.—Did you write this letter?

A.—I did write it.

At this period of the examination, Manik Chund was seated among eight or ten other persons and Futh Singh was sent for, when the latter came, he of his own accord surveying Manik Chund narrowly from head to foot—giving reason to suppose that he recognized him. He was then asked which of the party was Manik Chund, when he pointed towards Manik Chund and said that was the man.

Q.—To Futh Singh. When did you ever meet him?

A.—I met him on the night that he deceived me.

Q.—What night was it?

A.—It was the night preceding the morning on which I used my sword. Deswan Umur Chund sent word in the evening that we must keep watch in the Mundur, as there was a report that the Bhuhmuds wanted to establish their Muladees, and that he would procure a set of steps in the morning for mounting to the upper roof of the Mundur and keeping ward there this message was sent to all four of us.

Q.—Recite all that occurred on the specific night alluded to?

A.—The Shastrus were read that night in the Mundur, and about four ghurrees before midnight two persons from among those collected to hear the Shastrus came to me upon the roof, by the way of the staircase. Hearing the noise of their approach, I called out who are coming? and was answered, we are friends. I asked where they were going, and they replied that they had come to me, I told them to approach, they came up to me and said “are you a man or a woman?” I answered that I was a man. They then told me, “Deswan Umur Chund, Siva Lal, Gyan, or Buguro and Rajos Lal, have sent word that they will double your pay and make you great man. In the morning there will be a Durbar, and when the shib log come from it you must use your sword: it matters not whether the wounds you inflict be severe or slight."—My reply to them was that I dared not act so; upon which they abused me—saying "you are a mean despicable fellow." At last I agreed to do what they had told me, and they charged me not to tell any one what had passed: I told them I would not mention it, and they were going away, when I asked them for their names; they replied we are Koonj Lal and Manik Chund.

Q.—Which of the two gave you this answer?

A.—Both; Manik Chund who is sitting here, and Koonj Lal whom I do not see here.

[Manik Chund is here asked before Futtih Sing if he ever saw Futtih Sing who is now pointed out to him by the Deewan's, and answers that he had seen him there Futtih Sing is now removed to a distance, and the examination of Manik Chund is continued.]

Q.—If the statements made by you and Umur Chund do not agree in as much as you represent that you quitted his service two years ago, and the Deewan may mention a shorter period—How will you deserve to be treated?

A.—If he should state a month or two less than two years, it may be correct; but should he specify one year, or a year and a quarter only, they punish me in the way you think proper.

Manik Chund being placed aside with another person only, is told through him that if he will confess the truth his life shall be spared—otherwise that the whole affair is proved, upon him and the Deewan, and both will suffer death: having been repeatedly urged to make a confession, he at length says, "Give me a written document to the purport that my life and that of the Deewanjee shall be spared, and let me have a meeting with the Deewanjee, at which I will tell him to make known truly whatever there may be to tell." In reply to this he is desired to tell the truth himself that his own life might be spared, after which the Deewan should be questioned; but no information can be obtained from him on the foregoing terms.

No. 25.—Memorandum written by Manik Chund, at an examination in the city after being urged to make a confession on promise of pardon for himself. The document purports to be a Note addressed to Deewan Umur Chund, and the object may have been to secure the safety of the Deewan also, in case of a disclosure, or merely to obtain a private interview with him.

Receive the expression of my respects. Futtih Singh has preferred an accusation against you and against your servant Manik Chund. I know not how this is, nor wherefore he says what he does. The matter is known to the Bura Sahib and has been made public throughout the country. You know and I know. Now let us unite our counsels, when I will so manage as to relieve you from this your difficulty. Do you tell me privately all that you are acquainted with. From our holding to the truth this persecution may be removed; this I promise faithfully.

No. 26.—Examination of Deewan Umur Chund in the City on the 14th September, 1835.

Q.—All this has occurred, and the man who attacked the Agent to the Governor General takes your name and says that he acted by your orders; whatever share you may have had in the affair declare truly:—the man was your servant?

A.—The man who committed the assault was a servant of the Amils of Suwaree Malhoopoor at money wages; and I never told him to act any wise treacherously or criminally.

Q.—Were the Amils your agents; or, on whose part were they?

A.—One of them acted for the Bura Sunghee (Hoojah Chund) and the other for me.

Q.—If they were with the Amils why did they come and put up in your Mundur?

A.—Gopal Singh came here and said to me.—If you will write in our favor we shall be retained in service—and I told him I would consider, and give him an answer.

Q.—You say they were with the Amils; then why did you give them subsistence?

A.—They remained ten or twelve days with me—for this period I gave them subsistence, telling them to go away and not depend upon me any longer.

Q.—If you had paid them up and desired them to go away, why did they continue to remain with you; and why did they keep guard at your Mundur?

A.—I sent them word that they were to go away, but they remained after I gave this order, and they kept watch were they slept.

Q.—You say that they were not your servants—if so how came they to attend you to and from the Doorhee; and why did they accompany Gyan Chund your son when he visited the Kural?

A.—I told them at first that I would procure their restoration to service, and they remained on the account.

Q.—You say you knew nothing previously of the assault made on the 4th June: in this case why did you hold secret discourse with Gopal Singh for two ghatoos on the day that the event occurred?

A.—I told Gopal Singh that Futtih Singh was entertained through him, and asked him if he had said anything to him, as it was reported that it was Futtih Singh who made the attack upon the sahib. He answered that he knew nothing about it.

Q.—You say you had discharged them previously. Why then did they accompany Gyan Chund to the Durbar after they had been dismissed?

A.—I never told them to go to the Durbar with Gyan Chund.

Q.—Was Manik Chund in your service?

A.—A year before he was in my service, and he afterwards went to Futtih Chund Gunawal.

Q.—When did Manik Chund go to Ulwar? If you know answer the question?

A.—He went to Ulwar five or seven days before the riot.

Q.—You answer somewhat loosely. Cannot you specify the exact date?

A.—I do not recollect the precise date.

Q.—Many persons say that Manik Chund has been lately in your service; how is it that you declare it to be a year ago since he was with you?

A.—He has not been my servant for a year past; he went and remained with Futtih Chund.

Q.—You say he has not been in your service for a year past, yet among the papers found it appears that Manik Chund received wages from you until Buewah last (April, May)—how is this?

A.—The entry may have been made, but the wages were not given.

Q.—What should it be specified in the entry that the salary was actually paid?

A.—I did not give any order—if the writer has entered it, I will produce him.

Q.—After Sunghee Jootha Ram left this, did you ever write to him?

A.—I never wrote to him after he quitted Juepoor.

Q.—Has any letter come to you from Jootha Ram?

A.—None has come to me.

Q.—And should one or more have come?

A.—None has come in my name—Gyan Chund is his son-in-law; he may have heard from him without my knowledge, but I think he would have told me the circumstances if he had communicated with him.

Q.—If you have ever received a letter from Jootha Ram, on any subject, through any of your own servants, or any one in the service of the Raj with whom you are intimate, say so?

A.—When any of his men came, a complimentary message has been brought, but no communication of a political nature has been made.

Q.—This note has been found among your papers, a copy of which is now produced, and read to you. How do you explain this matter?

A.—I know nothing of it.

Q.—How can you have no knowledge of it when it was with your papers?

A.—I know nothing of the note, but will ascertain from the person who put the papers together, how this came there.

No. 27.—Deposition of Manik Chund Bhaosa before the Raj authorities, taken 22nd August, 1835.

Q.—Give a full account of yourself, when did you leave Deewanjee Umur Chund and how often have you visited Juepoor since?

A.—Sixteen or seventeen months ago, in the month of Chuet I went to Futh Chund Gungwal at Tijaru, via Buswa and Ulwur, having been in his service since the month Mungaur preceding—I remained at Ijatu about two months, when Futh Chund sent Har Lal and me to Ulwur. At this place Doolue Chund Hanooka entertained me in the following Jeth, and I remained with him. In the month Uroj, I came to Juepoor with Chue toorbhooj Chhavura. He remained a short time and then went away, but I, who had come to have book transcribed, and to take my family to Ulwur, stayed at Juepoor about eight months; at the expiration of which time, on the 7th of Budi in Jeth I hired a bulbul, and, with my mother and daughter, and a servant named Jodha, went to Ulwur in company with the family of Hanooka.

Q.—In how many days did you get to Ulwur, and where did you stop daily?

A.—I quitted Juepoor by the ghats durazari on the 7th of Jeth Budi between two and four ghurees after sunrise, having been delayed there some time by the custom officers. In consequence of not getting away until four ghurres after sunrise, the first stage was short. I do not remember the name of the village where we put up for the night. On the second day we made a stage of twelve or thirteen kos, at Puruloke there is a pukk mukam and a well at the further extremity of the village where we made a repast, and at night we put up at the shop where the new-husk husk is sold in the bazar of Muehshur. After travelling five or six kos on the third day we ate food at Goorha, and went on to Buswa, where we remained for the night, under the outworks of the Fort. On the fourth day, we proceeded to Rajzair and stayed at the house of Doolue Chund. After the third hour of day, the family of Doolue Chund (staying at Rajzair) gave me leave to depart, and I went on to the vicinity of Mala Khera, where my bulbul and that of Maonna Lal Sonee, remained the night. His bulbul started first on the morning of the fifth day, and mine followed, and we entered Ulwur in this way on the 11th of Jeth Budi. I hired a house of Chajoo Him Chadoo wal and Gopal Sogane for my residence. In the month of Uwar, I commenced eating my meals at the house of Ghasee Gundhee, and my mother came to live there on the 4th or 5th of Sriwun Budi, and we afterward, all went together. In the last mentioned house I remain to the present time.

Q.—Should your presence in Juepoor between the 7th of Jeth Budi and 8th of Jeth Budi be proved will Futh Singh's statement be substantiated?

A.—Should it be proved by witnesses that I came to Juepoor between the 7th Jeth Budi and the day I was brought back from Ulwur, I acknowledge that Futh Singh's allegation is true.

Q.—How many years have you been in the service of Hanooka?

A.—I have been in his service fourteen months past.

Q.—Have you served any one else within the last fourteen months?

A.—I have been the servant of Doolue Chund Hanooka during the said period. I receive pay from both Doolue Chund and Chuttoo Bhoos, but do not know if they were partners in the payment of my wages or not. If within the last fourteen months I have received no salary as servant from any other person, do by me what you please.

No. 28.—Deposition of Maonna Lal Bruhman, Khundawal of Juepoor, First Usark, Soudi 4th, Saturday, Sumbat, 1892.

Q.—State whatever you know relative to Manik Chund Bhaosa?

A.—Manik Chund made over Potees to me to transcribe, in the month of Chuet. I allude to last Chuet twelve month; they were the Jotish (astronomical) Potees. He made me an advance of one rupee for the work in hand, and there then remained a balance due to me of fourteen annas. He took away from my house a copy of the Seegrubodh Potee to have it transcribed. He told me he wanted to read it, but after he got home he made it over to Jugunnath, a Potee-Nuwees, for the purpose of transcription. Accidentally, I saw the Potee in the possession of Jugunnath; I went to Manik Chund's house and demanded it of him and asked also for the balance of my account. Manik Chund was in the room on the ground floor of his house, near the Singaner gate, and I sat down and explained my account to him. He told me that he would pay what remained due to me, and return the Potee in the evening, and he accordingly fulfilled his promise when four ghurrees of day remained.

Q.—What was the date of Manik Chund's returning the Potee and settling your account?

A.—It was the month Jeth when Manik Chund restored the Potee and paid me the cash, and I remember perfectly that on the following day the attack upon the British officers took place.

Q.—You wrote the Potees in the month of Chuet, in how many days did you deliver them to Manik Chund—and how did it happen that he did not pay you for the transcription till a period of two months subsequently?

A.—He came every five or ten days and carried away such portions as were transcribed, and therefore so much time elapsed and then he fell ill, in consequence of which I did not ask him for the amount. At length he recovered. We (writers of Potees) undertake transcriptions which employ us a month or a year, and receive advances, being paid in full when the work may be performed. I am not employed in transcribing for only one person.

Q.—At the time you rendered your account for copying, what other persons were present?

A.—There were two youths of fifteen years of age; but I do not know their names.

Q.—Will you declare what you have now stated in presence of Manik Chund?

A.—Yes, I will assert it—I state what is true upon my faith and conscience. What is above written is correct.

No. 29.—Deposition of Ram Lal Paemu, Bruhman, Uroj, Budi, 10th, answering to 10th September 1835.

Q.—State where you reside and how you pass your time?

A.—I live in the cotton market near the Munder of Seoidas, and I traffic in a small way, and lend money at interest.

Q.—When Manik Chund, Bhaosa, Sravugee, called at the shop of Jugunnath and Arat Ram Bruhman, and took away a book which had been copied for him by them did you see him?

A.—I did see him there.

Q.—What did Manik Chund say on that occasion to Jugunnath or you?

A.—Manik Chund had commissioned Jugunnath to copy the book called "Shaeghra-Bodha." He took the book and paid one rupee for the copying.

In turning over and counting the leaves he rubbed one of the lines with his finger; the ink stained his sh-

...which he remarked that it was bad, and the book was spoiled. One of the leaves he returned to Jugunnath, desiring him to write another in place of it, and Jugunnath commenced doing so. Addressing Manik Chund, I asked him if he was a Pandya; he replied that he was a Sravugee, then I said to him—what will you do with these books? he answered, that he both read him-self and taught others. Where do you reside, said I? At the Jaguneer Mundur of the Sravugees, he replied. Soon afterwards, the text being finished, he took it, and the rest of the book up, and went away.

Q.—What was the time of day when this occurred, and did it take place before or after the disturbance of the 4th June?

A.—It was in the afternoon, when about two ghurrees of day remained, and the disturbance alluded to occurred on the following day.

Q.—Were you acquainted with Manik Chund before, or did you meet him for the first time at the house of the copiers?

A.—I did not know him before, and in the shop of the writers I did not ask his name, I merely learnt that he was a Sravugee.

Q.—If you were not acquainted with him previously, and did not learn his name in the shop, how can you now know that the person you speak of was Manik Chund?

A.—When Manik Chund was brought a prisoner from Ulwur, I heard his name; and the day before the Durbar of the Salgirub, I saw him going to the Majee-ka-Bagh upon a rath, with wooden rings on his legs, when it struck me, that he was the person I had met at the shop of the copiers.

In consequence of what had occurred to the Raj and the sahib log, I was desirous of ascertaining the fact, for which purpose I went to the house of Jugunnath and Arat Ram, where I met the former and told him that I had come on particular business. We both sat down upon a charpae, and he desired me to tell him what I had come for, I then asked him who the Sravugee was that took away from his shop a book the day preceding the disturbance in the city, at a time that I was present. He immediately answered that the person was Manik Chund. Arat Ram his partner then came in, and I told them both, a burkaru of the Rawuljee would come for them the next day, and that they would have to go and depose to what they had just told me. When I mentioned this, they became alarmed and said, they could not go to give such deposition. Arat Ram by the way in which he talked caused Jugunnath to be alarmed.

Q.—What did he say to instil fear?

A.—He said—should any one be injured by this, our faces will be blackened. We are poor and helpless, and work for two pice a day. What is our business with this matter; I told them there was a necessity for their making the circumstance known, and came away.

No. 30.—Examination of Jugunnath, Brahmun, a professional copier of books.

Q.—Where do you reside and what is your occupation?

A.—I live near the Bukayun Well, close to the house of Chushuljee Jatishce, in Juepoor, and my partner Arat Ram and I, gain our livelihood by copying books.

Q.—Have you written for Manik Chund Bhaoosa?

A.—We have both written for him, and one Moonna Brahmun, and Hookuma Sravugee have also copied books for him.

Q.—Who first wrote for him and who were employed latterly?

A.—Hookuma first wrote, then Moonna, and subsequently my partner and I wrote two rupees worth.

Q.—Up to what date did you two write for him?

A.—The writing was done, but I do not recollect the date when it was completed.

Q.—Can you state the time when you gave the book to Manik Chund and who were present on the occasion?

A.—It was evening, and both partners were present: Manik Chund was accompanied by his nephew Kalye, and Ram Lal Daemu was sitting in the shop. Ram Lal asked Manik Chund if he was a Pandya, and the latter replied that he was a Sravugee. What will you do with these books? said Ram Lal; the other answered that he was a scholar, &c.

Q.—You state that you have written for Manik Chund, but do not know the date of delivery of the book, and Ram Lal has deposed that it was given before him, and that you know the day but are afraid to mention it here; dismiss all apprehension for which there is no cause and declare the truth conscientiously?

A.—The book was readily written and he brought the money for it on Jeth Soodi 7th (3d June). When he received the book there was a leaf of it which he found fault with, and I wrote another in its place. This is the real truth, but I never was in the presence of the Raj before: moreover, I feared that by discovering the truth I should endanger the life of the Buneen Manik Chund.

No. 31.—Examination of Arat Ram copyist—Monday, 13th September 1835.

Q.—How, and at what time, have you copied books for Manik Chund Bhaoosa, and what were the books?

A.—I transcribed a small astronomical work, for which he paid me one rupee; and Jugunnath, my partner, copied the Sheeghru-Bodh for the same sum.

Q.—Did you both deliver the books and receive the money paid on the same day, or at different times.

A.—We gave him the books on the same day, and he paid us for the writing on receiving the books.

Q.—What time of day was it, and who were present in your shop on the occasion?

A.—It was late in the afternoon, when the day was near its close: we were both in the shop at the time that Manik Chund came there, accompanied by his nephew: Ram Lal Daemu a Brahmun, also was there, but no one else.

Q.—Can you tell the date of Manik Chund's taking the books from your shop?

A.—It was the 7th of Jeth, Soodi.

Q.—How long was it before the assault made upon the sahib log?

A.—It was the day before that event occurred. The tumult took place the next morning.

Q.—Are you sure of this, and will you depose to it in presence of Manik Chund?

A.—Yes, I am ready to aver the same before Manik Chund. I swear to the truth of the above statement.

No. 32.—Examination of Jokhes Lal Godeeka, Sravugee, Usaj, Budi, 6th 1892, September 9th 1835.

Q.—What is your caste; where do you reside; and what is your occupation?

A.—I am a Sravugee, and I live in the city of Juepoor, at the house of Budunjee Godeeka in the Amber market place. My occupation is connected with farm of the salt duties at the Chandpal gateway.

Q.—Are you acquainted with Manik Chund, Bhaoosa, servant of Deewan Umur Chund?

A.—Yes, I do know him: he used to read the Shretras in the temple of Deewan Umur Chund, and he was brought up by the Deewan.

Q.—Can you say whether Manik Chund went to Ulwur before or after the events of the 8th Soodi, Jeth (4th June)?

A.—I cannot answer to his coming or going, before or after, of my own knowledge; but in the month of the 7th Jeth Soodi, which was the day previous to that on which the riot occurred, when some five or six ghurrees to day-break of the 8th remained, as I was going to my home, I met Manik Chund Bhaoosa in the Chandpal

Manik Chund in front of the house of Tun Sagur Juti; therefore I infer that he did not go away till after the assault upon the gentlemen and the tumult in the City.

Q.—Had you any conversation with Manik Chund at the time you met him as you have stated?

A.—Yes, I asked him whether he had not intended to go to Ulwur; to which he answered, no; again I asked him where he had been, when he said that he came from the temple of the Deewanjee and was going to the house of Juenda, (a Goona-hia of Deewan Umur Chund). He afterwards went into that house, which was only fifteen or twenty paces from the place where I met him.

Q.—Did you see him go into the house, or do you say that he entered it because he mentioned that he was going there?

A.—I saw him enter Juenda's house: after that I know not what became of him; he may have remained there, or have gone elsewhere.

Q.—Are you sure that what you have stated is correct, and will you depose to it in his presence?

A.—It is nothing more, than the truth, and I will state it in his presence at any time.

Q.—And if Manik Chund should deny the truth of it?

A.—I will declare the fact in the most positive terms, but if he choose to deny it, what can I do?

Q.—If what you have stated be true, and you did meet and converse with Manik Chund as you say, sign this deposition upon your oath; but if it be discovered that you have told a falsehood, you will assuredly be punished?

A.—I swear to the truth of what I have said and caused to be recorded. If it prove otherwise than true, may I meet with the punishment I deserve.

No. 33.—Extract from cross-examination of Manik Chund in September 1835.

Q.—When you came here from Ulwur to transcribe Potees, did you copy them with your own hand, or get them written by others?

A.—I wrote a few myself, and had the rest written.

Q.—Whom did you employ to write them?

A.—Uggur Walu Ubue Chund, who writes in Sogun Chund's shop—Hookunjee Patunee, who lives in Choudhuree Nund Lal's place—Sonee Bachoo Lal, who lives near Tun Sagur Juti's close to the Deewan's temple—Godreka Kalloo Ram, who lives near the house of Burdarunjee Godeeka—Phaosa Nem Chund who lives where I do—Ram Buksh, who lives near the Deewanjee's temple—Khandooka Moonna Lal, who lives in the house of Tidur Mul Puhara:—(in the same house lives Amaluck Chund), and Jokerjee Godeeka—I remember these, but at present I don't recollect any more.

Q.—Do you remember any other persons who wrote Potees for you?

A.—I have mentioned those whom I at this time remember.

Q.—Don't you remember Moonna Bruhmun who lives near the Bura Gungor?

A.—Yes, I now remember him.

Q.—There are also one or two others; reflect, and mention their names?

A.—(After reflection)—Jugunnath Bruhmun, and Arat Ram Bruhmun, who write in shops on the Jereea ki rusta.

Q.—Have these two names just now come to your memory?

A.—You mentioning the name of Moonna Lal brought these two names also to my memory. Another name has come to mind, Nathoo Lal, who lives in the Choorookan Kabas.

* This Nathoo Lal was examined by Captain Thoreby and declared that he never copied a book in his life; he gains his livelihood by wire-drawing.

No. 34.—Translation of an Examination of Mangee Poorohit at Deesa before Captain Thoreby, Political Agent, Shikhawatee, and Rukmutoolu Khan, Vakeel of Raj Juepoor.

Q.—Look at this paper in your own handwriting, viz. written by me Mangee Poorohit;—what my master Sunghee Jootha Ramjee wrote through me at Deesa, & used to write from his dictation. Date 30th November, 1835. Signature of Mangee Poorohit. Is this a true statement?

A.—I wrote this with my own hand; no constraint was imposed upon me when I did write it, and its contents are agreeable to truth.

Q.—How did you communicate the information contained in the letters that came from Sunghee Hookum Chund and Fath Lal at Agra.

A.—After reading the letters I used to tell Sunghees their contents: Sunghees told me how to answer them, and I put it into form and wrote what he had told me.

Q.—In this letter dated 5th Jeth Budi 1892, which is in your handwriting, and was found among the papers of Sunghee Hookum Chund at Agra (No. 17 of Agra papers), is written—I have read to him all that you have written regarding the Governor Sahib, the Major Sahib, and Metcalfe Sahib; also respecting Bunsesshur, etcetera. Did you read the letter referred to in this passage to Sunghee Jootha Ram, or did you recapitulate the contents of that also to Sunghees?

A.—I first told Sunghees what that letter contained, and afterwards, at a time that Sunghees had just risen from a meal, I took the letter itself to him. Sunghees was angry with me for doing so and said "Have your wits fled! How can I read the letter?" on which, I told him, that I had received a message charging me to give him the letter for perusal; and Sunghees, in answer, desired me to say that I had given it to him to read.

Q.—When other letters came from Agra, or from Juepoor, did you give them to Sunghees for perusal, or tell him the contents of them? And did you answer all those letters according to his instructions, or did you write the answers of your own accord?

A.—Respecting other letters which came from Juepoor or from other places, I used to tell Sunghees so much of their contents as concerned him, and he instructed me how to answer such matters as seemed to require answering.

Q.—Did you always understand the full meaning of what you wrote?

A.—I used to communicate the contents of letters that came to Sunghees, and wrote in answer what he told me.

Q.—This letter which exhibits your hand-writing, dated Bhadon Soodi 11th 1891, (No. 11 of Agra papers,) has been found in the house of Hookum Chund; was it written by you, and how came it to bear the year 1891 in its date?

A.—This letter was written by me, and the insertion of Sumbat 1891 for 1892, was a mistake on my part.

Q.—This letter in your handwriting, dated Usarb Budi 2d Sumbat 1891, (No. 19 of Agra papers,) was found among the papers of Hookum Chund; look at it and say if it was written by you; and whether you wrote it by order of Sunghees or of your own accord?

A.—It is in my handwriting, and was written at the desire of Sunghees. When letters arrived, Sunghees told me the matter for answering them, and I sometimes added items of news which had been heard by me.

Q.—In this letter is the following passage:—"Our good fortune has now approached us! I have been in a state of trouble and perplexity so that I could not write to you before." It would appear that the outrage of the month of June, at Juepoor, was the circumstance that prevented writing; had you written no letter to Agra between the 8th of Soodi Jeth, (4th June), and the 2d of Budi Usarb, (12th June)?

—I do not remember having written any letter had I done so, how could I have stated in this letter that I had not written.

No. 35.—Papers found at Agra in the house of Hookum Chund. A letter, the hand writing of which is recognised as that of Juvahis Sing, one of the sons of Chimun Singh, an illegitimate cousin of Rao Hunwunt Singh, Thakoor of Munoharpoor. Marked No. 6 at Agra—(This letter was written to Chimun Singh, and by him sent on to Deosa and Agra.)

Receive my salutation. I despatched my foster brother to you with intelligence yesterday, and conclude that he has arrived. Yesterday, when about one and a half purnas of the day had passed, the following events occurred. Three nouns were given with a sword to the bura sahib, Alves sahib, as he was mounting his elephant at the Surdkee Deorhee, two of them through his hat, the third, which was slight, on the forehead, he got into a palkee and went away. Mr. Blake seized the man who had made use of his sword, and having tied his hands behind him and thrown him upon a charpae, was taking him to the garden (Residency), when a crowd collecting, effected his release and gathered round Mr. Blake, who fled to the mundur of the Poorahitjee, which he would have entered at once, but the door of it being shut, he brought his elephant alongside of a balcony, and then, with the aid of one of the pillars, leaped inside.

The mob had thrown spears and stones upon the road, and now they breached the wall and got into the Mundur, where they killed the sahib and his umbrella bearer two chuprassee and a spearman were killed in the Bazar, so that five lives were lost, and the bura sahib went away wounded, as well as two or three men more. Intelligence of a sword having been used went to them* in the Sookhniwas, and suspicion and distrust arose among them. Thus Purneshur ordered all for the best. Immediately that information of what had occurred was received, Rawuljee ran out, and he had got as far as the brazen door,† when word was brought to him that the uproar had ceased and all was quiet, on which he turned into the Surbutha (Deewan Mahan within, and facing the Surdkee Deorhee). All hurried away excepting the Moosahibs (Members of the Council) who remained alone —our Rao (Hunwunt Singh), Thakoor of Conyara, and the son of the Thakoor of Julace, &c. in all six stayed.

On hearing that a sword had been used, I left my house with two hundred men, and causing the outer gate to be opened, proceeded to the Poorbeean kee-Deorhee. Rawuljee was informed that the son of Chimun Singh, with three hundred men, had arrived, and that they were breaking open the gate, upon which he sent this message to our own (Rao Hunwunt Singh), "these are all your adherents who are forcing the gate, forbid them, or as a consequence of this disturbance, the murder of the Town will very probably ensue." Then Bhueroojee and Sudh Mul were sent to me at the Poorbeean-kee-Deorhee, and they told me that they were directed to deliver the following message (by Rao Hunwunt Singh)—"I am perfectly at my ease here, take all you men away and sit down near the new Mundur." He has spoken these words, and charged you most solemnly to obey his orders, they added. I went and sat down at the appointed place. About the third purnu, he (Rao Hunwunt Singh) came to me, and asking me if I had come on foot told me to mount his horse, and go away, I accordingly came home, and when five ghunrees of the night were gone dined.

Now, all is up here! within a short time some other sinister event must occur, for the foundation is laid and a general commotion will ensue.

Another, an untoward event occurred yesterday. All the Majees had assembled in the Sookhniwas, and after the ferungees had gone away, the others fell upon and beat the Majee Sahib, who received a great many slaps on the face, but, by the blessing of Purneshur, her life was spared, and, fortunately the Hoozoor (the young Rajah) was not in the Sookhniwas, but in his mother's apartments. Fomentations and other remedies were applied and they have effected a cure.

I hey questioned the man (that wounded the Agent to the Governor General,) who told them that he was a Luwui* (by caste) of the district of Jeeloo, but that his ancestors, five generations back, had quitted that part of the country, and he now resided at Mularna Kuneeareepoor, that formerly he was in service at Runghambur, and at present remained with Deewan Umur Chund. He was then asked at whose bidding he had acted thus, and, at first he said that he had done it of his own accord, but when pressed for his motive, he answered,—"the sahib went into the Sookhniwas alone,† on which account the Sravugees used to say among themselves in the Mundur, that the honor of the Kuchwahas was gone, that was my reason for doing it but do why you ask these questions of me? All the Sravugees and all the men of the Sardars were my abettors, only they all hung back at the moment of action, and, of my own party of four, I alone was left." The act was done at the instigation of others—measures of another kind were tried first, and at last this was resorted to. He merely repeats what he has been told among other things he said,—"If I had not done this deed Rawuljee would have been sacrificed."

Date Jeth Soodi 9th 1892 (5th June 1835.) P. S. 1st. There is much strictness observed with regard to letters and papers of all kinds at the gates and elsewhere, therefore when you write make use of the inverse character. Do not forget this injunction. Megh Singh is not yet arrived.

P. S. 2d. I hey gave me leave to depart five days ago, but I managed by some means or other to stay here, first, on account of its being Wednesday, and then—because I wanted camels now, I will say distinctly,—"I shall not go at present willingly, though if you insist on my going whether I will or not, I can't help myself."

Vo. 36.—Translation of Paper No. 43, received from Agra. A letter, the hand writing of which is recognised as that of Chingun Singh, an illegitimate son of the uncle and adoptive father of Rao Hunwunt Singh of Munoharpoor. It probably went to Deosa and thence to Agra.

Receive my salutation—Your letter has arrived and I have perused its contents, you say that whatever there was to write you have communicated, keeping nothing back, that you have forwarded the several despatches to Metcalfe sahib and the other gentlemen, also to Alves sahib, and that you think instructions of a favourable nature will now come, likewise that he (the Agent Governor General) will speak to the purpose that you have spared no labour, and have resorted to every possible means, though the result must rest with Purneshur—the latter is true, but exertions well directed give success, therefore, be not winking in this essential.

You request that a communication may be made to the interior—"There is as much vigilance preserved in that quarter as ever, but there is no falling off in the firmness of the Majee sahib, she had rather die than depart from her word. The wretch (the Rawul) is doing his utmost to vex and annoy her, and to lead astray and separate from her all the other Ranees, but she possesses strength of mind and is resolute.

* The Thakoor who had remained after the Darbar broke up.

† A door in the wall between the palace and Surbutha Courts.

‡ The commotion that took place in the first instance when Major Alves was wounded, and when he and Mr. Blake after him left the Surdkee Deorhee.

§ Separately between the Tripolia and Surdkee Deorhee.

* Name of a tribe of Rajpoots.

† This never took place.

Six or seven days ago the Sahib came to the Sookhniwas, sent every one away, and conversed with the Majees during four ghurrees (an hour and half);—an account of this, and of the Rawul's success, after the departure of the sahib, in deceiving all the other Majees—the Dowurejee, Chawurejee, &c.; of the closing the Deorhee as far as the outer large door, and afterwards the approach of certain Sirdars, and what was then said on both sides came written at length from Juepoor (in a letter from Climun Singh's son Juwahir Singh) and was sent on to you immediately; so that from the perusal of that paper you will be aware of the whole. The sahib and Majee sahib conversed on the best of terms, and the former said, in substance, You are Mistress here; whatever it may be your pleasure to order will be done, and instructions to this effect have been received from the ruler. The Rawul was exceedingly displeased with this result, imagining that it was all over with his designs.†

On Wednesday the 8th, the sahib came again to the Sookhniwas, and the Majee sahib and other Majees were all present: the sahib, they say, paid this visit for the purpose of settling the previous dispute which has been mentioned—Blake's. He accompanied the bura sahib, and the four Moosahibs, and all the other Sirdars also came to the Sookhniwas on this occasion. When the day had risen a puhur and quarter (about 9 o'clock), the sahib, taking his departure, went out by the Surdkee Deorhee, and was standing by his elephant that was kneeling, when he suddenly received three sword wounds—two of them through the hat, and one, which was slight, upon the forehead. A letter giving an account of this event, with the murder of Blake sahib, and the death of a spearman, three chupassees, and an umbrella-bearer, has come from thence and is sent for your perusal. A city mob surrounded and killed the gentleman—Blake sahib and all those men. The bura sahib was wounded at the Deorhee, and from that place the cry issued—kill (or strike) don't let go away; upon which the people in the streets, including even Bruhmuns, acted as they did. At the very moment the bura sahib was wounded, accordingly as it had been previously concerted, cry was raised in the way proposed.‡

All the other Ranees had assembled in the Sookhniwas where they beat the Majee soundly: the latter was a good deal hurt, but fomentations were applied and her life was saved. This act appears plainly to have been brought about by that Burun Sunkur (the Rawul, that worthless man); Huri knows if it be so.

This is an atrocious affair! That the Agent should be thus wounded in front of the Deorhee (the Rawul) and that he should have dishonored the Majee, the mother of the son, through the agency of others: such offences, sufficient to cause the loss of the Raj, and the expulsion of the Kuchiwahas and Mootsuddes, will have proceeded from him (the Rawul). It seems to me that now the English will be disgusted with him; therefore, whatever you have to write to Metcalfe sahib* regarding the late events, be sure to write and despatch speedily; and, as Alves sahib has survived here, write to him also what there is to be said. Write in such a strain that the atrocities shall be attributed directly to him (the Rawul), and that such instructions on the report of this affair may be received from the Sudur that the wretch may this time be utterly ruined, when all obstacles will be removed to you. But if when all this blood has been shed, he should still keep his place, he will then become firmly fixed; do not therefore falter in your exertions to convey full impressions to the sahib log and the Sudar.

With regard to what you write about the cash, valuables, &c. the adage concerning fortune is true enough; fortune will do what an enemy cannot effect: but you will see that if Purneshurjee is favorably disposed, and this wretch gets his face blackened, all the property will be forthcoming from the various places of deposit. By the assistance of Purneshur every thing becomes practicable, therefore be easy in your mind. (Four lines are here torn off).

P. S. Give my blessing to Chirunjee (Futih Lal). You will learn what has been done from these letters: do not be troubled in mind, but remain collected, for with the help of Purneshur every thing is feasible.

No. 37.

This bag was found upon the ground near the Majee-ka-Bagh by an out door servant. Upon the bag is fixed a piece of paper containing a direction to deliver it to the gentleman from Neemuch, for doing which a reward of one hundred rupees should be given to the finder. Within the bag is a long address to the gentleman from Neemuch, much in the strain of the paper picked up in camp near Sanganer—translation of which accompanied the examination of Hookum Chund and Futih Lal. The hand writing appears clearly to be that of Gyan Chund, son of Umur Chund, though somewhat disguised. This document is not worth translating to insert in the appendix, but the following are specimens of its style:—that the person to whom it is addressed is called upon to make the Majee absolute if he have come here by order of the British Government: that the Rawul has collected the Juepoor army in the neighbourhood with the intention of observing the present proceedings; should the Bunees be found guilty he will remain quiet, but in case of himself being taxed in any way, he purposes cutting off the heads of several gentlemen. If such an event actually take place you will again perhaps charge the crime to the ryots. He will assuredly commit another atrociously treacherous act through the means of Lukhmun Singh; the Rajpoots will perpetrate the murders and the ryots will suffer.

The Rawul has threatened and driven away all the witnesses of Manik Chund.

The Rawul will put to death any one who gives evidence openly, for which reason some score of letters have been thrown down privily, but nobody has paid attention to their contents.

The bura sahib has received from the Rawul three lakhs of rupees, wherefore he yields to him in all things, and conceals the facts connected with the death of Mr. Blake.

The address is of great length, and is filled with the most puerile and obvious, but malignant and atrocious falsehoods.

No. 38.

These documents, though not of such importance, were shown to the Court on account of the concern taken in the transaction referred to in the depositions, by Horroo Malee, one of the witnesses who had been examined on the part of Deewan Umur Chund.

The following note was written in numeral ciphers, which have been interpreted by study. It was found upon Cheema Bruhmun, Qasid from Mathura.

Receive my salutation. The messenger has arrived and I have communicated what was written, so be at ease on that point.

Juet Ramjee Sahoo (father of the prisoner Siva Lal Sahoo,) died on Thursday the 9th of the second Usarh. There is great search made for me here, and I have little chance of escaping; but should I succeed in effecting my retreat, I will come to you. They have cut off all communication with the Deelan* and to gain access is impracticable. The servants also cannot go about.

* Perhaps the Sanghees; or it may be Deewan Umur Chund.

* This is a misrepresentation of a real durbar interview.

† All this is entirely without foundation and contrary to facts.

‡ Bruhmuns are here specified because they were the enemies of Jotha Ram, as if to show what excellent management there had been.

§ The precise origin of the preconcerted cry is not described, but it must have proceeded from the conspirators, and the writer of this letter appears to have known that it had been planned, and that those to whom he was writing would know by whom.

Write to Metcalfe sahib respecting the matter, in order that good may ensue from your so doing.

Is there any thing known about the movements of Metcalfe sahib, and when he is likely to come? Send some certain intelligence that may satisfy my mind.

Ask of Chumpa Laljee and Baeejee what the Surishtu is with regard to attire, and prepare the dresses for both Sethanees according to their instructions, writing the particulars hither.

Date, 12th of second Usarh, Budi (10th July.) You have desired that the messenger should receive three rupees: I have given two rupees, and you must pay him one more when he returns.

Abstract of the Examination of Gunga Ram Jat.

I am a poor man, very hungry. One of my brothers disappeared, and I came to this country in search of him. They knew I was hungry in the Mundur and gave me something to eat; my name is Ganga Ram.

I live at Weir, and I brought a letter from the house of Muni Ram Seth, at Muthura, which I was told to deliver to a Malee at the Temple of Deewan Umur Chundjee; I gave it to Roroo Malee, who is present. A person with whom I was not acquainted put the letter into my hands at the Kothee of Muni Ram Seth; I do not know the name of the person. On reaching Juepoor I put up in the Mundur of the Deewan and have sojourned there three days.

Roroo Malee denies at first that he received any letter from Gunga Ram, or has had any communication with him; but, being contradicted by Gunga Ram, acknowledges that he did get a letter from him, which he gave to one Toolsee bearer, servant of Deewan Umur Chund.

Cheema Bruhmun, Qasid, deposes that he brought a letter from the house of Muni Ram Seth to Juepoor and delivered it to Gheesa, servant girl of Deewan Umur Chund, who told him to put up at the Deewan's Temple until the answer was ready. About noon to-day Gheesa came to him with a letter and two rupees; was going off towards Muthura, when two men seized him and brought him away for examination.

No 39.—Deposition of Manik Chund, Savugee, Bhossa, taken 26th August, 1835, before Captains Thuesby and Ludlow, and Lieutenant Connolly.

States, in my eleventh or twelfth year, while my father was alive, I entered the house of Deewan Umur Chund, Savugee. The Deewan, from pious motives gave me two years' education under Bruhmuns, and required no work from me for that period; afterwards he began to use my service. I continued in some degree a student myself, but taught other boys, and performed personal service to the Deewan, bringing him water to drink, etc. At this time he gave me two rupees monthly when I had attained my fifteenth year and became intelligent, he allowed me four rupees a month. He gave this for a year or two and then made me keeper of his household accounts, on an allowance of six or seven rupees per mensem. For two years I held the latter office, then the Deewan appointed to it one Bijue Duttu, Kaeth, and employed me to write Potees and read, and as a personal attendant, on the same monthly pay of six or seven rupees. Seven or eight years ago he made me Asamee of the Deewanee Kuchery, on twelve rupees a month—my work in this office was to write dates and endorsements on deeds of lands bestowed by the Raj in present or in charity. This was rightly Deewan Umur Chund's duty, but he made it over to me. The Deewanee Kuchery is on the east of the Sird Deorhee. Besides this, I used to sit by the Deewan when he read the Potees, and to perform any household service that he required of me. My allowance of twelve rupees per mensem was given me as wages, and I received in lieu of cash, a grant upon the village of Puchetta-ka-bad. I found myself in everything; sometimes on occasions of sorrow or rejoicing, the Deewan gave me presents; and in years when the crops failed, he allowed me eight or ten rupees cash per mensem.

In those days a Tagnoon of the Jain caste, Prambhuna, had come to Juepoor, with him the Deewan sent me and Punna Lal Patosee, Savugee, to Ginnarjee, (a place of worship,) which is distant 300 kos from Juepoor. The Tagnoon accompanied us 50 or 60 kos on the way, and then quitted us of his own accord; but I and Punna Lal going on to Ginnarjee, worshipped and returned. It was in the beginning of the month Chuet Sumbut 1899, that we started on this pilgrimage, and we returned (to Juepoor) in the end of Usarh of the same year. At the latter period the Deewan was at Madhoopoore, but hisson Gyanjee (Chund) was at Juepoor, so I served him. Afterwards news coming that the Deewan was ill, Gyanjee repaired to Madhoopoore and I accompanied him; we went in the month Usaj, when the Deewan recovered he returned to Juepoor, and I came with him; Gyanjee remained at Madhoopoore. After this my mother became very ill, on which account my attendance on the Deewan was irregular, and in the month Usarh of Sumbut 1890 he dismissed me. I remained in Juepoor, and gained my livelihood by writing Potees. In the month Magashur (five months after dismissal,) I entered the service of Futih Chund Gungwal. Twenty-five days after I became his servant, he went to Tijara, but before setting out he gave me money for my expenses and said, "having transcribed and revised the Chundrika and other Potees, come to me at Tijara when I send for you." He altogether gave me seventy rupees as a present to pay debts; twenty-five rupees for two months wages in advance, at 12 rs. 8 as. per mensem, and one rupee for the purchase of paper, on which to write the Potees. He wrote from Tijara to call me; so, in the month Chuet Sumbut 1890, I, my father-in-law, and my servant Kalya, started from this with one camel, and on the road we hired a carrier. Our first march to Nailu, our second to Sainthul, and third to Buswa. At Buswa, Futih Chund's Gomastu, the son of Pann Raj, received me; his father had gone into the district on business, but he returned, and they together kept me two or three days; then giving me a man to accompany me, they sent me on after the third puhur of day had passed, and I proceeded to Rajgurb. From Rajgurb I travelled to Malakhera village, where I ate bread, and then went on one and a half kos to another village, where I slept: I don't know the name of the latter village, but remember that the water of its well was very good. From that village I journeyed to Ulwur, and having there eaten bread in the house of Nirba Ram Chuodhuree I proceeded and put up in a small village, the name of which I do not know, near a garden, six kos from Ulwur. Thence, I travelled to Moonha Khara village and halted; and on the third day I reached Tijara, where I lived with Futih Chund. Afterwards, on the second of Jeth Soodi, Futih Chund having hired a talto for me, sent me away in company with Hur Lal Gungwal (who rode in his own bulah) after giving me the following instructions. "Govia Ulwur to Buswa, and if Doolue Chund, Ram Ruttun and Chutoor Bhooj propose keeping you three or four days, stay with them." So, leaving Tijara, I rested at Buhadoorpoora-ka Dera, and thence travelled to Ulwur. At Ulwur, Doolue Chund and Ram Ruttun met me and said, "stay with us—on this understanding, that, if Futih Chund writes for you from Tijara you will return to him at Tijara, or if he desires you to go on to Buswa, you will proceed thither." After this Futih Chund wrote to me,—"if these persons (the three above named) wish to keep you, stay at your ease with them, and come to me when I send for you"—so I remained with Doolue Chund, but I said to him—"if Futih Chund sends for me I will go." At Doolue Chund's I taught children. In the month Usaj Doolue Chund said "go to Juepoor, transcribe, and bring here some Potees." He gave me thirty rupees for my living in Ulwur, and one hundred and fifty for my expenses at Juepoor. Also one hundred rupees for the actual transcription of the Potees—the Byakura, Kab, and threes of the Savugee Potees. So I travelled to Rajgurb, and there sitting myself at the

Both of Chudoor Bhoj, I came with him to Juepoor in the month Uroj.

Arrived at Juepoor, I transcribed the Potees and reviewed them. While I was so engaged, Doolue Chund wrote two or three times to call me, but I went not. When the Potees were written in the month Bysakh, I made ready to go to Ulwur. At that time I said to the Deewan (Umar Chund) "give me a buhul;" he replied,—"I will give you one to take you to Ulwur." So, on the 6th of the month Bysakh Budi, at night, I was packing up the Potees, when my apartment caught fire. God knows how it happened! An uproar arose, and Ubbue Chund Pandyo, coming from another house by the roof, extinguished the fire with water. Some of my papers and clothes were wetted by the water poured in, therefore I did not set out for Ulwur that day. I had procured a purwana for the road from the Rawul, through Bijue Ram Pandyo. Five or seven days after the fire, having packed the Potees in two bundles, I sent them to Ulwur in Hansooka's buhul, and wrote that I was coming. Doolue Chund's mother who was in Juepoor said—"go with me"—so having hired a buhul, on the 7th of Jeth Budi I set out for Ulwur, with my mother, my daughter, and one servant, in company with five buhuls belonging to Doolue Chund's family. There was also another buhul in company.

At the Ghat-kaduwaza the customs-officers looked at the buhul. We proceeded when four ghurrees of the day had passed, halted at Jumdoolie to eat, and went on to a place 6 kos from Juepoor, at which we halted when two or four ghurrees of night had elapsed. Starting early the next morning I ate bread in the village Purasoolie, which is twelve kos from Juepoor, and then going on to the village Muhesera, which is eighteen kos from Juepoor, I put up when four ghurrees of night had passed. Again, starting early I journeyed to a place called Goodha, which is twenty-two kos from Juepoor and five from Muhesera: I there have alighted under a peepul tree near the village, ate bread, and went on in the cool to Buswa, where I halted when four ghurrees of night were gone, under the foot on the Rajghur road. Two ghurrees afterward Schoonee Sravugee, Jewon Ram came to see me; two other men were with him; I was at that time taking the name of the deity, so I had no conversation with him. He went away, and I slept there the night. The next morning early, leaving Buswa, I travelled to the house of Doolue Chund in Rajghur, where I partook of sweetmeats. Doolue Chund's Qu-beela remained there with him: my buhul and that of Moonna Lal Shoonnee Sravugee which was with me went on after the 3rd puhur of day, and I halted outside the town of Malakhara, when a puhur or six ghurrees of night had elapsed: my buhul first reached this place, and Moonna Lal came afterwards. I remained there all night, and starting just before dawn the next morning, I went on to Ulwur. Moonna Lal who set out from Malakhara a little before me, reached Ulwur first. My buhul remained in Doolue Chund's Havelee four ghurrees, while I was looking out for a place at which to put. Doolue Chund had named his old dwelling house for me, but his brother Ubbue Chund and his son Patoo Lal would not admit me. Then I went to a Mundur where my brethren assembled, and there I met two persons who accompanied me to shew me another house: one was Chandoowar Panna Lal: and the other Sethes Bachoo Lal: so they took me to a house belonging to Chandoowar Chhao Ram and Gopal Sogane, and there gave me a tarbar suite of three apartments and a kotha (closet), situated on the left side of the house as you enter, in Gopal Sogane's portion of it—and there I remained.

No. 40.—Summary of Examination of Girdharee Mir in January last. Girdharee Mir, servant of Doolue Chund Hansooka Sravugee.

Q.—Was Manik Chund Sahjee Doolue Chund's servant?

A.—No, he received pay from the Punch of the Mundur, but at the suggestion and by advice of the Punch, Sahjee gave him something from motives of piety and charity.

(Deponent declares that he set off with the party from Juepoor for Ulwur on Budi 7th of Jeth, and gives a full account of the journey to Rajghur, with as much particularity as Manik Chund or any of the individuals who have been examined, though with some statements peculiar to himself and at variance with other depositions.) At Rajghur deponent remained with Doolue Chund, and knows not how or when those who travelled in the four buhuls not belonging to Doolue Chund went on—afterwards says, that the persons to whom those four buhuls belonged took leave of Doolue Chund in his presence, and the four carts went off together. Sookh Singh and Dhuoukul Brulmun (Doolue Chund's servants) accompanied them. Saw Manik Chund every day between Juepoor and Rajghur. Saluted him and exchanged a few words with him daily. Also prepared the meals for Doolue Chund's family, and supplied water to drink, assisted by Dhuoukul every day.

Thinks Poorun Mul followed his family to Rajghur, but cant say—saw him two or four days after his own arrival at Rajghur.

When told that Manik Chund had deposed, that he Girdharee Mir, had gone back from Jumdolee to bring Poorun Mul, and did not accompany the party on the road to Rajghur, and asked whether his own statement or that of Manik Chund was the true one; exclaims,—"Did Manik Chund really say so? Then Manik Chund has told the truth, and I have uttered what is false." After this avowal of the deponent his further examination is postponed to another day.

Second Examination of Girdharee Mir early in February last.

Q.—You deposed to untruths regarding Manik Chund's journey the other day, but you are now expected to keep to facts; say how it took place?

A. Sometime in Jeth Budi, the exact date I do not recollect, Hansooka's family quitted Juepoor, and I accompanied their buhuls as far as the ghat, (a mile and half from the city) whence, by desire of Doolue Chund's mother, I returned to Juepoor, for the purpose of proceeding with Poorun Mul. On the following day but one, I set out with Poorun Mul and attended him to Rajghur, from which place I again returned to Juepoor, Manik Chund went with us on the departure of Doolue Chund's family as far as the ghat, but I did not see him subsequently at Rajghur, nor did I hear that he had gone on to Ulwur. I staid at Rajghur during eight or ten days with Doolue Chund, and then by his order I returned to Juepoor. I arrived at Rajghur with Poorun Mul on the third day, including the one in which we set out. I saw Manik Chund following the gares on foot as far as the ghat. I do not know in what house Manik Chund lived at Juepoor, and I know not that he went on to Ulwur, or came back to Juepoor.

Q.—If this be a true statement, why did you depose falsely before?

A.—Moonna Lal, nephew of Doolue Chund, told me that the Rawul had sent for me, and desired me to go and say that Manik Chund had accompanied those buhuls of Hansooka's family to Ulwur. I have been staying at a house of Moonna Lal in Juepoor.

Q.—When was it that Moonna Lal so instructed you, and was any other person present on the occasion?

A.—It was when you gentlemen were returning from Ulwur that he told me what I have mentioned; and Panna Lal, another relative of Doolue Chund, residing in the same house with Moonna Lal, was present at the time.—Calcutta Courier.

FREE PRESS ANNIVERSARY DINNER.

On the evening of Thursday, the 15th September, the anniversary of the liberation, by Sir Charles Metcalfe, of the Press of India, about seventy gentlemen dined together at the Town Hall, Theodore Dickens, Esq., in the chair, Henry Torrens, Esq., vice chairman. After the cloth was withdrawn, the chairman, briefly alluding to the absence of several gentlemen who had taken a prominent part in the proceedings of the first commemoration, stated that intelligence of an afflicting nature had that day been received from the Cape, which unfortunately prevented the attendance of Mr. Pattle, Mr. H. M. Parker, and Captain Taylor, (Madras Army). The chairman read a communication from Mr. Parker, as follows:—

"Nothing short of an event which gives me such deep concern, could have interfered with my participating in the commemoration of a measure, which appears to my humble judgment no less wise as a measure of state policy than calculated to produce the most enormous benefits to the people—a measure, in short, which I view even as a proud servant of the Company, conscientiously assist in celebrating, because I think it promises full as much for the safety as for the good government of British India while an Englishman I shall ever honor and applaud the English feeling which created, and the English spirit which dared, amidst the despotisms of Asia, to legalize the freedom of the Press."

With regard to the absence of one of the earliest advocates for, and staunchest friends, to a Free Press in India, Dwarkanauth Tagore, Mr. Dickens assured the company, what, indeed, they could very well imagine, that it was not an excuse, but indisposition alone which occasioned his absence.

The chairman then proposed "The King," which was drank with enthusiastic cheers, and afterwards the "Freedom of the Press in India and Sir Charles Metcalfe its Liberator."

MR. DICKENS.—Gentlemen, in rising to propose this toast, I have to perform a most grateful duty. I rise secure of the sympathy of every man who hears me at this social board, to give utterance to our common agreement in a great public principle,—to do more, to give utterance to our grateful feelings towards the statesman who had the courage to uphold this principle in theory, the magnanimity to enforce it in practice. I feel secure too of the sympathy not only of every one who hears me, but of thousands and tens of thousands to whom the press that he has freed will convey this tribute of applause, to the greatest public measure of Sir Charles Metcalfe, of any Governor-General who has ruled over British India since the first establishment of our power. Gentlemen, I take leave to speak of it as a tribute of applause, because, in paying it, we pay only that which we owe. That which I say, speaking I trust on your behalf, as well as my own sentiment, is not simply the expression of a truth, but is the performance of an act of justice which is in every case a public duty. To me it is a peculiar and personal pleasure to have to perform this task, for if in conjunction with one whose absence we all regret, and who on a similar occasion last year more worthily presided over you, I once, though not on precisely the same grounds as he did, proposed what I thought an ill-timed praise differing then from many with whom it is my pride and pleasure now and generally to agree, I did so because I thought it my duty. That which I thought my duty then, I think my duty now, and as I said before it is with peculiar satisfaction I fulfil it. (Hear, hear.)

The value of what Sir C. Metcalfe has done cannot be overlooked or under-rated by those who have for a series of years had experience of Indian politics and watched the policy of the Home authorities. Without speculating on what the future may have in store for us or for him, it is enough to look back on the past, and that not a very remote past, to see the enormous stride that has been made from the law and policy of Mr. Adam to the law and policy of Sir C. Metcalfe. Both of these gentlemen were, and deservedly, in the highest degree popular from their private virtues—both gained most attached public and private friends—both were Whigs (I believe) in politics, and liberal on English questions—both belonged to the Civil Service—both held a supreme power in India by a temporary and precarious tenure,—in many, in most things how similar, in one grand point how unlike! Incalculable is the difference between their Indian policy, (cheers). And shall we who have borne testimony to the private merits of the one be negligent or forgetful of the incomparably greater public desert of the other, and be deterred from doing justice to ourselves and to him, because block-heads in my call itulation? At last, Gentlemen, we are an admitted power—the negation is negated, the cipher is replaced by a visible unit, and on this subject our republic, at least, I hope, is one and indivisible. We do not call ourselves the public of India, but we do call ourselves the public of Calcutta, and that contains a good share of its intelligence, nay, if we were to go upon Tory foundations and borrow the air of an argument (that did good battle in its day,) the hocus potius principle, called virtual representation, we might safely assume to represent all men in India whose hands the choicest had touched with his magic ferule. (Hear, and laughter.) We should have better grounds to shew for our claim than Old Sarum, ancient moor and anise of directors, or Gatten had to shew for representing Lords of Manchester. Peace, however, and a long oblivion to such delinquent pretensions. We speak for ourselves, we speak for our fellow-citizens, because we believe, in their agreement on the latter ground, we might speak for 9 out of every 10 men of sense and education in all India. (Hear, hear.)

Gentlemen it may be said of us that we are misled by our sympathies and feelings as freemen, on this question, that we apply in maxima suitable to other times and other countries, and other governments to this country, and this government to which they do not apply in the least. Gentlemen, this is not so. I speak for myself, I doubt not I speak for you, when I say it is not so. We do not meet to utter political common places in praise of the Freedom of the Press generally, we meet because our understandings as well as our feelings are convinced, that it is good for us, that it is good for India; because we are convinced that this measure is not more bold than wise.

Gentlemen, we trust, do we not. That we can render a reason for the political faith that is in us, that we can answer the question why are you friends to the Freedom of the Press in India. Why are we? Because we think for those who were free before, that the freedom of the press is the more necessary, here, since they have the less of any other because for those who have not learn the virtues which freedom alone can give it, is amongst the best of teachers, without it even with liberty,

(to say nothing of political,) can neither be attained nor enjoyed. Gentlemen, we think so because a free press even in a country governed by foreign rulers, such as are neither tyrants nor wish to be so; when they and their countrymen are very far advanced beyond these they govern in arts as well as arms, in morality and a knowledge as well as in policy, is the best security both for the governors and the governed. Because a Free Periodical Press, in such a country (as in truth it is in every country,) useful to the governed and perhaps in the first instance, most useful to the governors; it is a counsellor and no coultier, the only honest spy, a good chronicler of merit and demerit, (better, gentlemen, than merit-fostering reports made in secret) and (if sedition lurk in the land) why then a cheap advertiser of sedition. (Cheers.) The instance given by Sir John Malcolm of written and secret libels scattered among the native soldiery in his camp inciting them to the mutiny and massacre of their European officers, are the strongest arguments that could be given in favor of the value of a free press, that "charitable libelness" the ground work, the incitement, the persuasion in all these cases to rebellion were not, gross, palpable (except to the ignorant and credulous) and enormous lies, such as the Delhi Ukhbar, or similar native productions, would disseminate. The cause of the ready belief in such lies is ignorance, the cure is the dissemination of knowledge, compare the most fictitious newspaper with such documents as these that Sir J. Malcolm mentions, no man writes treason in a newspaper openly and intelligibly at least, and if he does, the Government know how to deal with him, and would be justified in war time, perhaps at any time, in seizing his whole daily edition, compare the worst newspaper imaginable here with a document of this deadly kind, which no man knew of "Pie nint with the fite of thousands," to borrow and apply a poet's thought, fits the scrap "unseen," and in silence and in secrecy whispers its exhortations to murder. Because, in time, we think that neither treason nor conspiracy are formed or fomented in newspapers, and few causes of discontent that are not just are long dwelt on, that we wish for a free press in India. (Applause.)

I will proceed, (though I fear I weary you, and perform a work of supererogation) it is because we do not think that the Government of India is a despotism—because we do not think that the preservation of our power in India (or the extraction of revenue, to use the illustration of Sir C. Metcalfe) is the first or sole object of our rule,—because we believe that our power is necessary for the protection of the natives as well as for our own, and a free press will aid in teaching them to believe it, and convincing them of it, that we advocate a free press in India. Whatever dicams may float in the head of a young orator of the Hindoo College, concerning his own fitness and that of his class to govern his countrymen, the progress of his own understanding, and contact with practical life, will soon teach him how vain such visions are, that it is not in such a sense that "knowledge is power," that it would not be to the educated, or the good among his countrymen (in case of our expulsion) that the sceptre would descend, but it would be disputed for by the half-disciplined bands of the Sikh, the sword of the Afghan or the Rajpoot, the lance of the Mahiatta, and fall to the hand of some soldier who, probably, could not write his own name. And we know that a free press will, day by day, convince every class of our subjects of the truth, that our power and their good are really coincident, because, as I said before, our power is not DESPOTISM. (Loud applause.)

From the hour that India was governed by a British company, I ought to have been able to say, but more happily from the hour that it was regulated for by the wise and careful care of a British Parliament, I am able to say, that we could never, with the smallest propriety, be applied to its condition by any public jurists. Our political condition is a transition state; though far removed from political liberty by the necessity of the case, it is at least much further removed from absolute despotism. Were I a public man, engaged in the task of governing this country, I should hold it the worst and most dangerous of false imputations. As such I would "defy, deny, spurn back and scorn it." The mind that is fit to govern civilized men, and can look with pity on ill-founded pretensions to superiority not based on virtue and knowledge, must admit that the relation of master, is as debasing as that of slave, it is twice accursed, both in that which it bestows, and that which it takes away. Let us do honour to the man, who has perceived and acted on the truth; even in a state not wholly politically free, the truth may yet be spoken under the safeguard and restraint of the law, who at the hazard of sacrificing the objects of a most honorable ambition, has acted on this truth, who rejecting the doctrine, that statesmen here were bound to execute the mandates and carry into effect the policy of others with an absolute submission, has enlarged our liberty while he has asserted his own. I propose to you his health, as of a man and statesman, who in this measure has approved himself, wise, frank, fearless, and free. I propose to you freedom of the Press in India, and the health of its liberator, Sir Charles Metcalfe' (the toast was drank with enthusiasm.)

The Governor-General.

MR DICKENS—Gentlemen;—I propose to you the health of the Governor General of British India, Lord Auckland. As the representative of the crown, as the representative of the United Kingdom, as the representative of the East India Company, to whom the government of this great country is entrusted, we owe him all honor, and it is fitting that his name should succeed next in order to the first, in honor of the great public cause to commemorate the triumph of which we are specially assembled. Had I the honor of a personal acquaintance with his lordship, it would be unbecoming that I should speak of his personal character even in the way of praise, though from all I hear, it would well admit of it. But of his public acts since he has exercised in India the high powers entrusted to him, I may without impropriety say, (two exceptions admitted, and as I speak, they must be allowed to me at least as my own sentiment and for which, perhaps, he can scarcely be considered fully responsible) they have the merit of a far-sighted and liberal wisdom. I believe, too, I may say, all India relies with confidence, on his moderation, his integrity and the soundness of his own political views and intentions, the condition that, power so vast as that entrusted to him requires, is, that after well weighing as the man, he must decide for himself as the Governor, not trusting too much to those around him, who, chosen too much from one class, might give too narrow and exclusive a direction to measures that must affect all. (Applause.) I once said, publicly speaking of the Governor-General in the abstract, that the Charter had set him up as colossus of despotism; it was an exaggeration, natural enough in the heat of extempore speech, but of which I repent and which I recall. Reflection has reduced the colossus of my imagination to more ordinary dimensions. But this at least is true, that the powers given to a Governor-General are very large, dangerously large, more than commensurate with any practical responsibility. (Hear, hear.) Can I then say more of our present Governor-General with propriety, than that I believe and trust, that they are most safely committed to his moderation, when (as all men must admit) they require a statesman to wield them of high capacity and thorough practical good sense and integrity. Gentlemen, I propose to you the health of Lord Auckland, the Governor-General of British India. (Drank with three cheers.)

The Navy.

Mr. DICKENS.—Gentlemen; I give you the Navy, and in giving you the toast, though it be a tritely glorious theme, and one on which I can scarcely say any thing that has not been often and much better said before, my wish to do it all honour will not allow me to propose it without preface. We have now enjoyed a peace nearly as long as the policy of Walpole secured for us in the last century, from the treaty of Utrecht to the war with Spain in 1739, the war of the ears as Sir Robert called it, with which the head had nothing to do. As long as the admirable foreign policy of the modern Whig administration is persevered in, as long as the alliance of France and England continues, and then mutual good understandings with the United States, (and may they never be disturbed!) we have the best guarantee for the peace of the whole civilized world. I cannot wish so well to the navy as to wish for war, and I cannot wish it a better, or more glorious career than peace has afforded it—more pure and staid triumphs. Gentlemen; permit me briefly to recall to your memories, if need there be to recall such deeds, the services of our glorious navy since a general peace has existed in Europe, and with our brethren in America. First and foremost on the list of high deeds is the extinction of State piracy, the liberation of thousands of Christian slaves, the payment of and the long arrears of vengeance for the wrongs of centuries, the merited chastisement of Algiers, the crowning glory of Lord Exmouth's glorious life. Next the battle of Navarino, which a narrow interested policy alone, could characterize as untoward when it was necessary to save the existence of a whole nation, from whom the exterminating sword was averted by that single blow. Next comes the suppression of organized piracy in the West Indies, in conjunction with the gallant navy of the United States. Then the long and arduous services, and unhappily not yet ended required to put down that scourge of the human race the African Slave Trade, lastly, the now begun suppression of piracy in these our eastern seas, an enterprise which I doubt not will be followed up with a zeal worthy of the skill and energy which Captain Claid and his brave crew have displayed. Every one of these victories may well be said to be won for the good of the whole human race, and not to have cost humanity a single tear.—(Hear, hear.)

Gentlemen, before I sit down, permit me to advert to another subject connected with this, to which it cannot be useless to advert, if it be useful on all public and social occasions to enforce, as far as individuals can, the expression of just and humane sentiment. It was the late President of the United States, Mr. Monroe, who (I think in a President's message) first uttered in a weighty and well-weighed state paper, a wish worthy of his country and himself,—a wish that, even, when open war was waged, between civilized belligerents, the goods and ships of every merchant might pass free on the broad highway of nations. He did not mean gentlemen, merely the exemption of neutrals, or the principle that free ships make free goods, which would be but favouring the worst of all war, war in disguise—and under pretext of neutrality—he meant that the non-combatant should be as unmolested at sea as on land, if he did not engage in combatant of war. I hope that day may yet come—I have lived, though not old, to see things I less expected. If it were the interest of the strong that this practice should be continued, that would be no excuse, it would be but the tyrant's plea necessity, which was first urged, you know, to excuse devilish deeds—but in truth it is the interest of the strong, to put it down. If we were to try conclusions with Russia, and her broken-backed ships were swept, as they assuredly would be, from the Baltic of the northern seas—if her Black sea fleet, manned by tight-waisted soldiers, transformed by an Autocrat's mandate into sailors, a veritable sort of horse marines, who would be a laughing-stock to our seamen, were hermetically sealed up in the harbours of the Black Sea, she could yet make deadly war upon our commerce—any little power might thus assail the strong. (Hear.) The Duke of Modena, with as much sea coast as Bohemia, if instead of issuing libels against us in his ducal newspaper, he were to issue a declaration of war under dictation of Austria or Russia, he might give a commission to every scoundrel pirate that roves the sea, and has courage to cut a throat, and we could not but hang them, if they robbed us. (Hear, hear.)

Gentlemen, let us hope the progress of intelligence all over the world, will ere long put an end to that unnecessary evil of war, and then, in a sense the very reverse of the Poets' canon,—the peaceful merchant, exercising maritime commerce in every nation of the world may say, on regarding the ocean,

Far as the breeze can bear the billows foam,
Survey our empire and behold our home.

Gentlemen, in its title of protector of maritime commerce, second only to that of defender of its country, I give you the British Navy.

Mr. C. R. PRINSEP.—And, gentlemen, let us not forget the King at the head of the Navy. (Much cheering.)

Mr. R. H. COCKBURN could not allow this toast to pass without offering his thanks for the honor done to a service to which he had the good fortune to belong. He regretted his inability to make a suitable acknowledgment, and that there was no member of the royal navy present who had lately been in active service, but he could not omit expressing the pleasure he felt at being able to say, amongst the little active service he had seen, was numbered that glorious victory at Algiers,—a victory which, as had been well said by the chairman, had not cost humanity a tear. (Cheers.)

The Army.

Mr. HENRY TORRENS.—There are certain words and phrases, which when merely repeated go more home to the feelings in their bare utterance, than if ushered in by oratory the richest and most florid. Thus, gentlemen, in giving the British Army, I need not carry you back to a reminiscence, exploit by exploit, of the army's various gallant deeds,—your own recollection and associations will furnish you with much more vivid impressions of these spirit-stirring acts of prowess than any words of mine. To night, however, we must look to the army in a pacific as well as in a pugacious character, and speak of them as citizens as well as soldiers. We must consider them in connection with the subject of this night's festival, and more particularly as regards the Indian Army, which circumstances have of late years placed, it has been said, unfavorably in connection with the Press. Yet, gentlemen, when we look at the events which have taken place during the past year, we can do nothing but congratulate the friends of free and temperate discussion upon the victory that has been achieved over an ill-grounded prejudice, and which has proved that not a Press unshackled, but a Press misused, is to be deprecated. (Hear, hear.) When a Press leads to the interchange of valuable opinions, when it tends to elicit professional information, and forms a guide to the discovery of merit, surely it must be said to add to, and not detract from, the general harmony and discipline of the body which so uses it. Gentlemen, we have seen different principles on other days, but I will allude to them no more than to point out the contrast with what we see at present. The change is due to Sir Henry Fane, that good and gallant soldier. (Much applause.) He is fortunate in commanding those capable of appreciating him, and to them as part, and no mean one, of our national army, let us drink with heartfelt good-will and a hearty cheer.—(Much applause.)

Captain THOMPSON of the Engineers, returned thanks almost in the following words. Gentlemen, my being called on to return thanks is quite unexpected, and I regret my incapacity to do so in the manner I should wish. I hope, however, that some gentleman present, connected with the army, though not now one of its members, and who can more adequately return your wishes for your good wishes to the army, will rise up and do so. I can only return you my most heartfelt thanks, in behalf of myself and the army, for the honor you have done us.

The Indian Press.

MR. LEITH.—I did not intend, when I just now rose so inopportunely; to return thanks for the last toast or to interfere with the right of my friend Captain Thompson to represent the army, but to propose the next toast of the evening—"the Indian Press." In times, happily bygone, this toast would have been recommended to you not only, as now, by its own peculiar character and importance, but by that which will ever create sympathy in the breasts of the generous and the liberal, persecution for opinion's sake: these times have now passed away, but the record of them will ever remain a blot in the history of the British rule in India. Instead of appearing among you this evening, as would have formerly been the case, to give expression to lamentation and woe, and to stimulate you to gird up your loins for continuing a contest whose issue was doubtful, I have been appointed to perform the more pleasing duty of telling you of a battle already fought and of calling upon you to celebrate a victory already achieved. A new era has commenced in India; the British Parliament and Local Legislature, in their former enactments concerning our fellow countrymen in India, seemed to have practically adopted the sentence or curse pronounced by Pope Alexander, upon Sir Wm. Tracey and his posterity viz., "that the wind should always blow in their faces whether they travelled by land or water." (Laughter.) It is not my purpose to comment on the injustice of the penal restrictions of these acts towards the British people, but to congratulate you on the removal of the most obnoxious of them and on the establishment of free colonization. A Free trade, and a free press, each of these to a certain extent depends upon the others for its protection and the full development of the blessings it is calculated to produce, and all these when united form one powerful engine for the regeneration of India. (Hear.) From the year 1780, when I believe the first English newspaper was published, down to the year 1799, when a censorship was established for the first time, there were no direct restrictions upon the liberty of the Press in India. But the unconstitutional and arbitrary general power of "deportation without trial, was occasionally exercised to put down public writers who had made themselves obnoxious to the Local Government. The appointment of the censor was the act of Lord Wellesley; an act not to be excused ever by any sophistry about expediency, or justified by that plea which can alone justify the abridgement of the liberty of the subject—an absolute necessity clearly made out to have for its object the benefit of the public. "To submit the Press to the restrictive power of a licenser," said late eminent English judge, "is to subject all freedom of sentiment to the prejudice of one man, and to make him the arbitrary and infallible judge of all controverted points in learning, religion, and government." Such was the censor of the Indian Press! I shall not weary you by dwelling on the daily irritation and ceaseless round of petty annoyances, experienced by those who were connected with the Press in India caused by the capricious and senseless acts of this Government inquisitor, judge, and informer. The removal of the censorship was the act of the Marquess of Hastings in 1818; an act not the least in importance among the many beneficial acts which characterized his rule in India, and which reflect lustre on his name.

Now come we to the darkest period of our history—when the retirement of the Marquess of Hastings gave an opportunity, before the arrival of his successor, to the then Vice-President of the Local Council, Mr. Adams, to enslave the Press and to forge those letters for which Sir Charles Metcalfe, to his immortal honor and with the decision worthy of a statesman, boldly struck off. That event we have this night met to celebrate, and judge ye which acted most justly towards India, and deserves best of his fellow countrymen there. (Hear.)

We must not, however, forget that we are indebted to those who stood in the breach, and who bore the brunt of the fire, and who suffered in person and in purse, while boldly fighting for the independence of the Indian Press. To them our thanks are due as well as to the little band of friends—one of whom I am happy to see here present, and a second is now pointed out to me who sits near me, and whom I ought not to have forgotten—a third I lament to say has been lately taken away from us by death—who supported these men when friends were few and friendships dangerous, and when those who had connected themselves with the press were tossed about like tennis balls at the caprice of any man whom accident may have placed in power. The name of Lord William Bentinck is associated in my mind and must be also in yours with the names of a Hastings and a Metcalfe, and will be honored by every friend to the freedom of the Press in India. To him belongs the praise of having practically demonstrated the safety of free discussion, and the advantages both to the Governors and to the governed resulting from a free press, and we must not forget that his declaration of amnesty to the Indian Press, and of his being friendly to its freedom, inspired confidence and gave security, and that although he did not destroy the thunderbolt that he averted its fall for a series of years.

The only argument used by those who attempt to defend the gagging and licensing system, and the criminal equity of the Star Chamber (without even its forms of trial and defence,) administered in the Indian Council Chamber during the continuance of that tyrannical system, is that of expediency based on an assumption of apprehended danger. That danger is now satisfactorily proved to have been a phantasm; and the state of mind of a few of those who apprehended, it may be perhaps not inaptly described by the scriptural apothegm, "the wicked flee when no man pursueth." (Applause.) But even admitting, for the sake of argument, that danger did impend, this Indian Government in its policy towards the press, seems to me, to have acted as if ignorance of danger was synonymous with absence of danger, and, like the foolishness of the ostrich, to have imagined that by hoodwinking itself the danger which it feared was to be averted. (Cheers.)

If the press produces in India—and why should it not?—results similar to those it produces elsewhere, the errors of the legislative and executive will be corrected, and the people, both European and Native, will have, thereby, less cause of disaffection. (Hear.)

Free public scrutiny, and the control of public opinion are necessary means to keep a government in the right line of duty. (Hear, hear.) There always has been and always will be, I am afraid, a leaning in governments to particular rather than to general interests. Who then so fit and able to point out and correct the abuse of power as a jealous and watchful public on the spot, who are immediately affected by every act of miracle, and whose common interest it is to detect and amend it. The press in England cannot be a substitute for, although it may powerfully assist the press in India, when the latter has collected the facts and has commented upon them by the light afforded by local knowledge and experience.

Let the Indian press, therefore, exercise its functions boldly but temperately, honestly and for the public good, and it will never want supporters, and cannot fail to produce the most beneficial results to the people of India.

One word more, and I have done. In the debate which introduced the bill to give trial by jury to New South Wales, the late Mr. Huskisson, in his place in the House of Commons, I remember, said in reply to Sir James Mackintosh; that "the Government of New South Wales was neither arbitrary nor despotic." Now mark, the reason—for there was a FREE PRESS, which had a due influence and controul over public affairs. This supplies a reason, why those should be hostile to the freedom of the press, who have considered conscientiously or otherwise that a despotism was necessary or desirable in British India; but it also supplies a powerful stimulus to us who would have to live under that despotism, to cherish, protect, and by every lawful means in our power, to uphold the freedom of the Indian Press. (Much applause.)

Mr. SAMUEL SMITH returned thanks in the following terms:—

Mr. Chairman; I have waited in the hope that some member of the press now present, better qualified than myself to do justice to the subject, would have risen to thank you all for the very flattering manner in which you have received Mr. Leith's toast. I somewhat regret that this duty has fallen to my lot—although it is an agreeable one.

I am no orator; I am not accustomed to speak in public; but the experience acquired by a residence of nearly a quarter of a century, within or in the vicinity of the far-famed Mahratta Ditch, the greatest portion of which time has been devoted to the press, enables me to speak with some confidence of its past and present state.

I need scarcely say with what joyous sensations I again meet here the friends of the press to commemorate the first anniversary of its freedom—an event which for many years I had looked forward to as a bright dream the fulfilment of which I scarcely dared to hope for much less to expect (applause). I am joyful in the recollection of the victory which public opinion has achieved for us, but this joy is chastened by a recollection of the sufferings of the past and the prospects of the future. I am, I believe, the only individual of the olden time who has not been wrecked on some of the rocks and shoals that have proved fatal to the rest of the Free Press fleet. I was fortunate enough to escape the destruction that overtook all my contemporaries: I clung to the battered hull of my ship, I did not desert her in the hour of peril, and I have witnessed the regeneration, the perfect freedom of the press, and I might well, therefore—other circumstances permitting—sing the NUNC DIMISSIS and make room for younger and able labourers in the public vineyard.

Before I do so, however, I should like to address a few words of sober truth to the friends of the press, and to its conductors: Sir Charles Metcalfe has made the press free—we are and ought to be grateful to him for that, whatever difference of opinion may exist respecting other acts of his. I will not however dwell on this point. I will merely remind the public generally,—the friends of the press particularly,—and my brethren the conductors of the liberal portion of it, that the liberty last year bestowed upon it has not been approved either by the Court of Directors or the Board of Control, and should the present Ministry retire and a Tory faction again obtain the reins of power, we may fear the worst: my fears may be visionary,—it will be wise, nevertheless, not to lose sight of the subject. We ought to look around us and see how many supporters we may calculate upon in case the freedom of the press should be again threatened with restraint. One of the earliest, the staunchest supporters of the Calcutta Press, one whom I had the pleasure of meeting here on the former celebration of the freedom of the press, and whose absence I now most deeply regret, the respected and lamented Mr. PALMER, has "gone to that bourne from whence no traveller returns."

Two others, Colonel Swinney and Mr. Turton, have returned to the land of their fathers: one still remains amongst us, and I am sure that he will always be, what he has always been, a warm friend of the liberty of the press, and of civil and religious liberty in the widest sense of the word. I need not tell you who I mean—you all know I mean Col. James Young (much applause). But I fear I am occupying more time than even your indulgence can afford me (applause.)

It has been often said by those doubtful friends of the Press, who only admire its freedom when it advocates their own particular notions, that it was already sufficiently free, and that it was proper that the Government should have the power to curb the "licentiousness" of Editors. That licentiousness should be curbed—that abuse of the power of the press should be punished—who will dispute? But have we no courts of law? Are they not strong enough for the purpose? Are they not preferable to the old Secretarial despotism? Can we forget the fate of the Calcutta Journal and the Calcutta Chronicle? The banishment and sufferings of Mr. Buckingham and Mr. Arnott, and the severe losses of two other respected gentlemen, Mr. Adam, who now sits opposite me, and Mr. Sutherland, who, I regret, is now absent in China—who were almost ruined by the suppression of the Calcutta Chronicle, and have never yet received any compensation for their losses?

There is another view of the case: from the precarious and unprotected state of Press property under the late regulation, monied men were averse to embarking their capital in a description of property which was subject to annihilation by the fiat of a Chief Secretary; hence no Press Proprietor could, when sickness required it, realize his property, and return to his native country; hence he became chained to his types until death summoned, or the Chief Secretary deported him!

No Press Proprietor ever yet realized a fortune, which may be attributed to limited circulation arising from high postage and a scanty reading population. Persons of every other condition in life—Civilians, Soldiers, Merchants, Tradesmen, have returned to their native Country loaded with the golden fruits of their labour; but for the unfortunate Press Proprietor there was hitherto no hope. The repeal of the old gagging law, has given to Press property an equal and permanent value—permits a dying printer, whose constitution has been ruined by many years arduous labor, to return to his native country and encourages monied men to embark their capital in the Press on equally secure terms as they could in any other reasonable speculation.

This is a solid advantage which we have already reaped from the freedom of the Press, and for which we thank Sir Charles Metcalfe—we may also thank him that we can now labor at our vocation with lighter hearts than of yore. He need not repent him of his good act, which, like charity, covers a multitude of sins—for he may reply to all complaints "is not the Supreme Court a sufficient guard for the public against licentiousness when it appears" and we may say "is not trial by Jury a sufficient safeguard for the Press against arbitrary power when exerted against it?"

I fear I am getting tedious—though I feel only as if I were getting warmed by my subject—for in my mind's eye I see the days of suffering of the Calcutta Liberal Press. I remember the time when I went to sleep after reading my proofs, and dreamed of Secretarial Wigs, and I have risen in the morning, and found my dreams prove true.

Through such trials, have I, and others here present, passed, and I can look back with grateful feelings as the last remnant of the persecuted press, that has survived the wreck and been able to keep to my post—we have groaned under the vexations and privations of the past, and can now smile upon and enjoy the glories of the present prosperous days of the Kree Press of India—we are able by experience to contrast most fully with the moribund dullness of former days the full meridian splendour of our present joyful and independent existence.

Gentlemen; I am grateful to you for the patience with which you have listened to me—I am grateful to Sir Charles Metcalfe (in spite of all drawbacks) and I am grateful to the public which has practically supported the freedom of the Press. In these sentiments, I am, I feel assured, fully joined, by my Brethren of the Press, now present. Gentlemen; we thank you for your very cordial support to Mr. Leith's Toast.

Trial by Jury.

MR. C. R. PRINSEP.—After commenting with much humour and severity on the novel practice of gazetting the toasts in a printed bill of fare, which would, had he been aware of it, effectually have prevented his own appearance on the boards, thanked Mr. Smith for furnishing him with an exordium which the proposer of a toast had often a hard matter to hit upon. (Laughter.) Mr. Smith had awakened all his alarm for the safety and continuance of that great measure they were met to celebrate, and which it seemed we were in danger of losing even in the first twelve months of its existence, though, for his own part, his fears had not been quite so lively. But in truth, to give a Free Press was nothing without fixing and securing that institution under which a Free Press, ever had flourished—Jury-trial, both civil and criminal. (Cheers.) By Jury-trial he did not mean that non-descript conception of a weak imagination which had amused the public for the last few days, (hear, hear,) and which he looked upon as a mere phantom, had not a manifestation of it already appeared in the shape of what was now called the jury law of the Mofussil, entitled Regulation 9 of 1832; of which he might be allowed after dinner to say, it was neither fish, flesh, nor fowl, being neither arbitration, nor punchayet, nor jury but a mere abortion of would-be Benthamism. (Cheers.) No, he meant no such monstrosity; but that straight-forward, intelligible institution of our ancestors whose very name no true Englishman could pronounce without a thrill of veneration and yet it had never received half the veneration it deserved. (Hear, hear.) A jury of twelve good men and true, chosen from among the people themselves; the popular representatives in the congress of justice, without whose presence there was no check to the perversion of judicial talent, no security against the inroad of power, or what was quite as dangerous, the effervescence of popular excitement, (applause) and, what was more to the purpose of their present meeting, without which, neither freedom of speech nor freedom of publication, which was but the same thing in another shape, could have a lasting or a vigorous existence. (Cheers.) This was the safeguard he trusted to; and Erskine himself had set his claim to immortality on the perfection of this bulwark by placing the press wholly within its protection. However some might now deny or discredit this noble institution, he was one of those who would ever cling with affection to jury trial, the safeguard of the Press. (Much applause.)

Mr. THACKERAY took occasion to advert to the terms in which the toast was couched, which suggested an observation that he could not allow to be omitted on the present very appropriate occasion? Mr. Prinsep had eloquently dwelt upon the advantages of trial by jury; not that abortive and mutilated spit of trial by jury, with which we had been threatened, but of trial by jury in the true and proper meaning of the term, in all its native majesty and beauty. To avert the infliction of such a deformed and ineffectual substitute for the great national trial by jury, in the danger of which we stood, the press had already interposed; and, he trusted, would continue its exertions, and if, in the words of the toast that had been drunk, the trial by jury was the only safeguard of the press, he trusted that in the present hour of peril to that noble institution, the press would be found, if the sole, the effectual safeguard of trial by jury.

Alliance of England and France.

MR. HENRY TORRENS.—Gentlemen; on these occasions we should not keep all our enthusiasm to ourselves, and to our own country, but look around to those nations who have stood forth in the assertion of their rights, and have won for themselves privileges which are to us an accident of birth. Foremost among those nations is that of the gallant French. (Cheers.) But a few years have passed away since the two greatest European nations saw themselves opposed as hereditary, and, as the term has impiously been used, natural enemies. So long as despot opposed despot the natural state of society in either country produced, not the natural, but the unnatural enmity. The horrible doctrine was disavowed from the date on which the Tories quailed to the Reform Bill, and the Bourbon to the three glorious days, and from that day, the national enmity ceased, and both nations stood alike the champions of their free rights, and on asserting them became brothers fighting together for a common cause. (Hear.) There is need that they should do so, for late events have proved how truly was the great Canning's prophecy, that the next European war, must be a war of opinion,—not a struggle of king against king, but a struggle of right against wrong, of freedom against despotism.—(Much cheering.) England and France stood alone in Europe, the advocates of the people's rights; their alliance is stronger than a political,—it is not assured by protocol, or born of the pregnant brain of diplomatists, nor benighted by the fiat of the holy alliance—not, thank God, according to the Vienna interpretation, but a holy alliance of sound principles, one of common sense and honest feeling. (Cheers.) Under this bond the two nations may stand out fearless against the Bear and his myrmidons, confident in their own just cause.—(Much cheering.) Gentlemen, the alliance of England and France!

MONS. THIERS.—Messieurs,—Heureux de me trouver par moi vous dans cette occasion aussi solennelle, et fier de pouvoir répondre au toast qui vient d'être proposé par votre Honorable Vice Président, permettez que je vous exprime au nom de cette généreuse nation dont je suis l'organe, les vœux qu'elle forme pour que ces mots deviennent pour toujours une vérité constante.

L'Angleterre et La France unies pour la liberté du Monde.

The United States.

MR. DICKENS.—Gentlemen; I give you the health of a great nation; of our brethren of America, of the United States, which though a nation of only half a century's date, already ranks among the foremost of the very foremost nations of the earth. Such are the miracles of freedom. (Much cheering.) Old animosities—more bitter, because between us it was a civil war, the rending asunder of brethren, and you know, gentlemen, "that to be wroth with one we love doth work like madness in the brain"—these animosities so bitter once, are passing away. If war should ever be revived, (which God avert,) each succeeding war will have less of this venomous character. The traces of our common descent are however, indestructible; not "subsequent contention, nor time," to pursue the quotation from the same Poet "nor wars harder, will wholly do away the marks of that which once hath been, or ever permit us quite to forget that a common blood runs in our veins. (Cheers.)

Gentlemen; an enthusiastic friend to freedom, I am no zealot for forms: I would not exchange our monarchy, rooted as I believe it is in the affections and habits of our people, and based as it is, according to my reading of the constitution, on the principle of the sovereignty of the people for the best even of these excellent forms of civil polity, which prevail in the United States, but knowing as I do, that they also are suited to the habits and rooted in the affections of that people I rejoice in their establishment, and exult in the prospect of their almost boundless extension. (Hear, hear.) In the words recently uttered by a Senator of the United States "let the Anglo-Saxon race, bearing on their banners, the mottoes 'Freedom and the Sovereignty of the people'—march, onward and onward still—(unstained however by the blood of aggressive or offensive war) till they sweep over the Rocky mountains and unroll their banners to the breezes of the far Pacific; nay, if compelled to conquest by the rights and policy of a just defence, let those standards march till its bearers can see the oceans on either side," but NOT TILL THEN.

Let such triumphs be the lot of every race—let the principles of freedom penetrate into the steppes of Russia, the plains of Central Asia, to the great wall of China, to the remotest Japan,—why may we not dream of and hope for a political Millennium, when, if such triumphs can be called conquests, or such a supremacy domination, Libertas victrix dominabitur orbi!—(Much cheering.)

Gentlemen;—I give you the health of one of the great assertors and protectors of freedom, the United States of America.

Mr. J. R. HOOBINSON returned thanks nearly as follows: Allow me, Sir, as a citizen of the United States of America, to acknowledge the compliment which has just been paid to my country, and to say how fully I reciprocate the kindly feelings and good will which have been expressed. I esteem the compliment the more, that it is given on an occasion like the present, when the object of commemoration is one of freedom—the freedom of the press. It is to the liberty of the press in the United States, combined with the means of rapid communication throughout the country, that we are to look, as being one of the great safeguards of the Union, for it is by these means that the people must be enlightened and it is upon the people and upon their good sense and information that the welfare of the country must depend. (Much applause.) The two countries are placed under very different circumstances, and remarks which are applicable to the one may not be so to the other. There seems, however, every reason to believe that the liberation of the press in India will be productive of the most beneficial effects, and I beg leave, as an American, to congratulate all the friends of freedom upon the adoption of the measure which you are now met to commemorate—the liberty of the Indian press. (Loud cheering.)

Mr. W. P. GRANT.—The toast I am about to propose requires very little preface from me to induce you to drink it with enthusiasm; my friend, Mr. Dickens, has already most aptly introduced it to you, for it is one which goes as far as words can go, to express our wish for the accomplishment of that noble plan which will bring freedom to the wall of China and the confines of Japan. If I may be allowed to bring you back to the event which has brought you hither, I would say nothing is so likely to cause the approach of that millennium as universal freedom of the Press. (Hear, hear.)

The Civil Service.

Mr. DICKENS.—Gentlemen; it is with great pleasure that I find that it has fallen to my lot to propose to you this toast, the health of the Civil Service; among the members of that Service I number many and dear friends, there is scarcely one among them that I have ever known, with whom I am not on terms of cordial acquaintanceship or intimacy. I should be the last to allow differences of opinion on political questions to disturb such relations. I no more hold the Civil Service responsible, for the measures of Government, if I should chance to think them blameable, than I hold myself responsible for the defects of the law which I have to administer.

However, it is of the merits of the service as stated that I wish to speak. Gentlemen; many distinguished men amongst them have shewn a very high capacity for civil Government, not only a very high capacity, but the very highest capacity—higher than that of any other Governors we have had for years past; gentlemen, I need but mention Mountstuart Elphinstone, to recall the memory of the highest order of merit—he was a Bengal Civil Servant. (Cheers.) Who was it that freed the press, when Lord William Bentinck with his iron nerve and ultra Whig politics, and eight years' experience of its acknowledged benefits shrank from the responsibility. A Bengal Civil Servant of six and thirty years' experience of India, he whom we meet to honour for it,—Sir Charles Metcalfe. Who was it that abolished the TRANSIT DUTIES, that bold and wise and liberal measure? (likely to be so unpalatable at home) Mr. Ross, a Bengal Civil Servant, of more than 40 years' experience of India. (Loud applause.)

Gentlemen; the statesmen of the Civil Service have another merit and that not a slight one. Their lives are spent, their fortunes are spent, as well as acquired in India, their ambition must rise by their merits here. They do not lightly come and lightly go,—they do not make a convenience of 80 millions of men,—perhaps no man does that,—but when statesmen come to us from England, it is much to be lamented, when they have merit, that they can afford us so small a portion of their valuable time. The Civil Service give us the best of their lives. Gentlemen; I propose to you, the health of the Civil Service. (Drank with loud cheers.)

Mr. H. TORRENS said he was unfortunately the only Civil Servant present, but the meeting knew that accident and not intention had kept away others of that body more capable of answering for it. It was not for him to make a running commentary on the merits of the Service, holding, as he did, a very humble situation in it, but he could assure Mr. Dickens that he felt particularly gratified at what had fallen from him with reference to the Service and he had no doubt that every member of it would participate in his feelings. It was not to be supposed that the Civil Service were adverse to the freedom of the press because they had not attended on this occasion; business might occasion the absence of many, accident might have prevented the presence of others, or there might be reasons for their absence to which there were no reasons to allude. But of this he could assure the meeting, that the Civil Service numbered more friends to freedom than any other body of the same extent in existence. (Hear, hear.)

The Calcutta Bar.

Mr. STOCQUER.—Gentlemen; although I do not find my name in the Gazette, as Mr. C. Prinsep calls the printed list of toasts, I have nevertheless been charged, since I entered the room, to propose a toast to you, which I will not say I wish had been entrusted to better hands, because, while it is one which I have great pleasure in proposing, it is a toast which requires neither a rhetorical recommendation nor an eloquent apology.

The Calcutta Bar, gentlemen, have always occupied a very distinguished place amongst the friends of rational liberty and the advocates of the emancipation of the Indian Press. From the moment when the system of persecution began down to the happy time when the seal was set upon the 'freedom of opinion,' the members of the Bar were foremost to protect the oppressed and to insist upon the advantage to the country of unrestrained discussion. Professionally, indeed, some of them have occasionally appeared as the champions of the oppressor—or rather as the enemies of what it is, the fashion to call the licentiousness of the Press; but I will do the bar the justice to say that whenever they have been placed in [this false position]—whenever they have been on the strong side, or the wrong side (for they are often convertible terms) they have so contrived to damage the case of their clients as to leave the Press triumphant. The case of Mr. Buckingham and the six Secretaries is strongly in point. The result could not be fortunate for the oppressor;—the hearts of the Bar were with the persecuted, and thus, though indirectly, they gave advantages to a cause which unprofessionally, always had their open and strenuous support.

Gentlemen; it has been charged against us as a crime peculiar to the unfortunate people who dwell within the Mahratta Ditch, that we are "led by the lawyers" in every public measure affecting the general interests of the country which may happen to become a subject of discussion at a general meeting. I take the charge, gentlemen, in its most liberal and extensive interpretation, and I would ask those who so freely prefer it whether their experience or knowledge enables them to point to a single popular movement in any country in the world which has not been directed by some master-spirit chosen by the people for his pre-eminence in judgment, courage, learning, or eloquence. It is needless at this late hour to summon before you the names of men who figure in ancient and modern history, as employing then eloquence—the peculiar attribute of the lawyer—to obtain for their countrymen their most important rights—their most valued liberties. Within the last fifty years, the wholesome influence of members of the bar has been particularly felt—France has had her Barrere—England her Brougham—Ireland has had Daniel O'Connell—and shall we, gentlemen, who, I have heard it said this night, are but twelve hundred in number, disdain to acknowledge an influence similar to that of which seven millions of Irishmen are proud?—(Applause.) Surrounding nations do not express their wonder that the genius of individuals should have raised them to the rank of leaders of the people, nor that the judgment of the public should award their most remarkable men an honorable and enviable distinction. Let us then laugh at the charge of usurpation on the part of the Bar, and of a readiness on our part to follow in a direction not indicated by our judgment. Those who cast upon us the idle imputation are evidently ignorant of the spirit and characteristics of the present age. To use the words of the latest Edinburgh Review, "the great feature of our age is the fading away of the power of individuals before the immensity of general causes. Individuals can only be politically powerful, as far as they represent a power from without independent of themselves." Thus, gentlemen, is the case with the Calcutta Bar,—they are held in esteem because they put into a brilliant and effective form the opinions we ourselves entertain.—(Applause.)

Gentlemen, I will detain you no longer. I will merely add that I have great pleasure in giving you the Calcutta Bar, because it affords me an opportunity of recanting certain heresies of which I acknowledge myself to have been culpable. Two years ago I believed that the Bar used our public meetings merely as advertisements of their talents, but I have lived to know that the conclusion was an erroneous one: I have indeed heard it frequently charged against them by their clients that they neglected their business to look after the interests of freedom.—I trust this recantation will be received in a candid spirit. I have a notable example before me of the propriety of taking advantage of the present festival, and such recantations, and have no fear, therefore, for the result:—

Gentlemen, I give you "THE CALCUTTA BAR, the best friends to the freedom of the press." (Drank with three times three and one cheer more.)

Mr. C. R. PAMMER, in returning thanks, said he thought Mr. Stoeckeler might have spared the last remark, for, with all respect to that gentleman, he would not wish it to go forth to the world that the Bar of Calcutta were ready to make so great a sacrifice; this far, however, he would cheerfully go, the Bar were ready to advocate the cause of freedom when it did not interfere with the cause of their clients. (Cheers and laughter.)

The Chamber of Commerce.

MR. W. P. GRANT, had the pleasure to propose the health of another public body in Calcutta, the Chamber of Commerce. The persons of whom it is composed, which include the whole of the mercantile community of this town, are of themselves sufficient to induce us to drink this toast with respect; but without taking up much time in prefacing the toast, he ought to be permitted to say that in any country it was gratifying, but particularly in this, where they were so far separate from friends, kindred, and country, the ordinary inducements of mankind to act together, to see a body of their countrymen influenced by one common feeling, and exerting themselves for one common purpose and that purpose the common good. (Hear.) The Chamber of Commerce had wisely confined themselves to objects which their members were peculiarly fitted to accomplish, and by so doing had become a body highly useful to this community, a body which government were glad to consult, to receive information from, and which in all matters within its own peculiar province, could and would tell the legislature how far they might go, and where they must stop, and had thus made themselves highly useful not only to the community with which they are immediately connected but to the whole country of India. (Cheers.)

MR. R. H. COCKERELL rose to return thanks but in a deficient capacity from that in which he had before presented himself to the meeting, he thanked them then as a sailor, now he spoke as a merchant. He felt much gratified that the Chamber of Commerce held so distinguished a position in the estimation of this community, and he assured the meeting, that, as far as his own knowledge went, the object the Chamber had in view was not a particular one, but for the general benefit of all parties connected with trade. (Cheers.)

The Trades Association.

Mrs. H. TORRENS proposed the Trades Association, the elder brother of the Chamber of Commerce, and not less useful, less honourable, or less respectable. He had understood when this institution was first embodied, that there were those who were, foolishly apprehensive of the consequences, but events have proved how fallacious were such fears, and that the institution has been mainly instrumental in raising the character of the tradesmen of Calcutta, and in furthering the interests of the community of which it forms so large and influential a part. It has deserved its prosperity, and must secure to the community of Calcutta a body of tradesmen publicly useful, and individually respectable. (Cheers.)

MR. BURKIN YOUNG. Gentlemen; I rise with feelings of very great pleasure on behalf of the Members of the Calcutta Trade Association to return my best thanks for the handsome manner in which it has been mentioned and proposed this evening. I am very proud to acknowledge myself a member of an Association that has earned for itself the approbation of its fellow-citizens and the good opinion of all classes of the community, and particularly so that it should be considered deserving notice on a public occasion of this nature. I assure you I can undertake to affirm, from my personal acquaintance with all its members, that it never will be found doing anything that will cause it to forfeit this good opinion, but on the contrary it will always continue to merit and deserve it; and certainly if any greater stimulus were required to its future exertion in the path of usefulness it has marked out for itself, it will be found in the very gratifying public notice that has been taken of it this evening. (Cheers.)

'The Enlightenment of the Indian People.'

Mr. DICKENS.—Gentlemen,—At this late hour of the night, I shall not detain you long in dilating on this subject. The benefits and necessity of greater knowledge in India may very well be taken for granted.

The means of public enlightenment (setting apart voluntary institutions for the purposes of instruction) are twofold,—1st, an appropriation of public revenue under Act of Parliament, to the amount (I believe) of 10 lacs,—2dly. The free press.

I am not aware that the sum which the Government is bound to spend for this purpose is exceeded. I rather believe not materially if at all—if that be the case the means are wholly made adequate to the end. The unpaid voluntary labours of the Committee of public instruction are valuable and meritorious. The exertions of Mr. Adam are most specially so; but they have an up-hill task with such means at their disposal. The extension of those means I rather hope for than expect.

Allow me, gentlemen, as my own sentiment at least, to express an earnest hope that the extension of the English language will ever be considered both on moral and political grounds, as the grand means of enlightenment. I am satisfied that by no other bridge can the hitherto impassable gulph between the Asiatic and European mind be passed by the former—by no instrument less powerful, can the slavery of caste, of observance of abstinence in meats and drinks, of ceremonial observances infesting every hour and a time of life, be broken down—and till that victory be achieved, the European and Asiatic character must remain as they are now, immiscible.

If these things are to remain in fact, whatever they may learn through the medium of the vernacular tongues, that learning will not be knowledge; for my part I esteem the free press alone, much more than equivalent, an efficiency to all the other means which the governor employs. The labours of the Committee of Public Instruction benefit a few—while they reflect credit on themselves, but to compare these labours and their effects, with the all-pervading effect of a FREE PRESS, would be to compare (as I heard the Vicar of Harrow once say, speaking of the Societies for promoting Christian knowledge and the British and Foreign Bible Societies) the lamp that illuminated the tabernacle to the pillar of fire that was in the sight of all Israel. Success, gentlemen, to the cause, however; let us drink to the Enlightenment of the People of India. (Cheers, and three times three.)

Mr. CROW returned thanks in a very neat speech, of which the following is the substance.—Gentlemen; I regret exceedingly that the place which I now occupy is not filled by the respectable native gentleman who a little while ago was in possession of it; for I am sure he would have done more justice to the duty which, in his absence, I feel it incumbent to impose upon myself. Born and brought up in India, and having my dearest interests identified with hers, I cannot but look upon myself as one of her people; and though I appear before you habited in a different manner, speak a different language, and profess a different creed from those who form the mass of the people of India, nevertheless I consider myself, and justly, one of that people; and as such I feel it my duty to acknowledge the compliment you have paid, and the good feeling you have expressed, towards, them. You could not have invoked a higher blessing upon them than enlightenment,—a blessing dear to all nations, but to none more than to the people of India, who are just emerging from the gloom of that ignorance which for centuries past has been the cause of their degradation and misery. Towards a nation situated like this, you could not have expressed a better wish,—you could not have paid it a handsomer compliment. The chairman, in proposing the toast, has alluded to the various public institutions which have been lately established under the auspices of this Government for the enlightenment of the people of India. These are certainly so many tokens of the benefits which this nation has received from its connection with the English. I shall add but one instance, the college lately established at Hoogly: it has not existed above a few months, and I am told there are now in it upwards of fifteen hundred students. Such is the spirit which the benevolent exertions of the English for the enlightenment of the people of India has already diffused among them. When I look back to the state of the people of India ten years ago, and survey the numerous institutions which have since been established for their enlightenment; when I see the respected gentleman, Mr. William Adam, now seated before me, engaged in the cause, and consider the wisdom of those who selected that gentleman for the important part he has to perform in the great work of the enlightenment of this people, I cannot but be thankful for the blessings which India has received from this Government and the people of England (cheers). Some have asked me ~~what~~ mark would the English leave in this country were their connection with it to cease. I reply, the enlightenment of the people, thru which there can be no more permanent, ~~more~~ indelible token of their present connection with the country,—a token which will be handed down unimpaired to generations yet unborn, and call forth their gratitude to this Government (cheers). I therefore conclude, gentlemen, by returning, in behalf of myself and my countrymen, my sincere, heartfelt and grateful thanks for the good wish you have expressed towards, and the handsome manner in which you have complimented, us on this occasion. (Much cheering.)

Steam Navigation.

Mr. R. H. COWKELL in proposing "Steam Communication with England, and the health of the gallant Chesney and his companions," took the opportunity of stating that though he connected the name of Chesney with Steam Communication with England, it was not to be understood that he gave a preference to the route which the gallant colonel had effected, however happy he would be to hear of a line of steamers in full operation on the Euphrates. (Hear, hear.) He reminded the meeting of their efforts ~~to~~ that Hall to obtain the boon, nay, right he would call it, of Steam communication, and he was bound to say that the King's government had done much towards effecting that great object, and he hoped that the eyes of the Court of Directors were at length opening to its immense advantages. (Much applause.)

The chairman rose and suggested that the name of Mr. Greenlaw should be embodied in the toast; the meeting, however, did not exactly adopt Mr. Dickens's suggestion, butted on drinking Mr. Greenlaw's health separately.

Mr. THACKFRAY begged to say, that Mr. Greenlaw was the zealous advocate to whom the cause of Steam Communication was most highly indebted, and he was sure that all would be unanimous in the toast he would give. Mr. Greenlaw, agitator of Steam Communication. Drank with loud acclamation.

These were all the toasts on the list; some others were introduced, but time will not permit the reporter to amplify his notice of the proceedings.

"The cause of constitutional government in Spain and Portugal," which was to have been the toast of the evening, and was assigned to Capt. T. J. Taylor, of the Madras army, was omitted, in consequence of the absence of that gentleman.

Mr. SROCKVELL voted thanks to the Chairman, which was enthusiastically carried.

Mr. Smith reminded the meeting, that however great the talent and the labours of the Chairman—the meeting must be aware, that one man unaided could not have got through the preparations for, and arrangements of, the evening he proposed, “that the thanks of the Meeting be offered to the Chairman’s co-adjutors, the Vice-President and Stewards” Carried unanimously with cheers, after which the meeting broke up—at 1 A.M.

When a great many of the gentlemen had retired, Mr Dickens said, that in consequence of the freedom of the press being celebrated on the 15th of September, the day on which the press was emancipated, many of the gentlemen belonging to the indigo factories, who were friendly to the press, were excluded from sharing in the festival, he would therefore propose in order to afford them an opportunity of participating in it, that for the future the celebration take place on the 15th of December. This resolution was carried unanimously.

MEETING OF PROPRIETORS AT THE BANK OF BENGAL.

A Meeting of the Proprietors was held on the 10th September at the Bank of Bengal (Mr Cockerell in the chair) for the purpose of receiving a report of the applications on the new subscription list, and determine the course to be pursued in relation thereto.

Mr. H. T. Princep explained the objects of the Meeting and then proposed the following Resolutions, which were seconded by Mr. Carr and unanimously adopted.

Resolved, 1st—That it appears to this Meeting that subscription has been made of the entire amount of additional capital required by Government on behalf of proprietors entitled to subscribe for the same, and that the subscribers are bound by the rules for distribution of this capital that may be passed at this Meeting.

Resolved, 2d—That the proprietors do approve the Draft of Act published in the Government Gazette of the 7th instant, and in conformity with the tenor of its provisions, resolve that the proprietors be allowed to the 1st proximo to pay up upon each share held by them respectively, the sum of 5 000 Sicca Rupees, and that those proprietors on whose behalf claims have not been submitted up to this day be allowed up to the same date to subscribe and pay in the same manner as those who have claimed.

Resolved, 3d—That if, contrary to expectation, any proprietor of a share or shares shall not subscribe for his proportion of new stock, or having subscribed shall not pay up the amount due thereon on or before the 1st proximo, the equivalent for the share or shares of old stock held by such proprietor shall be made up to him in shares of the new stock two shares of Company’s Rupees 4,000, and three-fourths of a share being given for each old share of 10,000 Sicca Rupees, the difference in the value thereof, viz. the sum of 312-8 being paid good to the Bank from the dividend payable on the profits of the Bank to the 30th September next.

The next Resolution, as originally framed, formed part of the string of Resolutions proposed and seconded as above, but was modified and then put in the following shape

Resolved, 4th—That for the benefit of proprietors absent from India, and of trustees and others who for want of means or otherwise may not have taken the necessary steps to subscribe and pay up the proportion of new stock to which they are entitled, the known agents of such proprietors, or the trustees, or any one of them, shall be allowed to subscribe and pay up on account of such shares, and to take debentures for the new stock in their own name as agents or trustees, and the Bank shall register the transfers of such stock on the application of such agent or trustee as the case may be.

This Resolution was strongly opposed by Mr Mangler and likewise by the Chairman, and the former proposed an amendment, to the effect that there was no necessity for the Bank to make any provision in favor of those who might not provide funds to pay up their subscriptions. The votes were then taken upon this amendment, when the numbers appeared to be nearly equal, and as there were a good many proxies among them which must be verified, the result will not be known till another day. We believe, however, that the apparent majority was in favor of the original motion.

The Meeting was a very full one and occupied a considerable part of the day.

We did not attend the Bank Meeting on Saturday, and were only enabled to publish a hurried report of the proceedings. We have since made enquiry as to what passed, and learn that a good deal of discussion occurred, and less unanimity prevailed with respect to another of the resolutions besides the last, than we had been led to believe.

The business opened with some explanatory remarks from Mr. H. T. Princep, who stated the purposes of the meeting to be,—first, to afford the proprietors an opportunity to express their opinions upon the Draft of the Bank Act lately published,—and secondly, to determine specifically the arrangements for paying up the new stock. On the first point all were agreed, that the Act was an important concession to the interests of the proprietors, and well adapted to meet the objects it was intended to provide for. But some feeling of disappointment soon manifested itself on the discovery that but a very small proportion of the new stock remained unclaimed—the right of subscription on only thirty-one shares standing in the name of eleven persons—many shareholders having been on the look out for a large benefit from this source, either by their being allowed to extend their own subscriptions, or by their getting a bonus out of the forfeiture and sale of the privilege of subscribing for the new stock not filled up. This feeling led to a little opposition to the second Resolution proposed by Mr. H. P. Prinsep, by which the date for receiving subscriptions, as well as the date of payment, was extended to the 1st of October. If this Resolution had not been carried, the holders of 717 shares, (and so far as affected them also, the holders of more than six shares) would have been deprived of the power of benefiting by the provision of the Act, which extended the maximum limitation of individual subscriptions from 100,000 sicca Rupees to 160,000 Company's Rupees. However, the meeting felt the illiberality of rejecting the proposition, and thereby securing an advantage to the dissenters by the sacrifice of absolute interest—but the Resolution was not passed without one or two dissentient votes. Those, however, who had built their hopes upon obtaining an increased proportion of the new stock, mustered in much greater strength to oppose the last Resolution of the same mover, the object of which was to admit agents and trustees to take new shares in their own name, on account of their constituents. The effect of this rule will naturally be to prevent any default whatever either by want of instructions or by the non-provision of funds, because the agent besides holding the security, will have the power of selling at any time for his own reimbursement, and consequently under such circumstances no agent or trustee could hesitate to subscribe, and if necessary to borrow money for the purpose of paying up the subscription within the time limited. We believe that some persons have misapprehended the proposition, and opposed it in the belief that it will give agents a power to benefit themselves at the expense of their constituents. Not so, however, they are permitted by it to take debentures for the new stock in their own names only “as agents or trustees” they will therefore under any circumstances be liable to account to their constituents for the profit upon the shares so taken, while to the Bank itself will thus obtain the obvious advantage of avoiding the liability of being made a party to suits arising out of any disputes incident to the mode of filling up the new stock. When it is considered that most of the shares on account of which there will be any difficulty to raise the additional funds now required belong to widows and orphans, it could scarcely be anticipated that much opposition would be offered to an arrangement calculated for their benefit, if well understood. The Resolution, however, was very strongly opposed, by the former and supporters of an amendment which, if adopted, would no doubt have caused a considerable list of shares in default for want of funds in addition to the few unsubscribed for, on the 1st October next, to be then available to subscribers on the spot, or in some other share rendered profitable to them. Perceiving the strength of his party, Mr. Mangles, the mover of the amendment, (which was seconded by Mr. Elliot Macnaghten,) proposed that it should be put to the vote without admitting proxies. This Mr. H. P. Prinsep firmly objected to, observing that he felt so strongly upon the question that he wished it to be kept open until every proprietor in India should have an opportunity of voting upon it: he therefore moved that the Resolution and amendment should stand over for a special Meeting on the 28th instant, and be published in the mean time. But the order party would not agree to this, and so it was determined to take the votes at the Meeting strictly according to the charter. The result of the votes after scrutiny (which reduced them more than half we believe) is that for Mr. Mangles's amendment there were 18 votes present and 8 proxies, together 26—and for the original motion 9 present and 19 proxies, together 28, being a majority of two votes in favor of Mr. Prinsep's motion. It is proper to mention that Mr. Secretary Prinsep voted as an individual proprietor merely, and that no votes were given on behalf of Government.

After this question was disposed of, Mr. Mangles moved, “That a committee should be appointed to report in what manner the operations of the Bank may be most safely and beneficially extended.” But the propositions could not be entertained, the subject of it being no part of the business for which the meeting had been specially convened. We hear that this matter has not escaped the attention of Government, but what it may be the views entertained upon it in high quarters we are yet unprepared to say. The call for information, however, is at least a favorable sign of a disposition to extend the benefits of the institution. Our own opinion is strongly in favor of the practicability of doing so.

The Bank Meeting of the 30th Sept. assembled the unprecedented number of 30 proprietors, and trustees or attorneys for proprietors. The chair was taken a little after 10 o'clock by Mr. Dorin, and the requisition having been read, which we will here introduce.

“Notice is hereby given, that under the 22d clause of the Charter of the Bank of Bengal, a general meeting will be held at the said Bank, on Friday, the 30th day of September, instant, at 10 A. M., for the following objects, viz.

“The greater part of the meeting of the 10th instant was taken by surprise at the unexpected proposition of Mr. H. P. Prinsep, and not having come prepared with proxies by which descriptions of votes the resolution was carried (the number of votes present in favour of Mr. Mangles's amendment being 18 to 9), the undersigned think it necessary for the protection of the interests of the Bank, that a notice of a duly advertised meeting should be taken on the subject.

“R. H. Cockerell, John Cockerell, by his attorney R. H. Cockerell, G. F. Graham, Artillery, Wm. Martin, W. Spicer, E. McNaghten, Ross D. Mangles, Geo. Saunders, by his attorney Ross D. Mangles, Robert Saunders, by his attorney D. Mangles, Jas. Wood, R. Wood, George Wood, W. Wood.”

Mr. H. T. Prinsep called attention to the 23d section of the charter, in which it was laid down, that requisitions for meetings by proprietors must be signed by ten proprietors; whereas he had been informed, that of those who had signed the above notice only nine were proprietors in their own right. The objection to one of the name, however (that of Captain Graham), turned out to be founded in error, and the meeting was declared to have been regularly called and duly constituted.

Mr. Elliot Macnaghten then opened the business of the meeting, by remarking with some warmth upon the manner in which he and others had been taken by surprise by the 4th resolution voted on the 10th instant. He regarded that resolution as tending to establish a dangerous precedent, and as unlawful in itself, and considering the protest that had been entered by so many proprietors against the resolution, and that a special meeting had been called for the reconsideration of it, he was surprised to learn that it had been acted upon in the mean time by the Bank Directors, by granting new shares to the agents of parties according to the terms thereof. This appeared to him a proceeding disrespectful to the proprietary. He heard indeed that the directors acted upon an opinion of the Advocate-General: but he believed that the case had not been fairly put to Mr. Pearson. Mr. Macnaghten then read an opinion given by Mr. Longueville Clarke, which declared the resolution in question to be illegal, Mr. Clarke's principal objection to it resting upon certain words in the 3d clause of the old Bank Charter, providing that certificates for parts of a share "shall be assignable and transferable in the same manner as certificates for whole shares and in no other manner," and also a like expression in the 3d clause of the New Charter stating that "part shares and certificates thereof shall be assignable and transferable in like manner as certificates for whole shares and not otherwise sever." Mr. Macnaghten said that if this unlawful act were persevered in, he should take the remedy suggested by Mr. Clarke and apply to the Court for an injunction, whether he were joined by others or not in this course of proceeding. He concluded with moving the following resolution, seconded by Mr. Cockerell, who dwelt upon the illegality of allowing subscriptions otherwise than as prescribed in the Charter, but admitted the benevolent intentions of the parties who proposed the modification which he found so objectionable.

Resolved—That the fourth Resolution proposed by Mr. Prinsep, and carried by a majority of the Meeting, held on the 10th instant, be expunged from the books of the Bank, because it is directly subversive of one of the constitutional and most protective clauses of the Bank Charter, viz. the third, which directs that the shares shall be delivered to the proprietors or their attorneys lawfully constituted, and shall be transferable and assignable by special endorsement on such certificates of the proprietors thereof respectively, their Executors, Administrators and Assigns, and in no other manner.

Mr. Prinsep remarked that the clause in the Charter, so much dwelt upon in the opinion which had been read had reference only to the registration and transfers of the old shares, but now the Bank was in a new position, the whole of the new stock having been subscribed for on account of the proprietary, and the question arose merely how they should divide it. The Resolution offered to the Meeting went too far, for it impugned the former Resolution, a Resolution formally adopted by themselves and supported by the highest legal advice they could obtain, and since acted upon—How then could they now be asked to expunge it as illegal?

Mr. H. T. Prinsep said that in bringing forward the Resolutions at the last Meeting, he had acted only as the mouth-piece of the Directors. To call it a surprise was most extraordinary, for the object of that Meeting had been advertised for months before, and the Directors would have been wanting in their duty if they had not then come forward with some propositions matured. Were they to trip up absentees in order to give a rupee each to the other proprietors for every subscription in default? Such would have been the effect of the amendment to the 4th Resolution, if it had been carried. The complaint of surprise was the more extraordinary since he had himself suggested delay in order to give every opportunity to consider the matter, but his proposition was put to the vote and overruled by a large majority. It was said, too, that proxies had been diligently got together for the occasion. So little of truth was there in this that he himself had come without any, and had even neglected to provide himself with a signature to give him two votes for some trust property of his own family. He was not less astonished to hear legal measures suggested from a quarter which professed to find his Resolution objectionable, because by possibility it might involve the Bank in litigation—but who was to question the mode of subscription that had been allowed? not the Bank certainly—not the agents or trustees, for they were the subscribers—not the parties benefited by the act. Suppose the case of an absentee who sends a power of attorney in time, but the attorney dies, so that he to suffer for want of an agent? or that a Times newspaper, arriving by the steam mail announces the death of a proprietor, long before a new power can arrive from his executor (this case has happened, said Mr. Allan)—where these parties and their families to lose the benefit of the premium on that portion of the new stock they were entitled to, by the Bank putting it out of an agent's power to subscribe with security to himself? [Here Mr. Macnaghten, after consulting with Mr. Manglick, proposed to compromise that the question should again be referred to the Advocate General to be argued before him by Counsel, but Mr. H. T. Prinsep said they were well satisfied with the opinion that had been already given, and were not disposed to stultify their own act in this manner.]—Subscriptions had already been taken under Resolutions legally passed from Mr. Fullarton, Mr. Colvin and the Government Agent.

Mr. H. T. Prinsep concluded with some remarks upon the word expunge, shewing how impossible it was to expunge any act of a former Meeting, and said the only way to meet such motion was with a direct negative.

Mr. Manglick agreed as to the impropriety of expunging their former Resolution, and said he could not vote for the present Resolution in that shape but the mover did not find another word suitable to his object, and the Resolution was therefore put and negatived on a show of hands by 15 to 9, and with proxies, 72 to 47.

Mr. Manglick then moved the following Resolution, which was seconded by Mr. E. Macnaghten

Resolved—That it be referred to the Advocate General, whether the fourth Resolution of the 10th instant, be compatible with the Charter of the Bank, and consequently be legal, with reference more especially to clause III, of that Charter.

This, upon a show of hands, was negatived by 14 to 11, and with proxies, 70 to 53.

I banks being closed to the Chair, the Meeting broke up about noon.—Calcutta Courier.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CALCUTTA COURIER.

Sir,—I have just received your paper of yesterday evening, containing a Report of the Meeting of the Proprietors of the Bank of Bengal. In this you purport to state the substance of my opinion regarding the legality of the 4th Resolution.

What that opinion was, I do not deem myself at liberty to state, as it belongs to those, by whom it was taken, but I am at liberty to prevent its being misrepresented. I must therefore beg to assure you, that the objections which you have given as mine, are the mere fictions of your Reporter, and are so inapplicable to the case, that I almost doubt whether so gross a blunder could have been unintentionally committed.

I remain, your obedient Servant,

LONGUEVILLE CLARKE.

Diamond Harbour, 1st October, 1836.

Note.—We regretted not having opportunity at the time to read the opinion, and we now regret, that we have not been able to obtain permission to publish it, which would have been the most effectual way to correct erroneous impressions created by our report.—Ed.

MEETING OF THE STEAM TUG ASSOCIATION—STEAMER FORBES.

There was a first half yearly Meeting on the 19th September, of the Steam Tug Association, to pass the accounts up to the end of August. The period embraced a few days in excess of the six months, and the statements exhibited the following result of the employment of the Forbes

95½ days occupied in tugging.
9 ditto paid for demurrage.
26½ ditto idle, or clearing dues.
64 ditto under repair.

195 days, the gross earnings of which, namely, of the 104½ days, were Co.'s Rs. 38,216 10 8 and the expenditure of every kind, 28,302 8 10

Net Profit, Co.'s Rs. 9,914 1 10 within a small fraction of five per cent., and accordingly it was resolved to make an immediate dividend of $\frac{1}{10}$ per cent. among the proprietors. On analysing the expenses, it appears that, besides the extra charges of nearly 4,000 rupees for accidents and repairs, there has been an extra expense of 2,200 rupees incurred in the cost of fuel by the high price of coal during two months—deducting these sums from the expenditure, and per contra adding to the receipts 3,000 rupees, for the net earnings of ten days lost by the accident to the Forbes in April, the net profit of the half year would have been just double what it is. The report further shewed that the application for the Forbes have been so constant during all seasons, and in general so much in excess of what could be complied with, that there is no doubt of full employment for two Tug vessels. The great delays in building the second steamer which Mr. Currie originally engaged to have ready by the 1st of August, naturally caused a great deal of disappointment to the shareholders.—though explained by Mr. Currie, with an assurance that the vessel should be completed at latest by the 15th of December.

It will interest the public to know that the arrangements for the table in the Forbes will be put upon a better footing by a more liberal allowance to the Commander for the same. Instead of a consolidated charge of 16 rupees for table and passage, the charge to passengers will now be,— for the Commander, who provides the table, Rs. 10 for passage, " 4 for ditto, engaging the use of a cabin, " 6

MEDICAL AND PHYSICAL SOCIETY.

Proceedings of a Meeting of the Medical and Physical Society, held at the Asiatic Society's Apartments, 3rd September, 1836.

Letters from the following gentlemen were read from B. P. Rooke, and A. Montgomery, Esqrs., Assistant-Surgeons of the Bombay Establishment, requesting that their names might be withdrawn from the Society.

From John Liskine, Esq., presenting to the Society, in the name of the author, a work on the Carlsbad waters, by Chevalier John de Carro, M. D., with observations on the microscopic animalculæ of the neighbourhood of Carlsbad, by A. J. Corla.

The following work was also presented for the library by Dr. Blander, of Poore, Rayer's Treatise on diseases of the skin, translated by W. Dickinson.

Dr. D Stewart laid before the meeting a case of complicated disease of the liver, heart and colon.

It was proposed by Dr. Goodeve, seconded by Dr. J. Jackson, that a certain sum be set apart annually from the funds of the Society for the purchase of Standard Medical works, and that the number of periodicals taken by the Society should be increased.

This resolution was unanimously agreed to and it was referred to the Committee of Management to make the necessary arrangements for carrying it into effect.

A report drawn up by Dr. Cantor of some experiments performed by the Committee entrusted to examine the substance brought from Assam by Dr. Wallich, and supposed by him to be analogous to the monitum ferod, was then read.

From these experiments it would appear, that the above root is altogether innocuous and cannot be identical with the Nepal poison. It was inserted into the flesh and injected into the stomach of several dogs without producing any effect whatever. The alcoholoid and watery extracts, the powdered root alone, and mixed with the dillenia speciosa (in the manner described by Dr. Wallich as followed by the Assamese) were severally tried with the same result.

The following papers were then read and discussed.

The conclusion of Dr. Wise's paper on mortification, postponed from the last meeting.

Dr. Campbell's cases of rupture of the spleen and kidney.

The 2d species of gangrene or symptomatic gangrene, is divided by Dr. Wise into that of tissues and of organs.

The 1st variety is again subdivided into mortification, as produced by diseases of the vascular system of the cellular, mucus, and osseous tissues. Under the first head is comprehended cases of gangrene caused by inflammation and other unnatural conditions of the vascular system, as ossification of the arterial coats, obstruction of the circulation in the extreme parts of the body, diseased valves of the heart, causes which lead to diminution of the nourishment and vitality of the extremities. Mortification occurs in consequence of inflammation when a vital part is excited beyond what is natural or to a greater degree than its inherent power will sustain, hence it occurs most frequently in the extreme parts of the body and in weak individuals, and it attacks tissues which are endowed with a trifling degree of vitality in preference to those which are highly vital. In speaking of gangrene as it occurs in weak, debilitated individuals, the author remarks upon the danger of amputating the limbs of those people, from the great probability that the disease will attack the stump and destroy the patient. He observes also that in these cases is a great predisposition to phlebitis, which should make us peculiarly careful how we excite that disease by tying or otherwise irritating the veins after amputation, should that operation be performed. Dr. W. quotes some cases in illustration of these remarks. Mortification of the cellular tissue is said by the author to be very frequent from the low state of vitality of that structure. In this variety is included erysipelas, phlegmonodes, carbuncle and sloughing of sores, especially syphilitic ulcers and buboes. Mortification of the muscular tissue is divided into gangrene of the mouth, of the throat, as in angina gangrenosa, and of the stomach and injuries. With regard to the 2d variety of this species of mortification or gangrene of organs, Dr. W. observes that it is exceedingly rare; but when present, is almost invariably fatal. The brain, lungs, and liver are occasionally found gangrenous.

The 3d species of mortification is called specific gangrene by the author. In this species are included mortifications produced by the use of improper articles of food or inoculation with animal poisons. The first relates chiefly to the ergot of rye. The second is subdivided into several varieties. 1st. Malignant pustule, or a species of sloughing boil occurring in unhealthy situations, amongst weak and debilitated individuals, and those who are employed as attendants upon animals affected with pustular diseases and carbuncles. The disease being attended with considerable fever and constitutional disturbance often proving rapidly fatal. 2nd. Postilential bubo, occurring in the course of the plague. 3d. Hospital gangrene, of which a very elaborate and lucid description is given; in the course of which Dr. Wise remarks upon the frequency of this disease in India, amongst prisoners in the jails of Bengal. Under this head the author includes sloughing phagedena of a venereal character.* The author speaks warmly of the employment of nitric acid in sores of this description as well as those of hospital gangrene more strictly speaking. The 5th and last variety mentioned is leprosy, which not unfrequently produces gangrene of the extremities.*

The first of Dr. Campbell's cases occurred in a recruit of the horse artillery, 22 years of age, who received a kick from a horse on the left side on the 10th November 1828. He fell to the ground breathless, but all the symptoms of having received some violent internal injury. The respiration was exceedingly difficult; the countenance pale, shrunk and anxious, and the extremities cold, the pulse was not perceptible at the wrist and he moaned frequently; slight reaction took place afterwards when he complained of great pain in the region of the spleen and hypogastrium. The next day the abdomen was much enlarged and fluctuation was manifest; he had again sunk into a death-like condition and he expired 30 hours after the accident. Upon dissection the abdomen was found to be filled with dark colored blood. The spleen, much above its natural size, was broken on its surface into 3 separate portions and resembled a mass of coagulated blood. The other organs were healthy. It is not known whether this individual had previously suffered from enlarged spleen or intermittent fever.

The 2d case was that of a syce of the horse artillery, whose horse reared and fell back upon him, crushing him under its body. The thigh bone was fractured at its upper third, and the man complained of great pain at the umbilicus and scrobitalus cordis with laborious respiration and urgent thirst. The pulse small and weak, with natural heat of skin; he continued restless and tortured with pain for about 5 hours when he expired. Upon dissection the abdomen, as in the other case, was found to be filled with dark colored blood. The spleen was broken into a mass resembling coagulated blood. The left kidney was ruptured along the entire length of its convexity, but no external signs of violence were observed. The spleen was of the natural size but the ruptured kidney was large than ordinary and of an unusually pale color.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE ASIATIC SOCIETY.

Wednesday Evening, the 7th September, 1836.

The Honorable Sir Edward Ryan, President, in the chair.

The Proceedings of last meeting were read.

Lieutenant Newbold was proposed as a member by the Secretary, seconded by Dr. Mill.

Lieutenant S. Tickell, proposed by Dr. Pearson, seconded by Mr. Prinsep.

Mr. Vincent Tregear was proposed as an honorary member by Capt. A. Cunningham, seconded by the Secretary:—referred to the Committee of Papers.

Read, letters from Dr. R. Harlan and Professor Lea of Philadelphia, acknowledging their election as honorary members, and presenting various works which will be found under the head of "Library."

Read, a letter from Mr. J. K. Kane, Secretary American Philosophical Society, Philadelphia, acknowledging receipt of Researches, Vol. XVIII, and Index, and Journal Vol. III; and presenting publications in return.

Also, letters from M. P. H. Fuss, Secretary of the Imperial Academy of St. Petersburg; and from Mr. Gabriel Dobrenetei, Secretary of the Hungarian Society at Pest, (in the Hungarian, Latin, and English languages,) noticing the receipt of M. Csoma's Tibetan Dictionary and Grammar.

Report of the Committee of Papers on CAVELLY VENKATA LACHMIA's proposed renewal of Col. Mackenzie's investigations.

The reference from the Madras Government, for an opinion on the merits of Venkata Lachmia Pandit's proposition, however complimentary to our Society, might perhaps have been addressed with better effect to the Madras Literary Society, which must be far better acquainted than we can pretend to be, both with the character and attainments of the individual, and with those desiderata in the History of the Peninsula, which he undertakes to elucidate.

We, however, enjoy one advantage in the possession of Mr., now Professor, Wilson's Descriptive Catalogue of Col. Mackenzie's Collection, which, aided by other published works on the history of the Southern Hindu States, may enable us to form a tolerable opinion on the question.

It might be supposed from the entire silence of Venkata on the subject of Mr. Wilson's labours in the statements he has handed up to the Madras Government of the "Progress to the Researches" in which he is engaged, that he was a total stranger to the descriptive catalogue; although the brief notice he gives of each state and dynasty appears based upon the summary contained in the introduction to that work, both as to arrangement and detail; and certainly it adds not one iota to the information made public by Professor Wilson in 1828.

The object of Sir Alexander Johnston, in persuading the Pandit to found a Native Literary Society at Madras was, doubtless, that through the gratuitous aid of those best acquainted with the languages and traditions of the country, and having connections or friends dispersed over the Peninsula, the learned world might be put in possession of translations and digests of the mass of MSS. collected by Col. Mackenzie; at the same time that other materials of a similar nature might be sought out and accumulated*. The Vice-President of the Royal Asiatic

* The above is but a very brief and imperfect abstract of Dr. Wilson's extremely elaborate paper, but it is impossible to make one more complete in a report of this nature.

* See Mad. Lit. Soc. Journal, No. 12, p. 173.

Society does not seem to have contemplated the organization of an extensive paid establishment of collectors, pandits and copyists; otherwise it is probable he would have addressed himself to the Government itself, either directly or through the natural channel of the Madras Auxiliary Society. For he would have anticipated that such an extensive scheme would need the control of a master head, accustomed to generalization, and capable of estimating the value and drift of inscription and legendary evidence. The qualifications of Cavelly Venkata for such an office, judging of them by his "abstract," or indeed of any native, could hardly be pronounced equal to such a task, however useful they may prove as auxiliaries in such a train of research. The pandit's original and arithmetical mode of weighing authorities, of which examples may be found in every item of his statement, is any thing but calculated to contradict this assumption. His remarks on the first, or ancient Nandavarum dynasty of Audhra, may be cited as an instance:

"As this is a very obscure dynasty, confidence can only be placed in the inscriptions. From the materials already possessed in the collection of Col. Mackenzie, I suppose one-eighth of the history of this dynasty is complete, and the remainder should be completed by further research."

The Mackenzie Manuscripts (embracing, as Cavelly Venkata says in his letter to Government, using the words of the late Colonel himself*, no less than twenty-one different alphabets and fourteen different languages) have been for some time at Madras deposited in the College Library. We have no means of knowing whether during that period the pandit (himself a servant of the college) has published or undertaken the translation or analysis of any part of its contents. In the absence of any such testimony of his competence, contrasted with what will be presently urged, it seems impossible to recommend any large outlay of public money in the way he proposes.

Not that it is undesirable to complete the examination of the Mackenzie papers. On the contrary, all who have read Mr. Wilson's catalogue, will grant that to be an object of high, of national importance; especially when it is asserted that many of the volumes are going rapidly to decay, and may not be available a few years hence. The British Indian Government has spent a lakh of rupees in purchasing these ancient records: to refuse the requisite aid for their examination and conversion to public use when they are known to contain a vast store of curious and interesting matter, would be false economy only equalled by the case of the Buchanan MSS. in Calcutta, which cost even a larger sum, and which the Government has recorded its unwillingness to print even free of expense, or to take a single copy of it printed by others.†

But happily, in regard to the Mackenzie collection, such neglect cannot now be feared. Independent of Mr. Wilson's able summary, we are aware that Captain Harkness, Sec. of the Roy. As. Soc., has undertaken to translate and digest a portion of the manuscripts in London, and M. Jacquet of Paris has intimated that the mass of the Colonel's inscriptions, to which the Hon'ble Court of Directors have handsomely allowed him free access, are to be included in the "Corpus Inscriptionum Indicarum," upon which he is now busily engaged; while in Madras itself has lately appeared an able and zealous expositor in the Reverend Mr. W. Taylor, whose previous study of, and publication on, the history of the Peninsula, added to his acquaintance with the Tamil and Telinga languages, eminently fit him for the task and, point him out as the proporess, if not the only, individual capable of fulfilling the grand object proposed by Sir A. Johnston.

This gentleman has already gone deep into the subject. At a great expense and sacrifice of time, he has published a variety of "Oriental Historical Manuscripts" in the original character and in translation; with a connective commentary, shewing their bearing on the general history of the country.

The Editor of the Madras Journal, indeed, announces that Mr. Taylor has further undertaken a careful examination of the whole of the College MSS., and that he promises "a paper or series of papers on the subject*." It would certainly be most desirable that such examination should not be cursory or incomplete, that it should not leave any thing to be done by others, who would have again to travel over the same ground of previous study to be capable of undertaking it. It would, in short, be most expedient to secure the services of Mr. Wm. Taylor publicly, for the thorough examination of the Mackenzie records; to allow him such assistance as he might require for the period, (with him necessarily so much shorter than could be allowed to any other,) which he might fix for the task; to unite Cavelly Venkata pandit with him, should he be desirous of assistance, (although from an expression at page 63 of his second volume, it may be imagined that he would not count much on the aid of the late Colonel's native establishment,) and to sanction the publication of those records, which he might select as the most valuable, either in elucidation of history or native science, philosophy, religion, customs, &c.

For the collection of new materials, the zeal of the numerous members of the English and Native Literary Societies of Madras, (scattered through the various districts,) will need only the suggestions and direction of a leader so well qualified, to accumulate them, without any necessity for a paid establishment. The circulation of a scientific journal throughout the presidency will materially contribute, and doubtless has contributed, to excite curiosity to such objects among the "gentlemen of literary endowments," whose correspondence either with Mr. Taylor or with Cavelly Venkata, might advantageously be allowed the indulgence of exemption from postage.

Without first ascertaining Mr. Taylor's willingness to accept the office here chalked out, or consulting him on the extent of the aid he would require, it is impossible to estimate the probable outlay; but the Government records will furnish comparative data, in the sums paid for the "oriental translating establishment," entertained for a period under the late Secretary of the Asiatic Society.

The volumes of Mackenzie papers in our library might advantageously be added to the other documents for the proposed scrutiny, so that the whole might be published continuously; but these details will naturally come under consideration hereafter, should the Government agree in the view taken by the Asiatic Society, and resolve to entrust the undertaking to the individual pointed out, either directly or through the medium of the Society (here or at Madras), which might exercise its judgment as to the final publication, should Mr. Taylor consent to labour under its auspices.

For the Committee of Papers.

Resolved.—That the Society concur in the view taken by the Committee of Papers, particularly as to the expediency of engaging the eminent services of Mr. W. Taylor for the examination of the Mackenzie MSS., and that the Secretary be empowered respectfully to communicate this opinion, in reply to the Government.

Mr. Charles Brownlow submitted to the Society the following proposition, relative to a complete copy of the Alif Leila, or Arabic original of the 1001 nights entertainments, lately purchased by him from the estate of Major Macan, well known as the Editor of the Shah Nameh.

To JAMES PRINSEP, Secretary Asiatic Society, &c. &c.

Having become the possessor of the original of the complete Arabian Nights Entertainments, formerly the property of Major Macan, apparently the first that has ever reached India, I am desirous of adding to oriental literature a work which has long been a desideratum with Eastern scholars, by its immediate publication. I trust that my views regarding the importance of this work are not unreasonable; at least I am not alone in my opinion, for no book extant has ever enjoyed such universal popularity as this, even in its translated form. Much of its narrative depicts, with miraculous fidelity, that most difficult class of incidents to describe with interest—the incidents of common life; and, beneath even its most grotesque and impossible circumstances, there is a moral beauty—a knowledge of humanity discoverable, which comes home to all, and throughout, a vivid power of description, which is unequalled in any other production, and addresses itself to the mind with an effect almost pictorial. It is the remark of an orientalist of high repute, speaking of this unique and extraordinary work, that “we here behold a genuine portrait of the spirit and character, the common life and domestic manners, of a once powerful nation, which excelled in arts as well as in arms, in three quarters of the globe; in these tales we see the Arabs, depicted by themselves, in the tents of the desert, and in the courts of the Caliphs. We mingle among their merchants, join their travelling caravans, visit them in their social circles, and even penetrate into their harems.”

If the book appeal thus powerfully to the European reader, whose sympathies are weakened by distance and difference of habit, how much more emphatically must it address itself to the inhabitants of the East, in the overflowing and beautiful language in which it was originally written.

My chief object in this paper is to draw public attention to the document, and to give such evidence regarding its authenticity as I have been able to collect, under the very difficult and embarrassing condition of having no other complete copy to refer to. My attention has been directed, in the first instance, to the MS. alone, which contains the unbroken series of one thousand and one nights; next, to its quality, which is reported on by competent persons to be clear, and remarkably free from literal errors.

My next step was to examine the MS. with the printed edition of the “Two Hundred Nights,” published some years since in Calcutta, whence it appears that the latter is a set of excerpts merely, made, in many instances, without regard to the literary value of the selection, and in some, overlooking even the integrity of the tales. These fragments have been arbitrarily renumbered as the “first two hundred nights.”

I have been fortunate enough to obtain a copy of that edition of the original now in the course of publication at Breslau, by Professor Habicht, an orientalist of high attainments; he has devoted his life (and it had need be a long one to enable him to fulfill his task), to the publication of a complete edition of this work; he has procured copies of the MS., perfect and imperfect, from Tunis, from Cairo, and from the library of the Baron Silvestre de Sacy, and is proceeding with the publication, subject to the critical collation of these MSS. I find, on comparing the MS. in my hands, with the edition of Habicht, as far as published, i. e. to upwards of three hundred and fifty nights, that no important discrepancies occur, though, in transcripts of this length, there will always be found considerable differences. This fact is curiously illustrated by the German Professor, who has carefully set forth the variations, omissions, redundancies, and interversions of order, found on comparison of his various

MSS. It is likewise stated by M. Trebutien, in his preface to a recent French translation of this work, (published in 1829,) that he collated twelve manuscripts, and among them those of the King's Library at Paris, and the Bedleian copy, which presented continual discrepancies, both as to style and the order of the tales, which every copyist had arranged according to his own taste. These differences, though they would be important in a historical paper, are of little consequence in a series of fictions. They have manifestly resulted from the carelessness or caprice of the transcriber, and do not affect the value of the work. All that can be done, under these circumstances is to adopt the reading most consistent with the contents.

Beyond the print to which Habicht's edition extends, there exist here no means of continuous comparison. The evidence of genuineness is strengthened, however, by finding, that the portion of the original already known in the Calcutta edition, is found in the manuscript in my possession, except that the stories, in the latter, stand in their natural and proper connexion with the remainder of the text. The tales generally correspond in their order with those found in Scott's translation of 1801, taking into account those contained in the supplementary volume, (translated from Wortley Montague's MS.) and allowing for the omission of those which the translator has deemed it best, from motives which he assigns, to pass over.

A remark made by the Baron Purgstall (Von Hammer) on the subject of Galland's translation, is another strong proof of the authenticity of the manuscript before me. He says, “the MS. used by Galland” was far from complete; and if he published no more stories, it was not because the remainder were less deserving of translation, but because he had no more in his possession. The imperfection of his manuscript compelled him also to invent, as he has done, a conclusion to that story of the Sultan of the Indies:—we shall find that Scheherzadi was saved from death, neither by her many amiable qualities, nor by her inexhaustible tales, but by her having, during the ‘thousand and one nights,’ borne the Sultan three children!” Trebutien's translation, the result of the collation of twelve of the best manuscripts in Europe, confirms this; it is a literal translation of the MS. now under consideration: the passage occurs at the thousand and first night, and is unquestionably one of the most pathetic and beautiful in the whole work! To the above may be added the strong internal evidence deducible from the uniform character of the style throughout. The manuscript is open for general examination, and I shall gratefully appreciate the opinion and advice of competent orientalists.

With reference to my intention of publishing, we have great advantages in the mechanical facilities, which we can so readily command, in printing oriental works in this country; and a work of this kind, which would take many years in Europe, might be readily produced here in less than twelve months. We have our disadvantages too: for it is far from probable, that any editor could be procured here, possessing the high qualifications and the indefatigable industry of the Professor before named, united with the leisure necessary for the undertaking: one who would carry through the formidable labour of collation, of elaborate verbal criticism, and the compilation of a lexicon of words found in the original Arabic of this work, but in no other authority extant! We may despair of this; but it is not too much to say, that an edition, accurate in all essential particulars, may be brought through; and I will not conceal, that it would be a source of great gratification to me to be the means of giving to the classical literature of the East a book which, while it has enjoyed throughout Asia and the civilized world a reputation equalled by none, has been heretofore, in its complete and original form, but a name.

C. BROWNLOW.

Calcutta, September 5, 1836.

Resolved unanimously.—That Mr. Brownlow is entitled to the warmest thanks of the Society, and of all interested in oriental literature, for his disinterested exertions in regard to the Alif Leila, and for his laudable wish to make public the valuable and complete edition he has become possessed of. As it seems possible, by further comparison of the manuscript with the recent translation of M. Trebutien, and with the Arabic printed version of Professor Habicht, and the incomplete volumes published in Calcutta, to add in some degree to the guarantee of its authenticity, the Committee of Papers is requested to enter upon this examination, and report upon the extent of patronage to be accorded by the Society to Mr. Brownlow's laudable enterprise.—Journal of the Asiatic Society for August.

BOMBAY BRANCH OF THE ROYAL GEOGRAPHICAL SOCIETY.

We have just been favored with a copy of a publication which has recently emanated from the small but active branch of the Geographical Society established at this Presidency.

This institution, as some of our readers no doubt are aware, was established in 1831, in consequence of a suggestion from Mr. Elphinstone, founded upon a supposition that Bombay offered peculiar advantages for the collection of Geographical knowledge from being the head-quarters of the Indian Navy. Since then a letter received from him contains the following observations on this subject, which are published in the Society's Report.

"I am extremely obliged for our zealous support of my recommendation of the Geographical Society. I do hope it will receive cordial assistance from those whose duties enable them to promote its views. I take an interest in it, less for this credit of the nation, than of the Presidency and of India. We have some reason to complain that paths of inquiry which are accessible to people in Europe are closed to Indians; but here is one in which all the advantages are on our side; and if we show less activity than our countrymen at home, I do not know what excuse is to be offered. The search of the public records ought certainly to produce something. Captain Burnes is a host for zeal and opportunity of giving it employment.

The Persian Gulf and Red Sea, and their borders, afford most promising ground for enquiry. I believe the survey ships are now in the Red Sea; and if there is any body at Mocha, they might, by examining the Somaleas, and other people from the opposite Coast of Africa, who come in numbers to Mocha, get a great deal of valuable information both about geography, strictly so called, and manners. Even the Company's oldest provinces would yield much in the department of statistics, which would be both curious and useful at home."

Among the papers now published by the Society is one from Lieut. Whitelock, of the Indian Navy, on the Private Coast in the Persian Gulf, containing, among other matters an interesting account of the Pearl fishery in the neighbourhood, which, according to Lieut. Whitelock, gives employment to no less than 30,000 men, and produce 40 lakhs of rupees worth of Pearls annually.

A paper by Lieut. Young and Mr. Christopher of the same service, on the Maldives, has also been published at length by the Society.

This curious group of islands, though on the direct track of ship bound for this port, Calcutta and China, has curiously enough, been scarcely ever examined, and never, until lately, surveyed with care. This consequence has been, that several wrecks have taken place among the dangerous passages it affords. Within the last year or two, indeed, there have been no less than three such; and there is reason to believe that disasters have occurred among the islands of which a few fragments are the only traces remaining.

These circumstances, and the desire of the Bengal Government to aid the projects for steam navigation entertained some time since in Calcutta, induced the Bombay Government to order a careful survey of the islands. Captain Moresby was appointed to the duty, and the result, after two years of incessant labour occasioned by the intricate nature of survey—which comprised an examination of an almost endless number of small coral islands and reefs and the loss of a large number of the crew of the vessels employed, from a violent epidemic peculiar to the spot, has been one of the most accurate and beautiful charts we ever witnessed.

At the approach of monsoon at the end of the first year's survey, when it became necessary for Captain Moresby to return to Bombay for a short time, Lieut. Young and Mr. Christopher, from a desire to improve the condition of the inhabitants, and to become better acquainted with their habits and customs, volunteered to remain at the islands during the absence of the vessel to which they were attached. These intentions, however, were frustrated by severe illness, obliging first one, and then the other to leave, but during their short residence they managed to collect a good deal of statistical and other information which has been laid before the Society, and forms one of the most interesting portions of their publication. Unfortunately the document is too long for our columns. We must, therefore, confine ourselves to the following short abstract of a paper by Captain Moresby on the same subject. After noticing the difficulties he had to encounter from the suspicion of the natives as to his object, he states with regard to the present state of the clusters of Islands or Atolls which comprise the Maldives—that "The Natives observe the Atolls to be waisting away, in some the cocoa nut trees are standing in the water: in another the black soil of the island is discernible at low water thirty feet from the beach: the south east side of an island in Phaidee Pholo Atoll is entirely gone, but is marked by a banyan tree in the water. They say that some islands have disappeared entirely, and instance near the island Wardoo a rocky shoal which (they say) was once an island in the Atoll Milla Dou. Some of the outer edges of the island have fallen into the sea, which is fathomless in those parts. It is, however, acknowledged that reefs have arisen from the water, and gradually formed islands; and the inhabitants of Male remember the outer edge of a circular reef in their harbour to have had two fathoms in the shoalest part, which is now dry at low water.

"They mark the approach of evil days also in the diminution of population and general deterioration: yet the necessities of life are so abundant, that a beggar is never seen; nor can this retrogression be attributable to war of dissension, for they have been in peace for many years; and now have no army with the exception of a Militia formed out of about four-fifths of the male inhabitants of Malé, the whole population of that island being only between 1,500 and 2,000, of whom the majority are females.

"The awkwardness of their sword and spear exercise on festivals, shows that they are little accustomed to use them. Their only duty is to serve in rotation (forty together) with musquets at the palace.

"The declining state of commerce is, probably, the chief cause of their present distresses. Lieutenant Robinson observes, that Pyrrad speaks of thirty or forty vessels loaded with cowries, and one hundred with coconuts, annually leaving the island, but now not more than one-fifth that number of vessels altogether visit the islands. Nevertheless, the profits of the Maldiva trade are considerable. The vessels, in which it is carried on are of about one hundred tons burthen, commanded sometimes by Europeans, and sometimes by natives. Presents having been made as port-dues, godowns are assigned, and shops opened, where the traders barter for the country produce. Then natives bring dried bonito, con, coconuts, cowries and tortoise-shell. There is abundance of the last article. Cowries are valued at one rupee per goolah, which is a bundle of about 1,200. Coconuts of the island are prized for keeping much longer than those of the Coast. Coir from Lilla don-Matis is estimated at thirty per cent more than that at any other Atolls. Bonito is usually taken to Sumatra, where a lac is sold for 2000 Spanish dollars, having been purchased at Malir for sometimes less than 2000 rupees. In 1824 no less than seventy-six lacs of h were purchased by English vessels, alone; in another subsequent year, fifty six, but in another, only ten. Flats also are exported, they are made of a grass which grows in the southern islands. In exchange are given rice, betel-nuts, tobacco, common crockery ware, red handkerchiefs, and sugar. There is little demand for the two last mentioned articles, as the natives extract from the coconut a kind of sugar called 'ghoor,' which tastes like honey, and they wear the native cloth, which is woven principally at Milos Meadow Atoll. They often spend weeks in the manufacture of a single piece, which enables them to make it both pretty and strong, notwithstanding their ill constructed looms. Rice is purchased at Malir and Chittagong at eight rupees per candy, and is sold at Malir for goods to the value of sixteen or twenty rupees. This system of barter, however, detains the masters of vessels four or five months, during which their crews suffer much from sickness.

"The sickness to which strangers are most liable is a bowel complaint, which happens peculiar to those islands. The only remedy is immediate departure for the continent. About fifty years ago, the Malabars took Malir and held it for some time, when they were attacked by this disease, and compelled to give up their conquest. Since that event, the Malabars have believed that the Maldivians in revenge supply them from their coast with poisoned water. Dr. Campbell has collected many cases in which its destructive effects upon foreigners is shown, but the natives also appear liable to it, for in one instance nearly the whole population of an island was carried off. There appear to be few other diseases of importance, with the exception of beriberi. Fevers are common, but small pox is unknown, except in cases of importation from the continent. Quarantine laws, however, exist to prevent such cases. Dr. Campbell attributes the unhealthiness of strangers partly to the lagoons and marshes formed by the lagoons throughout the islands and partly to the unvarying temperature of the climate. When the B. naves first visited the islands, the monsoon had just cleared away, the thermometer ranged between 80° and 82° when the violent monsoon showers set in, it fell as low as 75°, but rose only to 80°, and after the monsoon the range was between 82° and 85°. The dews were at times hardly perceptible on shipboard."

The unhealthiness of the climate has been long notorious, and it has doubtless been the great obstacle to foreign intercourse and internal improvement. But the intellectual and moral disposition of the inhabitants appears such as would justify warm expectations in the philanthropist. Among themselves, the Maldivians are quiet and inoffensive.

War and murder are scarcely known, theft is uncommon. Timidity is their greatest weakness, but this is not sufficient to overcome their humane feelings, as many shipwrecked strangers (among others Laval) have borne ample testimony. Extreme gentleness of disposition and disinclination to crime has imparted mildness to an ultra-despotic Government. No man may presume to sit in the royal presence. The Sultan attires himself after the manner of an India Mussulman, but no other dare wear more than a cloth around the loins, and a plain red handkerchief on the head. The pilot of the Benares wore a blue vest on board, but invariably took it off before landing. The property of the principal ministers as well as of all other government servants, falls to the Sultan in case of death. Notwithstanding this contempt of freedom, the severest punishment is scourging and exile to one of the barren islands in the south. Crimes of greater or less magnitude are punished with banishment to more or less barren islands. Minor offenders are merely scourged. Sometime since some culprits escaped to the Malibu Coast, and were pardoned by the Sultan in consideration of the perils which they had encountered. No bad consequences follow this leniency, for here the Government is secured, as well by the mildness of its subjects, as by the veneration with which the Maldivians regard all superiors.

"Their mats, mosques, tombs, and horts, are evidence of great mechanical ingenuity. Considerable taste is shown in constructing the tanks which are used for ablution in the burial grounds. Some houses (but in ruins) were observed to be built of madreporie, one of them being of two stories. All the houses are very neat and are shut out from the soil by a fence five or six feet high. Rows of betel and coconut trees line the road, which are excellently constructed in all the islands, but particularly at Malir.

"Nor do the natives appear insufficient to improve the soil (but particularly the chief) convinced a strong desire to become acquainted with our language, and with our knowledge. But no great exertion can at present be expected from them. Habitual illness has debilitated their constitution, although this might be remedied (perhaps) by improving the soil and the cultivation of their soil, which in its present state, is a fruitful source of disease. In the southern island is the least cultivation, and the most ruin which falling, upon a light sandy soil, produces a vast number of wild plants, whose decay infects the air with disease, and here accordingly were observed the greatest number of infirmities. The water also of these islands is bad and brackish in the wells, but this partly remedied by collecting the rain from the trees in the rainy season. At Malir and in the Northern islands, the appearance of the people is improved."

The Society have also published some papers on the Indis by Lieut. Wood, who has been employed by Government in surveying that River. As so much has recently appeared in our columns on the same subject, we shall merely give an extract from Lieutenant Wood's Journal, containing a narrative of his passage in the little steamer Indus from Hyderabad to the Sea. The result of his experience it will be observed is rather unfavorable to the navigation of the river, in the Delta at least, and on this account it is the more important that it should obtain as much publicity as possible.

"February 16.—Left in the Indus steamer for Ghora-Baree. The steamer's draft is three feet four inches. For ten miles we shot down the stream in fine style, the depth never under one and a quarter fathom. Here the stream became very foul, and the steamer stuck fast on a bank in the centre of the channel. At this very place a similar occurrence happened to the Juntee, which took Mr. Heddle down to Ghora-Baree. After remaining an hour on the sandbank, the force of the current cut away the sand from under the bottom, and she swung to her anchor in deep water. It was now blowing fresh, accompanied by clouds of dust. To trace the channel farther was impossible, and we remained here for the night.

February 17.—Started at day light, passed Tricul and Jink without accident; but a little above Bunna we struck with great violence, and remained immovable in two feet water. A month back there were two and three fathoms of water in the same spot; the deep channel is now on the right bank; it was then on the left. Three quarters of an hour after we struck, there were two fathoms under the bow; when we ran aground, there were two feet. The run and entrance of the steamer are favourable to her getting off sand banks, when the current is strong. Her keel has only to be hove in an oblique line with the direction of the steam, when the current entering under the counter, or bow, quickly cuts away sand, and settles in deep water.

February 18. Left Bunna at sunrise; reached Noorookanad, a distance of nearly forty miles, without accident. Here the river is particularly foul and wanders in many channels over the whole of its inundated bed. Seldom more than one of the these channels is navigable; this one we were not fortunate enough to enter, and after searching in vain for a passage by the one we entered, the steamer took the ground: the current was rapid, and her keel made her roll and strike heavy. Half an hour after she struck, a bank, but angle deep, had formed all along the lee-side, the lower paddle boards on this were buried in the sand, which here, from the eddies caused by the boards, was a foot above the water. On the other side there were four feet fore and aft. The vessel was lying athwart the steam, and pressed up, as it were, against a steep wall. We were four hours in this situation. The boat has now swung to her anchor. We had three pilots on board to-day but only one when the steamer grounded.

"The events of this day give a good insight into the navigation of this river. Were a line of sounding to be taken across the river where we now are, I doubt not that two and half fathoms would in some part of the line be obtained, as this depth has been found somewhere in every section yet measured. The deep channels are not connected; they are often merely ruts or ditches, which do not communicate with each other. The country boats which descend the river with cargo at this season, keep a small pilot boat rounding a-head. If the same precaution is necessary for a steamer, which doubtless it is, what will steam do on the Indus in these months—nothing; the vessel must not outstrip the pilot boat.

"February 19.—Arrived at the mouth of the Seane,* This morning a Sindee boatman voluntarily tendered his services, to pilot the steamer down the Seane. He desired no payment, and would submit to be flogged, if he got the boat aground. We had not proceeded two miles, when she took the ground, and heeled nearly over; three of the paddle boards were splintered.† The boatman did his best, for the Cutch pilot and myself were both looking out at the time. Though the Sindee had not performed his part of the arrangement, it would hardly have been justice for us to fulfil ours."

To conclude, the Geographical Society appears at last to have taken firm root, and to be producing perennial supplies of goodly fruit. From Government the Society has met with the most encouraging support; having in addition to an annual subscription, and the gift of a room in the Town Hall for its papers, received copies of all the public records connected with geographical subjects. It has also received a most flattering communication from the Geographical Society of Paris, which appears by some means or another not mentioned to have become informed of its existence, and has proposed an exchange of publications. To the officers of the Indian Navy, however, the Society is above all indebted for the zeal they have displayed in its behalf, and for their numerous communications, which alone will almost enable it to accomplish the views of Mr. Elphinstone, and prove a credit to the Presidency and to India. It is to be hoped, at the same time, that, as it becomes better known, it will meet with more general support throughout the three Presidencies, furnishing as it does, the means of collecting and condensing on the spot without the delay attending a reference to a Society in England, all the information collected in India relating to geographical science.—Bombay Courier.

BOMBAY BRANCH LITERARY SOCIETY.

At a meeting of the Bombay Branch of the Royal Asiatic Society, held on Wednesday, 31st August.

The ordinary business of the Society having been transacted,

The following letter from the Hon'ble George Turnour, of the Ceylon Civil Service, presenting to the Society his "Outline of Cingales History, and specimen of the Mahawansa, with a translation" was read.

Kandy, July 8, 1836.

Sir,—I have to beg the favor of your presenting the accompanying pamphlet to the Literary Society of Bombay. It is intended, as explained in the introduction, to serve as a prospectus to an historical work, in the publication of which I am now engaged.

Convinced of the utter hopelessness of success in attracting attention to a publication connected with oriental literature, which in other hands has already disappointed public expectation, I have adopted the present preparatory course, with the view of eliciting the criticism of oriental societies and scholars on this particular work, before it issues from the Press, and of thereby at once obtaining either a confirmation or refutation of the expectations I entertain as to its pointing out the road to a new and interesting field of research in Asia.

In the proceedings of the Asiatic Society published in the Journal of July last year, an invitation will be found on my part to the members of that Institution, to enter upon that criticism, whenever the work might be submitted to them. I have no doubt, from the manner in which the request was then received, of its being complied with. It would be satisfactory to me, if oriental scholars in the Bombay Literary Society also afforded an opinion on the portion of the original Pali work, contained in the pamphlet, and the general inference deduced therefrom in the introduction, as much for the guidance of those who are incapable of consulting the text, as to enable me to decide on the propriety of proceeding in my present undertaking.

I have, &c.

GEORGE TURNOUR.

To the Secretary to the Literary Society, Bombay.

It was then proposed by the Rev. Dr. Wilson and seconded by the Hon'ble J. Farish, Esq.

That the best thanks of the Society be conveyed to the Honorable George Turnour, Esq. for his acceptable present; that the Society subscribe for two copies of the larger work which he proposes to publish: and that

* Seane is a local division of the Hugamree branch, by which the latter is connected with the main river.
† In the part of the Journal presented to the Society, it is not stated in what manner the steamer was extricated from this difficult situation.

such of the members of the Committee, and of the Society, as may be inclined to state their opinions on the probable results of his most laudable labours, be recommended to communicate with him personally.

The President presented to the Society his refutation of Muhammadism in Persian, in reply to Hajee Muhammad Hashim.

In consequence of information having been received since the last Meeting of the Society, of the lamented death, at Rajcote, on the 9th ultimo, of the Secretary to the Society, T. M. Dickinson, Esq.

It was proposed by the Hon'ble J. Parish, Esq. and seconded by the President.

That this meeting record its deep sense of the great loss to the cause of Oriental Literature, which has been sustained by the early removal of that gentleman, whose distinguished talents and rare attainments afforded the highest promise, and whose able and interesting communications to the Society, and fidelity and zeal in the discharge of the duties of the important office which he filled, merit the tribute of its grateful remembrance.—Bombay Gazette.

AGRICULTURAL AND HORTICULTURAL SOCIETY.

At a General Meeting of the Agricultural and Horticultural Society, held at the Town Hall, on Wednesday, the 14th September, 1836, at $\frac{1}{2}$ past 9 a. m.

PRESENT.

Sir Edward Ryan, President, in the Chair.

Dr. Wallich,	James Pattie, Esq.,
Hon'ble Colonel Rehling,	C. R. Prinsep, Esq.,
Sir J. P. Grant,	Willis Earle, Esq.,
James Kyd, Esq.,	Nawaub Thowerjung,
William Storm, Esq.,	C. Trebeak, Esq.,
D. Hare, Esq.,	D. Syers, Esq.,
H. M. Low, Esq.,	E. Harding, Esq.,
Capt. Thomas Leach,	and
Archibald Grant, Esq.,	J. R. Bagshaw, Esq.,

VISITORS.

G. A. Prinsep, Esq., and Dr. Helfer.

Dr. Wallich intimated, that Mr. Bell being unable to attend the meeting, in consequence of a domestic calamity, had requested him to officiate as Secretary.

The proceedings of last meeting were then read, and confirmed.

The following gentlemen, proposed at the last meeting, were balloted for and elected members of the Society, viz.

Henry Walters, Esq.,	R. W. Chew, Esq.,
T. A. Wise, Esq.,	A. M. Mills, Esq., and
D. McLeod, Esq.,	Dr. G. G. Macpherson.

The following gentlemen were proposed as members of the Society, viz.

R. Lowther, Esq., of Allahabad, proposed by Mr. Bell, seconded by Dr. Wallich.

C. Hutchins, Esq., proposed by Dr. Strong, seconded by Mr. Bell.

G. U. Adam, Esq., proposed by William Storm, Esq., seconded by Dr. Wallich.

P. Macarthur, Esq., of Kishnaghur, proposed by William Storm, Esq., seconded by Dr. Wallich.

A. Macarthur, Esq., Kishnaghur, proposed by William Storm, Esq., seconded by Dr. Wallich.

Dr. Wallich stated that the supplies of seed already received by the Society, having been found insufficient to meet the wants of members, Captain White, of the Orient, had been requested to furnish a memorandum of such seeds, as had been brought out by him, a list of which he now submitted for the inspection of the Society, a small quantity of each having been sown on trial in the Botanical Gardens, on the 26th August.

Resolved,—That an arrangement be entered into with Captain White, for the purchase of these seeds, for distribution to members.

Captain Leach placed on the table a box of English seeds, as a present to the Society.

Dr. Wallich read a private letter to his address from Captain Jenkins, regarding a very superior description of pear of the unusual size of 12 $\frac{1}{2}$ inches in circumference. Captain Jenkins has been requested by Dr. W. to send down some grafts of the tree on which the above were produced.

The following communications were then read, and presentations severally alluded to in their respective advices, submitted to the Meeting.

No. 1.—From C. Hyde, Esq., Collector of Government Customs, to the Secretary, dated 8th Sept. conveying the consent of the Government to the free export and import of seeds, on account of the Society.

No. 2.—From F. Macnaghten, Esq., Secretary Government Savings Bank, to Mr. Bell, dated 10th Sept. intimating the investment in the 4 per cent. loan of Co.'s Rs. 500 from accruings or interest on the funds of the Society.

No. 3.—From Mr. J. Warren, to the Secretary, dated Sydney, 28th May, advising dispatch of seeds per Bencoolen, as directed in Mr. Bell's letter of the 28th Dec. 1835. These seeds were received in good condition, and distributed to members.

No. 4.—From Dr. Wallich to Mr. Bell, dated 12th Sept. forwarding the two undermentioned letters.

No. 5.—From Thomas Ryan, Esq., to Dr. Wallich, as Secretary of the Agricultural and Horticultural Society, dated 12th Sept. giving cover to a letter from John Vaughan, Esq., of Philadelphia, to the address of Dr. Wallich, dated 27th April, 1836, forwarding a sample of sugar of the second quality, produced from the beet-root, bought at Havre at $9\frac{1}{2}$ cents. per pound. Mr. Vaughan also intimates that a Society has been recently formed at Philadelphia, for the encouragement of the manufacture of sugar from his root.

No. 6.—From N. I. Halled, Esq., to the Secretary without date, presenting 4 sour limes and 6 pines, the produce of Arracan.

No. 7.—From C. K. Robison, Esq., to the Secretary, dated 23d August, also presenting two limes brought from Arracan.

Memo.—The limes were considered very superior.

No. 8.—From the same to the same, dated 13th Sept. forwarding a specimen of the best Sandowia tobacco, grown at Kiangree, and stating that from the small quantity actually grown at Sandowia, the tobacco imported at Calcutta as such cannot be genuine, but the produce of Cheduba and Ramree; suggesting that the sample now sent be analyzed, in order to ascertain the difference existing between the real Sandowia tobacco and that usually sold as such.

Captain Leach offered his services in having a portion of this tobacco conveyed to England.

Resolved,—That Captain Leach's suggestion for transmission of a portion of the specimen furnished by Mr. Robison be adopted, and that the Secretary be requested to forward the same to that gentleman.

No. 9.—From H. Cope, Esq., Secretary, Meerut Society, to Mr. Bell, dated 1st Sept., conveying thanks of his Society for the offer of assistance expressed in the Secretary's letter of the 24th June, and requesting to be furnished with the transactions of the Calcutta Society, also stating that the Egyptian cotton seed had succeeded extremely well at Meerut, the plant being then upwards of one foot in height.

No. 10.—From Lieut. H. Diggs, to the Secretary, dated Bismnauth, 29th August, stating that the success attendant on the cultivation of the Pernambuco cotton seed, forwarded by the Society, which at first was most favorable, is now somewhat doubtful; intimating an intention of making experiments on that already grown, the result of which he will communicate. Lieut. B. expresses an opinion that the Egyptian cotton appears more suitable for that district than the Pernambuco.

No. 11.—From Dr. Wallich, to the Secretary, dated 7th Sept., forwarding on behalf of Capt. Jenkins, of Assam, four bundles of two samples of hemp, three made from the fibres of the pine-apple, and the fourth of caloe or rehea hemp, manufactured from the hortica nivea; states that a few of the roots of this latter plant were presented to him some time ago by Captain Jenkins, and have since greatly multiplied, and are now thriving very well in the Society's Nursery Garden.

Nos. 12 and 13.—From the Hon'ble W. L. Melville, to the Secretary, dated Moorsheadabad, 16th August and 2nd Sept., sending four cuttings of a superior description of mango, with a request that one may be forwarded to Baboo Radhakant Deb, and the remainder to members.

No. 14. From R. Lowther, Esq., dated Allahabad, 31st August, promising in answer to Mr. Bell's letter of the 13th ult. to forward by the steamer a root and supply of the seed of the mungel wuzel. Mr. Lowther mentions that the Pernambuco cotton seed has been tried with success in the Humeepore district.

No. 15. From J. B. Jones, Esq., to Mr. Bell, dated Bubela, 24th August, noticing the circumstance of all the bamboos on the borders of the Oude district, having this year borne seed, which is stated to resemble wheat in appearance, and to be sold for food as common rice. Mr. Jones further states, that these bamboo trees are supposed to bear only once in 20 years, after which event all the trees of the same stock die,—the budding takes place during the rains and the seed becomes ripe for gathering in January and February, each bamboo bearing from 4 to 20 seers; suggesting as this seed germinates very readily, the expediency of sending a portion to England.

No. 16.—From Capt. W. H. Sleeman, to the Secretary, dated 24th August, stating that a similar circumstance to the above has occurred this year in regard to the bamboo clusters in the Dehra Dhoon.

Suggesting that some seed of the fine China bamboo be procured by the Society.

No. 17.—From J. Vaupell, Esq., Secretary to the Agricultural and Horticultural Society, Bombay, dated 11th August, enclosing receipts for 12 cases of Mauritius sugar cane, shipped on board of the Barque Ann, &c.

No. 18.—From Col. Dunlop, to Mr. Bell, dated Calcutta, 15th August, giving cover to a letter to his address from J. Turner, Esq., forwarding a specimen of soil from the Bundelkund district, termed "near," which is there considered as the best calculated for the growth of cotton. Mr. Turner kindly offers his services to the Society in obtaining further information relative to the several soils in that province.

Memo. The Secretary forwarded this specimen to Mr. Piddington.

No. 19.—From H. Piddington, Esq., to Mr. Bell, dated 23d August, intimating his intention to give the result of an analysis of the above soil.

No. 20.—From the same to the same, dated 10th August, forwarding some Caubool tobacco seed for distribution, and enclosing a letter to his address from Messrs. Vilmorin and Co. of Paris, advising dispatch of a box of seeds.

These seeds have since arrived, and are now in course of distribution to members.

No. 21. From Lieut. J. P. Meik, to the Secretary, dated Hazarbaugh, 23d August, intimating that the temperature of that station, is favorable to the cultivation of European fruit trees, and offering his services to the Society in attempting a trial with any grafts or cuttings of fruit trees that can be supplied. Lieut. Meik also promises to send down a sample of early potatoes to reach Calcutta next month.

Dr. Wallich then read a private letter to the address of James Kyd, Esq., from H. Inglis, Esq., of Sylhet,—advising the dispatch for the purpose of sale, of a boat-load of potatoes, grown on the Comseeah Hills, which may be daily expected to reach the Presidency.

It was suggested by the President that the Secretary be requested to make arrangement regarding the purchase of the above—and then resolved, that the whole of these potatoes be bought on behalf of the Society, and distributed to members, due notice being given by advertisement of the time of distribution.

No. 22.—From C. Clemons, Esq., Acting Secretary of the Bangalore Horticultural Society, to Mr. Bell, dated 28th July, returning thanks for the promise of assistance and co-operation from the Agricultural and Horticultural Society of India, and offering on behalf of his Society to procure such seeds and exotics as may be occasionally required.

No. 23.—From Dr. Wise, Secretary of Hooghly Society, to Mr. Bell, dated 3d August, conveying the thanks of the Society for the offer of assistance from Calcutta Society, and requesting a supply of seeds, &c.

No. 24.—From A. M. Mills, Esq., Collector of Cuttack, to the Secretary, dated 4th August, stating that the Pernambuco cotton seed, forwarded by the Society, had vegetated remarkably well.

JOHN BELL, Secretary.

HORTICULTURAL SOCIETY AT MEERUT.

At a Meeting of the Committee held on Tuesday, 16th August.

The Secretary reported that since the last Meeting, sixteen gentlemen of Meerut and its vicinity, had joined the Society as members; that in pursuance of a Resolution passed at a former meeting, arrangements had been made with the Zameendar, to whom the Garden adjoining the ground first taken in by the Society belonged, for the occupation of that Garden, and of a large piece of land to the south, and that now the whole of the ground included in the plan drawn by Captain Anderson, had been taken in, a ditch dug and a bank thrown up round the same, comprising with the original portion altogether, an area of more than 27 English acres; that the roads laid down in the plan above mentioned had been all faced out, and mostly finished: that between 5 and 6000 young trees had been planted out to the east and south of the entrance; that a nursery for fruit, and other trees and shrubs had been commenced, and stocked with upwards of a thousand young plants; that a puckah well 33 feet deep with 22 feet of water, and an apparently good spring of water, had been constructed in the north west compartment of the Garden; and that a shed had been erected for the Agricultural implements, hackery and bullocks, of which 2 pairs had been purchased. The Secretary further reported, in the absence of R. N. C.

Hamilton, Esq. Treasurer, that the receipts since the foundation of the Society consisted of

Donations.....	550
Entrance Fees,.....	432
Monthly subscriptions,	304

Total Co.'s Rs. 1286

That the total expenditure for office expenses, purchase of ground, garden implements and pots, bullocks, payment of wages, sundry labour, conveyance and purchase of plants, and constructing of well and shed, amounted to 624 6 0, leaving a balance in the Treasurer's hands, in favour of the Society, of rupees 661 10 0.

Resolved,—That the Treasurer's and Secretary's Reports be received and entered, that the Secretary be requested to direct the construction of a second well in S. W. compartment of the Garden, that the continuation of the nursery to the utmost possible extent comprising cuttings and young plants of every description of fruit, and ornamental trees and shrubs procurable, be carried on; and that those members in the station possessing Gardens, to be requested to contribute all the plants they can conveniently spare.

The Secretary with reference to the increased business of the Society, requested that he might, in addition to the present permanent establishment (consisting of 2 gardeners and 2 bullock drivers) be allowed to entertain a chupras-y, which was ordered accordingly.

The Secretary reported that he had received the following letters enunciated as per date, since the last meeting of the Society.

1st.—From John Bell, Esq., Secretary to the Agricultural and Horticultural Society of India, to the President, Major-General the Hon'ble J. Ramsay, announcing the dispatch per Steamer of a parcel containing some cotton seed, received from Bombay, and seeds of English vegetables, being a portion of the collection brought out by Lord Auckland. (The cotton seed was sown a few days after its receipt in the Society's Garden, and is at present in a flourishing condition, although not more than half the seed sown came up.)

2nd.—From Captain C. M. Wade, Political Agent at Loodeanah, to the Revd. J. C. Proby, forwarding a small parcel of nishka seed, species of clover, lately received from Cabul, where it is extensively cultivated for feeding cattle, and celebrated for its nutritious property. Captain Wade adds he will be most happy to assist the Society in the prosecution of its labours in every way that may be in his power. The letter was accompanied by a note from Dr. H. Falconer, to whom Mr. Proby had submitted the seed, stating it was a large species of medicago (Lucerne), that the time for sowing it was in the cold weather, and if tried now (June) it would either fail entirely or come up weak, he therefore recommended the larger portion to be reserved for the cold weather, and then to be sown in drills richly manured, in which way it would give the best crops. (A small portion of the seed had been sown in a very shady spot, but although it came up well and strong at first, was killed (with but two or three exceptions) by the first fall of rain.)

3rd.—From Dr. N. Wallich, Superintendent H. Co.'s Botanic Garden at Calcutta, to General Ramsay, announcing the dispatch for the Society of a packet of Nepal rice lately obtained by him, through Mr. Hodgson the Resident, from the lofty mountains of Joomla near the Himalayah, and requesting the Society to recommend experiments with the grain in the hills N. and W. of Meerut. All the information Dr. W. can offer concerning this singular sort of rice, is contained in a correspondence, which he had 16 years ago, with the Secretary to the Society of Arts; of which he had forwarded an extract to Dr. H. Falconer, with a request to communicate the same to the Society. As Dr. W. entertains hopes of its being likely to succeed in England, he has forwarded large quantities to Europe and North America.

Resolved,—That, as there is but a small chance, if any, of the rice succeeding near Meerut, portions of the quantity sent by Dr. Wallich be forwarded to Lieutenant Kirke at Dhera, and Colonel Tapp at Soobathoo with a request to direct the same to be sown as high on the hills as possible and communicate the results to the Society.

4th.—From the Reverend J. C. Proby, announcing that Dr. Falconer and Lieutenant Kirke were making preparations for the despatch of a collection of hill plants, grafts, &c. also enclosing a note from Dr. Falconer with a parcel of the seeds of prinsepia utilis, a shrub growing in low hot places in the hills and likely to thrive in the plains. It affords an excellent bland oil by expression from the kernels, which may be used in salads, &c. as a substitute for olive oil. (The seeds were, in compliance with Dr. F.'s recommendation, sown immediately, and out of about 180 seeds 25 plants have succeeded and are in a strong healthy condition.)

5th.—From the Reverend J. C. Proby, advising the dispatch of the promised collection of hill plants selected and named under the superintendence of Dr. Falconer, and enclosing notes from Dr. Falconer with a botanical list of the plants forwarded 82 in number; and a promise to dispatch for the Society a hackery load of plants from the Saharanpoor Garden in the ensuing month (July.) A note was also enclosed from Lieutenant Kirke, accompanied by a few grafts, with a promise to send as many more by the end of the rains as may be required by the Society. (These plants were received in excellent order, and by being planted in a shady situation have succeeded hitherto remarkably well, considering the heavy rains to which they have been exposed, and the season of the year in which they were transplanted.)

Resolved,—That the best thanks of the Society be conveyed to Dr. Falconer for the great interest displayed by him in promoting the welfare of the Society.

6th.—From Major Smyth, of Bareilly, requesting to be admitted a member of the Society, and promising on his return to Bareilly a collection of choice seeds from Cape and English stock, chiefly vegetables. Major S. is of opinion that the error committed by mallets in crowding plants for the sake of quantity, is very injurious to their quality, as the plants have not room to expand. He has cultivated the yellow raspberry from Mussoorie with success at Bareilly, as also a species of passion flower from Almora.

7th.—From H. Falconer, Esq., M. D., enclosing the extracts from the transactions of Society of Arts relative to the Nepal rice, alluded to by Dr. Wallich in his letter to General Ramsay.

8th.—From S. G. Mansel, Esq., C. S., one of the Local Agents at Agra, advising the dispatch from that station out of the Taj Gardens of 4 boxes, containing a collection of 17 species and 156 individuals of fruit and flowering trees and shrubs, and assuring the Society it would give him much pleasure to make further supplies. (The plants arrived in very good condition and are now in excellent order with the exception of the apple trees, 2 or 3 only of which have survived the rains.)

Resolved,—That the thanks of the Society be tendered to Mr. Mansel for the trouble taken by him, and that his kind offer of further supplies be gratefully accepted as soon after the rains as may be practicable.

10th.—From John Bell, Esq., acknowledging the Secretary's letter of the 16th June. Mr. B. congratulates the members on the foundation of the Society, assures them he is only anticipated in the desire expressed to enter into active correspondence. The Agricultural and Horticultural Society of India can never benefit the country to the extent every member must desire, but by the powerful co-operation of sister institutions throughout India. Although it may appear singular, Mr. B. asserts it was a fact that the Calcutta Society has derived the greatest assistance from military men in giving effect to its views at a distance, but let individual exertions be ever so well directed, they do not carry the same weight as when emanating from a body of men brought together for the express purpose of effecting some particular objects. It will give him the greatest pleasure to be of the least service to the Society of Meerut, but regrets that there was then a very small stock of seeds on hand, out of which he would, however, send a collection in a few days. In return for these, the Calcutta Society would only ask perseverance in acclimating the seeds, so that by means of change of climate and situation, India may render it self, if not entirely, at least much more, independent of foreign aid than it is at present.

10.—From M. P. Edgeworth, Esq., C. S., of Umballah, expressing his conviction that a Society in the N. W. Provinces for the promotion of Agriculture, &c. must be attended with most beneficial results; that when he had leisure he would forward such general observation, from time to time, as he might make on the various products of the extensive territory to which he had access, containing, as it does, immense variety of soil and produce; and requesting that his name might be enrolled as a member of the Society.

11.—From J. Bell, Esq., to R. N. C. Hamilton, Esq., regretting that he had no Otahete sugar cane, but that no doubt the Horticultural Society of Lucknow could furnish some as they had abundance. Also that he had forwarded a tin case of Peruvian cotton seed. (Mr. Hamilton on receipt of the seed, had distributed a portion to various individuals in the neighbourhood of Meerut, and presented the remainder to the Society, in whose garden it has been sown and is now thriving well.)

Resolved.—That a letter be addressed to the Horticultural Society of Lucknow, requesting the favor of a small supply of the sugar cane.

12.—From J. Bell, Esq., to the Secretary, advising the dispatch of a small assortment of seeds as per list enclosed (22 kinds) and promising that, as soon as the expected annual supplies arrived, he would forward more.

Resolved.—That the thanks of the Society be presented to Mr. Bell, and, through him, to the Agricultural and Horticultural Society of India, for the prompt assistance and offers of co-operation given and tendered, and that the seeds now received be subdivided into small collections as far as they could go, and distributed amongst the members with a particular request to preserve the seed, reserving of course a portion for the Society's garden.

13.—From G. R. Clerk, Esq., C. S., Political Agent of Umballah, requesting that his name might be added to the list of the members of the Society.

14.—From W. I. Conolly, Esq., Collector of Saharanpore, expressing the pleasure he would derive in becoming a member of the Institution.

15.—From Dr. N. Wallich, expressing the satisfaction he would feel in carrying the Society's wishes (respecting a collection of plants) into effect, and that as the rains had set in, he would take immediate measures for so doing.

16.—From Dr. N. Wallich, announcing the dispatch on the 14th of July of a boat containing a collection of 102 species of plants and 222 individuals, made as varied and interesting as his means would admit, under charge of an experienced malice. Dr. Wallich's only fear is that some of the plants, especially the fruit trees from the Malayan archipelago (Chocolate, Jamrool, &c.) might suffer from the hot winds, and he asks how the Society would propose sheltering them from the same (the Secretary reported also that he had received a collection of 51 valuable seeds forwarded by Dr. Wallich, but not mentioned in his letter.)

Resolved.—That the especial thanks of the Society be presented to Dr. Wallich for the very splendid selection made by him for the garden, and the handsome manner in which he has met the Society's wishes; and that if any testimony they can offer of his unremitting labours in the dissemination of the vast stores of knowledge on botanical subjects accumulated in the course of a long residence in India, can be of any value to him, Dr. Wallich be requested to accept the same, with the Society's assurance that they will by every means in their power endeavour to preserve the valuable trees sent by him; for which purpose they are recommended to be planted in such a position (which the Society's garden will afford) as to be efficiently protected from the hot winds.

Resolved.—Further, that the expenses, attending the transmission of the plants, amounting to 150 Rs. for boat hire (as per Mr. Holmes's bill sent to Messrs. Gibbon and Co.) 4-11-5 for garden pots, and 48 Rs-6 months' wages for a gardener, total 202-11-5 be defrayed out of the Society's funds.

17.—From the Hon. Sir C. Metcalfe, Lieutenant Governor of the N. W. Provinces, dated "Agrs, 21st July, 1836. Sir,—I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 5th instant. I beg that I may be considered as a subscriber to the Horticultural Society of Meerut. I presume that it will be most convenient to the Institution to have the entrance money and monthly subscription paid at Meerut. If the state of the funds should require donations, I trust that you will let me know.

I have the honor to be, Sir, your most obed. Servt.,

(Signed) C. T. METCALFE.

18.—From Colonel Stacey of Allyghur, communicating an extract of a note to Mr. Bell respecting the production of a succession of vegetables, which might be ensured, by raising plants, especially cauliflowers, from English and country seed in rotation, and seed from English stock to form a link, as he had observed that vegetables from English seed came to perfection a long while after those from country seed.

19.—From T. P. Metcalfe, Esq., C. S., of Delhi, expressing the pleasure he felt in becoming a member of the Society, and that should opportunity offer he would be happy to communicate any observations likely to prove interesting or useful.

19.—From Capt. Higginson, Private Secretary to the Lieut. Governor of the N. W. Provinces to R. N. C. Hamilton, Esq., Treasurer of the Society, transmitting by direction of Sir C. Metcalfe, an order for C. R. 540, to be appropriated as follows:

500 donation; 16 entrance; and 24 Rs- one year's subscription.

Resolved.—That the especial thanks of the Society be respectfully tendered to Sir Charles T. Metcalfe, for his most munificent donation, and that the Society beg to assure him they will endeavour, by appropriating the same in a manner most conducive to the extension of the sphere of the utility of the Institution, to evince the most appropriate sense of the liberality of the Hon.ble the Lieut. Governor.

Resolved.—That the Secretary be requested to keep, as accurately as his leisure might permit, a journal of the various operations he may be carrying on in the Garden, with reference to the good or ill success which may attend the same hereafter; also that some plan be adopted for the recognition of rare trees which may be planted in the Garden by reference to a register kept for the purpose; that arrangements be made for the distribution of prizes during the ensuing cold season; and lastly that communications be addressed to the various local Institutions established throughout India, especially to John Vaupell, Esq. Secy. to the Society at Bombay, with a view to request an interchange of good offices.

A memo: by Lieut. Kirke of the Sirmoor Battalion, on the mode adopted by him in the raising and promising of peach and plum trees was communicated by J. R. Hutchinson, Esq., and ordered to be entertained in the journal. Lieut. Kirke concludes his paper by saying that he has followed the plan 3 years, and has had ripe peaches from the 25th April to the 5th July, and the largest he has seen in India, numbers of them weighing from 14 to 18 and one upwards of 19 lbs.

The meeting, in conclusion, unanimously expressed their satisfaction at the zeal of the Secretary in forwarding the interests of the Horticultural Society of Meerut, and desired that their thanks to the same might be publicly recorded.

HENRY COPE, Secretary.

MILITARY RETIRING FUND.

At a Meeting of the Infantry officers at the station of Sattara, held by permission of the officer commanding the districts, for the purpose of taking into consideration the propositions for a Retiring Fund, circulated, by permission, by Major Moore, 18th Regt. N. I.,

It was Resolved, 1.—That this meeting consider a Retiring Fund most desirable, and therefore recommend that a Committee be formed in Bombay to consider Major Moore's plan, and to make such alterations in it as they may deem necessary, and that the plan so matured may be then submitted to the Army for approval; but this meeting do not pledge themselves to the details of Major Moore's scheme, many of which appear objectionable.

Resolved, 2.—That this meeting consider it desirable that the members of the Committee should be appointed by the vote of the infantry branch of the Army at large.

Resolved, 3.—That this meeting recommend that all field officers or those entitled to retire by the late boon on the pension of field officers, who have served their time, be eligible to accept the bonus, should it be refused by their seniors.

Resolved, 4.—That this meeting recommend that any officer, being eligible from length of service, shall receive the bonus on invaliding.

Resolved, 5.—That it appears to this meeting the proposed plan of supporting the Fund is not equitable, and they suggest that a graduated scale of subscriptions, for each rank, be laid down by the General Committee hereafter appointed; as it appears to them that the same amount might be realized on more equitable principles.

Resolved, 6.—That this meeting highly approve of Major Moore's suggestion, to memorialize the Court of Directors to re-establish the Senior List.

Resolved, 7.—That a Committee composed as follows, be appointed for the purpose of corresponding on the subject with Major Moore and the Committee that may be appointed for the object of establishing the Fund.

Major WILSON, 23rd R. N. I.

Capt. WATKINS, 23rd R. N. I.

Lieut. DURACK, Staff.

Signed by 13 Officers.

Sattarah, 15th August, 1836.—Bombay Gazette.

Proceedings of the Meeting of a Garrison and Staff Officers held on the 2nd instanc, at the Quarter Master General's Office in the Fort, to take into consideration Major Moore's plan for a Retiring Fund, for the Infantry Branch of the service.

Present.—Lieut.-Colonels Wood and Campbell; Captains Jameson, Swanson, Sanderson, Pringle, Newport, Maclean, Penley, and Hancock; Majors Robertson and Moore; Captain Mant; Major Campbell; Lieutenants Thornbury, Hamerton, Cristall, Thomas, Hawkins, Browne, Jopp, Landon, Giberne, and Stewart; Captain Liddell; Ensigns Cormack, Barr, Warburton, Remington, Evans, Compton; Lieutenants Lynch and Mathews.

Lieutenant Colonel Wood having been requested to take the Chair.

The following resolutions were agreed to:—

1. That this meeting generally approves of the principle of the Retiring Fund as proposed by Major Moore, and that its best exertions shall be used to carry the same into effect.

2. That the resolutions of the meeting at Belgaum, together with the several amendments received from individuals, shall be recorded and submitted for the consideration of the subscribers at large.

3. For this purpose, a temporary committee, composed of the following officers, shall be appointed to act as a central committee, for communicating with the different stations, with power to carry into effect the retiring fund with such modification and alterations as may be most likely to meet with the approval of the army:—

COMMITTEE.

Lieutenant Col. Wood,	Captain Swanson
Major Moore,	Lieut. Hawkins,
„ A Campbell,	„ Wells,
Captain Jameson,	Ensign Cormack,
„ Pringle,	Captain Penley,
Major Robertson,	„ Landon,
Lieut. Cristall,	„ Hancock
Captain Mant,	„ Newport,
Ensign Warburton,	Mj. A. Campbell to act

Secretary to the Committee.

4. That it is strongly recommended, as a preliminary measure, that all who are in favor of a fund shall pledge themselves to agree to whatever modified plan may hereafter receive the approval of two-thirds of the officers present in India, which shall be considered a final measure; for without some arrangement of the kind, there can be no chance of our exertions being successful.

5. That this meeting is impressed with the necessity of one of the Belgaum resolutions, viz.: "That of the several sums as bonus being offered to Majors, when not accepted by Lieutenant Colonels."

6. That as it will cause a great deal of trouble and delay to the Committee to furnish every station and regiment with a copy of every proposition that may be submitted, the Editors of the newspapers at the Presidency be requested to publish them, and the commanding officers of stations and regiments be solicited to receive such as the official business of the Fund, and address their replies to the Secretary of the Central Committee.

7. That the best thanks of this meeting be given to Major Moore, for the great trouble he has taken in laying before the Army the most feasible plan for a Retiring Fund that has yet been brought forward.

8. That the thanks of this Meeting be given to Lieutenant Colonel Wood, for his conduct in the Chair.

E. M. WOOD, Lieut. Col. and Chairman.

Bombay Gazette.

Proceedings of a Meeting of officers of Infantry at the station of Belgaum, held by permission of the Brigadier General Commanding the Southern Division of the Army, to take into consideration the proposition for a Retiring Fund circulated by Major Moore, Deputy Military Auditor General.

Belgaum, 5th August, 1836.

Resolved,—That this Meeting is disposed most cordially to join any proposition for a Retiring Fund, which can be shown to embrace the interests of all classes, in nearly as equal a degree as circumstances will admit.

That the meeting is of opinion, however, that the proposed fund is most objectionable in principle, because:—

1. It holds out so strong an inducement to Majors to serve for their Lieutenant-Coloncies, that all regimental purchase would thereby be stopped.

2. By declaring that Lieutenant Colonels alone are to be eligible to the benefits, it renders a stoppage of promotion very probable; for supposing a sufficient number of officers of this grade, qualified by length of service, could not be found to accept the bonus, it would become necessary to expend the surplus increasing the inducement to retire, whereby the total number of steps per annum would be materially reduced.

3. It would operate most injuriously to the interest of all officers who are now unfortunate in their promotion, by perpetuating without hope of remedy their present relative situation in the army instead of giving them the chances they should possess, of recovering in some measure their position by the aid of regimental purchase.

But this meeting is of opinion that the foregoing objections might not only be removed, but that the fund might be made to operate most beneficially to the interests of the majority, were the following amendments introduced.

1. That all field officers who have served their time and those entitled by the late boon to retire on the pension of field officers, be eligible to accept the bonus.

2. That any officer, qualified as above, who may retire from the service before it comes his tour to receive the benefits, shall notwithstanding remain entitled to them, in like manner as if he had not retired.

That the meeting understands the spirit of the preceding amendments to form a most essential part of the Medical Fund regulation of Madras and Bombay; and as these funds have been sanctioned by the Court of Directors, there can be no reasonable grounds to doubt but that a Military Retiring Fund holding the same principle would receive their sanction also.

That the meeting considers it unnecessary to discuss at present the details of the proposed scheme, which can be arranged whenever the amendment in the principle shall be allowed; but it deems it advisable, even at this early stage of proceedings, to stipulate that it shall be the duty of any central committee of management that may hereafter be appointed, to circulate all propositions for the votes of the whole body, which shall be signed by fifteen or more subscribers.

That this meeting being impressed with a conviction of the advantage of some immediate steps being taken towards the establishment of a retiring fund, signifies its willingness to enter on the payment of subscriptions, (on any scale that may be approved of by a committee selected by votes of the subscribers) the moment the foregoing amendment shall be admitted into the general principles of the plan, leaving their ultimate arrangement in detail for future discussion; and vote that a copy of these proceedings be transmitted, under sanction, to each of the out-stations of the southern division, with a request that the infantry officers at those several stations will give the subject their earliest consideration, and support the amendments now proposed.

That a committee, composed as follows, be appointed for the purpose of corresponding on the subject with the out stations, and also with the managers of the scheme in Bombay. Major Cathcart, Capt. Hume, 10th Regt. Captain Hart, Lieut. Hoyer, 22nd Regt., Capts. Donnelly, Holland and Macan, Staff.

To these resolutions forty officers, including the station of Dharwar, have agreed. Those at Sholapoor and Dapoolie are as yet divided in their opinions, whilst at Kullulghie the 18th regt. N. I. adhere unanimously to the original scheme.

The 2nd amendment not appearing to be clearly understood by many, the committee beg to explain the views of the subscribers on the subject. They consider, for reasons to be adduced, that it a lloption will alone prevent the fund from putting an entire stop to the regimental purchase of Majors, while it would at the same time confer benefits of a positive nature, unattainable by any other mode; they must therefore look upon it as a sine qua non in any plan to meet their approval.

The subscribers are convinced that unless this amendment be adopted no Major, whose turn for receiving an offer of the bonus may not have arrived, (including most probably all the juniors, among whom only purchase is worth effecting) will ever retire from the service by selling out; for not only will the prospect of obtaining his Lieut. Colonelcy be much nearer than at present, but with his advanced rank or about the time of reaching it, he will also become entitled to the bonus; and as no body of officers could offer any inducement to equal their combined advantages, the major in question would remain until promoted.

There would be an immediate and most beneficial impulse given to promotion by the adoption of his rule.

A considerable number of field officers would most probably retire at once, with the certainty (if they lived) of receiving the bonus in one or more years, according to their standing in the list, while the numerous officers of all grades promoted in their room, would receive the benefits of increased rank and pay so many years sooner, and while also there would be every reasonable ground for belief that no stoppage of promotion would occur in the next or any succeeding year, since the same reasons must continue to operate, year by year, in including officers to retire in anticipation of the bonus.

The stoppage alluded to, however, supposing it were to occur, could be only imaginary; for it is not to be supposed that the actual and total number who are annually to receive the bonus can be diminished, as any temporary stoppage in one year would be made good by an increased number of retirements in the next. But even in the worst imaginable case, of a total stoppage for two or three years after the first burst, until all the expectants were absorbed, the benefits of earlier increase of rank and pay would still be so much positive gain to those promoted and no loss to any one else.

SALE AND PURCHASE OF COMMISSIONS.

[MEETING AT AHMEDABAD.]

At a Meeting of the officers assembled at Ahmedabad, by permission of Brigadier Brooks, commanding the Northern Division of the army, it was resolved :

1.—That this meeting has assembled in consequence of the publication in the Bombay Gazette of the 6th of July last, of certain resolutions passed by a meeting of the officers at Belgaum on the subject of the Sale and Purchase of Commissions in our army.

2.—That those resolutions owe their origin to the circumstance of a memorial having been lately addressed to the Court of Directors by an officer of this establishment, complaining of that system of purchase, as one injurious, in his opinion, not only to the interests of the memorialist himself, the officers of his own regiment, but as also to many others.

3.—That this meeting, differing entirely from the opinion expressed in the prayer of the memorialist, as acting on the general interest of the army, feels itself called upon, imperatively, to come forward with the expression of their full and most unqualified dissent from the object of that memorial, and to declare its intention to exert its best endeavours to cause, by an application to the home authorities, the introduction of an authorized system of retirement by purchase, which so far from being prejudicial, it considers, on the contrary, calculated to ensure great and lasting benefits to the army generally.

4.—To this end, therefore, and with the view of simplifying the subject, as also of expressing one and the same opinion on a question involving such important results, it is resolved,

5.—That this meeting do make common cause with their brother officers at Belgaum.

6.—That this meeting do adopt the Belgaum resolutions as their own, as a means of showing their hearty concurrence in the view already taken of the subject.

7.—That usual steps be taken to address a memorial to the Court of Directors, praying that the system of retirement by the purchase and sale of commission, may be granted to those officers (regimentally) who may have served their time, and are by the regulations entitled to retire from the service.

Signed by 21 Officers.

Ahmedabad, August 1, 1836.

[MEETING AT DUM-DUM.]

At a meeting held at the Artillery Mess House, Dum-Dum, with the permission of Brigadier Brown, C. B. Commandant of Artillery, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted :—

That this meeting having understood that a memorial had lately been submitted to the Supreme Government, from a staff officer of the Bombay army, praying that the system which is stated to exist of purchasing promotion shall in future be prohibited—considers that an expression of very opposite sentiments should be distinctly recorded for the information of the Honorable Court and their brother officers.

That this meeting believing that the sale and purchase of retirements is beneficial to all parties, and that the system has been long practised in the Indian army, respectfully solicit through the Supreme Government, the complete abandonment of those restrictions to its employment, which, though so long virtually abrogated, are still to be found upon record : and that, in lieu thereof, the Honorable Court will be pleased, for the future, to accord full and free permission to their officers to use all such means as they can command towards accelerating their own promotion by improving the retirement of their seniors.

That the Brigadier Commandant of Artillery be solicited to submit one unanimous sentiment and respectful prayer to the above effect, through the proper channels, to the favourable consideration of the Honorable the Court of Directors.

To the Honorable the Court of Directors of the East India Company.

The respectful memorial of Lieut. Col. Sam. Shaw, commanding the 1st Battalion Artillery, in behalf of himself and other officers.

Humbly Sheweth,—That your Honorable Court, in a military letter, dated 6th June, 1798, addressed to the Bengal Government, were pleased to prohibit the service expired officer from receiving any compensation, pecuniary or otherwise, for his retirement.

That your Honorable Court, in subsequent instructions from time to time issued, have sanctioned the establishment, and assisted the maintenance of several associations, having for their object the amelioration of the retirement of the old officer by voluntary contributions from his juniors.

That the institutions to which your memorialists here refers, are the Medical Pension and Military Funds, established from 1806 to 1836, at the several presidencies, and the general and permanent retiring Fund in the Indian Army, to the formation of which, in 1832, your Honorable Court graciously expressed your sanction and proffered your valuable support.

That, during a long series of years, the requisitions of the prohibitory order of 1778 have not been fulfilled, and, from such enforcement thereof, and from the apparent abandonment of their principle in the subsequent measures of your Honorable Court, a system has grown into operation by which the sale and purchase of commissions has been affected to a considerable extent, and your Memorialist believes to the benefit of all parties.

That, as, although so long virtually abrogated, the J. O. of 30th Nov. 1798 still remains upon the statute, and may at any time be again brought in force—your memorialist respectfully solicits from your Honorable Court the complete abandonment of those restrictions, which though inoperative are still uncanceled, and by their continuance may present serious opposition to our advancement.

And your Memorialist, as in duty bound, will ever pray,—Englishmen.

GENERAL MEETING AT THE ARMENIAN CHURCH OF CALCUTTA.

At a perennial meeting held in the vestry rooms of the Armenian church, on the morning of the 18th September, for the purpose of inspecting the annual accounts and electing a new warden and commissioner, Mr. George Aviet was called to the chair; the object of the meeting was then briefly stated, after which the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:—

1st.—That subject to a resolution passed at a general meeting on the 8th September, 1833, Mr. Arratoon Vertannes be exonerated from the office of warden.

2dly.—That Mr. Carapiet Jacob do officiate as warden during the next 12 months.

3dly.—That Mr. George Aviet do officiate as commissioner, in the room of Mr. Carapiet Jacob.

4thly.—That a regular deed of trust sufficient in the law be drawn up, and submitted for the approval of the community, at a subsequent meeting, for the purpose of the same being executed by the warden and commissioners for the due management of the affairs of the said church.

Lastly. That a subscription be immediately raised as donation, to enable the managers to procure a suitable number of chairs and panks for the comfort and convenience of the congregation during Divine Service.

[ARMENIAN DEPUTATION.]

A deputation of Armenians consisting of the following gentlemen: Messrs. M. C. Arrakiel, A. Apar, M. Gaspar, I. H. Arathoon, I. G. Bigram, and Johannes Avdall,—waited upon the Governor-General at four o'clock on the 27th September, by appointment, to present the Petition of the Armenian community. The deputation was headed by Mr. Arathoon who, on presenting the Petition, accompanied it with a few remarks. His Lordship gave them a very courteous reception, and observed that, although it was out of the power of his Government to interfere with the Alien Law of England, he had every hope that in the course of a few months that question would be satisfactorily settled. His Lordship added, in allusion to the other matters of grievance stated in the Petition, that a representation from so respectable a class as the Armenians of Calcutta was entitled to every attention, and he was sure that the Council would give due consideration to the several matters which it embraced.

[THE ARMENIAN PETITION.]

To the Right Hon^{ble} GEORGE LORD AUCLAND, G. C. S.,
Governor-General of India in Council.

The humble Petition and Memorial of the Armenian Inhabitants of the Presidency of Fort William in Bengal.

Sheweth,—That your Petitioners are of the ancient Armenian race, which has long ceased to be any where a nation, and was the foremost to appreciate the benefits of British government in the East.

That the resort of Armenians to the British settlements in this and other parts of India, was coeval with the establishment of those settlements. The first important Firman of the Imperial Court of Delhi to the English Company was procured by the agency of an Armenian; and the connexion, thus begun with a sense of mutual obligation, was cemented by an instrument of solemn compact in the nature of a Treaty between Coja Phanoo's Calendar, an eminent individual of the Armenian race, and the Governor and Company of Merchants of England trading to the East Indies, bearing date the 22d June, 1688, and ratified under the hands of the Governor and Directors and common seal of the Company—a copy of which is appended for the sake of reference.

That although the above compact may not possess all the binding force of an international act, inasmuch as it was made with a mere individual of a race which had ceased to exist as a political community, yet did it continue for nearly a century to regulate the scale of duty on the trade of Armenian Merchants at the Company's settlement and dependencies; nor has it ever, to the belief of your Petitioners, been called in question by any of the Company's Officers. Whether binding as a Treaty or not, it must at all events be admitted to contain the terms publicly held out by the Company to encourage the resort and settlement of Armenians. Your Petitioners beg to draw your Lordship's attention to the third article, which is as follows:

"That they (the Armenian nation) shall have liberty to live in any of the Company's Cities, Garrisons or Towns in India; and to buy, sell and purchase land and houses, and be capable of all Civil offices and preferments, in the same manner as if they were Englishmen born; and shall always have the free and undisturbed liberty of the exercise of their own religion. And we hereby declare that we will not continue any Governor in our service that shall in any kind disturb or discountenance them in the full enjoyment of all the privileges hereby granted to them; neither shall they pay any other greater duty in India than the Company's factors or any other Englishmen born do, or ought to do."

That upon such invitation and solemn guarantee the Armenians began, and have since continued to flow in from various parts of Asia, to the haven of protection and favor thus opened to them. They have traded and tilled the earth,—have become builders and proprietors,—and acknowledge with gratitude the uniform protection and kindness they have received under the Company's rule. Your Petitioners confidently trust, that they and those who have preceded them, have shewn themselves not unworthy of this favor, ungrateful towards their benefactors; and that, of the numberless tribes and races that have successively placed themselves within the pale of British dominion, none has evinced more loyal attachment, or given less occasion for the exercise of either coercive or penal measures.

That, of the Armenians now settled within this Presidency, but few are the issue of forefathers, who were already settled in it before the coming of the English; a few more are of foreign birth, and are themselves original settlers; but the larger part are natives of this Presidency,—the issue of fathers or forefathers, who became settlers upon the inducement above mentioned.

That your Petitioners are possessed of large personal property, and also of large property in houses and lands within the limits of Calcutta itself, and also in Talooks and Zemindaries in several of the Zillahs and Districts of this Presidency; and that, of this property, a part is the fruit of their personal acquisition, but the greater portion has been derived to them from fathers or forefathers, by whose industry it was acquired.

That since the date of the above compact in the year 1688, Armenians have, without restriction or question purchased, enjoyed and transmitted real property within the British territories and settlements, never doubting their legal right so to do under the clauses above set forth. But that recent decisions and discussions have not only shaken their confidence in the stability of their possession, but filled them with well-grounded apprehensions of liabilities to an amount which it is impossible to estimate.

That the Supreme Court of Calcutta, by its judgment in the common law case of Doe on demise of Pouchette vs. Stansbury on the 29th December 1826, and by its subsequent decree in the consolidated equity suits respecting the will of the late Lieutenant General Martin, pronounced on the 23d February 1832, on rehearing and after two labored arguments, solemnly determined—that the alien law of England attaches to all lands within the local limits of Calcutta. By a later decree, made in the same Martin causes on the 10th May 1836, the same principle as to alien law has been declared in respect to lands in the provinces also.

That the above principle, if acted upon, must inevitably throw into jeopardy nearly the whole of your Petitioners' real property. For your Petitioners are advised, that by the English alien law, real property, originally purchased by an alien-born, is claimable by the Crown, though it may have passed through several successive generations or purchases—moreover, that your Petitioners are liable, out of the rest of their property, to indemnify purchasers for the value of all real property acquired and subsequently sold by their fathers or forefathers of alien-birth. Thus, not only their real property is brought into hazard, but their personality also is in serious danger. On the part of the Crown the proof will be simple, for the fact of the alien-birth of the acquirers will in most cases appear on the face of their wills or title deeds; and even should the forbearance of the Crown leave them in the enjoyment of their real property, yet the defect of title, unless remedied by some legislative act, will render that property altogether unsaleable, and disable your Petitioners from ever enforcing a contract of sale against a purchaser.

Your Petitioners are indeed advised, that all persons wheresoever born, who were actually settled in the territory at the time of its conquest or acquisition by the Crown of Great Britain, became immediately denizens, and capable of holding and thereafter acquiring and transmitting lands of inheritance to heirs, who were themselves either natives of the territory or denizens—and in this right, so much of your Petitioners' real property, as may have been derived from persons entitled to such right of denizenship, would be protected against claims of the Crown. But the proportion that could be traced to such a source is very inconsiderable: and even this ground of protection is involved in the greatest doubt and uncertainty, by the absence of any declaration or adjudication of the precise period at which each portion of the territory was acquired by the Crown of Great Britain; which makes it utterly impossible to ascertain with any certainty, whether a father or forefather was a denizen or not.

That your Petitioners are fully aware, that this newly declared alien law affects other classes as well as themselves; and that the lands of Jaghiredars, though granted by the Government itself for actual service in war, or otherwise, are obnoxious to the claim of the Crown whenever the first grantee was alien-born—that lands acquired by an alien-born Arab or Persian,—by a native of Lucknow or of Hyderabad, are equally claimable by the Crown as those of alien-born Armenians;—in short, that the ruin which hangs over their own heads is equally imminent over most of those around them. For, in no lands within Calcutta, it will be found, that there are very few parcels which have not at some time within the last sixty years, been owned by persons of alien-birth.

But your Petitioners humbly submit, that Armenians alone can appeal to the terms of a solemn compact or agreement, which induced them to become settlers, and of which this doctrine is a direct violation:—they alone, in addition to the plea of hardship and surprise, can urge that of the plighted faith of the Company in India and in Europe also: and can appeal for relief on the double ground of justice and of compassion.

That besides the alarm and perplexity into which the promulgation of the English alien law has thrown your Petitioners, they beg to submit to your Lordship's consideration the precarious condition in which they stand with respect to the law of inheritance and succession to property. Within the limits of jurisdiction of the King's Court, they have hitherto been uniformly dealt with, in this particular, by the rules of English law. In cases of intestacy, their property has been administered to, by next of kin, by creditors and by the registrar of the Court, like that of deceased British subjects; dower has been assigned to widows of Armenians, out of lands both within and without the local limits of the Court's jurisdiction, and the law of primogeniture has been acted upon invariably. But, in the Courts of the Company, no settled rule of law whatever has prevailed in respect to the inheritance and succession to property of deceased Armenians. While some of the Company's judges follow the course of the King's Court, and adopt the rules of English law, others hold themselves bound to act upon their individual notion of equity, pursuant to the terms of Regulation VII of 1832, Section 9; and others bewilder themselves in the vain endeavour to discover the law of Armenia, of which there is no trace extant, and refer to Armenian ecclesiastics, whose legal knowledge, where they have any, is limited to the bare rudiments of the canon law. Your Lordship will readily conceive what insecurity and litigation must ensue from the want of a common standard, and from the admission of many conflicting principles to act upon property situated within the same dominion. Although the rule of natural equity, administered by common sense and integrity may be competent to the adjustment of most matters of dealing and contract between man and man, the inheritance and succession to property has in all civilized nations, been made a matter of positive law whether written or traditional. And, as Armenians have ceased to be a nation since the year of our Lord 1375, and no trace of their own law is now to be discovered, your Petitioners humbly submit that the law of England is the only one that can, upon any sound principles, be permitted to prevail, and that it is moreover the law which was promised to Armenians at the time of their settlement in the country.

That in addition to the two important particulars already mentioned, the one of which endangers the very existence of their property; the other throws into confusion the succession and inheritance to it—your Petitioners have daily experience of the anomalous position in which they are regarded in the Courts of the Presidency. In the course of the present year, an attempt was made in the Zillah Court of Dacca to annul a marriage between two native born Armenians, though it had been duly solemnized in the face of the Armenian Church, with the consent of relatives on both sides. (The proceedings in that matter will show in the Sudder Dewanny Adalat.) Your Petitioners have no security against the recurrence of similar experiments in other Zillahs, and are totally unable to obtain any information by what, if any, rule of law their marriages will be adjudicated upon in the Courts of the Mofussil, where the English law is by regulation VII. of 1832 expressly reprobated. Even in the King's Court a case is now pending as to lands in the Mofussil, of which an Armenian lady, a native of Bengal, and the wife of a British subject, died possessed; in which the question is, whether they are subject to the English rules of descent or to any and what other. In matters of contract and of action your Petitioners use in the Courts of it with on the principles of Mohammedan in some particulars quite at variance with of understanding of Christians.

our Petitioners although so warmly and grateed to the British rule under which they have prosperous now for a century and a half, and utterly unconscious of having done any thing to forfeit the good opinion that prompted the flattering terms of invitation, under which Armenians came into the country, and con-tional for upwards of a century to enjoy all the consideration that a party of civil rights with natives of Great Britain was calculated to give, find their confidence of security suddenly disturbed; their property exposed to imminent hazard; and their civil rights involved in the greatest perplexity; and they have no hope of remedy, but from the wisdom and justice of your Lordship in Council. To these they present their earnest prayer, —

That some measures in consistence with the compact or treaty herein before mentioned, may be devised without loss of time, to secure your Petitioners from the ruinous consequences of the introduction of the English alien law into India without qualification; to fix the law of aliens for the future upon definite principles, and such as are suitable to the state of the country and of society; to declare the right in which the Armenians, whether born within the territory or mere settlers in it, shall in future stand before the law, especially in the important particulars of marriage, inheritance and succession to property; and to restore to them the enjoyment of their rights and privileges—held out to them by the treaty or compact abovementioned, and of which for a long course of years they were prevented to avail themselves; or that, if your Lordship in Council does not feel competent to grant the prayer of your Petitioners without a reference to authorities in England, that you will be pleased to give that reference all the weight which the previous sanction and recommendation of your Lordship in Council will confer]

And your Petitioners shall ever pray.

UNCOVENANTED ASSISTANTS' WIDOWS' PENSION FUND.

The Committee appointed by the Uncovenanted Servants, owing to circumstances, a detail of which will be given hereafter in a subsequent report, have only recently succeeded in obtaining a set of jobs, based upon principles that will at once secure the permanency of a Widows' Fund, and place its benefits within the reach of all the members of the service, however limited their salaries. This table, with the code of rules prepared by them, the committee deemed it their duty to submit for the consideration of Government; their letter to the Government on the occasion, and the reply received are published for general information:—

TO THE RIGHT HONORABLE GEORGE LORD AUCKLAND,
G. C. B., &c. &c. &c.

Governor General of India in Council.

My Lord, — As members of a Committee appointed at a general meeting of the Uncovenanted Servants of Government, held at the Town Hall on the 7th February, 1835, for the purpose of framing tables and rules for the establishment of a pension for widows, and a Retiring Fund, for the benefit of that portion of their service attached to the Bengal presidency, we take the liberty of soliciting your Lordship's indulgent attention to the objects of our present address.

Owing to circumstances beyond our control, a detail of which we will not presume to give, lest it might be intruding too much upon your Lordship's valuable time, we have but just succeeded in obtaining a table of annuities, on which every reliance can be placed, as it is calculated with reference to the actual decrement of life in India, and it consequently affords ample security for the permanency of a Fund once established upon its principles.

This table of rates, accompanied with a code of rules for the government of the Fund, we most respectfully submit for the inspection of your Lordship in Council; or should your Lordship be pleased to consider it necessary, for reference to any individual your Lordship may deem qualified to report upon them.

Adverting to the fact that high rates of subscription which it was necessary to fix, in order to establish the Fund upon a firm basis, are more than likely to place the benefits of the Fund beyond the reach of two-thirds of the service, whose limited allowances are barely adequate to their support, on our own behalf, as well as on behalf of our constituents, we, earnestly, but respectfully, throw ourselves upon the liberal and humane consideration of your Lordship in Council, for the grant of such annual sum towards the support of the Fund, as your Lordship may be pleased to consider commensurate with the services which we collectively render to the state.

In addition to the boon which we thus solicit, we are induced, by the gratifying encouragement held out by the Hon'ble Court of Directors in their public general letter of the 30th July 1828, for the establishment of a Pension Fund for Uncovenanted servants (an extract from which is enclosed for your Lordship's information,) to pray further, at the hands of your Lordship in Council, for the investment by the Government, of the monies which may accrue to our Fund, at a rate of interest not lower than 6 per cent. per annum, which is the rate allowed to other Funds of a similar description.

We sanguinely anticipate, that these two concessions, for the benefit of our Fund, on the part of your Lordship in Council, will be the means of enabling us to reduce the rates of subscription, and will, by thus extending the advantages of the Fund, be gratefully and thankfully acknowledged by the service at large.

We have the honor to be, my Lord, your Lordship's most obedient and humble Servants,

J. H. Plumb,	Cor. Smith,
Robt. Smith,	W. Oxborough,
R. Kerr,	David Ross,

Committee of the U. S.

Calcutta, the 12th August, 1836.

To Mr. C. U. SMITH, Chairman of a Committee of Un-covenanted Servants.

General Department.

Sir, — I am directed to acknowledge the receipt of your letter dated the 12th instant, and the letter from the Committee of Uncovenanted Servants enclosed to the address of the Governor General in Council, submitting a draft of rules for the establishment of a Widows' Pension Fund for this class of servants, and in reply to request that you will inform the Committee and other persons interested, that the Right Honorable the Governor General of India in Council understands the scheme submitted to be one for providing an annuity for the widows of subscribers contingent in each case upon the widow's surviving the subscriber to the Fund, and to embrace at present no other objects.

2. The table showing the rates of subscription and the values for these contingent annuities, is stated to be framed from calculations carefully made. The gentlemen who are understood to have assisted in framing the table are entitled to confidence, but all such calculations must be received, subject to correction in case any error should hereafter be discovered. This being fully understood, there can be no objection to the table being received, in the first instance, on the authority of the framer, and the Governor General in Council does not deem it necessary to refer it for examination by any particular officers.

3. The Government is asked,

1st. To allow its officers to hold the funds and collect the subscriptions, and in other respects to act ministerially towards the scheme as to other charity funds.

2ndly. To grant a donation in aid of the Fund, that is, an annual sum applicable either to reduce subscriptions or increase the annuities granted, and 3rdly. To allow the funds to accumulate in the hands of Government at 6 per cent.

4. Upon the first point I am directed to observe that the Governor General in Council readily grants the ministerial aid of the public officers in managing the funds of this annuity scheme so far as they can conveniently be made available for the purpose, but as the emoluments of each contributor will not be subject to separate audit, some subsidiary rules will be necessary beyond those contained in other institutions to provide for the realization of subscriptions and to secure the Fund against default.

5. On the second and third points His Lordship in Council observes that it is not within his competency to make any specific donation from the public revenue in aid of this annuity scheme: the matter will, however, be made the subject of a special reference to the Honorable the Court of Directors, with whom it will remain to determine whether the scheme is deserving of such support, and upon the extent of aid that shall be given to it. But with reference to the declared desire of the Honorable Court to give encouragement to plans of this description, and to the example of other institutions devised for similar purposes, His Lordship in Council is of opinion, that an account current at 6 per cent. can be granted without waiting specific instructions from the Court of Directors. To this extent, therefore, His Lordship will be prepared to grant aid to the fund from the date of its establishment, and His Lordship is willing to become patron of the institutions.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

H. T. PRISSEY, Secretary to Government.
Council Chamber, the 14th September, 1836.

The Committee will shortly convene a general meeting for the purpose of discussing the rules and rates of subscription in the table above alluded to, particularly the latter, which will be modified with reference to the determination of Government to allow 6 per cent. upon the monies of the Fund.

Adverting to the kind interest evinced by the Right Honorable the Governor General at the result of their labours, the Committee consider that they are now justified in anticipating the speedy establishment of a Widows' Fund upon such a footing as will secure it from being subjected to those casualties arising out of miscalculations from which Funds instituted for similar purposes have suffered.

A sketch of the table is also subjoined; it will be remembered that the rates therein exhibited will be considerably reduced in consequence of the enhanced rate of interest that will be allowed by Government.

D. CLARK, Secy. to the Com.

REPLY OF THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL TO THE MEMORIAL OF THE UNCOVENANTED ASSISTANTS.

No. 252—General Department.

To the UNCOVENANTED ASSISTANTS or CLERKS in the Office of Government at ALIHABAD.

The Right Honorable the Governor-General of India in Council has had under his consideration the Memorial signed by several uncovenanted assistants at Aliahabad dated the 27th of May last and forwarded by the Secretary to the Lieutenant-Governor in a letter dated the day following, together with the papers annexed to it.

2. It appears from these papers that in consequence of violent conduct towards a servant of Mr. Alexander, of the Civil Service, and subsequent hostile refusal to furnish an explanation to that gentleman, Mr. Permian, a Clerk in the English department of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut at Aliahabad was, through the Officiating Registrar, removed from the appointment to which he had been before temporarily promoted.

3. The present Petitioners being uncovenanted assistants or Clerks in the public office of Aliahabad, in a Memorial to the Governor of the Presidency of Agra, remonstrated against the converting into a matter of official cognizance an affair which was private ab initio, and prayed that they might be exempted from interference in their private transactions, or that rules might be prescribed, defining the extent to which they ought to be considered amenable to their official superiors for their private acts.

4. The Governor, in reply, adverted to the existing regulations under which it is directed, that in the selection of individuals for employment regard shall be had to character as well as qualification, and that the individuals selected shall not be removed from office without proof of incapacity or misconduct, and intimated that the character to which it is considered necessary to have regard before appointment is clearly character out of office, and that "it seems equally obvious that after appointment, conduct affecting character out of office, as well as in office, is also required to be noticed," adding that "no unity is provided against partiality or injustice on the part of functionaries entrusted with the power of appointing and removing by their act, in the exercise of such power being subject to the revision of their official superiors. He was therefore of opinion that no ground existed for altering or adding to the present regulations.

5. The memorial now before the Governor General in Council is an appeal against this decision. It prays that the same privileges may be granted to persons in the situation of the petitioners, which are, they allege, enjoyed by other servants of the state, and that they may be exempted from responsibility in private matters to their official superiors.

6. Having given his best attention to the circumstances of the petitioners, and to the arguments in the memorial, His Lordship in Council does not see reason to adopt an opinion essentially different from that expressed by the Government of Agra in reply to the representation laid before that authority.

7. His Lordship in Council is not prepared indeed to decide that private conduct should be subject to the same scrutiny after appointment to office, nor would he wish to afford any ground for apprehension to the petitioners that their private acts might be so investigated and visited. But on the other hand, it is necessary to remind the petitioners, that they hold their situations on the tenure only of services at the discretion of the officers to whom they are immediately subordinate, subject to the controlling power of the Government itself, and His Lordship in Council would not certainly lay down any rule by which the petitioners might be wholly exempted from any notice of their private acts. Perhaps none of the existing regulations in this respect are in their terms applicable to public servants of the class of the petitioners, but the principle of these regulations is fully and fairly applicable to them. The Governor General in Council is of opinion that the proper general rule to be followed by the public authorities in the exercise of the discretion committed to them, is that of abstaining ordinarily from interference in the private conduct of public servants, and from the cognizance by heads of offices of acts of private delinquency and misconduct, but cases may at the same time arise of such a nature as to make such cognizance, whether as respects the memorialists or other servants of the Government absolutely necessary with a view to maintain the respectability and efficiency of the public administration. His Lordship in Council does not think it possible to anticipate and define all the cases which may occur of this special character, but with this general declaration of the sentiments of the Government, and with an appeal open from every act of oppression and injustice done to the individuals he does not see that it can be necessary to endeavour to frame any scheme of formal regulations on the subject.

8. His Lordship in Council is pleased to direct that a copy of the foregoing remarks be communicated for the future guidance of the Memorialists.

By order of the Right Honorable the Governor General of India in Council.

H. T. PRINSEP.

PETITION OF THE MUSULMAN INHABITANTS OF BENGAL.

To the Right Honorable the Governor-General of India in Council.

After compliments.

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR LORDSHIP.—It was the practice of former Governors, with a view to the glory of the countries subject to their rule, to disseminate various sciences, and to cultivate the languages of the different tribes or classes. The former Kings of England were especially intent on improving the condition, and increasing the happiness of all their subjects, which conduced to their own fame and to the stability of their Government. The British Rulers of India, from the time of subduing Bengal and Hindustan, have likewise been attentive to the happiness of all their subjects, including the Musulman population, as is clearly proved by the institution of the offices of Kazi, Mufty, &c. &c. by founding Mudrussas, (or Colleges) for the dissemination of million sciences and literature. Therefore, when the report of the abolition of the Calcutta Mudrussa reached us, we were much astonished and distressed, and being contrary to the practice of former Governors, and at variance with the principles of our English Rulers, we at once concluded it was false, as indeed it proved to be by the letter of the Governor-General in Council, dated 9th March 1835. But in this letter was contained an order, that in future a monthly stipend should not be allowed to the students; and from the perusal of this, the comfort and consolation we had received were entirely destroyed, because the main design and advantage of a Mudrussa are, that each student being free from the cares and trouble of providing for his daily expenses, and from the annoyance of attending to their matters, may with comfort apply and devote himself to his studies; for if the anxiety of providing for daily wants, which is so great an obstacle and hinderance to the attainment of knowledge, be allowed to exist, then all the evil consequent on the total abolition of the Mudrussa may be expected to happen. Wherefore we have embolled the grounds on which, in our humble opinions, the stipends to the students should be continued, in the following sections.

First.—Ancient Kings from the remotest periods appointed monthly stipends for students of Colleges, that they might pursue their studies in competence and ease, and the Rulers of all Eastern countries, still pursue the same course; such is the practice at the present day in the colleges of Turkey, Syria, Egypt, Bussorah, Bagdad, and many others.

Second.—The Kings and Rulers of every country, in every age, but more especially the English Rulers, have shown the greatest kindness and disposition to promote the spread of science, and to encourage the efforts of the students by arranging their degrees and fixing stipends according to their merits, and promoting them from one class to another, and increasing their stipends and rewards; therefore, if the very stipends be abolished and the means of living taken away, the students will be completely broken in heart and spirit.

Third.—It is customary to allow students who apply themselves to learn English in the Hindu College a stipend according to their degree, and in the new Medical College appointed for Hindus and Mussulmans; the same ancient custom prevails in most other schools. Therefore we hope that the Government which has regard for all the other subjects, will also revive and render permanent this old regulation in the Calcutta Mahometan College, as in other institutions of this country.

Fourth.—Most of the Mussulmans of this country are poor and needy; they have not the means of drawing money from home to support themselves, when once they have left their houses and made choice of travel: the few who possess means and wealth, have no taste for the acquisition of knowledge, a fact sufficiently evident from the condition of our princes and nobles, &c. If the circumstances of the students attached to the College were inquired into, there would not be found more than four or five rich youths among the whole: but there are several who came to Calcutta before the order in question was passed, in the hope of obtaining a scholarship in the Mudrussa, and have suffered the greatest inconvenience and distress, and still pass their lives in a thousand griefs and hardships, hoping that their expectations will not be disappointed, and watching day and night for an order to re-establish the stipends for students. In short, the persons who have the greatest desire and love for knowledge are of noble and respectable birth, but wretchedly poor; and as most of them dwell in the surrounding hamlets and villages, they have not the means of supporting themselves decently in Calcutta, and few of the residents in Calcutta are of this disposition: whereas, in the English schools of that city, none of the scholars are of the better and respectable class of Mahometans. Nay, they are of the very lowest description, whose only object is to learn sufficient for the transaction of a little English business—this fact may be easily ascertained.

Fifth.—From the first establishment of the Mudrussa, it is a rule that, when the student goes on leave, he forfeits the whole of his stipend during the period of his absence; on which account he never stays away beyond the necessary period. It is likewise a rule that whoever absent himself from lecture without a sufficient cause, forfeits his pay for that day; wherefore they attend without fail. When the stipend is abolished, they will become careless and without fear, which will injure the credit of the Colleges, and impede the students themselves in the acquisition of knowledge.

Sixth.—The poor who wish to acquire knowledge in their own districts, attain here and there some acquaintance with the common Persian books and wish grammar; but when they wish to go on with their studies, they cannot find a teacher, because one competent cannot always be had, and the few who are well qualified are engaged in their own duties, and have no time to lecture or instruct. Therefore the scholars leave their beloved homes, and come to Calcutta in the hope of being admitted to the Mudrussa, and being made happy with a subsistence and freed from the trouble and distraction of seeking daily bread. They may acquire knowledge and complete their education, but should this hope be unfulfilled, all their former pains and troubles in their preparatory studies are given to the winds and useless—they remain excluded from higher branches of knowledge, and will retain a stain of sorrow and affliction on their hearts to the end of life: and it will be found on enquiry that there are now in Calcutta many hundreds of these poor scholars, who have no possibility of completing their studies without a stipend,—who have suffered and are suffering a thousand griefs and afflictions, and are in dreadful distress, for they have neither the means of going away nor the power of remaining.

Seventh.—The King and Rulers of every clime, have in various ways established characters and bestowed boons on every class of their subjects for their own honor and happiness. Thus, by founding hospitals and schools, and erecting bridges and making roads, digging tanks and the like,—and by founding colleges for every class, whether Hindu or Mussulman, the greatest celebrity and the good wishes of the governed have reached through every country from East to West; and since all these acts were performed by our former and present English Governors merely for the happiness and comfort of their subjects, every individual of whatever class, whether Hindu or Mussulman, has opened his lips in praying for the prosperity of the Company, and all both great and small in every clime and province from the time of the English conquest, have praised and wished success to that nation. Then, to abolish the students' pittance, which will be in fact to abolish and destroy the Mudrussa, will spread disgrace in every clime and city, and the evil-minded and the enemies of the Company will expect and imagine therefrom harsh measures that are unworthy of the Government.

Eighth.—The fact is one of two things,—either the Company or the Committee desire to retain and preserve the Mudrussa or to abolish and destroy it—God forbid the latter; but if such be their wish, they are the Lords and Masters; no one has the right to say a word or question their power to do so; but in the letter of 9th March 1835, written in reply to the Petition of the Mussulman inhabitants, it is perfectly clear that there never was the least desire to abolish the Mudrussa. Since therefore it is the will and pleasure of the Government to support the institution, it must surely be its desire to keep it up in an efficient and respectable state; whereas, if the stipends be discontinued, it cannot continue as, as these who wish to study are poor and distressed, and without stipends; the greater part of their time must be consumed in providing for their necessary expenses, and from hence much confusion and detriment to their studies must arise. Therefore several who have gone through the preliminary course of Persian reading, and evince their fitness for admission to the Mudrasa, are about 20 years of age, and much of their time being previously passed in difficulties and distress, they attain a knowledge of no more than two or three branches of science; but on obtaining a stipend they master in a short time many different subjects with ease, and in the space of seven years they are finished scholars;—and it was on this account that Lord Warren Hastings, with reference to the ascertained state of things, on founding the Mudrasa appointed a stipend for each student, and according to this every Governor successively for the last fifty years has pursued the same course. Now we do not know whether it be from our ill fortune, or that some crime has been committed by us Musulmans, that the ruler of the day, in opposition to all who preceded him, issues such an order.

Ninth.—The stipends allowed to all the students of the Mudrasa did not exceed five hundred rupees per mensem; and truly his sum is like a drop in the sea of Oman (Persian Gulf) to the illustrious sovereigns of Hindustan and Bengal and the Deccan and Great Britain and other countries; and surely the stipends of the Mudrasa and petty expenses of this nature are not worth a thought, when the lacs of rupees are considered which are monthly bestowed upon other charitable and useful purposes, such as hospitals, schools, roads, tanks, bridges, &c. &c. Yet the Honorable Company have no object or design in this immense expenditure beyond preserving their reputation and cherishing the poor, and encouraging their subjects; wherefore, if from the royal bounty and kindly favor this trifling sum also should be disbursed from the General Treasury for the poor and wretched, it would not be wonderful. Finally, we hope that what we have stated above, being well considered in the way of kindness and justice, an order may be issued for the re-establishment of the stipends to the students of the Mudrasa on the former footing, and that we may be saved from distress and destruction.

Tenth.—His Honor Warren Hastings was acquainted with the excellencies of Oriental literature and well informed of the state and condition of the people of this country; he was also kind and considerate to the natives. Wherefore he founded the Mohumetan College and appointed an allowance for the students, that the needy and distressed might acquire learning and complete their education with ease and comfort of mind and body; the fame of which noble and liberal achievement to every city and country, that students from Bokkhar, Cabul, and Hindustan, and other distant parts flocked to this College to acquire knowledge. And after his time succeeding Governors, who were well acquainted with the literature of the country and the wants of the people pursued the same course, nay, went beyond him in advancing learning so far as the Mudrasa was concerned; and on this account, when they saw that the former house was not sufficient for the accommodation of the people of the College, they expended nearly two lacs of rupees in erecting a new building for them. But now, alas! a thousand times alas! from the revolutions of fortune and our evil destiny, the gentlemen who possessed acquaintance with the languages current in this country, and who were well informed and had experience in regard to every thing connected with scholars of the Mudrasa, and the people at large of the country, have retired from the General Committee of Public Instruction, apprehensive perhaps, lest, if associated with the gentlemen who now compose that committee, (many of whom are entirely ignorant of the languages spoken and written in this country, and some have but lately arrived in this city, and from non-intercourse with the natives, can have no practical knowledge nor indeed any language at all of the people of this country, except what they have derived from books; while some perhaps, from a partiality to their own religion entertained a dislike and disgust for the learning and creed of others) some injury or wrong should be perpetrated against us in which they might be considered abettors, and a portion of disgrace accruing therefrom might attach to them. On their resignation the newly appointed gentlemen of the committee have passed new orders in opposition to the rule established by the former Governors, and are for lowering and destroying the Musulman institutions. We are quite convinced that these gentlemen, when well aware of the advantage of a Mudrasa, will be disposed to continue and strengthen it; but at present our only hope is in the favour and justice of the Governor General in Council.

May his prosperity be perpetual.

[REPLY OF GOVERNMENT TO THE ABOVE.]

To the Musulman Inhabitants of Bengal.
General Department.

The Governor General of India in Council has received the Petition of the Musulman inhabitants of Bengal, and has given to it all the consideration which is due to the importance of the subject to which it relates. It is the object of the Petitioner to procure a reconsideration of the Orders passed by the Government on the 7th of March 1835 in which certain principles were laid down for regulating the appropriation of the funds assigned by Government to promote and assist the education of its subjects, and in particular to obtain a review of that part of those Orders, which had reference to the allowances made to scholars in the Mudrasa and other Seminaries of education supported by Government.

2. The Right Hon'ble the Governor General of India in Council repeats and adheres to the assurances contained in the reply made to a similar Petition on the 9th March 1835. He trusts, it is unnecessary for him again to declare that it will always be an object with the Government to promote the extension of knowledge among all classes of persons, and that the maintenance of existing Seminaries of established reputation, and the avoidance of even the semblance of interference with the religious feelings and institutions of its subjects are principles of action, that will never cease to be observed by Government and strictly enjoined upon all its officers.

3. The Governor General in Council deems, however, this renewed expression of the wishes of so respectable a class of the subjects of the State as have signed or are interested in the present Petition to be entitled to his respect and attentive consideration; but he has reason to believe that the course to be adopted by the Government in its measures for promoting the instruction of its native subjects, has been taken specifically into consideration by the authorities in England; and that instructions may shortly be expected for the guidance of the Government in this important matter. Such being the case, the Right Hon'ble the Governor General in Council deems it premature to reopen the discussion of the points at issue until he shall be furnished with the expected declaration of the sentiments of the authorities in England. The Petitioners may rest assured that full weight will be given to the expression of their wishes in the deliberations that will necessarily ensue upon the arrival of the expected Orders.

By order of the Right Hon'ble the Governor General of India in Council.

THE BLACK ACT PETITIONS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE BENGAL HURKARU AND CHRONICLE.

SIR,—I request you will do me the favor publicly to make known that the petitions to both Houses of Parliament and the Memorials to the Board of Control and Court of Directors, now lie at the Exchange Rooms for signature. These documents are in duplicate (8 in number) and it is requested that those who sign will sign all. They are already numerous and respectfully signed. The Mofussil signatures affixed by me in pursuance of written authority, are not annexed; these alone fill three rolls of parchment to each petition and memorial.

I send for publication a list of names lately received from Moorshedabad of individuals desirous to sign.

I am, Sir, yours, &c.

MEMORIAL FROM REGIMENTAL MEDICAL STAFF OFFICERS.

The following is the memorial sent in to Government. The memorialists have not as yet received a reply.

THE RIGHT HONORABLE THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL OF INDIA IN COUNCIL.

The memorial of the undersigned Medical Staff of Corps, serving in the Calcutta Division of the Army.

Humbly Sheweth,—That your memorialists, members of the medical staff of the Bengal army, beg respectfully to submit to your Lordship in Council circumstances relating to their pay and allowances when on leave, whether upon sick certificate or private affairs, which they consider press peculiarly hard and unequally upon them.

Your memorialists beg to bring to your Lordship's notice that all staff officers, general and regimental, military and medical, when present on duty receive, in addition to regimental pay and allowances, a certain staff salary. All these officers, with one exception, when on leave of absence draw a moiety of staff salary along with regimental pay and allowances. The exception to this general rule is in the case of regimental medical staff, who, under exactly similar circumstances, are made to forfeit, not a moiety only, but the whole of their staff salary, receiving the regimental pay and allowances alone.

Your memorialists feel assured that you Lordship in Council will allow, that regimental medical staff are from the nature of their duties, necessarily obliged to expose themselves to the influence of a tropical climate both by day and night, and to suffer a degree of anxiety of mind, beyond other officers or the members of perhaps any other profession, which must render them much more liable to require leave on medical certificate; it appears therefore to your memorialists peculiarly hard that medical regimental staff should be compelled to give up their whole staff salary when military regimental staff and all general staff officers, forming so very considerable a portion of the army, are permitted to draw a moiety. It is hardly to be wondered at, that the health of, even lives of, regimental medical staff sometimes fall a sacrifice to their inability or unwillingness to sustain so heavy a pecuniary loss as is entailed upon them by this painful distinction.

With respect to leave on private affairs, your memorialists deem that it will be conceded, that to no officers in the service is the indulgence of a temporary relaxation from mental and corporeal exertion more essential, and that regimental medical staff are not more exempt than other staff from those urgent causes which render leave on this head occasionally imperative.

Your memorialists beg respectfully to urge upon the attention of your Lordship in Council, that while the Government contribute to the comfort and respectability of all general and of military regimental staff, by granting a moiety of staff salary while on leave, and are content neither to gain thereby advantage nor sustain loss; by refusing on the other hand a similar indulgence to regimental medical staff, the Government actually render their misfortunes and necessities a source of very considerable profit to the state, but a severely aggravated burden for medical officers to bear.

Regimental medical staff of cavalry and horse artillery are still more injuriously affected by the existing regulations respecting pay, while on leave, for they forfeit while absent either on sick certificate or private affairs, in addition to their staff salary, their cavalry pay and horse allowances, although they are necessarily as much obliged to keep up charges and cavalry appointments as other cavalry or horse artillery officers, who however do not lose these allowances while on leave.

Your memorialists trust they have submitted their case in a manner sufficiently clear to induce your Lordship in Council to view this painful exception to the regulations respecting staff salaries as a peculiar hardship and injustice to them, and to grant the prayer of their petition, that they may be placed in the same relative position with other regimental staff, and with officers medical as well as military on the general staff, when on leave of absence either on sick certificate or private affairs.

In conclusion, your memorialists humbly conceive that your Lordship in Council has the power to grant the object of their earnest solicitation. Should however a reference to the Court of Directors be deemed requisite, they trust your Lordship will be pleased to transmit this memorial to the honorable court, supported by the weight of the recommendation of your Lordship in Council. And your memorialists as in duty bound will ever pray.

THE FRENCH DRAMATIC COMPANY.

LE CALIFE and the VISITANDINES.

We assisted at the French performances at the Town Hall, Le Calife and the Visitandines. The room was quasi empty. Those present, however, mostly belonged to the influential and dramatic-merit-patronising class,—persons of cultivated taste, and well qualified to appreciate the real merits of the musical exhibition presented to them. It gives us unfeigned pleasure to state that the applause elicited from these select few, was inexpugnable; and in our judgment, was the just tribute to the successful efforts to please, of the different performers. We have said the hall was wretched,—enough to damp the zeal, and deaden the faculties, of even a musical snuffbox; and yet our gilliant neighbours kept up their courage, and plived and sang with as much spirit and attention to scenic propriety, as if the eyes of the world had been upon them. They have not as yet achieved success,—they have done better;—they have deserved it. Our readers will pardon this little plagiarism, as describes very correctly the state of affairs in the French Company. The Calife was very respectably done, and we understand it to be the opinion of individuals possessed of great knowledge and experience, that the merits of Monsieur Bonniol as a musician, and in point of méthode, execution, and taste, as a singer, are very considerable. To our unlearned selves, his voice appears to be a very pleasing tenor of considerable compass, and possessing much sweetness; he has plenty of flexibility, and sings in good taste. He is, in addition, a very tolerable actor. Monsieur Fleury, to his merits as an actor, which his clever performance of Vatel made abundantly manifest, adds considerable musical accomplishment; his voice is a bass of limited compass, but pleasing in tone; he also has great flexibility, and rejoices in a shake bien serré. Madame Thonon is a very respectable Seconda Donna, and reports speaks highly of Madame de Ligny, who is the Prima Donna of the company, and whom indisposition most unfortunately causes for the present to keep the house. Monsieur Sivord is well known. His gardener in the Visitandines was a very quaint and characteristic piece of acting. He has a good bass voice; and there is another gentleman, who possesses some claim to notice. These, with the addition of Mademoiselle Fleury, whose performance of the nun in the second piece evinced considerable comic humour, and who also sings, constitute, we believe, the strength of the French Company. The two operas were very well performed, and we have already observed, on a former occasion, that there is a world of pretty music of a good school, and numberless witty, and facetious productions of the pen of several authors of celebrity, which this Company, as at present constituted, can present to the notice of the public. They certainly, in point of merit, deserve patronage, and we sincerely trust they will obtain it.

We must not conclude without notice of Monsieur Thonon, the leader of the orchestra. He takes the greatest pains to get his orchestra well together, and keeps them so throughout. The overtures of the Calife and Tancrède were very well performed, and the symphonies and accompaniments throughout the evening were pleasingly and generally very correctly executed;—and with this just tribute to the exertions of those engaged in the performance of the evening, we close our observations.—Englishman.

MAISON A VENDRE and PHILTRE CHAMPAGNOIS.

The Maison à Vendre, an opera, and the Philtre Champagnois, styled a vaudeville, but having also certain musical pretensions, were performed by the French Company. The Governor-General and the Messrs Elton were present, and also a considerable section of the play-going and artiste-patronising public. These performances, would have been much more numerously attended but for the postponement, change, and temporary uncertainty which arose as to the night on which they were to take place. We advise the artistes, to whom we wish all possible success, on no account, in future, to permit any trousserie de foye, to cause a postponement, or to effect a change in the day advertised; let them fix their time, and keep it, and we have no doubt that eventually, success will crown their obvious efforts to please and give satisfaction.

The music of the Maison à Vendre, which we understood to be the composition of Delmar, is very pleasing; there are in it, two or three connected pieces of great beauty; we liked best the duet between M. M. Fradin and Fleury, which was exceedingly well executed. Mons. Fradin made his first appearance as Versac, and the merits of this gentleman require more than a brief notice. We have to congratulate the French Company, and the public, in possessing in M. Fradin one of the very best actors in the line of 'parts filled by him that it has been our good fortune to see for some time past. He has admirable stage features, and rejoices in a most delightful comicality of countenance; and then the skill, delicacy and judgment with which he makes his points, his drollery, his vivacity, his abrupt transitions from joyousness to pathos, and back again, the whole too in such admirable keeping with the character he is exhibiting! O! ye play-goers, and laughter-loving patrons of fun, be assured you have at length got among ye a second man of tact, and if you won't take our word for it, we can only say, go and see him yourselves. Mons. Fradin is evidently an accomplished musician; but his voice (a tenor), has not yet recovered from the effects of the sea air.

The incidents of the Maison à Vendre, are common place enough; two young men Versac (Fradin), and Dermont (Fleury), are sent to Paris by their friends to study law, or medicine; they however prefer poetry and music, and set about an opera. Versac is the poet, and Dermont the maestro; their joint production is damned, and their respective parents having stopped the supplies, pecuniary embarrassment ensues. The dormant sentiments of filial piety become in consequence called into activity, and these loving sons, set out from Paris to rejoin their fond expectant relatives at Bordeaux. The two friends, although not laden with much philosophy, are yet so far imbued with the doctrines of the peripatetic school, that they perform their journey on foot, and after some time exhaust their finances, and arrive at the close of a long day's march, at a neat domicile, in the window of which is stuck up Maison à Vendre! in and around which, the incidents of the opera take place. The bold and vivacious Versac, determines to stop and sleep in the house, and after a short interview with its pretty proprietress (Mad. de Ligny), he coolly purchases it for sixty-thousand francs, terrific—a rich old neighbour with the detail of his projected improvement, proposes to cut off his winter courses, shut out his views, build up his ancient lights, and finally ruin his property in displaying his taste in the living out, and decorating of his own. The poor voisin, to get rid of the volatile French Republican, purchases the purchase of Versac, and gives 20,000 francs for his bargain, with which the generous poet, immediately marries his friend Dermont to the niece (Mlle. Fleury) of the pretty ex-proprietress, and so ends La Maison à Vendre; but a better piece of acting, than M. Fradin's Versac, we never saw; the other parts were also very well sustained.

The Philire Champenois, presented Fradin again, as the shepherd Eloi, a creature endowed with beautiful natural qualities, but somewhat hidden by extreme sheepishness and timidity: he loves the lovely Catherine, a widow with a most becoming cachet cap. The lady has many suitors, among others Gobegeot, (Fleury) a smart and dapper barber. Eloi never tells his love, but lets concealment, &c prey on his dumask cheek: at length in despair at the apparent success of his rival, he gets a philtre or love charm, in the shape of a bottle of champagne: and having thus become a sort of bottle imp, he takes courage and owns the soft impeachment of the fair Catherine—who finds out two things in her interview with the faithful shepherd; first, that he has long loved her—and 2^{ly}, that Eloi is much younger, and better looking than the barber, and therefore much more likely to make the sort of husband to suit her. She agrees to marry him, but subsequently becomes jealous, and while under the influence of this amiable passion, discards poor Eloi and takes up Gobegeot merely out of pique, as she very cautiously tells him. Gobegeot not liking this, goes also to provide himself with a love charm; and by way of making himself more loveable than his rival, doubles the dose, and comes in to the presence of Catherine, very 'how comed you so indeed' as Mrs. Butler would say; and Catherine is shocked! and just in the nick of time, finds out that she had no cause for jealousy; recall the poor discarded faithful Eloi, rewards him with her hand. There is also another brace of lovers to whom the generous Eloi gives up his half of an inheritance of 600 francs a year.

The dialogue of this vaudeville is very cleverly written, and the character of Eloi drawn with the hand of a master. He is a complete child of nature, and in the hands of Fradin, was most comically pathetic. His acting in this part was masterly; not Emery himself could have excelled him. Mons. Fleury, between the pieces, sang an Italian song, and Mons. Thonon played on the violoncello: the latter performance was very much admired.

We may not forget to observe, that Mad. de Ligny's representation of the fair Catherine was both in point of appearance, and of acting, highly attractive.—Hurharu.

MR. WILLIAMS'S DECEPTIONS.

"Three thimbles and van little pen, with a van, two, three, and a two, three, van:—catch him who can, look on, keep your eyes open and never say die!"

We accompanied a select party, consisting of Jinks and the two Miss Vias-les, to see Mr. Williams's 'new and highly celebrated flare-up of impossibilities and illusions.' It is but justice to the incomparable genius of Mr. W., to say that we have rarely enjoyed a higher degree of intellectual wandernent. First of all, there was the Town Hall grand drawing room all lighted up in Gunder and Hooper's second best style, and a place laid off for the orchestra, which was separately illuminated by twelve respectable tallow dips, seventeen to the half pound, and tenanted by nine or ten regular bred musicians, led by Messrs. Stone and Ballin, or Ballin and Stone, conjointly. Down the centre of the orchestra, from the stage to the parterre, ran a flight of steps, covered with red cloth, evidently for the purpose of enabling the conjuror to communicate with his numerous and highly respectable visitors. Jinks justly remarks that what with canals, rail roads, and flights of steps covered with red cloth, the whole family of man would soon be brought in juxta position with the devil, and no mistake. We could not contradict him. Well at eight o'clock, with a punctuality only observed by acrobaticers and soldier officers, a muffled bell was heard to ring, and Stone and Ballin simultaneously rose; and placing themselves in the graceful attitudes observed on such occasions by professional gentlemen, played away like winking some grand, new, popular, and highly celebrated overture, never before heard in these foreign parts;—and when they'd played till they were tired, they sat down again, and the other gentlemen put by their fiddles, and there was a dead silence, and a sort of breathless expectation, and then, with a muffled bell preface, the red curtain rose. God! what a disclosure! Jemima Vias-les was struck 'all of a heap' as a holy man say;—Matilda, whose nerves are stronger, maintained an appearance of composure. The rest of the company were in a state of indescribable excitement. There were three tables—one big one and two little ones—all covered with very red cloth. There were cansticks on the tables, and strange little boxes, also, to say nothing of mysterious packs of cards, and little balls, and pen cases, and tiny stands and lilliputian pedestals, and a great big curtain of Baroda cloth at the back of the whole concern, all very grand and wonderful to see. After a pause, during which you might have heard a mosquito blow its nose—if it has one—Mr. Williams made his entree. What a relief! Instead of a magician with a red or a blue cloak, a white beard, a black cap, a long white wand, spectacles and a sinister look, there stood before us a rather genteel looking young gentleman in a Madras made blue cloth coat, black waistcoat and dark 'oh no we never mention 'em, to correspond. He wore a superfluity of julep colored hair, and a rather interesting cadaverous expression of countenance—and a ring, and a black cravat—and seemed quite 'round by hat' as the other Calcutta papers occasionally have it.

Mr. Williams commenced, with a little lecture upon the Black Art:—we beg pardon, these printers are always making mistakes, the Black Art. The conjuring gentleman was rather invisible in the gallery, but would distinctly hear him say something about the hand being quicker than the eye—and the eye slower than the hand—and legerdemain, and sleight of hand, and we were intensely edified accordingly. Mr. Williams then went up to the big table covered with the red cloth, and taking the pack of myterious cards in one hand and his fist in the other, he came down the front stair case—spoken of above—and requested any ladies and gentlemen 'as knows cards' to take one from the pack, and look at it and never say nothing to no body, and shuffle the pack :—and they did so ; and then, with all the ease imaginable, Mr. Williams told them the name of the 'identical card, and gave them their choice as to the quarter it should come from.—Jemima fainted ;—Matilda, still firm as a rock. Jinks curled his upper lip with a sort of I-know-how-do-it look. Then Mr. W. did other tricks with cards all very wonderful and totally inexplicable—then he restored the pack to the big red table, and addressing the company, asked in a loud voice,

'Is there any lady or gentleman as has an at ?

'A gnat?' exclaimed Jinks—'won't a musquito do as well?' 'Don't you wish you may get it,' said a dealer in hams and chandeliers. Jemima laughed, and a fat lady in front with a evenly blue sash and a face as red as the cloth on the big table, turned round and looked superlative indignation. A deal silence ensued. The demand for the 'at' was repeated. Bear complaisance, impatience, all went to work, and at length a 'shocking bad hat' was lent to tife conjuror. To see the strange wonders that were done with that 'at'? To see how things which were placed there vanished no one knows how, and anon things were found there—'which were not there before!!!' Then the necromancer borrowed 'an ankercher,' and a gentleman from the crowd went up on the stage and put 'an and on the at and an and on the ankercher' and looked wise and thought there was a rupee underneath and there wasn't. Then Mr. Williams borrowed a rupee,—because he couldn't get a ten-pound Bank of England note,—and he tried to borrow a wedding ring, but no married woman could lend one, and no unmarried woman had one to lend, and—But we cannot describe half the Ketterfeltan wonders. It would take columns to tell how Mr. Williams metamorphosed rings and mystified monies ; how he cut up people's handkerchiefs and gave them back others instead ;—how he cut holes in shirts and never mended them ; how he fired pistols and nailed cards to blue boards ; how Jemima cried 'did you ever?' and Matilda answered 'No, I never ;' how the conjuror borrowed things and never returned them ; how birds came out of bottles, and wine out of empty funnels—how a little precocious youth called Master Alexander (but carrying indisputable evidence about him that he was a clip of the Williams block) sang comic songs to comic tunes ;—how Mr. W. talked to a big hair trunk, and made the Members of the Trade Association believe that there was a very old man and a still older woman inside—how young gentlemen went on the stage, and did the facetious, and young ladies staid below and did the nervous ;—how, in short, every thing was very marvellous and very tedious, and all very creditable to Mr. Williams's industry and surprising intelligence, and incomparable genius, and wonderful tact.

The company present was rather select than numerous. Lord Auckland and the Miss Edens did not attend, but we had the pleasure to recognise the Editor of the Courier, Mr. Beardsmore, the Nuwab Tehahur Jung, and other equally distinguished persons. The show began at seven minutes past eight by our stop watch, and terminated precisely at three minutes to eleven by the Cathedral clock, and four minutes after eleven by the new clock of the Scotch Church.—Englishman.

SUPREME COURT.

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 5, 1836.

In the Supreme Court this morning, Agapeto de los Reis, and the five other prisoners, convicted with him during the last sessions, were placed at the bar. Mr. Leith rose, and stated it was his intention to urge that this court had not authority.

Mr. Justice Grant informed the learned counsel that if it was his intention to move for an arrest of judgment he was quite willing to hear him, but his lordship thought it proper to state that the judges had taken this case into consideration, and it was the opinion of the whole court, from the importance of the question, it was fitting before sentence should be carried into execution, that the case should be submitted to his Majesty. He would, therefore, pass sentence of death upon the prisoners but respite execution until his Majesty's pleasure shall be known. If, however, the learned counsel thought he could urge anything for the advantage of his client, his lordship said, a full court would be willing to give him an opportunity.

Under these circumstances, Mr. Leith declined to address the court.

Mr. Justice Grant then addressed the prisoners :—You were tried with singular care and attention before a very intelligent jury, for one of the greatest crimes which in its circumstances can be imputed to man. Objections on points of law were taken for one of you by counsel, of which objections all the rest of you have equally the benefit. I disposed of those objections according to my opinion of the law, and directed the jury if they were of opinion you were guilty upon the facts of the case, it was their duty to return a verdict against you. Council has now offered to move for an arrest of judgment, and I have informed him, that in consultation with the other judges, and in consideration of the novelty of the case, and the circumstances that attend it, it has been determined to arrest carrying the sentence into execution, until the pleasure of his Majesty shall be known. It now therefore remains for me to pass upon you the sentence of the law, and it is my duty to inform you, if it be the opinion of those who are appointed to advise his Majesty, that your trial has been a right one, you can entertain no hope that the sentence will not be carried into execution.

The six Malay prisoners, convicted of piracy, committed in the Straits of Malacca, were then placed at the bar, and his lordship made a similar communication to the prisoners' counsel, Mr. Clarke and Mr. Osborne, as to the determination of the court, to refer the case home for his Majesty's consideration. But if counsel were desirous to urge anything which they thought might be to the prisoner's advantage, his lordship said, the judges would be willing to hear them.

Mr. Clarke said, he would take a course different to that pursued by Mr. Leith, as the circumstances of the two cases were entirely different. He would briefly inform the court what that course was. Should he succeed in convincing their lordships that they have no authority to try the prisoners, the proceeding would go for nothing, and if Government thought proper to send the prisoners to their own country for trial, their counsel did not fear the result. Under those circumstances he thought it his duty to endeavour to convince their lordships that they had not power to try the prisoners.

Mr. Justice Grant.—Then I will speak to the other judges, and they will name a day on which the whole court may hear you on the point of law.

Rajah Barrodicaunt Roy v. Kistnocaunt Sein.

Chief Justice.—The majority of the court are prepared to give a decree for the complainant for the 56 villages mortgaged by the Rajah Srecaunt Roy, the complainant's father, but the complainant also claims the 22 villages seized under the process on the bond and warrant, and sold by the Sheriff. Mr. Justice Grant and myself are prepared to give a decree for the 56 villages, but not for the 22, and you, Mr. Clarke, must have an issue if you will not abandon your claim for the 22 villages, in order that it may be found, whether the circumstances connected with the sale of the 22 villages was benamee or not. It is at the option of the complainant to abandon the 22 villages, and we will then give you a decree for the 56 villages. The only question disposed of by the former issue, was that of mortgage or no mortgage. We found a mortgage from the Rajah Srecaunt to Goursoonder Odicarry, but whether benamee or not we did not decide, and could not, upon the evidence, then adduced. If the transaction with respect to the 22 villages be proved on the trial of the issue to be benamee, you, the complainant, will then have a decree for the 78 villages, on the ground of fraud. Mr. Clarke, we will give you until Wednesday to determine whether you will or not abandon your claim to the twenty-two villages.

Mr. Clarke.—Will your Lordship permit to ask, whether upon the decision of the issue, relating to the twenty-two villages, supposing it unfavorable to the complainant, your lordship will still give as a decree for the 56 villages?

Chief Justice.—Mr. Clarke, we cannot answer that question for you. (Laughter).

Maxwell v. Brown.

In this the judgment of the court on exceptions to the Master's report, on a reference for impertinence, was given.

There were 6 exceptions—two were allowed and four overruled. Costs to be paid of 4 exceptions by complainant, and of the two allowed by the defendant.

Manuk v. Manuk.

The Court intimated, they would deliver judgment in this case on Wednesday next.

Radjchunder Doss v. Gopymohun Doss.

The Court gave decree in this case, which did not present any thing of public interest.

Goverdhone Doss v. Juggernaut Doss.

In this case an issue was directed to say whether Govulnauth Doss, under whom the defendant is in possession of the property, made previously to his death, a verbal gift of the property in question in the suit to Juggernaut Doss.

In the matter of proving in solemn form the will of Page deceased.

Chief Justice.—In this case there are two principles in law which must govern the decision of the Court upon this will. 1st.—Where there is proof of the signature of the testator, every thing else follows of course, and is held good, until the contrary be shewn, and the reading over of the will framed off the signed instructions of the testator, is not necessary to be proved. 2d.—When the capacity of the testator is doubtful at the time of the execution of the will, the instructions must be proved to have been read over to the testator, and the circumstances attending the signature must be strictly proved, but only when the instrument in question is inefficient.

Now in this case the instrument is not inefficient; nor has it been obtained by any person materially interested in the disposition of the property. There is not a particle of evidence to shew any improper motive, or any suspicious conduct to Mr. Lamb, the executor. The paper (C) is the instructions for the will, and the evidence of Mr. Charles, shews that the conduct of Mr. Lamb with reference to them was open and fair; and I think it sufficiently appears that the instructions were given by the testator; and that the will is in perfect accordance with those instructions. The Chief Justice cited the case of Broyden v. Brown. The evidence as to his capacity at the time of signing the will clearly shews, that he knew what he was about, and that fact coupled with his evident knowledge of the instructions, shews clearly that he meant to execute the will. We therefore decree probate of the will. We think, however, this was a proper case, to raise the question, and to take the opinion of the Court upon the will. The impugnant is, therefore, to have her costs out of the estate.

Gonsalves v. Gonsalves.

Chief Justice.—In this case we must decree a divorce à mensa et thoro. The wife is entitled to her costs unless misconduct be shewn; we accordingly give her her costs. As to alimony, the wife has neglected to file an allegation of faculties in her husband. The husband in his personal answer has sworn that he has no property, and depends on his mother. Under these circumstances, the court is uninformed, as to the ability of the husband to pay alimony. We decline, therefore, making any order on this point. The husband's liability for the debts of the wife, will not be effected by this decree of divorce à mensa et thoro. When we are informed as to his means, we will then decree alimony.

Mr. Clarke.—On behalf of the friends of Mr. Gonsalves, offered by way of alimony one hundred Rupees a month.

Mr. W. Grant.—As counsel for Mrs. Gonsalves, declined accepting any allowance less than for 200 rupees a month.

The decree is, therefore, for a separation from bed and board; and the husband is liable for the debts of his wife.

The Court then took motions of course, after which the case of Joygopal Bysack v. Ramanauth Bysack was called on. This case took up the remainder of the day—the question was whether Hindoo executors should receive the commission of five per cent. on the testator's Estates.

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 7.

Manuk v. Manuk.

The Chief Justice stated, that in this case which was as to the legal construction to be put upon a will, that Mr. Justice Grant from having been so constantly occupied with the Sessions, was not prepared to state his opinion as to the estate taken by the parties in the will, in certain premises in Dacre's Lane, but that the learned judge agreed with the Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Malkin on all the other points, and that the court was unanimous with this exception. Under these circumstances, the court would, if counsel consented, proceed to give its judgment.

The first point the court decided was on the 9th article of the will. The Chief Justice cited Baynton v. Ward, 2 Atkins; Holmes v. Coghill, 2 Vez. 503. a case noted in the supplement to Vesey; Stretch v. Watkins, 1st Maddon Rep. and upon these, and we believe one other case, we could not take down, the court held that the widow of the testator took only a life interest with a power of appointment in the bequest in the clause of the will, which power of appointment she had failed to exercise, and at her death, therefore the whole bequest of Rs. 30,000 reverted to the estate of the testator. The 2d point was the construction to be put on the 11th article of the will, the Chief Justice stated, we think the question not free from difficulty, but upon the authority of Wylde's case in the 6 Rep. we hold that the son took an estate for life, in the lands devised under this clause, with remainder to his sons in tail male.

15th Clause. The construction we put upon this clause is, that the shares of such sons, as die under age, and without issue, will go to the survivors; the word or, must be construed as and. These are all the points which arise as to the construction to be put upon this will.

The executor, Mr. Sarkies Owen, is entitled to his costs.

Barrodicaunt Roy v. Kistnocaunt Sein.

Mr. Clarke upon being called on to elect, whether he would take a decree for the 56 villages, and abandon the 22 villages; or, take issues on certain points connected with the sale of the 22 villages, called the attention of the court to exhibit X. No. 3.

Chief Justice.—Mr. Clarke we do not require an argument now, but your election. We have a perfect recollection of exhibit X. No. 3, but we have determined that we have not before us that evidence respecting the transactions connected with the sale of the twenty-two villages, upon which we can give a decree. We must have an issue if you do not abandon.

Mr. Clarke.—My Lord, if you compel me to abandon I cannot go home and appeal against my own act. I have no hesitation to admit that I have produced no further evidence than that called at the trial of the last issue. With respect to the 22 villages, the Court has already before it all the evidence we can give. I do not, therefore, want to take the issue the court proposes, and yet if you put me in this alternative, either to accept the issues, or to abandon, you take away my right of appeal while you leave it to the other side. Your lordship sees, therefore, the hardship of the case.

Chief Justice. I can only tell you again, Mr. Clarke, that the court will not pronounce as to those twenty-two villages, there is conflicting evidence, and we must have an issue to have this explained. You must go to an issue, unless you abandon—true, you may have no more evidence to produce; but the other side may have a great deal.

Justice Grant.—You know, Mr. Clarke, you can abandon the question of benamsee; but there are other points upon which the court must be satisfied before it will proceed to decree as to these twenty-two villages.

Mr. Clarke.—If we refuse to file our plaint.

Chief Justice.—If you refuse to file your plaint, Mr. Clarke we shall know how to deal with that.

(After much consultation with the clients and Mr. W. Grant,) the learned counsel then intimated to the court, that he was unwillingly compelled to abandon the 22 villages and would take his decree for the 56. Some conversation here occurred between the Advocate-General and the court as to how many of the 56 villages the decree was to include, when the Chief Justice observed that the minutes of the decree would determine the question raised by the Advocate-General, and if any thing appeared to him wrong, he could then take his course.

The learned judges then proceeded seriatim to give their judgments. Mr. Justice Malkin differing from the Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Grant.

Gonsalves v. Gonsalves.

Mr. Clarke intimated that he was prepared on the part of Mr. Gonsalves to come forward, and allow Mrs.

Gonsalves the sum of 200 rupees a month by way of alimony.

Mr. Grant, for Mrs. Gonsalves, accepted this sum.

Chief Justice.—Very well, let it be so entered in the minutes of the decree.

Twentyman, Executor v. Woollaston, Executor, and others.

In this case the assets in the hands of the executor Mr. Woollaston appeared to be about 30,000 ~~Rs.~~ in 4 per cent. Company's paper. The complainant, who was an executor appointed in the will, but who had not acted, applied for his discharge. The question was whether the money must not first be paid into court, as there were three infants in the case.

The matter stands over till the 1st day of term, and the Chief Justice intimated, if the plan the court has proposed be adopted by government, the commission payable on payment of monies into the hands of the Accountant-General will be much less than at present.

Bahoo Janoky Doss v. Mutty Churn and others.

In this cause a petition for rehearing presented. An order nisi was granted with liberty to shew cause before a judge in Chambers.

The court then rose, having cleared the equity sittings board, and will not again sit till the first day of the term. —Englishman.

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 30.

In Chamber—Before Mr. Justice Grant.

In the goods of James Napier Lyall, deceased.

This was an argument on a caveat.

On a former day, Mr. Whyte, of the firm of Mackenzie, Lyall and Co., applied for probate of the last will of James Napier Lyall, deceased.

To the granting of probate to Mr. Whyte, a caveat was entered by Mr. Charles Lyall, of the firm of Lyall, Matheson and Co.

The case came on for argument to-day.

Mr. Prinsep in support of the caveat, took a preliminary objection, and contended, that the case was irregularly set down for argument before a judge in Chambers, the question of a caveat could only be argued in Chambers by consent.

Mr. Clarke. A caveat can be argued in Chambers as well as in open Court, it is in the Ecclesiastical Courts, in the nature of an injunction in equity.

Mr. Justice Grant.—An Ecclesiastical Court is always open.

The Ecclesiastical Registrar stated upon the point of practice being put to him, that he was aware of no case in which an argument of a caveat had been in that Court held in Chambers; but that he was not aware of any practice to the contrary.

The Advocate-General for Mr. Whyte, the executor, stated in answer to the judge, that he had very special grounds to urge, why the argument should come on at once. They are, that the property of the testator ought not to be left, without there being some responsible person to take care of it, and from whom an account might be demanded by the legatees in the will. The present applicant for probate, was one of two executors appointed by the will, and the only one resident in this country. The caveator was a person who took nothing under the will, had no interest in the matter, and was in fact a mere interloper, and his only ground of interference is in fact, that he has heard that the will at home is different from the will on which probate is sought here; he is also a debtor to the estate of the deceased. I have heard of a creditor interfering, but it is something new, to see a debtor, in this situation: he ought to account forthwith to the estate, and is the very last person in the world to enter a caveat. It is not denied that Mr. Whyte is appointed executor.

The Registrar here stated in answer to a question from the learned Judge, that he had found no case in which the Court had refused to take an argument of this sort, in Chambers.

Mr. Justice Grant, then called on Mr. Prinsep, and declined hearing Mr. Clarke, who was with the Advocate-General.

Mr. Prinsep.—There is no reason for taking out probate instant, but that the funds are in the hands of the caveator: he then stated that Mr. James Napier Lyall, the testator, had sold his interest in the house of Mackenzie, Lyall and Co. for a sum between two and three lacs of Rs. that Lyall, Matheson and Co. were the constituted attorneys of the testator for the purpose of receiving the monthly payments of 3,000 Rs. from Messrs. Whyte and Lamb, constituting the present firm of Mackenzie, Lyall and Co., and who had entered into a bond to pay the purchase money of his interest in the firm to Mr. J. N. Lyall, by monthly instalments of 3,000 Rs.; that the will upon which probate was now sought, was in the hands of Messrs. Lyall, Matheson and Co.; that the testator previously to his sailing for England, had executed two wills in duplicate—the one he left here with Lyall, Matheson and Co. and the other he took with him; and that the latter was the last promulgated, and was consequently the will on which probate ought to be granted; that the whole estate of the testator in this country, was the bond of Messrs. Whyte and Lamb, and that Lyall, Matheson and Co. were left to get in the monies payable on this bond by Messrs. Whyte and Lamb; that Mr. Robert Lyall, of the firm of Lyall, Matheson and Co., was the other executor named in the will, and was then absent in China—the will, we know by letter, is on its way out per ship Gipsy accompanied with other documents.

Mr. Justice Grant.—Upon what grounds do you say that the estate should be left without any one to take care of it?

Mr. Prinsep.—There is no immediate necessity for granting probate. Mr. Whyte has filed a bill in equity, and prayed for a receiver, therefore there is now less necessity than ever, the receiver appointed by the Court will take care of the property here; besides, by statute, 6 months are allowed to prove a will—we only want to wait for the arrival of the will by the Gipsy. The affidavit of Messrs. Whyte and Lamb, is rather told swearing; they state the firm of Lyall, Matheson and Co. to be indebted to the estate of the deceased 35,000 Rs.; we on the contrary swear and shew we have only 6,000 Rs. in our hands on this account, and that since the arrival of the news of Mr. J. N. Lyall's death, that sum has been invested in Government paper in the names of the executors named in the will.

Mr. Justice Grant.—All these may be very good reasons for allowing the caveat, but they do not go to prevent my hearing the argument on it. I am very much impressed with the necessity of appointing some one to take care of the estate; I will, therefore, hear the argument; you had better go into the case, Mr. Prinsep, and when I have heard both sides, I will then determine either to give my decision, or to send the matter before the whole Court.

Mr. Prinsep.—The instalments on the bond have been regularly paid up, but no interest upon them, and Whyte and Lamb, owe upwards of 22,000 Rs. to the estate for interest; now the only estate of the testator in this country is this bond, and Whyte being executor, if probate is granted to him, the estate at once becomes extinguished. The estate would legally vest in him, and no one at law could compel payment of the instalment, the estate would in consequence be saddled with an equity suit. Charles Lyall, the caveator, is the attorney of the other executor Robert Lyall; the whole amount now due on the bond is 2,13,431 Rs., 22,000 of which is for interest, after deducting what has been paid; accounts are annexed to on grounds shewing how this statement is made out. Whyte is in himself the whole estate of the testator, as well as his executor the whole estate here being the debt due on this bond. By these accounts it appears that Lyall, Matheson and Co. have only six thousand rupees (Qy. 3,000 Rupees) belonging to the estate in their hands, and that is invested in Company's Paper. It is, I must say, more than bold swearing to say that 35,000 Rs. is now owing by Lyall, Matheson and Co. to this estate. The learned counsel then animadverted on the affidavit of Messrs. Whyte and Lamb, and stated that much of it was sworn, without a particle of foundation for the assertions made on it.

A letter arrives by the overland dispatch, with intelligence of the death of Mr. Lyall, and of a will having been opened in England; but the items, and bequests in the will, are not disclosed by the letter, and it may for ought that appears be different from the will here, on which probate is now demanded, and there is not the slightest proof of identity of bequests, between the will here, and that at home. Copies of the will at home, are being forwarded by the Gipsy, and by the Richmond, this is proved by an extract from a letter by the overland mail, and which we in our affidavit state to be, the grounds of our behalf of the fact. The letter is from Mr. Lyall of the firm of Lyall and Brothers, London, the correspondents of Lyall, Matheson and Co. I only ask that probate should be suspended until the other will arrives; the delay cannot be more than a week, we swear to this extract of the letter, by which it appears, that the will is shipped and on its way out; the original in the Gipsy, the duplicate in the Richmond. It is supposed these ships sailed in June, and June ships have already arrived. Under all these circumstances, therefore, I submit probate ought not to go. By it the whole estate would be placed at the mercy of Mr. Whyte; he is the sole executor here, and the probate would operate, as an extinguishment of all legal claim on Whyte, and must of necessity, throw the matter into equity; besides the Court will not grant probate upon a mere duplicate, not sworn to be identical in its provisions with the will about to arrive. If they had said, we send you a will of which the duplicate is in Calcutta, that would have obviated the difficulty, but they say nothing to that effect. The will here and that coming out, may be the same in their provisions in point of fact, but the Court must be satisfied of that before it will grant probate; especially when the whole debt to the estate would in law be extinguished by the probate to Whyte, I will consent to a receiver, or to letters ad colligenda to any one whom the Court may chuse to appoint. The power to attorney of Lyall, Matheson and Co. to receive the monthly instalments is at an end by the death of Jas. N. Lyall, and therefore if probate is granted Whyte will peremptorily demand the delivering up of the bond.

Mr. Justice Grant.—Where does it appear that the will is to come by the Gipsy? the nature of the enclosures mentioned in the letter of Mr. Lyall, of London, is not disclosed.

Mr. Prinsep.—We swear that we expect these ships daily. The learned Counsel here read letters from the legatees under the will at Montrose, in proof of the sailing of the ships in question, and the shipping the will and other papers.

Mr. Justice Grant.—If Mr. Prinsep, you have opened your whole affidavit, why it is defective; you have not sworn that you believe the will is coming out in the Gipsy. I must have your belief on the subject, and not merely the grounds of your belief, which is all that you have as yet stated of your affidavit.

Mr. Prinsep.—Certainly we have not sworn positively to this point; we cannot, indeed, we can only give the grounds of our belief, which we have done.

The Advocate-General, with whom was Mr. Clarke, against the caveat. My friend has placed the question entirely on wrong grounds; the question is not whether for the fantastical reasons or pretences of my friend you shall refuse probate; the only question is, whether the will now produced is the will of the testator, and whether Mr. Whyte is entitled to probate. The learned counsel was then proceeding to state the whole circumstances of the sale of his interest, in the firm of Mackenzie, Lyall and Co., by the testator; the bond and payments thereon to Lyall, Matheson and Co.; the execution of the will and subsequent embarkation for Europe by the testator; when he was addressed by Mr. Justice Grant.—You see, Mr. Advocate, (not to interrupt you) before you go into all these facts, I should like it to be shewn to me that this is the will.

The Advocate-General continues.—Lyall the Testator in May 1835, entered into a contract with Whyte and Lamb, for the sale of his interest in the firm of Mackenzie, Lyall and Co., and they gave a bond for three lacs of rupees. It is sworn in Mr. G. Collier's affidavit that the will was drawn by him in duplicate each part sealed up by Mr. Collier himself in the presence of and by the direction of the testator; one was delivered to Lyall, Matheson and Co. and the other remained with the testator himself. If I am asked if this is the will, I answer it is; because it was drawn so, and is sworn to be such. Mr. Prinsep has stated, that the will at home is the last will, because it was last executed, and that Lyall on his death delivered the will, with other papers, into the hands of Captain Campbell, the commander of the ship, to be transmitted to Lyall and Brothers, London, and by them to be transmitted to his relations the legatees.

But the present caveator is an interloper, and the pretence of his interference, exceedingly philanthropical—he must look after the interests of the testator's two natural children. This is a most farcical pretence; Mr. Whyte, the nephew of the testator, is surely nearer kin to them, than Mr. Charles Lyall or Lyall, who is in no wise related to the testator. My friend has stated on affidavits bold swearing, in the particular of stating Lyall, Matheson and Co. to be indebted to the estate of the testator, and yet they themselves, in their grounds and accounts appended, admit the fact and that too through the mouths of their attorney (reads a letter from Mr. Shaw.) My friend says, the monies paid to them on account of the bond have been invested. Now the meaning of invested I had thought was somewhat different. Invested means placing in Company's paper, or English stock; but according to these accounts furnished by my friend, vested means drawing a set of bills in June, for £800, on Messrs Glynn, Halifax and Co., Bankers, London, at 1s. 11½d. per rupee. This was not a very good remittance for the estate, supposing the bills to be the best in the world. It certainly was rather an odd mode of vesting funds to send home bills at 1s. 11½d. when every body knows the rate of exchange was then 2s. 3d. But bills for £800 drawn on Glynn, Halifax and Co. cannot be called vesting funds to the credit of an estate: it is no payment—it is still a debt, and he is indeed a bold man, who can swear he is not indebted, when he has only his own bill drawn upon a London bank to shew for the liquidation of his debt to the estate of an intestate. This question is not as to the goodness of the bank on which the bill is drawn, but as to the responsibility of the drawer. Why does he then interfere since it is quite clear he is still indebted to the estate? It is then said, oh! but we had an authority to receive the 3,000 Rs. a month. Has not the power expired with the man who granted it? They have no longer any claim whatever in virtue of this power, they have no claim for any other cause; and why then interfere in the matter of this estate? They chuse, moreover, to say that there may have been alterations in the will, during the passage home. A very likely story. The testator had no intimate friends on board, and dying delivered his will to the Captain, who was not his relation. They had no account whatever of the will which was coming out, differing in the slightest degree from our duplicate. I ask, therefore, for probate, because Mr. Whyte is the only executor here, or likely to be here. We have a letter signed by all the legatees, who have been instructed as to the contents of the will at home—they are the same as the legatees in our will. This is something like a presumption, that the will at home is unchanged. The real object of Mr. Whyte, says my friend, is by getting probate to extinguish the debt! What, one of two partners of a firm, and both jointly bound? Besides probate would not in equity operate as an extinguishment of the debt, and it extinguishes not the claim, but only the remedy at law. But surely all these evils consequent upon Mr. Whyte's acting as executor, must have been present to the testator when he made the will, and Whyte one of his executors? My friend would have saved much time, had he abstained from detailing these mighty evils in the estimation of the caveator, but which did not appear such to the testator himself.

The learned counsel then went at length into the question of the identity of bequests in the two wills, and contended that his duplicate was the same in every particular as the will coming out—and that there was not a shadow of ground to satisfy the Court that the latter has been altered.

Mr. Clarke followed against the caveat. Called the attention of the Judge to the affidavit of Collier and Parker, the subscribing witnesses to the will—the next point is the will itself. He leaves 50,000 Rs. each to his two natural children. The learned counsel here detailed the provisions of the will. The residuary legatees take a much larger share of the property than the natural children, and yet they have no fear of probate being granted to Mr. Whyte, on the contrary they write out under the impression that he will take out probate, and urge his sending home powers to some one in England to act for him; and take care of the estate in England. The learned counsel, then showed the improbability of his altering his will on board a ship; he had no friends or relation near him, and he made his will but two days before his embarkation; why then should he in so short a time alter his mind? No doubt that up to the time he sailed it was his last will—up to that time it was a valid will, and Whyte is entitled to probate. No circumstances have been shewn to make it appear other than his last will; if probate be refused in this case, in no case can probate be granted of the will of a man dying in England, until affirmative proof be sent out that he had made another, or altered that he will be left behind. The letter of the 5 legatees from Montrose, corroborates the validity of this will; why do the legatees, who are the same as in our will, write out to the two persons named executors in our will, if there is a difference?

Mr. Justice Grant. They do not say there is a difference, but that there may be a difference.

Mr. Clarke then argued at some length to shew that the knowledge of the will derived by the legatees from the copy of the will at home, went to shew that its provisions were precisely the same as those of the will here. The learned counsel then went into the grounds of the caveat and contended that they did establish the slightest difference between the wills; let us suppose he did alter his will on board a ship, the alteration would have appeared on the face of it. If he had made another will, would he not have said, I hereby cancel the former; Yet here is Mr. W. Lyall of London, in possession of all his papers who writes out here, and yet neither his letters, nor those of the legatees, contain a single allusion, to any alteration having taken place in the will at home, or to shew that the identity of the two wills is in any wise controverted—he tells Lyall, Matheson and Company to be cautious and to peruse all papers, before delivering them to Whyte; thereby admitting Whyte to be the executor; and would he not have intimated the fact had any alteration, or revocation taken place?

I contend therefore the wills are counterparts. Mr. Lyall of London himself admits, that nothing can be done at home with the property until the executors are heard from. Mr. Clarke then contended that it was expressly necessary that an executor should have probate, in order to take care of the property, and taking up the accounts of Lyall, Matheson and Company, shewed that they admitted the receipt of 36,000 Rs. since June 1835, from the house of Mackenzie, Lyall and Co. and accounted only for 8,000 Rs. and that from 1st May, 1836. What then, said the learned counsel, has become of the remaining 28,000 Rs.? They say it has been sent home, I should like to hear when and how. Mr. Clarke then commented on the unfavorable remittances of bills home, at the rate of 1s. 11½d. per rupee, and put it to any commercial man whether such conduct with the funds of a constituent did not require an immediate interference. Mr. Whyte is entitled to probate as executor; he has, moreover, filed his bill in equity and prays for a receiver, which is a proof of his honesty of purpose. He could no longer pay the 3,000 Rs. a month to Lyall, Matheson and Co., their power of attorney having expired, and that he shews clearly, therefore, that his sole object is the benefit of the estate, and that he wishes to pay his monthly instalments into the hands of the receiver of the Court of equity.

Mr. Prinsep replied shortly, and

Mr. Justice Grant. I don't see any reason to doubt that the will proved here, is the will of the testator. If the affidavits of the caveator had proved that he died on board a ship with a will in his possession, and that he had none in his possession when he departed from Calcutta, that would have perhaps led me to a different conclusion. But it is sworn on the other side, that the will was executed in duplicate, and that he executed it two days previous to his going on board, and took one duplicate with him. At the period of his death he delivers papers to the Captain of the ship, amongst which is a will. It does not appear that he published any will on board the ship, and there is therefore no reason to wait, to see whether the will coming out is the same.

The wills were executed in duplicate, and under the circumstances you (Mr. Prinsep) must prove, either an alteration of the duplicate with the testator, or a cancelling of it, or the making of another will—of all which nothing appears.

The Court is bound to give entire confidence to the executor, in whom the testator has reposed entire confidence.

I can't say it appears here clearly, in what right, or in what light, or interest the caveator comes forward; he holds only a general power of attorney from Robert Lyall; the other executor, to manage his affairs in his absence. (Here some discussion arose as to the power of attorney—whether it was special or general.)

Mr. Justice Grant.—Has he a general power to act for Robert Lyall in all his affairs? He appears here in his character of caveator, as locum tenens of Robert Lyall; now where is his power of attorney under which he acts in this capacity?

Mr. Prinsep.—No, he has no such power of attorney; he merely states himself the constituted attorney.

Mr. Justice Grant.—Well, be that as it may, he appears to have no specific power of attorney to enable him to act as caveator, nor was he likely to have any such, for when Robert Lyall departed for China, he knew nothing of the death.

There is a question as to the amount of the debt due from Lyall, Matheson and Company, to the testator; they say they are not in debt to the estate, but have invested 6,000 Rs. in Company's paper, since the news arrived; the other side state them indebted in the sum of 28,000 Rs. Without going into all this, it is sufficient that it appears to me beyond all doubt, that this is the will executed in duplicate; there is no proof of any other will, having been subsequently executed; the caveat must therefore be overruled. (In answer to Mr. Prinsep.) It is true it is in the discretion to give or withhold costs; but is does not appear to me that the doubt was so great, as to the will, as to justify the caveat—the caveator must therefore pay all the costs.

It has been urged that there can be no inconvenience resulting to the estate from withholding probate for a short time. There might be cases in which no inconvenience would result to the estate, if probate were not granted for 12 months; but yet the Judge has no discretion; and must grant probate to the persons entitled, the executors, and in this case there can be no danger in giving probate to Mr. Whyte, he being a person in whom the testator has recorded his confidence.—Hurkaru.

MISCELLANEOUS NEWS.

CALCUTTA.

IRON STEAMERS.—The Jumna and Bhagaruttee iron boats, got safely out of the Jumna and reached Allahabad on the 20th and Mirzapore on the 21st August, on their way to Calcutta where they safely arrived.

THE STRAITS' STEAMER.—The armed steam boat which is in course of construction on the Howrah side of the river, and intended for the service of the Straits, will be ready in all November next. Her burthen is 168 tons, and she will carry a long 12 pr. brass gun mounted on a pivot at the bows, and two 12 pr. carronades working on traversing slides, at the stern. Wall pieces or swivels will be ranged along the sides, and she will be furnished with a proper complement of small arms.

THE NEW PILOT VESSELS.—Two of the new pilot vessels building at Bombay for this presidency, it is expected, will be round in all October; the other one, about November. They are finished with circular sterns and are built with a rising floor, or with less capacity for carrying, which has been done by stowing the quantity of water they are required to carry, viz 5,500 gallons, in iron tanks instead of in casks, as the present pilot vessels do.

SERIOUS ACCIDENTS.—The boatswain of the ship Strath Eden, on the morning of the 29th August, met with an untimely death. He had occasion to go forward, and was seen on the bumpkin-head by one of the crew. About ten minutes after the man who saw him had come aft, a splash and a deep groan were heard by the mate of an American ship adjacent, who gave the alarm, and enquired if any of the crew had fallen overboard. It was soon discovered that the boatswain was missing, and every exertion was made, by dragging with grapnels, &c., to recover the poor fellow, but in vain. He did not even rise once after falling overboard, although he is said to have been a good swimmer, and the tide was rather slack at the time.

An overloaded ferryboat, in crossing the river, ran foul of a buoy and was capsized. There were about thirty passengers on board, all of whom, except a tailor, were picked up by the police and other boats near. The tailor was seen no more after the boat upset.

The engineer of the Irrawaddie, steamer, while examining some injury sustained by the engines of that vessel when engaged in towing the Strath Eden down the river, was struck by the paddle shaft on the head, and died in half an hour after receiving the blow.

An old woman named Sahib Jaun, was knocked down and killed by a brake on the 7th Sept.

Two women of easy virtue, were accidentally precipitated from the verandah of a two storied house on the 24th September, by the railings against which they were leaning, having suddenly broken: one of the woman died almost immediately from the effects of the fall; the other, though severely hurt, still lives.

On the 23rd Sept., while a superannuated Christian lady was passing the Dhurumtollah road, a buggy which had been left imprudently without any syce, ran over her. The unfortunate woman expired immediately.

From the effects of the heavy rain, on the 9th September, the roof of a house in the Burra Bazar fell in, and two persons were severely hurt by it.

THE SIR JOHN RAE REID.—The Sir John Rae Reid, which left this port a short time since for the Mauritius, with two hundred coolies on board, grounded on the 24th Sept., off Fulaah, and immediately went on her beam ends, in which position she remained about ten minutes. Thirty or forty coolies were washed overboard, of whom thirteen were unfortunately lost.

SHIPPING INTELLIGENCE.—The Windsor was wrecked on the 29th August, on the Gasper Sand. The ship and cargo were totally lost; but all the crew and passengers, except one woman servant, who was swamped in the stern boat, escaped and were brought to Calcutta on the Asseerghur, pilot vessel.

A thousand rupees was given to the midship-men of the Windsor, by Mr. Ellis, the Marine Pay Master.

PLUNDERING OF BOATS.—It is said that a set of fellows are stopping boats on the Hooghly, near Mirzapore Khal, on pretence of being Government peons, and have in this way succeeded in plundering several boats in broad day.

INDIGO SALE.—Messrs. Hickey, Thomas, and Co., have effected a bond fide sale of Kishnagur indigo, of the present season, at 230 sicca rupees per factory maund, no rejections, with the exception of dust and washings.

THE LAKH.—The Lakh was on the 31st August drawn to the ticket no. 3,812, the property of Mr. Caldecott, of the Madras presidency.

INUNDATION.—The rising of the Damooda river, and the bursting of the bunds, have, it is feared, occasioned considerable loss of life and property in Tanlook and the adjacent districts. Many dead bodies and much property has been observed floating down the stream.

INUNDATION.—A letter received on the 6th Sept. from Ghatal, mentions, that the district is all under water, and the silk factories in that neighbourhood will suffer greatly therefrom. The Dummooder, the Darikasur and the Ghatal, have overflowed and inundated the country.

ATTEMPT AT HIGHWAY ROBBERY.—An attempt was made one night during the Jhoolun Jatra, by a party of ruffians armed with clubs, to rob a wealthy baboo of this presidency, as he was returning home in his carriage. The horses, however, being put to their utmost speed, dashed past the villains and thus frustrated their design.

LIEUTENANT-COLONEL BARTON.—Lieutenant-Colonel Barton has arrived at the presidency, to take charge of the duties of Quarter-Master-General during the temporary absence of Lieutenant-Colonel Dunlop with His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief.

MEDICAL RETIRING FUND.—Dr. Pearson has been confirmed in the Secretaryship to the Medical Retiring Fund, by a majority of 80 to 29 votes polled by Mr. Hill.

BONDING WAREHOUSES.—It is said that a plan and estimate have been prepared by the Chamber of Commerce, on the suggestion of Government, and are now under consideration, for a bonding warehouse building, to run from Clive Street to the Strand Road—a parallelogram 556 feet long by 200 feet wide on the river face, divided length-wise into five ranges of godowns, each 43 feet wide, with two roads of communication within the building, and 19 feet high—over the whole, an upper story 24 feet high, supported by iron pillars and iron beams. The estimate rather exceeds four lakhs of rupees, and it is calculated there will be storage room for about 53,000 tons.

The Warehousing Act, it has been declared, is not to be passed into a law until the other presidencies shall have had time to make objections, and offer amendments, to any of the provisions it contains.

LABORATORY FOR PREPARING MEDICINE IN INDIA.—It is stated that Government have formed a committee, to ascertain what articles of materia medica are the produce of this country; and to consider for preparation of medicine what laboratory would be sufficiently large to make the supply equal to the demand that can be made upon it.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.—The public have recently had two additions to their literary and scientific stock, viz., Principal Branley's Dictionary of Surgical terms, and a poem, entitled Achæmendes, by an anonymous author.

THE POST.—In consequence of a horse dak being laid between Poonah and Aurungabad, a whole day will be saved in the transit of mails between Calcutta and Bombay.

MILITARY RETIRING FUND.—A petition to the Court of Directors is now in circulation throughout the Bengal Army, (and has already received the signatures of several hundred officers from the colonel to the subaltern) praying for a further reduction of three years in each grade from the period of actual service, which shall hereafter entitle them to pensions. Should the petitioners obtain their object, the regulation on this head will stand as follows:

After 20 years' service, incl. 3 for 1 fur.	Capt.'s pens.
After 25 ditto	ditto Major's ditto.
After 30 ditto	ditto Lt.-Col.'s ditto.
After 35 ditto	ditto Colonel's ditto.

DETECTION OF THIEVES.—A great many articles, of almost every description, among the rest some of the plates belonging to the Government House establishment, have been seized by the police officers, on suspicion of there having been stolen. Several of the things have been claimed by Dr. Thomson, Monteith and Co., Manton and Co., and several other individuals. The goods were found in the possession of a man named Mooreed, a petty trader to Delhi, who, it is suspected, has for a number of years been in the habit of purchasing stolen goods. Several of the thieves have been apprehended through the information given by the receiver.

THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF.—His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, embarked at about two o'clock on the 13th Sept., in the Matubhanga, with his family and suite, for Allahabad.

THE THEATRE.—There has been some discussion among the proprietors of the theatre, about one part of the alterations now making in the building; but the majority have determined that they should be completed according to the plan in course of execution. The innovation objected to, is the introduction of an upper tier of private boxes, raised about ten feet over the seats below—which boxes are already most of them bespoken, though an extra price will be charged for the private accommodation. The great elevation of the roof, by giving it the form of a dome, afforded opportunity to introduce this upper tier of seats, without interfering with the ventilation of the house; and there was, besides, this motive to add them for the accommodation of the audience, that a square space containing upwards of eighty seats behind the Governor General's box, is now cut off by the circular wall which supports the dome roof.

SALARIES OF THE GOVERNMENT SERVANTS.—There is a rumour abroad, that Government intend, from a definite date, to discontinue the practice of paying the salaries of their servants in arrears.

MURDER.—A man named Hollodur Ghose, was struck on the head with a club, by a Moosulman, on the 29th Sept., and expired from the effects of the blow on the following day. Two Moosulmans have been apprehended as being concerned in the murder.

ATTEMPT TO MURDER.—A Hindoo youth named Mungul Churn Ash, the son of a respectable shop-keeper at Shoba Bazar, was brought to the Gurran Hutia dispensary on the 24th Sept., with two wounds on his person, the one on the back of the neck and the other on the left arm. They were stated to have been inflicted by a madman; but it is rumoured that on the 23rd September, Mungul Churn went to his father's garden at Paul Parah, in the suburbs, with a Brahmin of his acquaintance. The Brahmin, in the course of the day, contriving to send the gardener out of the way, attempted to murder the youth with a dawa for the purpose of possessing himself of his gold ornaments, consisting of a Trichinopoly neck chain and an armlet. The lad was falling at the time of the assault, and on receiving the first blow jumped into the tank, where he was followed by the murderous Brahmin, who gave the second blow in the water. A poor woman who resided in the next garden, happened at this epoch to come to the tank for water and saw what was going on. The Brahmin pursued her, threatening to kill her also; on which she gave the alarm, when others coming to her assistance, the Brahmin took to his heels and has not since been heard of.

PIRACY AND MURDER.—The Sir Archibald Campbell, which arrived on the 4th Sept., spoke the Pimbum off Acheen-head, bound to Madras, and learned from her, that the crew of the brig Zoroaster, of this port, had murdered her Master and officers, scuttled the vessel, and gone to Acheen in the boat.

MURDER AND ROBBERY.—The boat of Mr. Jackman, of the 2nd Company Invalids, was attacked at night on its way up the river from Buxar, at a village named Gosapore, by a band of forty or fifty robbers. After a stubborn resistance, Mr. Jackman was obliged to jump overboard and swim across the river, leaving his wife and adopted son in the boat. Immediately after Mr. Jackman's flight the robbers boarded the boat and pushed Mrs. Jackman and the boy into the water. The former was drowned, but the latter clung to a rope hanging over the stern, and after the robbers had ransacked the craft and retired, managed to get into it. Mr. Jackman remained all night, with his boatmen, on the opposite bank of the river. The next morning he returned, and found his son in the boat, and was by him informed of the tragical fate of his wife. The boy stated that he recognised in the crew of a native boat, which was moored near Mr. Jackman's, the ringleaders of the band that attacked them at night. The men have in consequence been apprehended and placed in custody.

A BRIGHT LOOK OUT ON THE RIVER.—Two palkees containing about five maunds of superior opium, were brought before Mr. Blacquiore on the 15th Sept. by Mirza Hossany, the thannader of Collingah, seized by him about 8 o'clock on the night of the 14th Sept., while in transit from Balooahat to Jaun-bazar. The eight carriers of this article are now in custody.

CUSTOM-HOUSE CERTIFICATES.—A circular has been sent from the Custom-house, to inform those who have procured certificates in exchange of rowannahs, that the certificates will only have currency till the 1st of April next, after which all goods will be subject to duty on exportation, according to the provisions of the Tariff Act.

RAJAH PERTAUB CHUND.—On the 14th Sept. a petition was presented to the Sudder on behalf of the putative Rajah Pertaub Chund, of Burdwan, complaining against the decision of the Magistrate at Hooghly, by which he was sentenced to six months' imprisonment, and at the same time praying to be restored to the possession of his lands. The court did not see reason to entertain the complaint; and with respect to the question of the raj, it was intimated that the petitioner, in aggrieved, had his remedy in the civil courts, and must institute a suit in the usual way. A great crowd of natives accompanied the petition.

UNCOVENANTED ASSISTANTS' PENSION FUND.—The uncovenanted assistants who petitioned for the establishment of a Pension Fund for their service under the auspices and with the aid of Government, have just received an answer which has given them considerable gratification; since it not only encourages the project, but offers to allow six per cent. interest upon the subscriptions, and to recommend the request of a bonus from the Company to the favorable consideration of the Court of Directors.

THE SUGAR DUTIES.—The English papers received during the week, bring the intelligence, that the duties on East and West India Sugar, have been equalized. This information has raised the price of sugar in the market about twenty-five per cent.

A deputation of merchants had an interview with Lord Auckland on the 22nd September, on the subject of the Sugar Bill, and an assurance was given them by this Lordship, that nothing would be neglected on the part of this Government to bring the Act into full operation at the earliest period, consistent with the provisions it should be found to contain when passed by the three branches of the legislature at home.

THE RIVER POLICE.—BONDED WAREHOUSES.—The Chamber of Commerce has addressed a letter to Government on the lamentable state of the river police, and has taken up a suggestion of Captain Biden recommending the special appointment of a Superintendent of River Police, with magisterial powers.

NATIVE EDUCATION SOCIETY.—A society has been established at Tuntone College street for the purpose of promoting native education, under the name of "Gyan Chundro-doy." On the evening of the 19th Sept. it met for the first time, when by the unanimous consent of the members present, Sree Joot Mohes Chundro Surmuna was elected the President, and Sree Joot Radhanauth Gungooly, the Secretary of the Society. It was resolved also that the meetings of the society should be held every Sunday evening for a couple of hours.

MEDICAL COLLEGE.—On the 12th Sept, the second examination of the pupils of the Calcutta Medical College took place. Several respectable persons were present, and among them Principal Bramley, Dr. Nicholson, Dr. Martin, Dr. Raleigh, Dr. Corby, Dr. Goodeve, Dr. O'Shaughnessy, Mr. O'Shaughnessy and Mr. David Hare. Four questions were proposed to the 18 candidates for prizes, and after an interval of 6 hours, at 4 p. m. their written answers were given, and the examination concluded. On the next day at 8 p. m. a committee was held at the Principal's house, and 6 prizes awarded, viz. —1 gold medal, 1 silver medal, and 650 Co.'s rupees, which last are to be divided into four portions, according to the merits of the students. The six successful candidates for prizes, are Nobinchunder Paul, Sitchander Curmocar, Shamchund Dutto, Mr. Foy, Mr. Simons and another, who is not yet named. The day for the distribution of prizes according to the merits of the students, is not yet fixed.

OPIUM SALES.—The Chamber of Commerce having been consulted by the Board of Customs, Salt and Opium, about the arrangements for the opium sales of next season, has recommended the whole quantity, estimated at 17,400 chests, to be distributed in four sales as follows :—

	Patna.	Benares.
4th January,.....	5,000	2,400
20th February,.....	1,500	1,000
30th March,.....	1,500	1,000
29th April,.....	3,000	2,000
	11,000	6,400

This arrangement has been approved by the Board, with the expression of some doubt, however, whether the large quantity assigned for the first sale will be available in Calcutta quite so soon as the 4th of January.

DEFALCATION IN THE MIDNAPORE TREASURY.—Another instance of defalcation in the Midnapore collector's treasury has been detected and the treasurer suspended in consequence.

RAPE.—A rape case had been under investigation before the Chief Magistrate since August last, and the necessary depositions having been taken, the accused, two Mo-ulmans, were committed on the 22d Sept., to take their trial at the next criminal sessions of the Supreme Court.

REPORTED MILITARY MOVEMENTS.—It is rumoured that in consequence of certain renewed hostilities on the part of the Coles, the 81st N. I. and Ranghur Light Infantry battalion, have received orders to take the field early in November. It is also, understood that the 24th N. I. have been directed to hold themselves in readiness for the same duty. It is further said that the Political Agent in Cuttack has been permitted to indent for Bengal regiments to the extent of three, for certain operations in contemplation in the quarter, and that probably two of these will be taken from Barrackpore.

LANDED PROPERTY.—Landed property in Calcutta is increasing in value. Messrs. Jenkins, Low and Co. sold, on the 24th September, four houses belonging to the estate of Baretto and Co., three in Clive Street, at 11,000, 13,000 and 14,000 each, and one in Baretto's lane for 16,000 rupees, all being sums considerably above the upset prices.

BLACK ACT.—The subscribers to the petition against the black act, amount now to eight hundred and twenty-eight.

BLACK ACT PETITION.—The subscriptions in support of the Black Act Petitions, amount to Co.'s rupees 20,489-7-10, very little of which has been subscribed by the Mofussilites. The secretary has published an appeal to them.

BLACK ACT PETITIONS.—The subscriptions in aid of the Black Act Petitions, amount now to 22,527-7-10 rupees. The petitions were withdrawn from the exchange on the 1st October and will be sent to Bombay to-day.

THE COINAGE AND THE SHROFFS.—In consequence of the scarcity of the copper coin in the market, the shroffs are again exacting as much as six pice for exchanging each rupee.

THE COPPER CURRENCY.—The shroffs are again at their tricks. They have given out in the bazaar, that the Government have refused to receive the old pice, and therefore will not give a rupee for less than eighteen annas of it, while they only give fifteen annas of the new pice in exchange for a rupee. It is but very recently that, by disparaging the new coin, they used to extort five gundas of cowries on each new pice tendered.

The scarcity of the new pice, which the Government cannot or will not supply, has greatly raised the value of this coin in the market, not more than thirteen annas and three pice being now procurable for a rupee in several places whilst seventy to seventy-five of the old sicca pice can be obtained. This last coin, despite the Government orders, will not pass current in the market.

THE COINAGE.—To check the extortions of the shroffs the Government have established shops for exchanging pice for rupees in different parts of Calcutta. The following are the notifications published.

GOVERNMENT MONEY CHANGERS.—Notice is hereby given, that Government exchange shops are opened for the exchange of silver and copper coin at the under-mentioned places within the city of Calcutta, at the rate of 64 pice per Company's rupee, for sums less than five rupees at a time: Bura Bazar, Lal Bazar, Muchwa Bazar, Cossinath Baboo's Bazar, Dhurumtola, Collinga, Bagh Bazar.

By Order of Government,

W. N. FORBES, Mint Master.

Calcutta Mint, 26th September, 1836."

"Notice is hereby given, that all pice coined at the Calcutta Mint, whether of the old or new device, are equally a legal tender for payment of any purchase amounting in value to less than one rupee. All kinds will be given or taken in exchange at the Government change houses at the rate of 64 pice per Company's rupee; and no seller or buyer is authorized to refuse payment or change tendered in any description of copper coin.

By authority,

D. McFARLAN, Chief Magistrate.

THE BLACK ACT, &c.—Mr. P. S. D'Rozario is about to publish the BLACK ACT, No. XI, of 1836, and all the discussions relative thereto, which may be deemed worth preserving. It is estimated that the work will make about two hundred octavo pages, and be published at the moderate price of three rupees per copy. The publication of the work, however, depends much on the number of subscribers.

SAVAGE DOGS.—An old woman, whose legs were greatly lacerated, appeared before the Chief Magistrate and stated, that she had been set on by some savage dogs belonging to a Mr. Dixon, which bit her in the legs and reduced them to the condition in which they then appeared, and that the dogs would have taken her life, if it had not been for the timely interposition of two carters who succeeded in rescuing her from their fangs. The woman's testimony being corroborated by the carters, and Mr. Dixon being reported sick, the Magistrate directed that he should be summoned to the Police as soon as he was able to appear, to show cause why he should not be fined. The Magistrate animadverted on the conduct of such individuals as kept savage dogs loose about their premises, and stated that they should be rendered subject to the heaviest penalty the law in such cases would admit of.

STEAM COMMUNICATION.—The Chamber of Commerce recently applied to Government for information, whether the Hugh Lindsay would be employed, or what other arrangements would be made to keep up the communication with Suez. The answer given to the Chamber is, that Government have not at present made any arrangement, nor is it possible to state what arrangements will be made, for the transmission of mails by the route of the Red Sea in the ensuing season; but that, when any thing shall be settled on the subject, intimation thereof will be communicated to the public in every part of India.

TORTURE AND ILLEGAL IMPRISONMENT.—One Hollar Mullick, in consequence of some person unknown having taken the gold bangles off the arms of his brother's child and substituted brass ones, sent for a conjurer to find out the thief. The conjurer pointed out one Kissub Barrick as the person who had stolen the bangles, but Kissub having persisted in denying the charge, was tied to a pillar, by the orders of Hollar Mullick, who, as well as his brother, beat Kissub with a whip and shoes. The middle fingers of Kissub's hands were next, by Hollar's directions, tied together, and wooden pegs driven in between them, by which he was put to the most excruciating torture, and had his fingers considerably lacerated. The above charges being preferred and proved before Mr. O'Hanlon, the Magistrate, Hollar was fined one hundred rupees, to be paid to the King.

FALL OF RAIN.—More than five inches of rain fell on the 29th Sept.

TWENTY-FOUR PURGUNNAHS COURT.

FOURDARRY.—An order was promulgated by tom-tomming on the 14th Sept., all over the twenty-four pergunnahs, that Company's and sicca rupees will in future be exchanged at the rate of sixty-six pice per rupee. The shroffs nevertheless gave no more than 60 pice per rupee at Kidderpore and 49 at Bantuly.

Sept. 16.—Before Mr. Justice J. H. Patton.—Mr. James Robertson, Mr. John Caird, and a Mr. Charles Joakim, were respectively bound in their own recognizances to keep the peace for 12 months towards all His Majesty's subjects, and particularly towards Mr. Roger Dias. The former parties and one or two more individuals cited were to appear on Tuesday the 20th Sept., to answer a serious charge laid against them by Mr. Dias on the 13th Sept.

Sept. 17.—The Barrackpore darogah reported that some mahajunny boats had foundered, and that four bales of cotton were seized by the burkundazes of the Paltah Powder Mills, and three bales by the burkundazes of his thanua.

A ghaut at Cossipore, appropriated to the burning of bodies, has been claimed by one Hugwan Chunder who has placed a tehseldar over it, and exacts three rupees per body from the moordah furrashies. Bykaut-naut Roy, a brother of Collynauth Roy, having obtained a tehseldary from the Collector of the 24-purgunnahs, has placed a tehseldar over Kootighutta, the property of Government, and exacts three rupees per body from the moordah furrashies. The above having been reported to Mr. Pigou, the Commissioner, the Magistrate is desirous to make immediate enquiry as to the imposition.

Not less than seventy-five petitions on 8 anna stamped paper were presented in the course of to-day and seven-eighths of them from the poorer classes. Among them it was curious to observe that several Mussulmans complained of their lawful wives having been forcibly taken away by individuals.

21st SEPT.—Mrs. Sarah Radcliff and Miss Sarah Radcliff versus George Henry Morris, clerk, Captain

Committee. The complainants charged the defendant with having on the 22d of August last, at about 5 p.m., jointly with fifteen dandies, made a forcible entry into their house situated in Seealdah, and with having been guilty of a gross riot and assault. The defendant, on the other hand, charged the complainants with having assaulted him with nine birjobassies, while in the execution of his public duties. It took several days to interrogate the witnesses of the respective parties as they were both loquacious and numerous, and the examination having closed, Mr. Morris, and Miss Radcliff, who it appeared had encouraged him to proceed as he had done, were each fined in the sum of ten rupees, and the poor warriors on both sides were fined five rupees each, or two months' imprisonment.

Mr. Roger Dias v. Mr. James Robertson and others.—Mr. Dias charged the defendants with having, on the evening of the 10th Sept., (with several sailors and other persons) committed a riot, assault, and felony on his premises, property, servants, and person, and with having by the means aforesaid forcibly taken away a buggy. The result was,—the felony not being proved,—that Mr. Robertson was fined in the sum of twenty-five rupees, which he paid.

23d SEPT.—Thomas v. Bheeloo.—The Rev. J. Thomas, Chaplain of Sulkea, complained that Bheeloo, a native Christian, a servant of his, who has latterly got much into his confidence, was employed in selling religious and other evangelical tracts; he suspected Bheeloo of having embezzled a large portion of the proceeds of his sales, and, on a correct account of his stewardship being required, Bheeloo decamped on Friday last. The Rev. gentleman estimated his loss at nearly three hundred rupees.

Morris v. Radcliff and others.—Mr. Morris appeared this day to inform the magistrate, that Mrs. Radcliff and a Mr. Gilles Morrel having assembled together a number of Boojpoory latials were waiting to assault and do him some personal harm; that Mr. Morris's duties carry him to Seealdah, and that, on the occasion referred to, he escaped her vengeance, having taken to his legs just in sufficient time. The magistrate said he had taken every precaution to prevent a second row by having bound Mrs. R. and Mr. M. in their recognizances, and that if any breach of the peace occurred, he would be obliged to demand from the party offending two hundred rupees, besides sentence them to at least three months' imprisonment.

Convict.—Ram Soowar, a Chuttra Brahmin by caste, and a ghaut in all respects, was sent up by Captain Fitzgerald for refusing to work, and for having struck Mr. Barnes, an executive officer. The convict had several marks on his back, and according to a circular order of Government, all executive officers are authorized to punish convicts for refusing to work, and as Ram Soowar had already been dealt with for that offence, the Magistrate has sent him for the present into solitary confinement at Allipore, and after representation, to the Nizamut Court, he will be tried for having struck Mr. Barnes.

Hurrie Pharee, also about 7 feet high, and rather handsome in appearance, was charged with using insolence and abuse to the jemadars of Sulkea guard. He was sentenced to receive thirty strokes of the rattan, and the sentence was put in force then and there.

24th.—Mr. Floyd, the Sulkea peace officer, reported that Muthoornauth Mullick on one side, and Juggernauth Persaud Mullick and Raja Rajnarsin on the other, had assembled together at a place called Andool, about 4 miles south-west of Sulkea, about five hundred fighting men; that he went to the place with a few burkundazes and was obliged to return. The magistrate ordered an immediate purwana on the darogah to collect all the force of the thanua and round guard and to proceed forthwith with Mr. Floyd to Andool, and by all conciliating means to make the parties retire; if his efforts failed, to report from the spot without loss of time, and the magistrate with a military force will proceed to the place to apprehend all concerned.

28th.—Meajan was sentenced to six imprisonment, for having stolen a girl away from the house of her mother and having sold her.

Kurgussur Mundal, an old and frequent offender, was sentenced to six months' imprisonment and hard labour, for having fractured the head of a man named Ukoor, with an ebony club.

A writ was granted for the apprehension of Mr. James Frederick for theft and forgery.

Average of mortality among the convicts at the Allipore depot.—It was ascertained to-day that the average rate of mortality among the convicts received from the several stations at the Allipore depot is as follows:

In ten years out of 10,500 convicts received, 500 lapses have occurred. The average receipt per year is 1,050, and the average percent. of mortality is 5½ only.

INSOLVENT COURT.

10th September.—The court sat for a short time this day and disposed of three applications, in forma pauperis, for the benefit of the Insolvent Act, viz., Henry Jacob Tonson, Thomas Ford, and Peter Dunlop Trezvant. The two last mentioned were ordered to be discharged forthwith, and Mr. Tonson was declared entitled to his discharge on his satisfying the assignee that he had no legal interest in certain property alleged to be at the entire disposal of his wife by virtue of a marriage settlement.

September 24.—The following dividends were on Saturday declared in the Insolvent Court: Estates of J. C. C. Sutherland, 4 per cent.;—of N. Alexander 2½ per cent.; of R. E. Batley, 6 per cent.;—of N. H. Campbell, 2½ per cent.;—and of D. Wiggins, 7 per cent.

MOFUSSIL.

ALLAHABAD.—The Nak Punchoomes took place on the 17th of August, when the whole Hindoo population visited the temple on the bunds, to worship the great serpent. The place was crowded with Hindoo women dressed in the gayest colors, notwithstanding the rain which fell without interruption during the whole afternoon.

A fatal accident occurred recently, from the effects of venturing too soon into a recently opened grain golah. The owner, a poor woman, opened it and entered, and was immediately suffocated: her brother, who was in his field at a short distance, ran up and went into the pit, for the purpose of taking out the body of his sister,—he was immediately overpowered by the noxious vapour and fell. After some time two of the villagers ventured in, and brought out the bodies, but it was too late, they were both dead.

It is said that the subscriptions for the relief of the people of the village of Jhenlapore, which was consumed by fire last year, were so liberal, that all the losses have been made up, leaving a balance of about Rs. 130, which has been paid over to the Charitable Association.

The total number of funerals at Allahabad, from 1827 to 1835, is 248.

A case involving the right to five hundred villages in the Ghoruckpore territory, was decided in favor of the plaintiff, by the Sudder Adawlut, on the 23d August.

On the 23rd August the station of Allahabad was visited with a very severe gale, which commenced at sunset and lasted throughout the night, doing very great damage.

Dewan Mulkoor Saha, the proprietor of the Burryche village, in the Punnah state, has regained possession of it in the following manner. He proceeded to Calcutta to appeal to Sir C. T. Metcalfe on the subject of his claim. He was referred to the Hon. Mr. Ross, then Governor of Agra, and then obtained a letter to the Agent of the Governor-General. The Agent advised him to let the Raja see the document he carried, which having done, the Raja interpreted it into a wish on the part of Government that the village should be restored to him. He accordingly obtained possession, after having been ousted for about two years.

The reply of the Government to the memorial of the uncovenanted servants, leaves them in exactly the same position as they were before they memorialized.

Success has begun to attend the formation of the Blind Asylum. Twenty-one pensioners have entered voluntarily, and express themselves quite satisfied with the provision made for them. The Leper Asylum is also in a very satisfactory condition. There are now 23 pensioners on the list, and all of them appear to be as comfortable as their unfortunate condition will permit.

The present promises to be the most productive season that has been known near Allahabad for the last 20 years. Prices, however, have not fallen.

The constant and heavy rain that has fallen has washed down many buildings in the city, and the loss to property is represented as very great. Fever is very prevalent in the city.

A body was lately taken out of a well at Ghurmucktasr, bearing evident marks of violence with the eyes and tongue protruding; leaving no doubt, that the murder had been committed by Thugs. It was examined by a Surgeon, who stated his belief that death had ensued from strangulation.

Three other cases are said to have occurred in the same neighbourhood, and little doubt is entertained of a gang of Thugs being in the place.

A murder committed in the Boolundshira zillah twelve months ago, was lately brought to light by Cornet Robinson, Superintendent of Thugges. One of the parties confessed having committed the murder, and the case is to be made over to the Sessions.

The new building for the Government school has been completed, and was to be occupied in a few days.

Orin.—A case, which has been a long time pending, between Bahadoor Jung Khan of Bahadoor Ghur, and his brother, involving the monthly pittance of the latter, has lately been brought to a successful termination by the Delhi Commissioner.

It is said that the thannadar, in whose ilaqua was recently committed a theft of an officer's petarah, has been dismissed.

On the morning of the 6th August, a faqueer was buried alive in the village of Nidrana, three coss S. E. of Jammul in the Buck meer States. He was put alive into the grave, but, died before the earth was thrown on him. His brother fanatics attended him in the tomb, but when he thought his time was come, he told them, in no very measured terms, to begone, hung his head a little, and the soul was released from its earthly tenement. Previous to his immolation, it is said, and believed by the natives, that he prophesied three years of plenty, after which a famine; and that the sword of strife would be drawn at Joudpore this year.

One of the Salateens of the palace was recently handed up to the court, upon a suspicion of having purchased a slave girl in the city; but it appeared from his own shewing, that the girl was only made over to him by her father, a Kullighur, as a pledge for the payment of 500 rupees, due by him to the Salateen, who stated he had only detained her a few days, and then sent her back to her father.

The thieves of the city find the Magistrate, Mr. Lawrence, a little de trop for them. A gang of eighteen was seized recently and among the number a naik of the sippers was found. This man procured a month's leave of absence with the intention, as he said, of returning home; but, instead of doing so, he connected himself with a gang of thieves in the city.

A further step towards the expulsion of Persians is about to be taken in the Civil Court of Delhi. The Courts have been given to understand that, in a short time, Persians will give place to the English character.

It is said that the Lieutenant-Governor is instituting enquiry into the claims and grievances of the Baiza Bees and her brother Maharajah Hindoo Rao.

It is asserted that the Beekaneer Rajah has lately made a terrible example of a fraternity of Charans at Soetal—a sect greatly revered by the Hindoos—owing to one of them having committed a rape on the daughter of a buncash. The Rajah is said to have enclosed them in a square encompassed by briars, which he set on fire, and burnt them all alive.

The chunkeys, a species of gad-fly, which generally infest the country about the breaking up of the rains, have already made their appearance on the banks of the Cugger, and have obliged the zemindars to send all their cattle to the southward.

A serious disturbance occurred recently in a village called Soorjipore, about ten coss from Delhi, when several people were killed and wounded.

Prince Mirza Selem, the fourth son of the King of Delhi, died in the Royal Palace on the 8th Sept., from the effects of an internal ulcer.

AGRA.—On the 23rd of August, a complaint or assault and false imprisonment, preferred by one Buhadar Singh, a travelling jeweller, against Mrs. Richards, a native lady of the Jat tribe and wife of General Richards, C. B., now residing at Agra, was heard before the Magistrate of Agra. It appeared from the proceedings that this jeweller, who transacted business on commission, had sold an infaid bangle value near 500 rupees, some six years ago to Mrs. Richards, and that some fault had been subsequently found with some of the stones. These were found to be or were regarded as being 30 or 40 Rs less in value than what had been represented at the time of sale. On the 18th of August, the jeweller was requested by Mrs. Richards to take back the bangle; this he declined. He was then placed under restraint till he would furnish security not to abscond. The man, however, either could or would not do this, and in the end, about half past 10 p. m., he was sent to the Kotwallee of Agra under a guard of sipahs of the 45th Native Infantry, to find security or be kept there during the night. The Kotwal refused, however, to detain the man unless a specific charge to be duly investigated and acted on were preferred. On this the jeweller, whose arms had been bound behind his back, to prevent his escape, by the native officer of the guard, on leaving the general's bungalow, was taken to the place from whence he came, and confined throughout the night and till the next day was well advanced, in the same quarters. Before noon his brother preferred a charge against Mrs. Richards before the Magistrate, and subsequently Buhadar Singh, who had been sent again into the city for security, induced the chuprassies placed over him to go to the court, where he was at once released.

The Magistrate sentenced Mrs. Richards to pay a fine to Government of 200 rupees, or to be imprisoned for six months in jail, and awarded 25 rupees costs of the prosecution to the prosecutor, leaving him to prosecute General Richards, if he chose, before a court-martial and to bring an action for civil damages before the court of request, or such civil tribunal as the amount sued for and the party made defendant might designate the proper jurisdiction.

A Rajput at Neeghev Khayra, a village on the bank of the Jumna, threw himself into the river on the 14th August, being weary of life from the infliction of incurable leprosy.

On the 7th of August, about midnight, one Hupsa, a Khakrob, died at Bisarna, a village a few miles from Agra on the right bank of the Jumna, when his wife, Tahsa, determined to make a suttee of herself. The village police, however, interfered and the local authorities subsequently induced her to forego her intention. General Richards, it is said, has applied for the command of the Benares division.

Archdeacon Dealtry, it is stated, is to be stationed at Agra.

It is confidently rumoured that Sir C. Metcalfe will not leave Agra on any tour of inspection during the cold weather.

Mr. G. Blunt has been appointed Collector of Customs of the Agra division under the new system.

A woman threw herself into a well a short time since, in the Bazaar of Futtehpore: no other reason can be assigned for the rash act, except grief for the protracted absence of her husband at Kotah.

Capt. Terranean, Executive Engineer, has been invested with the charge of the roads and convicts in Agra.

HISSAR.—Sickness is much on the increase at Hissar, chiefly fevers, accompanied by bilious symptoms. The weather has been cool and cloudy with occasional showers. The crops are looking well, and grass and other fodder promise to be very abundant.

MEERUT.—Mr. Proby has withdrawn his refusal to perform divine service at sun-rise, which a common regard for the health of the European soldiery so imperatively called for. The reverend recusant intimated his compliance just as the case had been laid before the General.

The Invalids from Kurnaul arrived at Meerut on the 12th Sept. and the whole party are under orders for the Ghaut on the 17th.

The thieves are becoming daily more active and daring. The house of an officer of artillery was entered recently, and almost every moveable article carried off, even pictures from the wall.

On the 30th August, a soldier belonging to the Horse Artillery, at this station, was found quite dead, hanging by a temporary rope made out of his overalls, from one of the bars of the Congee house; he was of about 25 years of age and much given to intemperance.

It is said that an order is expected, for the immediate abolition of the Persian language in the records of the revenue department of Meerut. The language to be adopted is Hindosthani, but whether the character is to be English or Hindee, is not stated.

CHUNAR.—A melancholy event recently took place at this station. The wife of a sergeant of the Buxar pension establishment, proceeding up the river, was found with her head cut off on board of the boat. The husband endeavoured to make out that dacoits attacked the boat, in the night; but none of the dandies know any thing of dacoits or thieves having come into the boat, and none of the property is missing. It is believed that the European himself committed the deed. The wife some time previously to this was heard frequently to declare her belief that she would be found some day or other murdered by her husband, whose temper was tyrannical and brutal in the extreme.

A theft was committed in the magazine recently to the extent of Rs. 1837, the proceeds of sales of rejected stone. It is supposed that some of the khulassies secreted themselves and so were locked in, when the gates were closed in the evening. Several curious expedients were resorted to, to discover the thieves, but without success.

The road to the S. E. near the hill jungles, has for sometime been infested with a daring gang of dacoits. The scene of their depredations is about twenty-five miles from Chunar, and in one of their recent attacks on a party of merchants proceeding with their cattle, they murdered a man, whose body was found shockingly mutilated. His head and one of his legs were severed from his body, and across his chest were several sword cuts. The Magistrate took prompt measures for the apprehension of the gang, and succeeded in taking a number, among whom are twelve old offenders. About 200 head of cattle have been recaptured and restored to the owners.

Cawnpore.—Lieutenant H. Halhed, a young officer much esteemed, attempted to commit suicide on the evening of the 4th of August. He was not discovered till several hours after, when it was found that he had cut his throat with two razors, which were found bloody. He was labouring under insanity caused by domestic affliction.

A medal has been presented to Lalah Tunttee Mull, of Cawnpore, by the Cawnpore Relief Society, for his praise-worthy exertions in affording relief to the destitute Boondelaha, who emigrated to Cawnpore during the famine of 1833-34. The medal was executed at the Calcutta Mint, and on one side bears a representation of a native distributing food to a hungry family, with the word charity; and on the reverse is inscribed "presented by the residents of Cawnpore to Baboo Jugunoth Tunttee Mull, for his exemplary aid in relieving the starving emigrants from Bundel Kund in 1834."

Rumour says that an officer of the Lancers who is proceeding to England, for the purpose of holding a sinecure appointment in the Admiralty, under his relation, intends to take with him a young gentleman of talent and ability, as his deputy, and that the captivating smiles of a certain fair one are no longer of any avail, as the fortunate Lancer is now determined to keep his heart and affections for some favorite spinster, in the fashionable circles of the West End.

CHAZELPORE.—Cholera has broken out in this district and is committing great ravages among the soldiers of H. M. 26th regiment stationed in it. Many have already fallen victims to the scourge.

BPNARS.—This station has been visited with very heavy rains and all the roads have been cut up; several houses fell and one large building was rent in several directions by lightning.

DHOULPORE.—The Dhoulpore Chief, Keruth Sing, has been urged to give up Dhoulpore and its dependencies, to our Government, and to accept in lieu thereof Mattrass and Mursan.

KURNAUL.—It is reported that a sepoy of the 61st regiment, has murdered another sepoy and a woman at this station.

HANSI.—Munsaram, a sepoy of the 27th regiment Native Infantry, who was tried for the wilful murder of a comrade in April last, at the July Sessions, suffered on the 8th August, at sunrise, the last sentence of the law: he was hung outside the fort, on a gallows erected for the purpose, in pursuance of sentence of the Nizamut Adawlut. The prisoner bore his fate with firmness to the last, and made no confession: he seemed to suffer no pain; the rope was silken, and did not, as so often happens, give way.

The canal water has almost entirely failed; the gardens even at Hisar, depend now more on wells than on the canal, which is sometimes nearly dry; and the cultivators are much distressed about it.

HURIANA.—Gangs of gypsies, it is said, are committing their depredations in the Huriana district, where they greatly abound.

SIMLA.—The Lord Bishop of Calcutta, amongst other works of public utility, of which His Lordship has been the promoter, is about to place the Simla Church Bungalow. Proposals had been made by the Bishop, to alter and add a spire to it, which were liberally met by subscriptions from the community to carry the measure into effect.

SAUGOR.—An extensive bed of coal has been recently discovered in this district, of a quality superior to any which has yet been found in India. The field is situated at the foot of the hills about twelve miles to the southward of Gorrawarra.

LANDOUR.—A lamentable accident occurred at Landour on the 15th of August. A small party of wilders were engaged in widening the road to Conolly's estate on the side of the Landour hill, when a large portion of slate rock, under which they were working, suddenly fell down upon them, killed two men and badly wounded the others.

Another melancholy accident has happened at Landour; a part of the hill, overhanging a tailor's shop in the bazar, gave way on the 27th of August, about one o'clock in the morning, crushed in the house, and buried all the people under it. There were a tailor, his two sons, a green grocer, a mason, a journeyman tailor and a barber. Of these men the two old ones were taken out alive from the rubbish by the timely aid brought by the Station Staff, Lieutenant Cantly: Doctor Finch also kindly visited them soon after and rendered every assistance in his power. The other five men had all been killed. The old tailor often requested to be permitted to see his two sons whether dead or alive; his request was granted, and the moment he beheld their mangled bodies, he fell back senseless, and has not since recovered his reason.

JOONPORE.—Jugmohun Singh, the son of a very opulent zemindar of Oude, has been apprehended, and is in irons, though his trial has not yet taken place. The charge against him is dacoity, and in 1834 he gave great trouble, caused much official writing, and had the military out after him. His brother, Deigbejee Singh, accused him of being the ringleader of a troublesome gang, but as it appears the outrages were committed by Goordut Singh, it is likely he will get clear of his trial. Goordut Singh was convicted and sentenced by the Session Judge to ten years' imprisonment, which was however reduced to five years by the Nizamut Adawlut.

JULLALABAD.—Intelligence has been received of the murder of the Governor of this town by the husband and brothers of a woman to whom His Excellency had made love in the summary and natural fashion of eastern lovers.

BARFILLY.—A letter from Bareilly of the 13th Sept. says:—

"The rains here have been a succession of heavy showers at long intervals, so that, although during the last few days we have had a heavy and continued fall, the country does not shew the usual symptoms of the rainy season. It is pretty well saturated; but there is no surplus. The ryots appear to regard it with good hope."

PALLEE.—The plague is raging at Pallee, a place about seventy miles from Beawar, and many thousands of people have been carried off by it.

AZIMGURH.—A new judgeship is about to be created for this district, but the appointment has not yet been filled up.

FUTTEGURH.—Mr. John Kinloch has been removed from the situation of Collector of Customs which he so long filled, and is now out of employ. The grounds for the latter proceeding are stated to be Mr. Kinloch's being unequal to the discharge of public duty.

NATIVE STATES.

LUCKNOW.—His Majesty recently said to his Commander-in-Chief, "What do you think of introducing into our army those things called court martial which the feeringees have so much of?" The Commander-in-Chief replied that nothing could be better, and that the idea could only have emanated from so wise a prince as his Majesty. His capricious Majesty was, however, not in the humour to be pleased at this courtier-like conduct of his Excellency, to whom he said he would shew a much better system of punishment than courts-martial, and proceeded to illustrate the modus operandi by having his Excellency's moustachios cut off, his body bared, and in this state submitted to an act of great indignity. Now, said the humane King, when any officer or soldier commits a fault, just treat him as you have been treated.

Moove Khulleel Oodeen Khan, the vakeel who was employed to settle the claim of the English Government for the aggression committed in our territory a couple of years ago, has got into a scrape. A Lucknow beauty, who had for a length of time attached herself to him, was discovered to have favored another paramour. The pair were surprised one night at the fair one's residence, by a band of ruffians, by whom they were severely wounded with swords. They however got away, and the assassins escaped without recognition. Khulleel Oodeen immediately wrote a letter of condolence to the lady, expressing his horror at the attack on her life, and sent her several thousand rupees, and other handsome presents. He has, however, moved off to Cawnpore, as a place affording greater security.

LAHORE.—Dr. Harland has been taken into favour again, the success of an ointment he led to his recall. Monsieur le General Rheglini, late in the employ of the Begum Sonbhe, has been engaged by Ranjeet Singh, but the General considers the salary inadequate, being only 700 rupees.

The banditti which swarm throughout the Punjab, have become so daring that the Maharaja finds it difficult to suppress them, they commit the most frightful excesses, and Ranjeet has declared he will make a terrible example of any that may fall into his hands.

Ranjeet expresses great regret that he did not depute an abler politician and more staid person than Gobind Jai, to represent him in Calcutta, the Maharaja is not a little ashamed of the gray lotharism of his Ambassador and vows that his next choice shall be more prudent.

Khoya Mahomed, the son of Sultan Mahomed informed the Maharaja that an attempt had been made by Dost Mahomed to destroy his brother Sultan Mahomed, but that it had been frustrated by the active vigilance of Sultan Mahomed.

Hussowa Sing represented to Ranjeet Singh, that as a compensation for the troops he kept up for his Highness's service he should be permitted the possession of the jagheer of Nannk, but he was told, without a bonus of 50,000 rupees his wish could not be gratified.

Captain Wade's Moonshah had an hour's private audience with the Maharaja after the termination of which, orders were given to Huleem Azeemdeen to send two musketeers and two companies to the Dooib, as the Maharaja intended to avail himself of Captain Wade's valuable assistance to settle the disputes which have arisen there.

The Nani kasee has been established as the current coin of Dara Ismail Khan, Ranjeet's new acquisition.

Monsieur le General Rheglini, under the promise of returning again, has obtained the Maharaja's permission to visit Sirdhanaah. He was dismissed from the presence with great honour and handsome presents.

CABUL.—Dost Mahomed has given his sowars each 20 rupees, and told them to prepare for a dour upon Peshawar.

The tempting bait of recovering Shikarpore has been again thrown out to Shih Khoja oolooluck, but he is not now so eager to snap at it as formerly, even although the disagreement subsisting between Ranjeet and the Ameers of Scinde, would appear to offer a greater prospect of success.

Dost Mahomed appears to be at last serious in his views upon Peshawar and Jelalabad, for he is concentrating his forces on the side of Cabul, from whence he is expected to march almost immediately via Candahar, where he hopes to be joined by the Candahar Chiefs.

SEMPUR.—The verdict, passed upon Jootharam, Hookamchand and Futteh Jai, is guilty of being accomplices in the murder of Mr. Blake and the attack on Lieut. Col. Alves, and the sentence passed on Jootharam, and Hookamchand is death. Futteh Laal, son of Jootharam, has only been condemned to a few years' imprisonment, by reason of his nonage.

Takoor Chand Sing, the noted bandit chief of Sorut whose daring acts rendered him the terror of the Jeypore territory, has at last been apprehended and incarcerated. BHAUTPORE.—A dependant of the Bhutpore Rajah, who had made himself obnoxious to the ryots, was a short time ago seized and buried alive. An investigation into the circumstance was instituted, when two of the party concerned were hung and twenty two imprisoned.

MADRAS.

GOOMSUR.—It is said that two regiments of Native Infantry will be sent to Goomsur as soon as tonnage can be procured to convey them thither.

The troops are suffering much from sickness. Fever has become very prevalent, but it was hoped a change in the weather, which was looked forward to with much anxiety, would have a favourable effect.

The preparations in progress for carrying on the next campaign in Goomsur, are on a scale that cannot fail to secure a successful and speedy termination of the business. Two more native regiments are to be sent from Madras, and it is understood that a detachment of the 3d cavalry will proceed from Bellary in application has also been made to the Resident of Hyderabad, for the services of a part of a mesalah of the Nizam's cavalry, which has been promised, but it has been at the same time suggested to the Commis sioner that the required succour might be more conveniently obtained by a detachment of the Nipore Horse marching from Ryepore. Brigadier-General Taylor intends resuming the personal command of the force.

Three companies of the 44th Regiment, at Muz-zuliah, were relieved at Goomsur on the 6th. Just by one company of the same regiment—the only one fit for duty—and 150 matchlock men. Two hundred and fourteen went then on—25 have since died—the rest are generally improving. Out of the fresh company which was sent to Muzziguddah 55 fell sick. The company has consequently been withdrawn and the post left in charge of the matchlock-men. The rest of the troops in the vicinity of Goomsur are tolerably healthy. The 44th N.I. have lost upwards of 100 by deaths since last March. A troop of the 31 Light Cavalry are to proceed to Goomsur from Bellary. The 17th N.I. will most probably proceed to the Northern Division by Sea. The cholera had been raging in Goomsur.

The accounts from Goomsur respecting the 44th Regiment Native Infantry are very deplorable.

This regiment numbers only 20 men, and those too weak to bear arms. The following are the returns to the 5th Sept.

Dead 123

In Hospital, 450

Out of Hospital but unable to bear arms 20

Of the officers all are sick except two. Further medical aid has been applied for, as the troops, generally, are in a very sickly condition.

SHIPWRECK.—The French bark L'Actif has been wrecked at Coringa, having gone on shore there with all sails set. The cause leading to this has not transpired, but it is supposed that no lives have been lost.

The wreck of L'Actif, has been sold for rupees 1,500. Two days before the Naturino sailed from the Isle of France for Madras, a boat came in with the crew of a Liverpool ship bound to Calcutta, but which had foundered off Rodrigues.

SHIPWRECK.—The Advar, schooner, was unfortunately wrecked in the surf on the night of the 8th Sept.

THE BARK JANE.—The barque Jane, not being seaworthy, is abandoned by her Commander, and is laying in the river at Ganjam. Her cargo has been landed there, and housed under directions from the Collector.

SHIP FOR MADRAS.—It is stated that there is every probability of Madras being soon supplied with a steamer for the general purposes of Government. It has been estimated that, independent of their immense advantages in cases of emergency, and their general convenience, for conveying troops, invalids, stores, &c., &c., Government will effect a considerable saving yearly by the substitution of steam for sailing vessels.

SHIP LAUNCH.—On the 30th of August, a new ship called the Fatal Bhurry, burthen 729 $\frac{3}{4}$ tons, owned by Hadies Furay Been Fusar of Juddah, was launched at Cochia. She was constructed by the well known Master Builder, C. C. Poney Gueizelar, Esq., entirely of the best Malabar teak.

BLACK ACT PETITION.—The Madras Gazette says, that not a single name has been attached to the document against the Appeal Rescinding Act, which has been laying at the office of Messrs. Griffith and Co. for signature. It has, however, received upwards of sixty signatures.

THE LOST STEAMER.—A report prevails that the small steamer attached to the Euphrates Expedition, which was lost off Anna, has since been washed up on the sand bank, bottom up, and that efforts are being made to do something with her.

AN OBSERVATORY. Mr. Caldecott, the Resident at Travancore, has applied to Government for the use of the public buildings at Travandrum, for the purpose of erecting an observatory.

MEDICAL SCHOOL.—A medical school is to be instituted, as soon as Mr. Dalmahoy, who is now at Moulinein, returns to Travancore.

SIR FREDERICK ADAM.—It is asserted, that it is the intention of Sir Frederick Adam to remain on the Hills until the end of December, principally with the view of meeting Lord Elphinstone, who is expected via Bombay, and to whom Sir Frederick has written inviting him to take the Neilgherries en route to Madras.

Sir Frederick intends to depart for England from the Western Coast.

INSPECTOR GENERAL OF CIVIL ESTIMATES.—It is said that the office of Inspector General of Civil Estimates has been abolished, and that Major Ross is now attached to the Revenue Boards as Secretary in the Engineers Department.

NEW PAPER.—A new journal, the Spectator, has issued from the Madras press.

SUICIDE.—A clerk in the employ of Messrs. Ashton and Co. committed suicide on the evening of the 8th Sept. by stabbing himself with a penknife. A Coroner's Inquest was held on the body, and a verdict returned of temporary insanity. No reason has been assigned for the fatal act.

COURT OF ENQUIRY.—It is said, that a court of enquiry had been ordered to assemble on the 1st of September, for the purpose of enquiring into sundry matter pending between Captains Osborne and Whistler, of which Colonel Sewell, Deputy Quarter-Master-General of H. M. Forces, is President, and Lieut.-Colonel Strahan, Major Kitson, Captain Eastment, 26th Regt. N. I., and Captain Pole, H. M. 63d, are Members.

THE BREAK-WATER.—It is said, that the Break-water committee have represented to Government that they will no longer require the services of the convicts placed at their disposal; and that the attempt to construct a break-water is to be abandoned, as all the funds have been expended.

RAIL ROAD.—A detachment of Sappers and Miners are to go from Coorg to construct a Rail-way from the Red Hills to Madras.

COLLECTOR'S ALLOWANCES.—It is said that Government, under orders from home, have commuted the variable commission which used to be drawn by Collectors for a permanent allowance.

ARRIVAL.—Brigadier-General John Doveton, C. B., Commanding the central division of the Army, reviewed the 17th Regt. N. I., on the morning of the 23d August. The Brigadier on coming on the parade ground, was accompanied with a salute of 11 guns from the garrison. That corps was employed in firing ball, and was out in marching order for inspection on the 24th.

DEMISE OF THE STANDARD.—The Madras Standard, one of the best conducted papers of that presidency, has been obliged to merge into the Spectator, the newly established journal, in consequence of subscribers not paying up their subscriptions.

OPIMUM TRADE.—The merchants recently petitioned the Government to be admitted to a share of the opium trade. Government have refused to grant their prayer.

BOMBAY.

SHIPWRECK.—The ship Hindoo, bound from Liverpool to Bombay, was wrecked on the 8th August. The place where she struck is in the neighbourhood of a small village called Yeoor, in the territories of the Hubshie, about 35 miles to the southward. Mr. Brownrigge, his wife and five children, the only passengers, together with ten of the crew, were cast ashore in the ship's boat. The captain and the remainder of the crew remained on the wreck in a most perilous condition, and their safety was feared for, as communication with the ship, owing to the breakers, was next to impossible. Boats have been sent to their assistance, and the authorities have written to the Hubshie to protect the property, as he would be held responsible for any portion of it his people made away with.

The packets, passengers, and part of the crew of the Hindoo, have arrived at Bombay. The vessel appears to be a total wreck. Her upper deck was visible only at low water, and the cargo, therefore, must be nearly destroyed. The chief mate and a boy were drowned while trying to leave her.

THE HUGH LINDSAY.—The Hugh Lindsay left Bombay for Coroa on the 17th Sept. The packets from all the presidencies were uncommonly large.

PILOT VESSELS.—It is stated that these vessels are constructed with northern Malabar teak, which is considered to be the finest timber in the world, both as to growth and durability, for ship building.

STEAM PETITION.—The last overland packet brought the following letter from Sir John Hobhouse, in reply to the request of the Steam Meeting of the 14th of March last, that he would present their petition to Parliament.

India Board, June 28th, 1856.

"SIR,—I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of March 16th, in this year, and also of the Petition to which it refers.

"I will thank you to convey to the subscribers of that Petition the assurance of my intention to present that document without delay to the House of Commons; and I beg to add, that I shall be most happy at all times to promote, so far as circumstances may permit, the useful object which it tends to promote.

I remain, &c. JOHN HOBHOUSE."

"Sir Charles Malcolm, Bombay."

SUICIDE.—A soldier of His Majesty's 6th Regiment, named John Parry, shot himself on the 9th Sept. in a fit of jealousy. The object of his attachment it would appear was the wife of another man of the same regiment. So determined was the unfortunate man to prove the strength of his passion for her, that he placed his back against the door of her residence, put the muzzle of the musket in his mouth, pulled a string which he had previously tied to the trigger, with his foot, and thus sent the ball with which the musket had been loaded through his head. It came out towards the crown of his head, and lodged in a beam immediately above the door. A Coroner's Inquest was held on the body, and a verdict of felix de se returned.

THE WEATHER.—COTTON CROPS.—The following is a statement of the weather and cotton crops in the Deccan, &c.:—

"Deccan.—Since the date of my last report on the weather, a great deal of rain has fallen in the Deccan. It kept off so long in the neighbourhood of Nagpur, that apprehensions were entertained for the crops; but as there have been favourable and continued falls during the past fortnight, I do not believe much mischief will come. The supply for water in the Indapoor talooka, (a flat country with few hills) is always precarious. For some time past rain there has been coming down plentifully, and the crops now look beautiful. Cultivation has greatly extended here this year."

In the Northern districts the rain had been too heavy, and as in low situations cotton is always exposed to injury from that cause, that important staple was thought by some to be in danger.

"Surat.—The fine fair weather, however, that followed has been highly favourable to the cotton cultivation, I find from a report of the principal collector, dated the 3d instant, that the weather had been fair for the last week, and that the sowing of cotton, jewaree, &c. is proceeding rapidly. The rice had all been planted out, and is very flourishing."

"Broach.—From this, by far our best cotton district, the last report is (30th July) also very satisfactory. The heavy rain had ceased, the weather was dry, and cultivation had commenced again. The sub-collector states that should the weather continue fine for a short time, the low lands will be again sown with cotton, &c."

ACCIDENT.—Two women in crossing a small but rapid-flowing nulla, on the 2nd August, where the water was only knee deep, were swept down the current and perished.

ROBBERIES.—Robberies of a very daring nature have greatly increased in Bombay. The following have very recently been perpetrated. Necessity having called an individual out of doors in Lovechall Street, some short distance from Washerman's Tank, about 12 o'clock at night, a ruffian came and attacked him, and having seized him by the throat, applied a weapon to the side of his neck and demanded a gold chain which he then wore about his neck, of the value of Rs. 160. Unnerved by fear and terror and being in the grasp of the villain, he without any resistance allowed it to be taken. Through the darkness of the night he did not see the bandit's face, but by the weapons glittering immediately knew it to be the bill-hook used by the Bhundares. About midnight a house in Wuttulwaddy on the Kalkadavee road was broken into by a gang of robbers, and a number of cooking pots, household implements, and a quantity of jewellery carried away. Two men were apprehended with a part of the property in their possession. A house within the Fort was entered and a man shortly afterwards apprehended with some of the property stolen from it in his possession. Property was carried away from a house near Mombadavie, valued at about 700 rupees, during the absence of the owner at Walkeshwar. No trace of the offenders nor their booty has as yet been discovered. A house near Sadok was broken into by two men, who were seized on the premises by the police peons.

THE DEWAN OF BARODA.—A letter from Baroda states, that a Sowar named Govardhun, who had rendered himself obnoxious to the ruling authorities, was peremptorily seized on the night of the 2nd September and immediately carried to the Adawlut and threatened with sticks and other degrading punishment, unless he paid down a sum of 20,000 Rs.; nor was he released, until two wealthy bankers of Baroda offered to pay the demanded sum. The same letter mentions that one or two persons, natives of the Company's districts, were banished the next day from the city for mal-practices.

The Dewan has lately become more cautious for the security of his person. Instead of going out, as before, with a moderate retinue, he is now constantly attended by two or three hundred Arabs with lighted matches and a large number of persons, even when he goes every day to his master.

REVENUE MEASUREMENT.—Arrangements have recently been adopted at Bombay for more correctly computing the measure of goods.

MOTICHUND AMIRCHUND.—A splendid legacy of seven lakhs of rupees, has been left by the late Motichund Amirchand, for the liberation of prisoners confined for debt in the Bombay jails.

SLAVERY IN MOCHA.—The following is an extract of a letter from a gentleman at Mocha:

"The slavery carried on at this port has lately astonished me. It is encouraged by the Egyptian authorities, owing to the duty of 2 dollars levied on each slave passing through the Custom House.

"I have ascertained that within the last 10 days, near 700 women, or rather girls, from 10 to 16 and 18 years of age, have been imported.

"They look wretchedly from starvation, receiving but just food enough to keep them alive.

"The Pasha is hourly expected, and I have heard he is likely to make some stay. I understand he is a young man about 25 years of age, and a grandson of Mahomed Ali. They seem determined to carry on the war in Yemen with vigor."

AN ENORMOUS SWORD FISH.—On the morning of 28th August, a sword fish was caught near the ferry at Colaba, of the following extraordinary dimensions, viz. length from the extremity of the tail to the commencement of the protection of the sword, 18 feet 9 inches, and circumference 4 feet 5 inches. Each fin measured 1 foot 3 inches. The sword was five feet long.

SUPREME COURT.—On the 25th of August, the 3d term was opened before a full bench, and adjourned from want of counsel, the only two barristers being the Advocate-General and the Master in Equity.

MESSES CAMPBELL AND HOWARD.—Mr. Campbell, the gentleman who conducted the defence of the late Soobahoyah upon his court-martial at Bangalore, arrived here from Madras on 27th August, and having taken the customary oaths before a full Bench in the Supreme Court on the 29th, was admitted to practise at the Bombay Bar.

By the Walmer Castle, which came into port on the 29th August, the gentlemen of the long robe received another addition to their numbers in Mr. Howard, who has not as yet applied for leave to practise.

CAPTURE OF CHAMP RAJ.—The following is an extract of a letter received from the Kattywar country:—

"There is nothing in the shape of news here, excepting that the Political Agent has got hold of (by stratagem) the celebrated freebooter Champ Raj. The man I believe has been guilty of great cruelties, and was in command of the party that shot Ensign Robertson of the 15th regiment sometime back. He is in irons in the jail here, and will be brought to trial."

RETURN OF DINSHAW FURDONJEE.—Dinshaw Furdonjee, the young Parsee who was sent to England about four years ago, has returned to Bombay, much improved in intellect and manners.

PENANG.

SEIZURE OF CONTRABAND OPIUM.—A seizure, by order of the Government, was made on board the bark Resource, on the 23rd of July, of eleven or twelve chests of opium, upon information given of its being contraband, not having been purchased originally at the Company's sales, and having been smuggled on board and out of the port of Calcutta. A warrant had been also subsequently issued at the instance of the opium farmer, against the nacoda of the bark, to answer a charge of having imported, among the above, half a chest of opium in contravention of a clause in the farm regulations, which prohibits importation of any quantity less than a chest, under penalty of the forfeiture of the opium so imported and a fine of ten times its value. It appears further, that the shippers of the contraband opium have had to deal with adepts in their trade; part of it having been tested, proves to be balls of leaves and other trash rolled over a very small quantity of Benares opium, which forms the centre. The Government retain the opium; but nothing has transpired with respect to their intention as to the ship or the nacada; who, however, is not to be found. The European commander of the bark goes unmolested. It is believed the case will be referred to Calcutta.

DRAINING A SWAMP.—The swamp between the old Government house and the Golundause lines, is being drained off by sinking two large tanks, which will, no doubt, effectually put a stop to the constant illness that the owners and tenants of the dwellings in the immediate neighbourhood have long complained of.

THE ANDROMACHE.—H. M. ship Andromache, having on board Mr. Bonham, Joint-Commissioner with Captain Chads, for the suppression of piracy, arrived on the 5th August at Penang to land her wounded men, having attacked and destroyed a large piratical force in one of their strong holds at Silak near Selengore. One of the pirates went below and blew up his prize just as the English took possession of her, by the explosion of which one of the sailors was killed and 7 badly wounded. Captain Chads has taken several prisoners, who are landed at Penang, but will be brought shortly to Calcutta in the Andromache, with living witnesses of their piratical conduct, to prevent the ends of justice being defeated, as they have so often been by sending pirates from the Straits to Calcutta for trial without the means of convicting them.

SHIPPING.—The French ship Alexandre, which put into Penang on the 10th of August on account of damages suffered in the late tempestuous weather in the Bay of Bengal, has been abandoned to the underwriters, not being thought worth the great expense that would attend her heaving down and repairing at Penang under the uncertainty, from her peculiar construction, that she might be found efficient for her intended voyage after undergoing so expensive a process of repair. She was sold at auction on the 6th of August, for Sp. Drs. 6,700.

The ship William Wilson, Captain Miller, bound to the Mauritius, put into Penang on the 6th of August for the purpose of repairing damages, sustained in the Bay of Bengal from violent gales and a heavy sea, in which she sprung her fore-yard and mizen-mast, and laboured so excessively and made so much water, that it was considered necessary for the safety of the vessel to heave overboard part of her cargo, consisting of grain; and afterwards from the state of her leak and other damages to make for the most convenient port to caulk and make good her defects before endeavouring to complete her voyage.

CEYLON.

SIR ROBERT WM. HORTON.—It is currently reported that Sir Robert Wm. Horton will shortly return to England.

MAIL COACH.—A mail coach has been running between Colombo and Kandy for the last four years, in which people can travel seventy-two miles for two pounds ten shillings.

PERSIA.

A report is current in the Gulf, that the town of Bushier, the principal sea port of Persia, is to be transferred to the Iman of Muscat by the King of Persia for the annual tribute of twenty-six thousand tomanas. Persia remained tranquil.

An officer of the Tyrris was to be left at Amman in the hopes of finding the wreck of that steam vessel when the river fell; the rest of the officers and crew were to proceed to England.

CHINA.

THE WATER WITCH IN A TYPHOON.—The Water Witch, on her passage from Singapore to China, encountered a very severe typhoon about 50 miles to the south-south-east of the Paracela Shoals, on the 22d June. It came on very suddenly, the barometer giving but little warning. It increased from midnight of the 21st till 4 A.M. when it was blowing very hard at east, and obliged the vessel to bear up before it. It lulled for twenty minutes about 4, and then increased till 8-20, when a sudden shift brought the ship to the wind and she was laid on her beam ends. The main-top-mast-back-stays were cut in hopes of easing her; but the mast would not go, and as the ship appeared to settle deeper down, the main and mizen masts were cut away, the ship then righted and as it lulled a little the wreck was cleared away, without doing any injury: it then came on to blow stronger than ever, and seemed to increase till 6 P.M., when it lulled and cleared away and the breakers of the Discovery Reef were seen to lee-ward. The wind now allowed the vessel to haul up 4 points for a short time, when it came on again to blow as strong as ever and compelled her to bear away before the blast, and she cleared the shoal and ran to the north-west all night. It moderated about mid-night. The ship was then three days becalmed near Hainan, and all hands were employed in putting her to rights in the best manner they could. She reached China on the 28th of June under jurmasts.

SINGAPORE.

The papers received during the week from Singapore, bring very little additional intelligence to that which was given in the last number of this paper. The Andromache had gone up the Straits of Malacca; was to search for the pirates along the west coast of the Peninsula, and then pass over to the coast of Sumatra, and the Raleigh had followed her. The Dutch authorities at Rho had received Capt. Quin, of the Raleigh, very coolly, and the Resident had avoided a second conference with him on the subject of suppressing the pirates.

The inhabitants of Singapore contemplated buying the machinery of the steamer Jardine, and building a suitable vessel to put it into, which should ply in the Straits.

Singapore papers to the 1st of September were received on the 1st October. They furnish the intelligence, that the boats of the Andromache had encountered six more pirate prahus, containing about a hundred and eighty men, which they had destroyed, with the loss of one man, and several wounded. Captain Byden, of the Victory, had arrived at Singapore, and had placed one hundred and fifty dollars at the disposal of Captain Chads, to be distributed among the wounded seamen.

REVIEW OF THE CALCUTTA MARKET.

(From Kuhn's Monthly Price Current, September 30, 1836.)

INDIGO.—The manufacturing in the lower districts is now drawing to a close, and the planters are generally getting as much produce as they expected some 2 months ago. The following estimate has been circulated, but we should deem the figures capable of augmentation to at least 110,000 mds.

Jessore,.....	10,000
Burdwan and Hooghly,.....	5,000
Kajeshy and Moorsshedabad,.....	14,000
Dacca, Rungpore, &c.,.....	10,000
Baugleore, Purneah, &c.,.....	11,000
Tirhoot,.....	25,000
Western Provinces,.....	15,000

Total 100,000

The indigo of the Sooksagur factory is also on the sale list at Co's. Rs. 235 per factory md., and about 500 mds. of good Jessore's produce on same terms, 12 chests Puttyghur native produce obtained Sa. Rs. 157-8, without rejections, for the American market.

Dealers continue anxious for purchases at delivery, but offers are rejected, the planters preferring to wait the arrivals from the interior.

OPIUM.—The stock in the Hon'ble Company's godowns is nearly exhausted; prices have declined since our last.

The distribution of the Hon'ble Company's sale for the ensuing season, is expected to be as follows.

	Patna Benares Total.
1st Sale of 4th Jan....	chs. 5000	2400	7400
2d do. 20th Feb..	1500	1000	2500
3d do. 30th March ..	1500	1000	2500
4th do. 29th April ..	3000	2000	5000
	Chests 11000	6400	17400

RAW SILK.—The market is well supported, especially since the July overland dispatch arrived, they had previously declined upon the news of a fall in the Italian and China filatures. The silk now arriving is generally inferior, as is customary at this season of the year. There is no available stock in the market at present.

SILK PIECE GOODS.—The orders in town are so considerable as to render their execution a matter of extreme difficulty, especially for Corahs. Prices, which were on the decline at the beginning of the month, have resumed their former quotation since the arrival of the July overland dispatch, and are likely to be maintained.

RAW COTTON.—The market is rather depressed at the present, the season for shipment to China being on its close. Exportation to England is restrained by the high rates of freight.

SALTPETRE.—Large purchases have been made for the English market and prices are on the advance. The good and fine qualities are very scarce, but expected to arrive freely in the course of the next and following month.

SUGAR.—Immediately after the arrival of the July overland dispatch, nearly all the available Sugar was eagerly bought up, under the impression, that the relief by the equalization of the duty at home, would be extended to the shipment made from hence from the present time. Prices advanced in some instances to Sa. Rs. 11-12, per maund. A deputation from the Chamber of Commerce waited upon the Governor-General to request his sanctioning a certificate which would carry into effect, although owing to the abolition of the inland duties and the cessation of all the registers and attendant officers, not in the strict form, meet the spirit and intention of the act. The result of this interview has been, the establishment of the following certificate to be given by the Collector of the Sea Customs here.

"Pending final arrangements consequent upon the equalization of the duty upon East and West India Sugar, I am authorised by the Right Hon'ble the Governor of Bengal, to certify, and I do hereby certify, that that no Sugar has been imported into Calcutta by Sea for the last 5 years excepting China Sugar-candy, and double refined Loaf Sugar from Europe."

It is to be hoped that at home the act, which is intended as remedial, will be liberally construed, the more so as it is a matter of notoriety, that no Raw Sugar is brought higher from other ports, but that on the contrary, this Presidency supplies largely Bombay and the Persian Gulf in addition to the principal Exports to England. The non-existence of the evil, guarded against by the provision of the Bill, viz. the abuse of the relief by importing into Calcutta the Sugar of other ports, for the purpose of re-exportation to England, being proved, the authorities at home will doubtless not withhold the benefit upon mere points of form, especially when all the objects of the bill are fully and substantially attained. Previously to the arrival of the news, all the fine Benares sugar had disappeared from the market, and good to middling whites were the best that could be obtained. The Arab ships have not yet arrived, and when they do, prices must necessarily advance, as the quantity required for their return cargo will be considerable.

LAC DYE & SHELL LAC.—The former is in good demand for England, and prices are well supported. Good marks are very scarce. Shell Lac rather dull, and excepting for the American and French market, scarcely any business has been done.

RICE.—The fine Table Rice has almost disappeared; the new crop will begin to arrive in November. Shipments to Mauritius of Monghy Rice have been considerable.

HIDES.—Continue depressed and stock increasing.

LINSEED.—It is now confirmed by all the letters received from the provinces, that the crop is not above one half of the amount of the last season, our prices have consequently advanced.

SPICES, DRUGS AND OTHER MISCELLANEOUS PRODUCE.—Business to some extent have been transacted for articles under this head.

METALS.—Copper.—The prices have fluctuated a good deal since our last. The last sale of 14 lb. Tile we have heard of was at Sa. Rs. 37 per fy. md. The stock in importer's hand on the 1st September was estimated as follows:

Sheathing.....	fy. mds.	14609
Brazier.....	"	2819
Tile.....	"	16812
Bolt.....	"	811
Ingot.....	"	726
Nails.....	"	974
Peruvian Slab.....	"	90

Total 36841

It will be perceived that our market is particularly bare of Peruvian Copper.

Iron.—Is also advancing, but more slowly; there is a large stock here of flat, square and round, and the movement in the market is wholly attributable to the great rise in England.

TWIST.—The arrivals having been moderate. Our prices have advanced as will be seen by the quotations. Our stock in native hands is almost exhausted and the general position of the article is very healthy.

COLORLED TWIST.—Turkey Red, some business has been done in the numbers under 40 for Madras, the higher numbers are in very moderate demand. The transactions in Orange appear to be very large, but prices cannot be quoted higher.

COTTON PIECE GOODS.—Shirtings looking up at present, large sales of Book Muslins have been made, and in Jaconets and Mull Mulls a great deal will be done before the Holidays (15th to 22d instant.) Printed Calicoes are in good demand, especially Bengal stripes.

WOOLLENS.—Low Woollens are much in demand, and as the arrivals are moderate and our stock much reduced, prices which have begun to advance will no doubt be maintained, and even advance, should the future supplies not exceed the average. In Town and Felisse Cloths occasional sales are made, at fair prices, but the market is rather over supplied with these.

THE JETPOOR TRIAL

TRIAL OF HOOKUM CHUND, JOTHA RAM AND PUTH LAL.

Letters selected from the Deosa and Agru correspondence. Most of the notes were attached to one of the original translations, found at Deosa.

No. 5.—A Letter from Juepor.

The Brahman has brought the message and I have made the business sure, by writing or verbally. Afterwards they said—"Show some document from the Malik, (master or head) that we may fix the hour for the nuptial ceremony, and all the attendants may be present." The Brahman (Duyaram Butcher) gathers them together daily, and then postpones matters. He now says—"get the signatures of those who are to take part in the ceremony upon a sheet of paper, and then I will shew the Poorja (note or memorandum)"—but who can be such a fool as to declare himself one of the wedding party without the previous settlement of necessary preliminaries? Either the manner of performing the business must be speedily devised, or, if there be delay, and the other bridegroom should gain intelligence, it is impossible to foresee the result. When all is fixed you shall have the requisite information. The man of the garden, (the Agent to Governor General) and the man of business (the Rawul) are on the best of terms—what one says the other does. Regarding the four persons; he (the Rawul) has prompted reporting to the Sahib, that the executive officer (the Rawul himself) is not guilty, and that the Buneas (the Sravijee's Buneas) are at the bottom of the affair; that this is proved, and these people ought to be punished. Matters are in progress for writing according to the above tenor, and should the report go, then there are these four, and the two bearing the name (probably Bhukshee Moonna Lal and Deewan Moonna Lal), whose fate will be decided. We shall see what will be their end, but may God avert it! They (the Agent to Governor General and the Rawul) have made up their minds as I have stated.

Preparations were made for confining the Poorhee Wala (this must be Moonna Lal Darogha) when leaving his meal, he ran inside, and thus the matter has been postponed; but it is vain for the mother to pray for the welfare of her kid. Khindjoko (Sumpat Ram, Revenue Officer) is engaged in the business of the Moamula, (the tribute due to the British Government) but the arrangement for the Hoondies is not completed: the Seth has been written to, and his answer will determine the question. The Gungwal (Sipu Lal, an assistant of Sumpat Ram, Revenue Officer) is in office. What shall I say of him! He slanders every one openly. It is true (by befriending this man when you were in office) you have thrown away your money and favor.

[The next paragraph is very obscure and may not be of much importance.]

The two (the Agent to Governor General and Rawul) look out sharply for the man (the ex-minister of Deosa), but the affair is out of their power: only the Sudur can do any thing, so make your arrangements with confidence. Delay may be the cause of their (Deewan Umur Chund, &c.) destruction; and thus, what can be done, when you shall stand alone?

Manik Chund has arrived from Uhwat, and has been to the Garden, whence he was sent into the city. There are wooden fetters upon his legs; and they question him and urge him to confess:—what will be the result!

The Brahman will give the message to the Sahib. Deosa was visited by the Sahib, fourteen, in August, 1835. He said, Chundhoo, Buneas, and others, were summoned, and held to debate, with a view of deliberation on the 8th, 9th, 10th, 11th, and 12th of the Chaitra Mander. (The all the matters were recorded.) "If any of us were particularly in a situation, and they shall be made, please, as you please." They were then dismissed, and having taken security for Deosa, released. There is abundance of calamity, and the Ramayun's detail similar to the story of the Ramayun of this place could be endless. I have over the next two months may be said to have a new life. May Thakoorjee interpose sooner, and save the future will be known by the end of that month.

No. 6.—Letter from Puth Lal, the Ex-Minister of Agru—found at Deosa.

Accept my respectful salutation:—The letter brought your letter and I have perused it. The letter is not yet arrived. I have given the note to Sahib, who has been with me from the day I saw you. Gyan (Gyan Chund, son of Deewan Umur Chund) has been secretly from Juepor: he first went to Mathura, where Muni Ram told him he should not remain in his house, and had better go to Bindrabun; consequently, he went to Bindrabun and repaired to Bindrabun. We have heard the Khureetu of Budarun, also those of the Khureetu of Bindrabun, but you convey the Khureetu of this to them, so that in case of copies of these Khureetu being transmitted to Alves Sahib, and his questions them on the subject, they may be prepared to answer that they sent them. If you wish, I will send you copies of them. I have read those three notes, but write and let us know if a Khureetu from the Interior without a seal can be despatched.

What you have written regarding Bhuttachari (Deewan Ram) is correct; but a Brahman here says, that, within twenty-one days, he can either render the Rawul dead or cause death; according as he may be instructed, as if you desire me I will send for this man and set him to work. I wrote to you respecting Gwalior and Sahib, who appears that the man who told me this story deceived us and framed a falsehood. I have heard but once, for he came not near us again.

The troops are preparing to take the field, and the requisite orders have arrived: we shall see about the time of the Dusera.

We are very anxious about your health, therefore write us word that it is perfectly restored, and mention whether those four persons are gone or are still at Deosa.

Date, Bhodon, Budi 5, or August 1st, 1835.

No. 9.—A letter found at Deosa, written at Juepor, by Gyan Chund, son of Deewan Umur Chund.

Accept my respects. Your letter, having received, and all are delighted with the personal of your letter. Regarding the Budaran (Roo) of Deosa, she says—"I cannot believe in the Khureetu forwarded to me; shall we remain as we are, or be completely discomfited? and in how long will the matter be accomplished?"

* All this must refer to some victims of the violence and treachery of the Royalist.

* At this time, it would appear, that Hookum Chund was not to act in the matter of the destruction of the British Government as from the Deosa. This relates to the destruction of the British Government as from the Deosa.

Write a few lines of explanation and assurance, exhibiting the autograph of the Master,* that the full belief and confidence of the person (Roopa) in the garden may be obtained. There is grief of mind and body from over anxiety.

The Rawul seized the town's people and confined them in the Antash Court, and tried to ascertain who were concerned in the death of Mr. Blake. The British gave him thousands of maledictions, and he was vexed and ashamed, and liberated the prisoners.

The Rahu (some Lady connected with the family) gained access to the interior, and reports that the Majee remains of the same mind: she is not reconciled to the present state of things and exhibits elation on her confidence, though being a Rajamother, she possesses the power of controlling her feelings. All the other Dowagers, Ranees (Majees) are on one side, and the Chundra-wutjee (mother of the young Raj) stands alone. Ram Koonwar will communicate with you verbally. Send an account of the things you receive. To your master (Jotha Ram) say Juc-Sree-Jee, (respectful salutations) with expressions of esteem and affection. This time your enemies are the whole world, so you must perform some master act.

Send for Budaranjee (Roopa) a note or document exhibiting the identical handwriting (that of the ex-Minister) then she will have faith, and distinguish truth from falsehood. Forward it without fail: and Poorohitjee, (Mangeea Poorohit, Secretary of Jotha Ram) your and my Ram Govind (Supreme Being) are one and the same, therefore, I charge you, continue to write and transmit correct intelligence. Send letters constantly, and commission whatever things you may want from this. You have written thus,—"It appears probable that he (Jotha Ram) will come to Juepoor before me." Should it fall out so, this will be better than all; therefore, write explanation, to this effect, or communicate the matter to Ram Koonwar: I urge you solemnly to do this. You have written regarding Poorohitjee (a place of pilgrimage) now, trusting in you, I remain here; otherwise I should deprecate a further residence at this place, for I cannot bear to hear from every one upbraiding and reproachful words. Give the earnest blessing of Dardjee Sahib (father Deewan Umur Chund) You wrote something about the Dukhashjee (probably Bukehee Moonna Lal) —now, I tell you, do not place a single grain of trust in that man: when Sreejee (the Almighty) bring us together, I will explain to you my meaning.

Date Bhadon, 14th Soodi, 6th September, 1835.

Ganesh's elder brother's wife is in every respect well.

P. S. Do not forget the note for Budaranjee (Roopa); be sure to get it written, and to forward it.

No. 17.—Translation of a note found at Deesa.

Read my benediction, and make yourself acquainted with the following intelligence. At present, there is disorder and confusion for want of the autograph document. If the other business is in a fair train all is right: everything that rested with me (or us) is settled, and should cause you pleasure; I will send you the details. When the Rajas of the Dhane, (the master) addressed to all the Rajas and Captains, (the Nagus and Commandants of Battalions) shall come, you will see what shall take place on the morrow.

All the labour is undertaken for the principal (or principals). I (or we) rendered the whole of the work sure. I went from house to house myself, for the purpose of giving instructions.

The principal (or principals) has full confidence in me. Let there be no delay. Date the present hour.

* As this letter was written to Deesa, the master cannot but be Ram.

No. 17, of date 17th of May, 1835; in the handwriting of Mangeea Poorohit, servant of Sunghes Jotha Ram at Deesa, employed as Secretary to Hookum Chund.

Read my blessing: your letters have arrived; Vishnoo-Ugurwala brought the first, then came the one entrusted to Dano, and afterwards, on the fourth, arrived the Qasid. I have read to him, Jotha Ram * all that you have written regarding the Governor Sahib, the Major Sahib and Metcalfe Sahib, and respecting Banglee Dhor, &c.

A letter from the Rura Sahib at the Bagh has arrived, desiring that Vishnoo and another respectable trustworthy man should be sent to him, as he wishes to put some questions to them. Accordingly, I have ordered Vishnoo, Nund Lal Kutaryo, and Dhun Singh, to be prepared to go, and they will set out on the morning of Saturday the fifth: we shall see what he has to ask them, as soon as I learn; I will write it to you.

The Rawul has drawn over to his cause, as he thinks, Malée Ram Darogha, and has given him an appointment. I have also heard that the Rawul has promised the Sahib that in fifteen days he will satisfy the Majee, and reconcile her to the present system; in consequence, I have sent a man to Juepoor, and have directed him to say to Sivu Laljee, Malée Ram and Moona Laljee Daro (Darogha)—"Take care to keep steadfast the purpose of the interior: add strength to it, so that her foot may remain firm, and she may not, on any ground whatever, fail in resolution. I am doing my best, situated as I am, here; let her exert herself there, night and day to attain our object. Say to her from me—Be assured that I neglect not any means available. Tell the Firungee that you will not consent to manage the public affairs through him, (the Rawul:) that if he has received instructions for pursuing this course, they may even take the Raj and give you permission to depart. Say, (the following words are put into the mouth of the Majee)—"If you are determined to ruin the Raj at his (the Rawul's) bidding, do so!—Why do you keep him there; (Sunghes Jotha Ram at Deesa,) either give him leave to go to Agra, or take him by the hand and reinstate him; when he will furnish bondes for the payment of your money, and the Raj will flourish. Or, if you will not restore him, then let me employ whom I please as Minister." To ensure all this, I have now despatched a messenger, and I had written to the same purport previously.

Sivudas is still under restraint. Krishn Lal resides at the Bagh at night, and comes to the Deewan-khanu during the day. It is said that he entertains some suspicion.

The Sahib has given an order for embanking the bed of the stream: the propitious hour was duly fixed; sweetmeats were distributed, and all the beldars of the Battalions go to work.

Date Jeth, Budi 5th, 1892. (May 17th 1835.)

I will send further intelligence hereafter.

P. S. Where are Qasim Ulee, and myself, and those five: these are all present (or ready). &c.

* It may be remarked that Mangeea occasionally puts in a few words or lines applicable to himself, but such incongruity is common, even where there is no intention to be ambiguous, in Hindee letters written at the desire of others.

† This is a strange passage and must assuredly contain an occult meaning. The Sahib cannot be the Agent to the Governor-General nor the stream one in nature, nor the beldars common workmen.

‡ The object of this remark is as incomprehensible as the above passage. The ex-Minister, if he acknowledged the letters now under translation at all, may say that he desired the Poorohit to write and tell his brother that he was in good health, &c.; but that he cannot answer for what the man has said in his folly: or if he undertook to explain, might declare that it was reported the Sahib had desired, that some dyke or mound should be constructed; that the hour to commence the work was fixed astrologically to please the Hindoos, and sweetmeats were given as matter of course, &c., but such explanations under the actual circumstances cannot have any weight in solving the ambiguity. It will be noticed that this letter was written on the 17th of the month preceding the out-break of the 6th of June.

N B. The above notes were attached at the time that the letter was translated, to them may now be added that Hookum Chund in his written defence, says that, by the "Sahib" was meant the Rawul, who had given some order for embanking a stream, &c., but the Rawul is nowhere else termed Sahib in the Deosa and Agr papers, and no plan for executing any such work was under consideration even, much less were orders actually given on the subject. The only probable conjecture to be formed is, that the Sahib was the ex-Minister himself, and the embanking a stream, a metaphorical allusion to the execution of the scheme which had been decided on by the conspirators.

No 39.—In handwriting of Mangeen—to Hookum Chund

Information has been received that the Budarunge (Roopa) is ailing, which is a source of anxiety to me. All the intelligence that comes, represents him (the Rawul) as being at a low ebb, but there is nothing so pleasantly turning up for us, when such event does occur we may hear and believe. You also have done what lay in your power to aid our cause, and will be still at work may Purneshwar prosper our affairs, and then we shall meet again.† Here, I am under restraint in all things when at liberty every kind of exertion shall be made. I know not wherefore Purneshwar is so much disliked with us! I have not yet ascertained the intentions of this Sahib or what he is after, but this I do know, that the star of my existence is bright, for they say the present period is fortunate the fifth month (of the Nakal year), also, is said to be favorable in this month therefore, all will be accomplished. I have despatched Vishnuo Qad, and with him I sent another man for the purpose of bringing things from Jaipoor, therefore, do not be imprudent and uneasy.

Send a small Dues and a lot of string for Tukshmun Chuprasee (Chuprasee of the 1st C) Do not forward any more things, as they (both Ram himself) will not be required here. If wanted you shall be informed.

The Sardar is quite well. I have introduced the person to him. Be easy, and apprehend nothing. Purneshwar will prosper us. Have we not our destiny? Every thing has befallen us that was to happen.

Give my blessing to Kunwaranjee (wife of Kunwar Juthi Lal, son of Iotha Ram.) The Sudar (Jotha Ram) is as he should be. My poor services are at his disposal without reserve, so be easy.

Give my blessing to Deewanjee (Budhee Chund), Tukshmunjee, Hoorahjee, Ubbhee Chundjee, Lowree, Ubbhee Chundjee, Singhee, Sivujee, Hoorahjee, Hoorahjee, and Govindo.

Date, Tuth, Budh 5th, 1892 (17th May 1835)

No. 4.—In the handwriting of Guran Chund, son of Deveen Umui Chund.

Now peruse the following intelligence. All the things you wrote for I have forwarded. The Majee has sent from the interior, through Ke-ur (a female attendant),—"what benefit will result from bringing matters to termination when Ma's will be no more? My language is of the same tenor, and my determination is as strong as formerly, therefore make your arrangements with the Sudar (British Government) speedily, for our antagonist (the Rawul) is acquiring strength."

All the Nagus here, the Battalions, Hunwunt Singh and Bhatt Singhee, and those likewise who were with us before, have been engaged to fidelity in our cause, though Bhuttacharjee Mahara (Dura Ram.) Ten thousand rupees will be required for expenses, as I told you before, write what your pleasure is in this matter.

It was settled with the Majee Sahib that we should without fail, seize the adversary (Rawul), and put him to death, but the Majee says—"If Babajee (Jotha Ram) has arranged with the Sudar, let him write me truly to that effect." If therefore you have accomplished this object, write the fact in few words, that we may communicate the information (to the Majee), and convey the Budarun from the garden into the interior. On the foregoing subject your honor wrote formerly to Dadajee (my father), telling him that the arrangement was effected, and giving him encouragement and confidence, and he sent the paper for the perusal of the Deelan (Majee), who derived consolation and assurance therefrom.

After destroying the adversary, answer may be made that the order was given by our chief authority, therefore it was obeyed.

To the English it will be appropriate to say, "you do what you are ordered by your Government, and we also are servants."

There will be no expenditure of our money until the business is completed, therefore your cash will not be wasted.

You sent a verbal message by Sivujee that you are ready to join in my primary outlay, with reference to Calcutta or even to London, but you do not understand how to make an advantageous compromise. Lakhs of rupees are lying here abroad, surely the obtaining the favor of the Government in order to recover these sums would be a profitable transaction the adversary has included all this money in the account for handies (in liquidation of the amount of tribute due to the British Government).

It is my (or our) advice that we destroy all those who have combined against us, but whatever you may recommend, with reference to the Sudar, shall be represented to the Majee. Your reply, comprised in a written note, will obtain attention and respect.

No 35.—In the handwriting of Dura Ram Bhuttacharjee.

Read my blessing.—Your letter has come and I have perused its contents. Who is there that does not look to his own interest? The way to effect both works is in progress of completion, and you may be at ease with respect to both the Raj and me. The actors will now soon be at work, and I feel assured that you will have no reason to complain, but the consummation depends upon the pleasure of Hun (Tushnoo).

Read my salutation.—I despatched my foster brother to you with intelligence yesterday and conclude that he

Ra. The Kamkuta Modhee and He in its several cases.

† Where? The answer is obvious at Jaipoor. To a person unacquainted with the circumstances of the parties, it may appear to be tolerably clear that a common meeting is not meant, from the tenor of the succeeding lines.

‡ Roopa termed Ma, in former letters written in the palace, or it may be when I shall be no more.

* That allusion is here made to the identical paper upon which the ex-Minister, found amongst the papers of Deewan Umui Chund, in the house of a Meenra woman, is an obvious conjecture.

† The year begins either with the month Chinet, or on the 2d Bhatoon Sudr. According to the latter mode of computation, which is most frequently used, the month June was included in 1891.

has arrived. Yesterday, when about one and a half p.m. of the day had passed, the following events occurred. Three wounds were given with a sword to the Majee Sahib, Alves Sahib, as he was mounting his elephant at the Surulkee Deorhee, two of them through his hat, the third, which was light, on the forehead he got into a palkee and went away. Mr Blake seized the man who had made use of his sword, and, having tied his hands behind him and thrown him upon a charpae, was taking him to the Garden, (Residency) when a crowd collecting, effected his release, and gathered round Mr. Blake, who fled to the Mundur of the Poorahjee, which he would have entered at once, but the door of it being shut, he brought his elephant alongside of a balcony, and then, with the aid of one of the pillars, leaped inside.

The mob had thrown spears and stones upon the road and now they breached the wall and got into the Mundur, where they killed the Sahib and his umbrella bearer, two eunuchs and a spearman were killed in the Buzi, so that five lives were lost, and the Burah Sahib went away wounded, as well as two or three men more. Intelligences of a sword having been used went to them (the Thakoor who had remained after the Durbar broke up) in the Sookhni-vas, and suspicion and distrust arose among them — thus Panneshur ordered all for the best. Immediately that information of what had occurred was received, Rawuljee ran out and he had got as far as the brazen (a door in the wall between the Palace and the Surbutha Court) door, when word was brought that the uppour* had ceased and all was quiet, on which he turned into the Surbutha (Dewan Khannah) and facing the Surulkee Deorhee. All hurried away excepting the Moorahib (Members of the Council) who remained alone — our Rao, (Hunwant Singh), the Thakoor of Oompjara and the son of the Thakoor of Tulae, &c., in all six, stayed.

On hearing that a sword had been used, I left my house with two hundred men, and causing the outer gate to be opened, proceeded to the Potteenlee Deorhee (Gateway between the Lypol en and Surulkee Deorhee). Rawuljee was informed that the son of Chimmun Singh with three hundred men had arrived, and that they were breaking open the gate, upon which he sent this message to our own (Hunwant Singh) — "The are all your adherents who are facing the gate, forbid them, or as a consequence of this disturbance, the plunder of the town will very probably ensue." Then Bhueroojee and Sidhmool were sent to the Poorahjee Deorhee, and they told me that they were directed to deliver the following message (by Rao Hunwant Singh) — "I am perfectly at my ease here, take all your men away and sit down near the new Mun'im." He has spoken these words, and charged you most solemnly to obey his orders, they will do so and sit down at the appointed place. About the third p.m., he (Rao Hunwant Singh) came to me and asking me I had on my feet, told me to mount his horse and go away, I accordingly came home, and when five o'clock of the night were gone, dined.

Now, all is up here, within a short time, some other minister event must occur for the sound to be heard and a general commotion will ensue.

Another noteworthy event occurred yesterday — All the Majees had assembled in the Sookhni-vas, and after the Lungees had gone away, the others fell upon and beat the Majee Sahib, who received a great many blows on the face; but by the blessing of Panneshur her life was spared, and fortunately the Moorah (the young Raja) was not in the Sookhni-vas, but in his mother's apartment. Fomentations and other remedies were applied, and they have effected a cure.

They questioned the man (that wounded the Agent to the Governor-General,) who told them that he was a Pawai (name of a tribe of Rajpoots) by caste, of the district Jeeloo, but that his ancestors, five generations back, had quitted that part of the country, and his own home was at Mularna Kunee-reepoor, that formerly he was in service at Runthumbar, and at present remained with Deewan Umur Chund. He was then asked at whose bidding he had acted thus, and at first he said that he had done it of his own accord, but when pressed for his motive, he answered — "the Sahib went into the Sookhni-vas, on which account the Sravugees used to stay among themselves in the Mundur, that the honor of the Kuchwah was gone, that was my reason for doing it. But why do you ask these questions of me? All the Sravugees and all the men of the Sardars were my abettors, only they all hung back at the moment of action, and of my own party of four, I alone was left." The act was done at the instigation of others, measures of another kind were tried first, and at last this was resorted to. He merely repeats what he has been told. Among other things he said — "If I had done this deed Rawuljee would have been sacrificed."

P. S 1st. There is much strictness observed with regard to letters and papers of all kinds at the gate and elsewhere, therefore when you write make use of the inverse character.

Do not forget this injunction.

Megh Singh is not yet arrived

P. S 2d. They gave me leave to depart five days ago, but I managed by some means or other to stay here — first, on account of its being Wednesday, and then because I wanted camels. Now, I will say distinctly — I shall not go at present willingly, though if you insist on my going, whether I will or not, I can't help myself."

No 43.—In the handwriting of Chimmun Singh, father of Juvahir Singh.

Receive my salutation, — your letter has arrived and I have perused its contents. You say that whatever there was to write you have communicated, keeping nothing back, that you have forwarded the several despatches to Megh Singh and the other gentlemen, also to Alves Sahib, and that you think instructions of a favorable nature will now come, likewise that he (the Agent to the Governor-General) will soon speak to this purpose. That you have spared no labour, and have resorted to every possible means, though the result must rest with Panneshur. The latter is true, but exertion well directed gives success, therefore be not wanting in this essential.

You request that communication may be made to the interior — there is as much vigilance preserved in that quarter as ever, but there is no flinching off to the firmness of the Majee Sahib, she had rather die than depart from her word. The wretch (the Rawul) is doing his utmost to vex and annoy her, and to lead astray and separate from her all the other Ranees, but she possesses strength of mind and is resolute.

Six or seven days ago the Sahib came to the Sookhni-vas, sent every one away, and conversed with the Majee during four ghurees (an hour and half),* an account of this, and of the Rawul's success, after the departure

* The commotion that took place in the first instance, when Alves was wounded, and that gentleman and Mr. Blake after left the Surulkee Deorhee

* The writer must have known this to be false, because stigmatized readers it impossible of the Sahib, in deceiving all the other Majees—Dewareeje, Chawureeje, &c.; of the closing the Deorhee as far as the outer large door, and afterwards the approach of certain Sirdars, and what was then said on both sides;—came written at length from Juepoor* and was sent on to you immediately; therefore, from the perusal of that paper you will be aware of the whole. The Sahib and Majee Sahib conversed on the best of terms; and the former said, in substance—'You are mistress here; whatever it may be your pleasure to order will be done, and instructions to this effect have been received from the Sudurr. The Rawul was exceedingly displeased with this result, imagining that it was all over with his designs.

On Wednesday the 6th, the Sahib came again to the Sookniwas, and the Majee Sahib and other Majees were all present. The Sahib, they say, made this visit for the purpose of settling the previous dispute which has been alluded to. Blake Sahib accompanied the Bura Sahib; and the four Moosahibs, and all the other Sirdars, also, came to the Sookniwas on this occasion. When the day had risen a pihur and quarter (about 9 o'clock) the Sahib, taking his departure, went out by the Surdkee Door, and was standing by his elephant that was kneeling, when he suddenly received three sword-wounds, two of them through the hat, and one, which was slight, upon the forehead. A letter giving an account of this event, with the murder of Blake Sahib, and the death of a yeoman, three chuprases and an umbrella-bearer, has come from thence and is sent for your perusal. A city mob surrounded and killed the gentleman, Blake Sahib, and all those men. The Bura Sahib was wounded at the Deorhee, and from that place the cry issued—kill, (or strike) don't let go away; upon which the people in the streets, including even Bruhmans † acted as they did. At the very moment the Bura Sahib was wounded, accordingly as it had been previously concerted, the cry was raised in the way proposed.‡

All the other Ranees had assembled in the Sookniwas, where they beat the Majee soundly. The latter was a good deal hurt, but fomentations were applied and her life was saved. This act appears plainly to have been brought about by that Burun Sunkur (the Rawul, that worthless man); Huti knows if it be so.

This is an atrocious affair! That the Agent should be thus wounded in front of the Deorhee, and that he (the Rawul) should have dishonored the Majee, the mother of the son, through the agency of others: such offences, sufficient to cause the loss of the Raj and the expulsion of the Kuchwahs and Mootusahs, will have proceeded from him (the Rawul). It seems to me that now, the English will be disgusted with him, therefore whatever you have to write to Metcalfe Sahib regarding the late events, be sure to write and despatch speedily, and as Alves Sahib has survived here, write to him what there is to be said. Write in such a strain that the atrocities shall be attributed directly to him (the Rawul), and that such instructions on the report of this affair may be received from the Sudur, that the wretch may, this time, be utterly ruined when all obstacles will be removed to you. But if, when all this blood has been shed, he should still keep his place, he will then be firmly fixed, do not therefore falter in your exertions to convey full impressions to the Sahib-log and the Sudur.

* In a letter from Chimun Singh's son, Juvahir Singh, found at Agra, but not translated.

† This is directly the reverse of fact.

‡ Bruhmans are here specified because they were the enemies of Jotha Ram, as if to show what excellent management there had been.

§ The precise origin of the preconcerted cry is not described, but it must have proceeded from the conspirators, and the writer of this letter appears to have known well that it had been planned, and that those to whom he was writing would know by whom.

With regard to what you write about the cash, valigies, &c. the adage concerning fortune is doubtless true—fortune will do what an enemy can not effect; but you will see that if Purneshurjee is favourably disposed, and this wretch gets his face blackened, all the property will be forthcoming from the various places of deposit. By the assistance of Purneshurjee every thing becomes practicable, therefore be easy in your mind. (Four lines are here torn off.)

P. S. Give my blessing to Chiranjee (Futih Lal). You will learn what has been done from these letters; do not be troubled in mind, but remain collected, for with the help of Purneshurjee every thing is feasible.

No. 19.—In the handwriting of Manjess Poorokis at Deosa.

* May the blessing of their well wisher Manjee Ram Poorokit attend Rao Buhadoorjee, Sree Sanghee, Hookum Chundjee, Dewanjee Sahib, Bridhee Chundjee, Kunwarjee, Sahib Futih Laljee, Kufwurjee Sahib, Lukshmunjee, and Heeralaljee. Read the following intelligence. Three sword wounds were inflicted on the Bura Sahib at the Deorhee, close to the jasmine bush; and the assistant Sahib was killed before the Poorokis Temple: the mob killed him, Blake Sahib, with his umbrella-bearer. Three or four chuprases were wounded and three killed: all this you will have learned at length.* Soon after the news arrived here, a message came for all the Suwars to go in: they went off; and the Risaldar on arriving will have reported every thing.† He made over charge of me (Jotha Ram) to Chand Singa (Thakoor Chand Singa), before starting. After an interval of about eight days I sent Dhun Singa (Chopdar), who made his report to the Sahib. The messenger was well received: he (the Sahib) gave many assurances and has sent back the Risala. Know this! he gave a great many assurances: so then, in eight or ten days I shall receive a message to attend him, and, by the blessing of Purneshurjee, I will not fail to send for you all, immediately on arriving; be assured of that. All now will prosper for us!

The Suwars of the Rawul took up the ground that had been occupied by the Risala in the absence of the latter; but when this returned, each went to its former spot of encampment.

The Sahib's kindness and good will towards me are unqualified, so you may be satisfied and happy.

Respecting the occurrences at Juepoor, you must know that, at first, he (Futih Singh the assailant of the Agent to the Governor General) took the names of eleven persons, including Thakoors, as instigators; now, he says that the Sravugees caused the attempt to be made. The Sahib has undersoot the matter well, and fixed it upon the Rawul. Anarchy and confusion prevail in the city, and the Majee is satisfied; her confidence and resolution are now fixed. She is in the Sookniwas.

The Malic (young Rajah) is quite well. The young Bhuteanereeje (one of the Ranees in the pulace) died four days ago, after an illness of two months.

I will send further intelligence hereafter. The persecution ‡ in the interior is not at all diminished, but she is not so easily subdued, being as resolved on carrying the point as ever.

Our good fortune has now approached us! I have been in a state of trouble and perplexity, so that I could not write to you before.

If you should be intimate with any of the Sahib-log who will come from Agra with the Regiments of Foot and Cavalry, take an opportunity to send in his suite an intelligent trust worthy man; and tell the Sahib, that, if he will take him under his protection, the person will make him acquainted with all that has been going on (at Juepoor.)

Date, Usrah Badi 2d, 1891 (12th June 1835.)

(Upon a slip of paper † attached to this letter, but written apparently in a different hand.)

Megh Sing has arrived, now it is necessary that one of you should come.

No. 27.—Document marked No. 27 at Agra, with the remark upon it in red ink—"Re-produced by Hookum Chund and Ubhuu Chund from the Rudee papers"—or papers that had been cast aside. It purports to be a letter written by Hookum Chund to his brother Jotha Ram, not many days after the events of the 4th of June last, though it has no date.

I have received and read your letter in which you have written as follows: "In the middle of last night, a Suwar arrived suddenly, and told the Risala that was stationed here with me on the part of the Sahib, to mount and be off, the whole of the men put their saddles upon their horses, and made ready to depart. When he (the Risaldar) came to take leave of me, I asked him what had occurred that he was going away; he then told me that swords had been going at the Deorhee in Juepoor, that the Bura Sahib had been wounded and Blake Sahib killed, and that there was a great tumult in the city. All the Sirdars, Thakoor and others were at the Deorhee on the occasion. When the Risaldar imparted this information, I said to him, you are going away, who will be my protector? Then he told the Suwars and Sipahcees of Rawuljee who are here, to take care that no harm came to any of us on the peril of their lives. Having given this injunction, he mounted his horse and all went off. I passed the night in tribulation and fear. In the morning, more detailed intelligence came. It is reported that Alves Sahib had received three sword wounds, that the assassin was seized, and that Blake Sahib was assaulted, beyond all bound, as he was going away; on reaching the Bazar he was assailed with stones, and surrounded by a mob; he fled and got into the Poorohit's Mundur, from which he was dragged forth. This is what has occurred, as I have heard; but I have not yet learned who the assassin is, nor how many were engaged in the affair. They have dared to commit this deed in the day time, openly, and amidst thousands of men! Without investigators they never would have ventured to attack those people (the English party) at all! It is a most deplorable business! But, as it is said the assassin has been secured, all will come out. Without the connivance of the Minister such a thing could not have happened at the Deorhee. In this business, it is evident that the few individuals who are dissatisfied with the course of affairs, have perpetrated the deed. But I am now in great fear as to my personal safety: he (the Rawul) and I are mortal enemies, and when he holds not back from the Sahib-log even, what hope can I have, should he be determined to injure me? Assuredly there is great cause for anxiety! There is one thing occurs to me, which is, that it may serve me to have ten or twenty trust-worthy Sipahcees near my person: they may remain separate from me, to be sent for in case of need."

This plan is by no means advisable. It is a critical period, but the step you propose is far more expedient. You need not be alarmed; he (the Rawul), will not attempt just at this time to injure you; for it is manifest to the understanding that he will practise many deceptions with respect to what has taken place; he being the personification of delusion itself and the very image of guile; and should he hurt you just now, it would be brought home to him that he performed the other act in order to have an opportunity of effecting this: at present, therefore, he will not harm you, and for the future there is Bhugwan.

Moreover, if ten or twenty men are sent, what can they do when your adversary has hundreds at command? Again, to have acted thus towards the English, he must be very desperate; since their rule extends over all India, and there is no one really possesses the power to treat them thus—as it were in defiance; yet he has done it! how then could you expect to find safety from a small number of armed men?

You also write, that you desired complete security from the presence of the Sahib's Suwars, who were very vigilant, but that now you are helpless: what you have decided on with respect to sending Dhun Singh Chobdar † to the Bura Sahib at Juepoor is perfectly right; so send him. But the Bura Sahib is himself a sufferer at this time, and can hardly be expected to turn his attention to business just now, when his own life is in jeopardy. May Bhugwan grant that his life be spared! then, as all this has occurred before himself, he will take measures for exacting complete satisfaction. But his frame is feeble and may not enable him to sustain the loss of blood: if, however, the wounds are slight, he will recover and do all.

This man (the Rawul) has committed so black a deed that he must be extirpated root and branch; for, though he has once or twice before been guilty of similar crimes and escaped detection, yet this affair concerns the English, who will doubtless after a full investigation inflict exemplary punishment. The Rawul has been guilty beyond measure, but here it will all end, as he will not be able to avoid the consequences of this act.

The following appears to be the state of the case.† Intelligence was received here lately, that for some days past the Bura Sahib had entered into conversation with the Majee; had given her assurances of support, and told the Rawuljee that he must act according to the pleasure of the Majee, whose orders were to be obeyed. That intimation will have offended and irritated him, and in consequence, he has formed the design of perpetrating this act. Supposing that, as he had been long intimately connected with, and was supported by the English, they would never think of suspecting him. But the period was adverse to him; the assassin has been secured, and now concealment is impossible; had this man been killed, he might have succeeded in merging all vestiges of the act in the ocean.

It appears to me, likewise, that Lukshmun Singh Bhueroo Singh of Burnala, Nuwul Singh and others, are decidedly malcontents; but when correct and full

* Our cause.—This is the restoration of the Sunghes.

† This paper probably went from Juepoor to Jotha Ram and Hookum Chund.

‡ This letter affords a specimen of refined cunning and hypocrisy. Had it been found at Deor, and so other documents of different tendency, or calculated to impeach the honesty of this, and be brought to light, it might have served its purpose in part.

* All the foregoing is feigned to be an extract from Jotha Ram's own letter.

† In No. 19, a letter from the ex-minister, dated 12th June, Jotha Ram mentions that the Chobdar had been sent, &c.

‡ It will have been noticed, that it has always been deemed necessary to find cause of dissatisfaction for the Minister. The reason here given is utterly without foundation.

information arrives, this will be known to a certainty. Intelligence from Juepoor does not come to me direct; but the merchants here had runners who come in ten pihurs (a day and quarter), and the news arrived first in this way.

Write again * when Dhan Singh shall return from the Bura Sahib, and communicate every thing connected with his mission: and be easy in your mind; for you have nothing to apprehend. What he has done is of the blackest dye, for the Raj itself may be compromised by it—which Bhugwan grant may not be the case! Be assured that this crime will be brought home to him, and that it will be the end of his career. He has fixed a groundless accusation † upon us, and effected our ruin: but there is justice in the house of Bhugwan. Had he not committed his last act, retribution would not have overtaken him. As a person acts so shall he be rewarded: what one hand sows the other shall reap.

I have made some inquiry here respecting our own affairs, and have been told that the settlement of them must now be postponed, as this important event which has occurred will be taken up and decided on first.

No. 5.—A letter marked No. 5, at Agra, in handwriting of Gyan Chund, son of Deewan Umur Chund, Jat vepoor, to Sunghee Jothu Ram at Deosa.

The following is a summary of the contents of the Khurectus:—"Sambhur, Shekawatee and Torawatee are restored, and you may make your collections there as you please, but our people also shall remain. You must adopt proper measures for putting a stop to thieving and robbery, and if this cannot be effected by you, these districts will be attached again, for the purpose of being retained under the Company's Government. The sacrifice of five Meenas for the murder of Mr. Blake is not sufficient atonement for what has passed; point out the person in whose service was formerly the man that first used a sword, or no more khurectus will be written. Whoever shall hold the office of minister must afford satisfaction on this point; the affair did not originate with Bunceas." This, the purport of a khurectus that has come, you must forward to Agra, and give the following advice:—"Tell the Sahibs at Agra, that the man who assaulted the Bura Sahib with his sword is and has been from the first an inhabitant of Burnala; he is in reality a servant of Bhueroo Singh (Thakoor) of Burnala, though he was in the service of the Deewanjee (Deewan Umur Chund) during one year, at the end of which he took this discharge, and Lukshmun Singh, through the medium of Bhueroo Singh, the immediate instigator, caused the blow to be struck. Dadajee (Deewan Umur Chund) Sahib is ready to vouch for the truth of this assertion, he says, if any one will take him by the hand and ask him. These two persons may declare they did not conspire the murders, but is there not proof of their guilt in Bhueroo Singh himself going to the Poorohit's Munder with a battalion, and under a pledge of safety inducing him (Mr. Blake) to come out, and then causing him to be killed. Several chuprassees, who were with him (Mr. Blake), are ready to prove all that is advanced, but they are silent because they see that the Bura Sahib is disposed to protect the Rawul. Goolleo Darogha also caused the body of the gentleman to be dragged forth and thrown down at the Police station, where he kept it four hours in the sun.

Moreover when Mr. Blake got out, accompanied by the chuprassee, upon which the assassin was secured, and his elephant had reached the pukka canal, by whose order did Gunga Vishu Dhathee send the chuprassee and taken it away? The authority of the Bunceas is not recognizable in that proceeding; and again the gates were closed by him against Mr. Blake, in which matter the Bunceas could have given no order. He (Mr. Blake) took an interest in the affairs of the Bunceas of this city, and used to listen to all that they had to say, on which very account he was murdered, as may be proved by persons ready to give evidence to that effect. Be sure you send these instructions to Agra. The Majee sends this message:—"Babajee, grudge not the expenditure of money, but by whatever means it may be practicable, arrange so as to come back to your place at Juepoor."

The two Siras send the offering of their blessing.

* P. S. Some one is coming to question you respecting jewels, and they are disputing with the Buderunjee (Roopa) on the same subject.

No. 33.—Translation of some passages in paper marked 33 at Agra. A letter from Jothu Ram to Hookum Chund, in the handwriting of Mungeen Poorohit.

Receive the benediction of your well wisher. Govind hurkaru will have arrived, be sure to send the tent I wrote for.

The other Ranees and Lukshmun Singh had in vain attempted to procure the expulsion of the two Siras, when the Rawul sent Bukhsheejee Moonna Lal to the palace on the same errand.

The Bukhsheejee spoke freely and said, he will send you (the Majee) to a Fort and expell the Siras. You do not attend to what the Rawul suggests; this will never answer. At length, the Bukhsheejee pressing the matter very hard, the Majee exclaimed, Bravo! this will become the son of Ranea hundjee. Good! the honor of this act will accrue to you. The Bukhshee was not to be put off his purpose, and at last the Majee said—give me your solemn promise, and I will make them over to your special charge. The Bukhsheejee pledged himself, and then she gave the Siras to him, saying, let them not be disgraced in any way. The Bukhsheejee gave a promise to that effect. In this manner the Bukhsheejee brought away both the Siras; whether he afterwards kept them in his own house or forwarded them to their homes, I do not know; but they both sent Sivu Chunder Bruhmun to Sivu Majee, with a message purporting that the Majee was firm of purpose up to that time; but that as they had been removed, they were deprived of all power and could no longer exert any influence over her. She is not likely to be induced to change her present sentiments, they added, but until now we were about her person.

The Bukhsheejee has attired himself altogether in the livery of the Rawul. He had carried on altercations with the Majee Sahib before, and now he forces her to give up the two Siras.

There are now with the Majee kesur, the two Nazirs and the Jyotishshejee's Baee, for getting out all of whom plans are being devised.

The following four or five Thakoors are in the opposition, people say: Jewas Singhjee, Man Singhjee, Hanwant Singhjee, Rawul Dhoolleeka, Man Singhjee, and Indut Singhjee; and Nawal Singhjee, Ruhadur Singh and Bhueroo Singh, are with the Rawul. What in the world can the Bukhsheejee be thinking of!

* In the centre of the street that passes the palace of the Trepoia is an aqueduct.

* It would not be easy to assign a date to this letter. In No. 19, Jothu Ram gives a reason for not having written before, yet the result of Dhan Singh's mission was then known, and the long extract above given could not have been taken from that letter.

† In allusion to the charge of poisoning their late Prince Jue Singh, as if that accusation had originated with the Rawul.

‡ Supposed to be addressed to the Raj by the Governor-General in Council, or a despatch from the Government to the Agent to the Governor-General, the purport of which was to be communicated to the Raj authorities.

§ Here commence instructions as to the language that should be held in conversation at Agra.

On the 12th or 13th I wrote and despatched a letter to ~~Munshi~~. I have also written other letters, both to the interior and to Sivu Laljee, but have not sent them, because of the dread that they might fall into the hands of some one, when I (or we) should assuredly suffer death. There is great cause for apprehension in the existence of his Honor's handwriting; wherefore, Nana's letter was forwarded to Sivu Laljee, and the others were not sent. Sivu Laljee gave the letter to Nanda, and he read it, and made the contents known in the Interior. The Mijee asked who had brought the letter, and said,—"Let the person who brought it carry back the following message, —we shall all die in waiting for the Sahib to act in our favor, there will be an end of you, we and the Budarun what have you being doing there? As yet you have executed no plan for our success, and the Raj is lost. At Agra, he (Hookum Chund) is not under any restraint, yet what has he done? Nothing has been effected by either of you. Tell the man who brought this letter to say to him, —either devise some plan of operation that shall be successful, or go all and drown your head in the Jumna. A very long interval has elapsed, and yet you have absolutely done nothing."

All this came from the Interior and was repeated to me. She is in great affliction during several days she abstained entirely from food, so deep was her grief.

Are you doing any thing or not? There are no symptoms as yet of your having exerted yourself in any way, are you, therefore, sitting idle or are you doing something?

I hear that you have reduced the allowance of the elephant* and are starving the animal, also that the bullocks are ready to die from inanition. What have they accompanied you merely to die thus? It seems as if you passed the time in superintending these matters, for no other work whatever has been done by you. Were it left to me as you are, it would be as what could be effected by this time, but I am altogether unable to do there are no intelligent men near me, I cannot move hand or foot, being in the power of others, my mistress is in trouble, and Budarun is in confinement, this is my situation.

You will comprehend all that I have written.

Date—Usrah Sooh 6th, 1391, (2d July 1835)

No. 23.—Paper mailed 23 at Agra & letter from Jethu Ram to Hookum Chund in handwriting of Secretary Menyesa Poorohit Receive my blessing. Intelligence has been received from Juefore, that on the 13th Sooh Siwaan (8th July) So—(Sivu Lal Sahib), U De—(Imam Chund Deewan), Gya—(Gyanjee Gungah), Rajor (Rajoo Lal & Houdkhar,) these four in his house were placed in confinement, and guns were pointed at their houses. In the afternoon, Iha—(the thaloor or lawar) assembled every one, and sending for the government men persons told them through Mouna Lal, that they were all four prisoners, that such was the order of the Mijee. Having said this he confined them. What they wish or without an order to that effect, he knows, who is it to ask her (the Mijee). I am not aware that he has consulted the Sahib, but it is like that he has. It has been told to me that twenty-seven persons are to be confined, as connected with the Juti and Chhijoo J. Kaeth,—some will make their escape, others will be taken. This is the course of counteraction that he has adopted, and I know not what may be in the contemplation of the Sahib to divine this is beyond my reach.

People say that both (the Agent to the Governor-General and the Rawal) are one—that they are of the same mind; and word was brought to me before, from the Interior, that such was the case, of which I sent you notice. If the Sahib and the Rawul be thus united what hope can we have in the former? When matters are following this course, where is the anchor of our expectations to be found?

I am quite at a loss to know why the Sahib is apparently so inactive, no single point respecting him can be ascertained. He (the Rawal) is vexing, and harassing every one. He himself (the Agent to the Governor-General) was wounded, and another gentleman killed; yet, even with all this, no retribution has followed. I have not heard if any instructions have come from the Sudur, should they have arrived, they have not been made public. What can be the meaning of his silence? Something at least might be expected to transpire, whereas, not a whit regarding either the Rawul, us, or the Raj, is made known in any way. He (the Rawal) is enacting a Pruluyu (a general destruction), and messages are brought from the Interior, that we must treat in Calcutta, as there can be no doubt that he (the Agent to the Governor-General) has gone over, but of this I have advised you before, communicating the very words that were used, for your perusal.

Do you write what you are doing for us. I have not heard from you for sometime, and am uneasy on that account. Three men have been sent by me—Umroor, Govindo and Sodhi, and I have not as yet been informed of the arrival of one of them, consequently, I am anxious for intelligence of some kind. I also wrote for a tent which is not yet come. The tent I have, is torn in many places, and patching, cannot be made to last much longer.

I have been told the astounding news, that to-day fifty of the Rawul's, Swais, and yesterday one hundred, with a detachment from the Sahib, set off for the purpose of burning over the elder Singhee (Hookum Chund). This report has reached to my former business, but there is one source of consolation to the mind, which is, that he is not under the authority of the Rawul and the Sahib, and if the Swais do go, will not obey the commands. I was in the power of others, but he is not subject to those two.

Write what is going on—am you in treaty with any one or not? Has any answer been received to the communication forwarded to Calcutta? What are you doing there? There is nothing, it would appear to be expected from you, what is the cause of this? After the extraordinary outrage committed, do you hear nothing of an Army, or Regiment of Sahibs coming and going? Or have you heard that after the expiration of the four rainy months, an act will be done, or that no such delay will precede action? By the time the rainy season is over, he (the Rawal) will have told our people all down. There is no knowing when the Sudur will interfere, and before that comes to pass he will leave nothing undone. No Ranjra Rajoot in the country possesses the least spark of valor. I have heard a great deal about their pretended opposition, but courage, moral and physical has abandoned the whole of them. Not one of them has any true virtue remaining.

I am now thinking of sending Dhun Singh to the Sahib again, on Monday the 3d. I shall write and forward a letter by him. Whatever may transpire in consequence, I will communicate, but really there is no getting to the bottom of his duplicity or the contrary.

Do all that you can, for there is no longer any trust to be put in the Sahib. Neglect no quarter where it is possible to do something. Avail yourself of every thing that may turn up.

* The elephant and bullocks here alluded to are the property of the Emperor Raj though with Hookum Chund.

May you be happy. Delay not to send some kind of intelligence.

P. S. Neither will the Darogha (Moonna Lal) be suffered to escape nor the Bukh-sherjee; he (the Rawul) will get them all into his clutches.

Date, Usrah Budi 1st, 1891, Saturday.

N. B. The month given in this date is evidently erroneous, for as the four individuals detained in the commencement of the letter, were not placed in durance until the 13th of the second half of Usrah, or 13th Soodi; it is impossible that information of their confinement could have been received in the beginning of the month; nor did the 1st of Budi Usrah fall on a Saturday but on a Thursday. The true date should be, Siawun Budi 1st 1891,—Saturday—or, Saturday 11th July 1835, when the letter will have been written three days after Deewun Umur Chund, &c. were placed in confinement.

No. 13.—In the handwriting of Munjea Poorohit.

After offering my benediction: Vishnoo Muhajun has arrived here and I have read your letter. You write that you have forwarded (to Calcutta) a complete statement; in this you have done well. You also say that you did not send any document in her name (the Majee's) because you had no formule and scale—very good, but now write again—making use of her name, to this effect,—that it was said by the Majee Sahib, and conveyed to you from Jeupoor, that,—“so and so is the case with reference to the Sahib, and so and so respecting the Rawul; and that such and such disorders and irregularities prevail, which the gentlemen of the Sudur know nothing of. I (the Majee) am kept in durance in this and that way. The Sahib listens to no one but the Rawul, and he acts according to the suggestions of the Rawul; therefore pray send all this intelligence to the Sudur, where justice will be done, for there is no such thing as injustice known to the Company: up to this day, no act contrary to justice has been done by their Government anywhere. This Raj is of a thousand or twelve hundred years standing, and to the present time it has never occurred that a traitorous servant brought dishonor upon the Sovereign. If such treatment as this be deemed consonant with justice by the Company, still, why should a servant be permitted to inflict it. The Raj is entirely at your disposal!”

You have written all this before, but now write again, in the name of the Majee, in this manner, when there will be no need of formule or scale.

You say that you have asked one or two gentlemen there (at Agra), respecting the prospect of an answer: never mind about an answer! Do you do your best by writing, and no doubt what is despatched will arrive. With reference to a reply, you yourself write that the Sahib log, there, give the same answer as I have done; and doubtless, it is the correct one. Respecting what you say on the probability of an army assembling; we shall know more on that subject a month hence.

Fatih Laljee (the ex-Minister's son) is very silly, do you therefore keep him in order, and be careful that he does not mention any thing that should be kept private, before any one, and especially in the presence of those not connected with us. At this period no one can be trusted; when we hear of the proceedings of those who owe every thing to us, and enjoyed, through our means, hundreds and thousands of rupees, how can we distinguish between friends and foes?

The intelligence from Jeupoor, is, that Moonna Laljee (Deorhes Darogha), having obtained leave to perform a pilgrimage to Sookharjee, quitted the city, accompanied by his family, on Thursday. He then went to Bursaran, in which is his home, and thence to Dhoola. Bijoo Lal (brother of Moonna Lal) and Heera Lal remained at Jeupoor, but all the females came away with Moonna Lal. A camel messenger followed and called Moonna Lal back to Jeupoor, he left his family at Dhoola and returned alone. I am at a loss to know why he came away, and why he went back. He ought not to have left Jeupoor, in the first instance; but, having come away, it was not prudent to return. I have sent for information in the matter, and will write you the result.

Lukshman Sing (Thakoor of Ghoomin, son of the Rawul) came to the Baradars, and, sending for Gyanjee and Rajoo Lal (two of the associates of Deewun Umur Chund) said to them,—“confess that you caused the Sahib to be attacked or take leave of your families, for you shall be put to death.” They answered, “we were not privy to the assault, therefore, why should we record such thing? It is in your power to put us to death or let us live; we have no means of opposition, but you can give us life if so disposed.”

The Rawul has sent for his family, ostensibly on account of the celebration of the Salgirah.

In regard to what is written in the former part of this letter; the language used in the interior was brought here and has been inserted.

Get correct and faithful intelligence from some Sahib.

Date, Bhador Budi, 1st 1891, (9th August 1835.)

P. S. Send word that you are well again and I shall be rejoiced. Purnmeshurjee! That will be a golden and silvery hour in which I shall once more meet you.

No. 11.—In the handwriting of Munjea Poorohit.

Receive my blessing—and peruse the following matter. You write, respecting the Sahib log, that there is no Sahib who will undertake our cause, now all that is required is, that some one should agree to put us in the right road to arrive at our goal.

You have done well in making the despatch in the name of the Majee, but you should continue to follow that up with other addresses, every third or fourth day. I have forwarded to you the written injunction which have come from the interior (of the palace of Jeupoor,) and you are aware that she relies upon your exerting yourself, yet in the course of five months you have done absolutely nothing; whilst, depending upon you, the delay cost the beforementioned all her power and consequence. We have hardly lost office, and there is no want of money or adherents; in short, there is no serious obstacle to our success whatever. See! Gyanjee, the Deewanjee's son, and Kaloo Ram, Siva Laljee's brother,—I hear that it is said they are both gone to Calcutta. Now, did they see you before starting, or did they proceed without coming near you? At the latter, you are to blame; for you ought to have sent for them, and given them encouragement, telling them that if they required money or servants you would supply them; and you should have ascertained many things from them, and told them much in return.

Has any intelligence been received from Lukshmee Narayun? and where is he? If he has written, let me know what he has said. Through whom are your petitions and communications forwarded from Agra? and to whom are they given there (in Calcutta)? write whether it be to a Gentleman, a Moonshiee, or a Baboo; and be careful to despatch a statement every second or third day.

At Jeupoor, up to the present time, there is no sort of union between the Sahib and the Rawul; and unless it is manifest that there does exist a coolness between them, no conjecture can be formed as to what may occur.

Moonna Laljee (the Deorhes Darogha) first obtained leave to depart, and was then sent for back from Dhoola. His family is still at Dhoola, and Moonna

The police and nine bearers arrived at Deewun's house after the visit made there by Captain Ludlow and Company, and in the palace were found four letters, including the answer to this Lajee himself remains in the Deewan Khanu, under surveillance, though he is permitted to go to your Chowkee Khanu, at the Deorhee of Govindjee, to take his meals. In all other respects matters at Juepoor are such as they were. Will you purchase a good Peenu (Palkee) for about fifty rupees and send it to me; and hire for me nine bearers—men from the eastern provinces who are in every respect qualified for service.

I hear it is reported that the Lord Sahib from London has arrived in Calcutta, and that Metcalfe Sahib is preparing to leave that city. but I wish you would write me a faithful account of what is going on in that quarter.

Remember to send me the Palkee and bearers—and give good tidings of yourself.

Date, Bhadon Soodi 11th 1892, or 3d September 1835.

Copies of Translations of some of the other papers found at Deora.

From Hookum Chund to Jotha Ram apparently in answer to No. 11 of Agra papers.

Your letter has reached me and I have perused its contents. You have written that "the mluk (the Majeer) thinks and trusts that he (Hookum Chund) will do something." Now the following is the state of matters here: I have tried every one, and asked counsel of all, and as the advice given agreed with my own sentiments, I have written and despatched to Calcutta, a copious statement, entirely in accordance with our object and views, and calculated to promote them. Thus, all will be known there, and though no answer is yet arrived, yet be satisfied that I have transmitted the whole account as it ought to reach their ears. I am also preparing to write more. I wished to go to Calcutta myself, but my advisers told me that, suspicions (with reference to the death of the late Raja) attaching to us relatively to the late Maharaj, if I went I should be liable to be utterly disgraced. It likewise appeared to me that it would be better to allow this event to be forgotten, and the stigma to die away quietly; when the consequent difficulties and troubles would no longer clog and annoy us. I should never have been permitted to travel the road to Agra, but for the presence of troops of the English. It was not so much in the Juepoor Territory that the excitement existed as in the districts of the Jats and English, where thousands pressed round at every village I passed through, and uttered abuse of all kinds openly. Had there not been a Sahib of considerable influence in company, I should never have got to Agra. Here, also, it is only now that the people begin to allow me to rest.

You ask what news there is of Lukshmee Narayun. Five days ago, his brother came here, and I obtained full information from him. Lukshmee Narayun is in Calcutta. The brother has been three months on the road thence. He remains concealed here, and his much test Ra (the Raunt) should hear that he is come from Calcutta, and cause his brother (another brother at Juepoor) trouble.

I have questioned him as to what he has been about all this time, he says, "he was unable to effect anything." That they went to Allahabad, where Metcalfe Sahib did not send for or see them; but they had an interview with a Sahib attached to Mr. Metcalfe, who told them to go to Calcutta, whither they went.* That the gentlemen they met on the way asked them whence they came, and when they answered from Juepoor, the gentlemen desired to know if they had been sent by the Maha Raj (the Raja Jue Ram or Jutha Ram) or the Mookhtar. If they took the name of the Mookhtar, the gentlemen replied, he is a hura bud-kwah, a great enemy of the British Sirkar, and his name should never be pronounced. (Ayes Sahib will have written to that effect; and, no doubt, all the Residents, and other English gentlemen who have been at Ajmere, have reported our inimical feelings, and the Rawul's good will.)

They met two gentlemen on this side of Calcutta, who asked them whence they came, and told them that their Raja was dead, and the Minister had done so and so (that is, caused his death.)

Arrived in Calcutta, we exerted ourselves to the utmost, but could not obtain an interview with any one possessed of influence. Even a single conversation there is valued at lakhs of rupees. On my asking him the meaning of this, he replied—"You can get no one to notice you there. However, we managed to prepare the way for discussing the affairs of the Chhota Sirdar (Jutha Ram, who is younger brother of Hookum Chund) and it will cost four lakhs of rupees to procure his release from Deora." I desired him to tell me with whom he had talked on the subject. He named the gentleman, saying, write fully to that person, and cause the statement to be placed before him with the Sahookar's promissory note. To this I answered that if such was the cause their mission (that of the two brothers) had come to nothing. that your situation was not of a nature to require so heavy an expenditure, as you would certainly obtain freedom soon, without any great effort. If you have done aught else, said I, mention it. He then told me that it had been in contemplation to send a gentleman to Juepoor from Calcutta, and that some Sahib had recommended him and his brother to the favor and protection of the individual to be appointed: a towards, the disturbance and misunderstanding with the Sahib-log at Juepoor taking place, his brother desired him to return, as affairs were an altered aspect, and to take all the suite with him. Accordingly, he came away, leaving Lukshmee Narayun there (in Calcutta,) with only one servant. I represented to him that they had been absent a long time I ought to have effected something, that if nothing was to be done through Travelyan Sahib they should have a direct Metcalfe Sahib. He made many excuses, adding that, after intelligence of the disturbance at Juepoor had arrived, no one would listen to anything that was said.

The foregoing is the information obtained from the brother of Lukshmee Narayun. I have written there (to Calcutta), desiring the latter to devise some method of proceeding, and to remain where he is. when he sends any intelligence I will forward it.

The Bura Sahib at Juepoor keeps his own counsel and is slow of action, but he will do it (destroy the Raunt and all his friends) surely in the end. He (the Rawul) pines the time tremblingly.

Meer Yar Ulee came here three days ago, and brought a letter to me from Megh Singh. He remains here, and Megh Singh, in his letter, desired me to consult with him. He was formerly at Juepoor and was turned away in the time of Sahib Raper and Low; formerly he resisted in throwing dust upon the Rawul. There are means enough employed already, but I will not thin person to work also. He says that the General of the Meeruth Division will have the command at Juepoor, that he has already had some correspondence with this Sahib, and will continue the intercourse, that he will go to Meeruth and write us information thence. I mentioned to him that money for expenses should be forthcoming. A letter has been despatched to Megh Singh; when he sends me an answer I will direct Meer Yar Ulee to proceed, in the meantime he will remain here.

You will have heard the news from Juepoor. The Sahib-log treat him (the Rawul) with hardness and severity, causing him to wail. He gathered the whole Bazar into the Atash-Court, to inquire who killed the gentleman. Thus he does foolish things and fails to obtain any favorable result. Such is his depth of wisdom!—And the Sahib-log all believe firmly that the

* This journey to Calcutta was postponed many months ago, when the late Raja was living.

Rawul is criminal, but at present, because there is not a sufficient force collected, they do not declare their intentions openly.

What you have written regarding Moonna Lal is correct. The khureetu in the name of Ma (the Majee) has been despatched to Catrutia; it contained all that it was desirable to write. May all be well with you.

Date, Usoj Budi 4th 1892—11th September, 1835.

P. S. The Peenus (palkee) you have sent for, shall be forwarded, hereafter, by the bearers you wish to retain in service.

2d P. S. Since writing the above, I have purchased a new Peenus, which is despatched without loss of time. The coat, including every thing, is 60 Rs., and it is both strong and of good appearance. The bearers have received two rupees each. Date 5th, Saturday.

Extracts from No. 1.—A letter in the handwriting of Sughree Hookum Chand, dated 1st August 1835.

I have sent the paper to Calcutta in my own name; in it was stated, the cause of those four, on account of the Hoondees and other property, with the matter of your liberation from Deosa: the attack made upon the European gentlemen, and the concern in it of the Rawul and others, are also fully detailed. The whole is so told that it must obtain attention and credit. Here, I hold intercourse with all the gentlemen, and have learned that in the month Usoj (September and the early days of October), the course of action determined on, will be made evident. This business (the affair of 4th June at Jeupoor) cannot be passed over without producing results of importance.

The Petitions of Budarunjee and those four persons are ready, but in consequence of indisposition I have not yet forwarded them. The other papers were all finished and despatched first, and that will go off to-morrow.

P. S. These English have not been dealt with in such manner that the affair should be allowed to pass off. If such treatment be not repented, how can their Raj continue to exist within the range of a thou- and know! Every one would be following the example. But they resemble a slow fire and will do all, gradually.

No. 8.—In the handwriting of Futih Lal.

Receive my respects. Your letter to me has arrived and I have read it. I have also perused your letter to Babajee. (Father's elder brother, Hookum Chand.)

The Urzee in the name of the Majee Sahib has been forwarded, and you shall have a copy of it sent, hereafter.

I and Babajee sat down together, and composed a most admirable address. It was I who actually wrote the original draught, which shall be forwarded to you. It has been transmitted in English, Hindee and Persian; and a request has been made that the answer may be sent to Hindee in order that,—"I may read it myself," (the Majee,) as the document is written in her name.

An army will assemble at Jeupoor after the Dusera; be sure of that. At this place, all the English of rank whom I visit, say, that a force will certainly proceed against Jeupoor, and that its equipment is in progress.

Moonna Lal Darogha has obtained permission to depart with his family; this information has been received in writing.

May you enjoy health and happiness. In the month of Kartik (November) the business of Jeupoor will be done effectually—(or the phrase used may mean, according to the intention of the writer. You will certainly become again administrator of affairs at Jeupoor).

Date, Bhadon Suddi 6th or 20th October.

No. 12.—Receive my reverential salutation. The original (in Hindee) of the English Khureetu forwarded to Calcutta, in the name of the Majee is sent; read it; and arrange for having it conveyed into the interior, (of the Palace.)

Address to the Governor-General in Council.

The following is the state of affairs here. The Maharaja Sahib is gone to dwell in heaven, as is well known to your Honor: this happened according to the pleasure of Narayun, and no mortal possessed the power of averting his decree, but since my husband is no more, I stand in need of the favor and protection of the Supreme Power of India.

The young Prince being in his infancy, it is proper that he should be fostered and brought up under the superintendence of the British Government, until he attain to manhood and acquire discretion; and that during the period of his minority all the affairs of the Raj should be conducted according to my will and pleasure; but thus it is not, and a very different state of things has turned up; for Rawul Buere Sal, who has been long a treacherous enemy, and nourishes hatred against the servants of the Raj; with whom the late Maharaj Sahib, now dwelling in heaven, was ever heartily displeased in his lifetime—knowing well that he was an ungrateful, bad subject, and that he obtained footing in the Council Chamber, or were allowed, in any sort, to interfere in matters of state, the Raj would be ruined; this man, by what means I know not, but entirely without my desire or consent, has risen to be at the head of affairs, and in that situation has been guilty of various nefarious acts, of which the following is a detail. Exalting his head, he formed the design of putting me under restraint, and for this purpose he brought guns and planted them around the female apartments of the palace, thus cutting off all supplies of food and water during five days, to the infinite distress of the inmates, including even the Maharaj. I feel incompetent to describe all that took place, but of this I am convinced, that such tyranny and dishonor have never been known in any other Raj of Rajwara, either in former or present times.

Roopa Budarun is talented and intelligent; she was respected and honored by my late mother-in-law, and to me she stood in the place of a mother-in-law; yet she has been decoyed from the female quarter of the palace by solemn vows and promises, and after being ill-treated confined in the Garden at the Ghāt.

Being perfectly helpless, I expected nothing less than that general ruin must ensue. At that time, Major Alves and Mr. Blake came to have an interview with me, and in private I made known to them all that was passing. Both gentlemen told me that no one possessed the power to act in any way that could annoy or distress me, and desired me to send them word when there was any thing they could do for me, and it should be done immediately. The Rawul was displeased at hearing what had passed at this visit, and commenced a course which caused me more vexation than ever. I was constrained to convey intelligence of his ill-treatment to the two gentlemen, who came again to visit me, and administered comfort to me, saying—"Your Highness is mistress of the Raj; whatever you wish shall be done; and no one shall be permitted to act in any way without your pleasure having been first consulted." When they had thus spoken they went away. Rawul Buere Sal, hearing that the two gentlemen had visited

* Moonna Lal did obtain this permission to go away on a pilgrimage, but was subsequently recalled and placed in confinement.

* The whole of this statement is false.

upon me, brought several other Thakoor with him to the Durbar; and when the Resident Sahib appeared from the inner apartments he stood up and said,—"What have you decided on regarding me?" Mr. Blake answered,—"the Majee is mistress, and the office of minister remains with you; be attentive to your duties; but remember that the wishes of the Majee are to be consulted on all occasions." After this was said the gentlemen proceeded, and Lukshmun Singh,* Bueeree Sal's son, accompanied them to the Deorhee, whence he returned.

As the gentlemen were preparing to mount their several conveyances, a man who was an old servant of Bueeroo Singh of Burnala, having been instructed by his master and Lukshmun Singh, son of Bueeree Sal, assaulted the person of the Resident with a drawn sword, and inflicted three wounds; that he did not succeed in killing him was not from want of intention, but because it was decreed that the Resident should not lose his life on this occasion.

After being wounded, the Resident got into a palkee and departed for the place where he enjourns; and Mr. Blake made over charge of the assailant, whom he had previously seized with his naked sword in his hand, to his own servants. He then went inside and said to the Rawul,—"you have caused to be done this deed, which is altogether unworthy of you; but you will receive due punishment for this act." When he had spoken thus, he came out again and mounted his elephant. The Rawul, in consequence of what he had heard from Mr. Blake, gave orders to his servants to release forcibly the man who has made the assault, and not to permit the gentleman to go away alive: these people ran and liberated the prisoner, and commenced throwing stones at the gentleman's elephant; they also gave a signal to the Bazar people, who joined them in throwing stones; and several men wounded the elephant with their swords.

The gentleman, seeing what was going on, became alarmed, and put his elephant to its speed, in order to make the best of his way home; but when he arrived at the gateway of the City, those who were attached to it, having received a secret order from the Rawul, closed the gate, and he turned back in despair. He then went to the Munder of Manjee Das, distant about two hundred paces from the Kucheree, and would have gone inside it, but the door had been shut at the instigation of Bueeree Sal: the elephant was afterwards brought up close to the wall, which enabled him to effect his entrance of the Munder by a window. The Rawul's men who were following, then broke through the wall, got inside, and seizing hold of the gentleman killed him. How can I describe all the particulars! But this is obvious, that, without the connivance of the Rawul, this event could not have occurred, for the whole affair occupied some four or five ghurees.† At the time it took place the Rawul was present in Kucheree, attended by numbers of people, and the place was near.‡ Had he wished, he could have gone himself, or might have sent some one to restore order: moreover, the gates could not have been shut, except at his instigation.

For two days the Rawul kept the man who had wounded the Resident near himself, in order to instruct him thoroughly; and then, placing other men about him, sent him to the Sahib. About that time, becoming very much alarmed, he thought over various schemes and plans; afterwards, recovering presence of mind and confidence, he bound up his lips with the determination to annoy and persecute the subjects and servants of the Raj; and seizing old hereditary officers, who have held high appointments, he placed them in confinement. He had also removed from office men who were perfectly free from the shadow of culpability, and replaced them from among his own friends and followers.

The characteristic deceit and falsehood of the Rawul is so well known to your honor that there can be no necessity to dilate on the subject: to do so would be supererogatory. Of his own accord and without warrant, he has caused men to be hanged, and he has placed me under restraint, so that no one can approach me; while he has forcibly separated from me, and put out of the palace, an old woman (Raspa) who had served me faithfully since the time of my mother-in-law, working for me day and night.

Though the falsehood of the Rawul is known to all, yet they do, I know not how or wherefore, place confidence in him, and cultivate a good understanding with him; and in conformity with his will, the affairs of the Raj are transacted. As long as Mr. Blake was alive, the Rawul, fearing him, could not commit acts of oppression and violence; because that gentleman, seeing how he was inclined, put Krishna Lal in office as his own agent; and this person took cognizance of every thing, and permitted no one to oppress the leige subjects; the Rawul even was kept in awe by his vigilance: but on the death of Mr. Blake, Krishna Lal was struck with fear, thinking that, as they had not hesitated to destroy the gentleman, there was no safety for him, and quitting this place he went to Dhiblee. From the day of his departure, the Rawul has been full of confidence, as his proceedings have shown. Actuated by the spirit of rapacity, he has oppressed and rendered miserable the lives of inhabitants of Juepoor; a great many respectable persons have fled, and it is my conviction that should this system continue some days longer, Juepoor will become wholly depopulated. Our ancestors, in long course of time, at the expense of much labor and pains, and the cost of thousands of rupees, having invited men of rank and merchants from all quarters, rendered this city flourishing and populous, like unto a second Benkoonth (a second heaven), and this place, the foul tyrant, to satisfy his cupidity, is totally ruining: the people are crying out for mercy, but no one heeds them.

When a man commits murder, it is usual to inquire into the affair immediately, and punish the guilty person without loss of time; but Mr. Blake had been killed wantonly, and Alvee Sahib has been wounded, yet up to this time the affair has not been cleared up, nor has there been any efficient investigation. The real criminal in these proceedings lives free from anxiety and quite unconcerned; he visits the Resident continually, fears no one, and transacts business perfectly at this ease. Formerly, when I made a request of the Resident, and Mr. Blake in private, it was complied with instantly; but now, if through distress I am compelled to prefer an application of any kind, it immediately becomes known to the Rawul, and the result is that he augments his persecutions of me.

In past time, on several occasions, it has occurred that the Rawul has been, though fraud and treachery, the secret cause of the death of many persons, contriving to escape himself without retribution; and he is so habituated to this mode of conduct, that he has at length acted in a similar manner towards even the Sahib-log.

The necessity of punishing continually so great a criminal is manifest; should delay be admitted, and from the representation of any one, the affair be eventually suffered to pass off quietly, without punishment being inflicted, how are the gentlemen, who are Residents in

* This Thakoor was not at the Durbar on the 6th of June, having remained at home from indisposition; but hearing that there was a disturbance in the City and receiving a message from his father, he repaired to the wall, and took the command of the Troops that had been summoned from the Camp outside the City walls.

† It is entirely necessary to observe that Mr. Blake never proceeded beyond the Munder.

off the different Rajes, and have but few troops about them for protection, likely to fare ? The ignorant and foolish moreover will every where acquire arrogance and pride.

There are hundreds of hereditary Thakoors in the Raj of Jeonoor on an equality with Buees Sal, these seeing the traitorous and tyrannical conduct of the latter, whom they were unable to oppose from fear of offending the British Sirkar, are gone to their homes in despair. Sivu Lal, Deewan Umar Chund, Gyan Chund and Rajoo Lal, by caste Buneas, and highly respectable, who were public servants, holding high appointments; these individuals, on account of an ancient grudge, he has falsely accused and confined, although they are scrupulous in their conduct, that to the best of their power they even avoid treating upon and giving pain to ants and flies when they move about, with how little reason therefore he thought capable of originating or abetting in any way such a transaction!

Again Sunghsee Jotha Ramjee performed the chief business of the state for a good long period, and was entirely guiltless of any offence, but the Rawul managed to bring him into difficulties, and ultimately to ruin.

The Almighty has made your honor lord of the whole country, and the fountain of justice, as was Noarsheewan in his time. Your honor is gifted with high intelligence, and acquainted with all that passes. When any one free from bias, and disposed to do justice, shall be appointed to investigate and ascertain the truth, all past and present occurrences will be fully elucidated, and deceit and falsehood will avail no one.

I have been under personal restraint from the very day the Rawul came here, and all the servants of the Raj, and the subjects of Jeupoor, are wretched and miserable, but I indulge the hope that the old officers, who have been imprisoned by the Rawul to gratify private animosity, will be liberated and restored to their former situations: then having chosen from among the individuals who have been long in employ the one who appears to me the best qualified by his talents and general intelligence for the office of Minister, and appointed him to that high situation, I will through him adopt measures for paying the sums due to the British Government.

Allow me to solicit from your honor's kindness an answer to this communication, to be written in Hin lawce that I may read it myself. By all means let a reply be forwarded.

No. 14. In the hand-writing of Hasmund Chund.

I have received and perused your letter, and have made myself acquainted with all your have-written regarding Jeupoor.

The account (statement written for the Supreme Government) has been written at length, but how can a document in the name of the Deelam (the Major) be drawn up, when there is no copy of the exact form of address forthcoming? For all the others I have written Urcees, in which there was no difficulty. I wrote them for those (Deewan Umar Chund, &c.) who are in confinement, and also, for the one (Rampal) at the Ghat; and, in the latter, I inserted all that we could wish to be urged. All that you have said respecting the Deelam (the Major) and Jeupoor will be known (from these Urcees); but nothing has been written in her name, as direct from herself; because, as there is here no copy of the prescribed mode of address, and no seal, I know not how to write. Should any thing that is contrary to form go, and the irregularity be noticed by the people (Members of Government, &c.) there, cause for apprehension on our part would arise. For the rest, in our memorial I mentioned fully all matters relating to Deosa and our property, and gave a complete detail of the treachery that had been practised towards the English. I had also prepared another statement to forward, but before despatching it I consulted the Sahib-log of this place, who said don't be uneasy respecting an answer, what you have written will certainly be received by the Governor General and Members of Council; who will cause translations to be made, and become thoroughly acquainted with the contents—apprehend nothing and continue to write: accordingly, I acted as I had proposed.

Alves Sahib appears still to behave with courtesy towards the Rawul, which I do not at all comprehend.

You write that Futh Lal (son of Jotha Ram) says so and so, and ask if it be correct: the truth is, that he writes about many matters without due consideration, and it frequently turns out, afterwards, that there was in reality nothing in what he had so eagerly taken up. I have adopted precautions to get at the truth of what I have told you in this letter on his authority; and a great deal that he mentioned which appeared to be exaggeration, I have not inserted.

I am aware that he writes to you many rumours and hearsay-stories, which do not contain a particle of truth; and what you write to this place he takes care to make known, saying,—"it is contained in a letter which arrived to-day." Let me do all I can to stop him, such is his temperament that he is unable to rest until he has spoken out.

Date, 10th Budi Bhaloon 1891—19th August, 1893.

No. 15.—In the handwriting of Futh Lal.

Receive my respectful salutation. I have perused the contents of your letter:—you tell me to beware of strangers. Be at ease on this point; to the best of my judgment I will never make an imprudent disclosure, but for the will of God there is no help. In the letter to my uncle you have written in the same strain; there was no call for this! but if you really think me so very indiscreet and foolish, what can I say that may avail me.

You write for the khureetu,* by this time the copy of it will have reached you.

Orders have been received for the march of the army, and it will move on the 21 of Sawli Usoj (24th of September). Preparations are making for its march upon Jeupoor. The Lord Sahib has arrived in Calcutta.

Baldock Sahib is the Bura Sahib here: he says that he will effect the liberation of Sunghsee (Sunghsee Jotha Ram), who will return to his former situation; that he will write a letter to Major Alves, and that we must send a Vakeel and he will despatch his own servant. The two men on the way will call upon you; they are Bunees Dhur, on our part, and Hur Lal from the gentleman. The sum that shall be fixed & they will make known to you as they pass. If Purneshurjee is favourable, all will succeed.

A gentleman also said,—all the Thakoors will be dismissed to their homes, and Major Alves will affect to make a great deal of the Rawul, gratifying him in all things; but, eventually he will, without the slightest warning, seize and imprison him. The foregoing course of proceeding on the part of the Bura Sahib is confidently anticipated here.—Be happy!

* The address in the name of the Major to the Governor General in Council.

† For your liberation and restoration to power. The government to believe that money will effect the attainment of the object stated at evinced in many of these letters may, appear absurd; but the belief, such as it is, is very general in many if not most parts of India.

I have entered into an agreement with a Brahmin, and sealed * him for the space of sixty-four days.

Date Bhadon Soodi 12th 1892, or 4th September, 1835.

P S If it be the pleasure of Sreejee we shall soon meet again. Write to me, without fail, all that occurs. Our affairs will prosper now without doubt.

No 24—Draught of a petition to the Governor General in Council in the name of Roopa Budarun.

The petition of Roopa Budarun. Throughout Rajasthan there are Budaruns, and in our Raj for many generations past, they have been inmates of the Palace (these vacant space intervene, which it was perhaps intended to fill up subsequently). The Princes in addressing the Budaruns designate them "Jee Jee (sister)," and all the Thakoor of rank and the Moosahibs (Ministers) treat them with respect and courtesy. Such has been the observance with reference to females of this description here, and until the present period no Budarun has ever suffered degradation or dishonor. It pleased God to take away my master's since which, my enemies, availing themselves of their opportunity, have ill-treated me in various ways. Three months ago I was made a prisoner at the Ghri—and up to this time have not obtained my liberty; whereas, the former Budaruns of Maharaj Pratap Singhjee and Jugut Singhjee, reside in the royal female apartments, in the enjoyment of the allowances fixed for them, and are more honored and respected than ever. We Budaruns partake of the royal food that is prepared for the Palace, night and day we remain in attendance on our superiors, and are perpetually in their immediate presence. They have treated me in the unbecoming manner represented, and it is incumbent on your Honor to interfere in my favor, and as my enemies have calumniated and maligned me falsely, to award them suitable punishment. Your Honor will have come acquainted with all their insidious and fraudulent conduct; when they have gone so far as to place in confinement the Royal Mistress of the Raj, their treatment of me sinks to nothing! but your Honor's power and influence are mighty and extensive, and you will assuredly put an end to this injustice. If you make the order I shall obtain my liberty! and my prayer is, that I may be taken back to the presence of my Royal Mistress, or conveyed to Bindrabun.

Until this period no one has ever brought disgrace upon the female apartments of the Palace by turning guns against it, as has been done lately.

No 25.—A letter from Jotha Ram to Haulum (hund in handwriting of Mungee Pooohit

You have written that both the Urzees (for Calcutta) have been despatched this is as it should be. Write another petition, including a statement as from the Major Sahib, and fail not to transmit it. I send you matter for it in detail by the hands of Vishnoo Muhojun and Jotha harkari read all that I have written, and after due consideration, compose what is to be sent. Kunwurtjee (both Lal, Jotha Ram's son,) writes to ask how a khureetu can be forwarded without the seal of the Major Sahib; but there is no occasion for a khureetu, as a petition embodying a relation of occurrences, &c., which does not require a seal, will answer the purpose.

Letter has arrived from Juepoor and I send you the letter to read. Regarding what you wrote as to an error in writing, ascertain the fact beyond doubt, and let me know the truth.

My answers to the four persons, i. e. who came here direct and decisive, and I put them to a nonplus. Their report went to Juepoor, from whence the very same questions were returned, they were again brought to me and I settled the matter in the same manner as before. I have already sent you an abstract of the contents of these queries, which you will have perused. Jutun Singh Rajawut was then sent by the officers to Juepoor, and if he brings an answer thence, and puts any more questions, I will write you the account hereafter.

You must write again (to Calcutta) in the name of the Budarunjee. You mention that I am about to be liberated, but I heard nothing of it. This Sahib is without doubt a second Rawul, and with regard to the latter, he creates disturbance and uproar in the city according to his will. He forges letters and khureetues, and then reads them to the Major Sahib and others. Whatever he does is replete and deceit, and from the day he arrived (at Juepoor) events prognosticating evil have been perpetually occurring. He had an elephant killed, on which occasion some five or six men were killed. Again, the Rawul visited the temple of Luit Kishor to have a Rakhee (bracelet) put round his wrist, when a bull gored his horse so that his entrails came out and he died. Many similar occurrences of evil portent have taken place.

Make an arrangement with some Sahib for the purpose of sending your petitions and narratives, in English and Persian through him, or else make use of the press in such manner that they may be sure of arriving there (in Calcutta) and may produce the desired impressions.

Date, Bhadon Budi 9th, 1891—(17th August, 1835)

Preliminary Examination of Sunghree Jotha Ram on various papers seized at Deora and Agia.

Deora, Thursday, 3rd December, 1835—Present Officially, Major Alves, Agent to the Governor General, Captain Thorsby Political Agent Shikhiwatee, and Captain Ludlow, Assistant Agent to the Governor-General Thakoor Chund Singh, Ruhmut Oollu Khan, Vukeel, and two Pundits.

The letter of Hookum (hund to Jotha Ram found at Deora, marked No 1, is shown to Jotha Ram and he is asked if he knows the handwriting.

A—It appears to me to have been written at Agra.

Q—From what do you judge? The word Agia is not in the letter, how then do you know that it was written there?

A—I am not acquainted with the letter, but on looking at it I say so, the certainty may be obtained from my servant. I do not know where it was written or what it came.

Q—Did you never see this letter before, or hear the contents of it read?

A.—I have never seen it or read it, nor has it ever been read to me.

Q.—In that case how do you know that it is from Agra?

(To the foregoing question no answer to the purpose can be obtained.)

Q—You declare that you have not seen this letter before or heard it read, how then can you say that you are not aware of the contents, as you have not now read it?

A—I say so conjecturally. It may have come from Agra, but I know nothing of it.

Q—How often have you written to Agra?

A.—I wrote one letter by the officer (who escorted him to Deora), and another letter when I wanted a

* In allusion to the inquiry that had taken place respecting embezzlements.

Tent; and when my family went to Agra I wrote four letters in my Tent at the Bagh near Deosa.

Q.—Did you cause those letters to be written or write them yourself?

A.—I wrote them myself.

Q.—Did you write them all with your own hand, including the one for the Tent?

A.—I wrote the others with my own hand, but Mangeea, or some one else, may have written the one for the Tent—I am not certain.

Q.—Have you not caused any other letters to be written?

(A sign of negation made, but no denial given in words.)

Q.—When was Mangeea entertained by you as a servant?

A.—He has been eight or ten years in my service, but in this interval I had discharged him, and he was re-entertained five or six months before I came to Deosa.

Q.—Are you not acquainted with the handwriting of your brother?

A.—I am in doubt whether it was written by himself, or by one of his servants.

Q.—Cannot you speak positively as to your brother's style of writing?

A.—The writing is inverted, therefore I am not sure whether it be that of Hookum Chund or one of his servants. It is addressed to Majeea.

Q.—Did he always write in this manner?

A.—He did not—I have never seen this mode of writing in the letters I have received from him.

Q.—What was the cause of this letter being written inversely?

A.—People write so all over the world, and they also use numerical characters.

Letter No. 15, of Deosa papers, from Futih Lal at Agra, is put into the hands of Jotha Ram.

Q.—In whose handwriting is this letter?

A.—This appears to have been written by Futih Lal to Mangeea. He has used the word "Dunduo," (respectful salutation) from which I judge that it was written to Mangeea (who is a Brahmun).

Q.—(When the letter has been read). For whose information was all this intelligence written? And why is it said—"I have perused the contents of your letter"—what letter is alluded to?

A.—He has written the intelligence for Mangeea, and the letter will have been received by Mangeea. I know nothing about it, those men must be questioned.

Q.—When did the khureetu spoken of in the letter reach you or Mangeea?

A.—It did not come—I know not, but if it came to Mangeea he will know.

Q.—What is the meaning of the passage in this letter—"You tell me to beware of strangers?"

A.—When Futih Lal, Hookum Chund and others went from hence and arrived at Agra, they commenced cooking and eating separately, wherefore I wrote from this, telling them that at this period of distress it was not right to make their meals in that divided manner; on this account the passage respecting strangers was written.

Letter No. 16.—This letter is in the handwriting of Mangeea Porohit.

Q.—In whose handwriting is this letter?

A.—I do not know it.

Q.—(The letter is read through.) Who wrote this, and to whom was it addressed?

A.—I do not know. I am ignorant of all about it.

Q.—This letter appears to be in answer to the one you have just seen, and stated to have been written by Futih Lal?

A.—I am not acquainted with the matter: I know nothing about it.

Original of No. 12.—Copy of khureetu said to have been transmitted to the Governor General in Council.

Q.—Whose handwriting is this?

A.—I do not know. That Mangeea and others come, and ask them.

Q.—Do you recognize the writing? Have you seen the paper before or heard it read?

A.—I am not acquainted with the writing. I do not know the paper: never heard it read or saw it.

Q.—How can you know without reading it, that you have not seen the paper before or heard the contents of it?

A.—I said so on merely looking at the paper.

Q.—Futih Lal wrote in No. 15 that the copy of the khureetu would have been received; what khureetu did he refer to?

A.—It is all false; and if I have written letter or note to the Majee Sahib, or the Budarun, or to any other person in Juepour, since I have been here, I am a liar. Inquire into the matter.

Original of No. 3.—Given to Jotha Ram.

Q.—In whose handwriting is this paper?

A.—It has been written by Hookum Chundjee, and came to Mangeea and others.

Q.—Did it come to you or to Mangeea?

A.—It came to Mangeea and others: he has written a blessing for me upon the top of the letter. Dhunjee Chubdar was his servant, and he will have written for intelligence respecting a statement of property.

Q.—Do you know the handwriting? Has the whole, including the superscription, been written by Rao Buhadoor (Hookum Chund,) or is there a difference in the hand?

A.—The writing is that of Rao Buhadoor; though the superscription is in a larger hand, the style is uniform.

Q.—(After the letter has been read.) It is written here,—"I have sent the paper to Calcutta in my own name, and it stated the cause of those four," who are the four to whom the allusion is made?

A.—You must ask them; I do not know. You must ask them this question. Ask those who wrote the letter.

Q.—Though you may not know to a certainty, say who you think the four may be?

A.—I do not know at all who the four are. The writer will know; or as the letter came to Mangeea and others, they will know.

Original of No. 5.—Shown to Jotha Ram.—The letter was written by some one at Juepour.

Q.—Whose handwriting is this?

A.—I am not acquainted with it.

Q.—(The letter having been read.) Is this, there is mention made of the four persons: who are four? and who are "the two bearing the same name"? This letter was found with your servants who were your person.

A.—I am not acquainted with this paper; question those servants as to who wrote it, and to whom it was written. Ask them, for I know nothing about it.

Paper No. 17.—Is shown to Jotha Ram.

Q.—What letter is this, and in whose handwriting is it?

A.—I do not know it.

Q.—(When the letter has been read.) This was found amongst your papers; how is it that you know nothing of it?

A.—I know it not. Ask the servants with whom it was found; I have never perused or heard it read; therefore what should I know about it?

Original of No. 8 of Agra papers (a letter written from Juepoor by Juwahir Singh, son of Chumun Singh) put into the hands of Jotha Ram.

Q.—Whose handwriting is this?

A.—I do not know—Mangeea and others will know.

Q.—(The letter having been read.) Have you heard the contents of this letter before? Did Mangeea never make mention of them to you?

A.—I never heard this letter read, nor saw it: I know nothing of it. Sentries were about my person. How can I know what paper it is? If it be in the writing of the son of Chumun Singh, I am not acquainted with it.

Q.—Are you acquainted with the handwriting of Chumun Singh?

A.—I have not seen it for nine months past, having had no intercourse with him; but I have seen it in former times, when I transacted business.

Q.—Do you know the handwriting of his son Juwahir Singh?

A.—I do not know it.

The original letter of Chumun Singh, No. 43 of Agra Papers.

Q.—Who is the Buru-Sunkur spoken of in this letter? Also, after examination, say whether you are acquainted with the handwriting?

A.—I know nothing of this letter.

Q.—Does it appear to be from Chumun Singh or not?

A.—A suspicion arises in my mind, (that it is from him.)

Q.—If it be from Chumun Singh, to whom will he have written it? Who is the person termed Buru-Sunkur, and for whom is it said,—"By the assistance of Purmes-har every thing becomes practicable, therefore do not perplex and harass yourself!"

A.—How should I know to whom he wrote it.

Q.—If it be really Chumun Singh's letter, for whom will he have written,—"that the wretch may this time be utterly ruined, when all obstacles will be removed to you?"

A.—The person who wrote the words, and the receiver of the letter, will have understood the hidden meaning. I do not know; and, not knowing, how can I answer the question.

Original of No. 4, (letter from Gyan Chund) put into the hands of Jotha Ram.

Q.—Whose writing is this? Look at it attentively.

A.—I never read this letter and know nothing about it; I never saw this handwriting; ascertain of those whom it came whole it is; I do not know whose it is.

Q.—This letter was found among the papers of your elder brother Hookum Chund, at Agra, and you have heard the contents read; say to whom and what do these relate?

A.—I know not what they signify. Ask the question where the letter was found. How should I know whose it is.

Q.—In this letter it is written—"Our antagonist is acquiring strength," and "all the Nagas here, the Battalions, Hunwant Singh, Bhurt Singhjee, and those who were with us before, have been engaged to fidelity in our cause through Bhuttacharj Muharaj." What do these passages signify?

A.—How should I know? Ask this of Bhuttacharj, whose name is mentioned. I know nothing about the matter; interrogate those to whom the letter went.

Q.—It is also written here—"It was settled with the Majee Sahib that we should without fail seize the adversary and put him to death; but the Majee says—"If Bahajee has arranged with the Sudur, let him write truly to that purport." In this passage three persons spoken of, the Majee Sahib, the adversary, and Bahajee. Who are the three?

A.—The writer will know who is the Majee, who the adversary, and who the Bahajee; how should I know? Or the Agra man will know who wrote it.

Q.—Again, it is written—"Your Honor wrote formerly to Dadajee, telling him that the arrangement was effected, and giving him encouragement and confidence, and he sent the paper for the perusal of the Deelau, who derived consolation and assurance therefrom." Now, this letter is in the handwriting of Gyan Chund, son of Deewan Umur Chund, and in it is written—"Your Honor wrote formerly to Dadajee," &c.; Dadajee, or Umur Chund is the writer's father; and a note bearing your handwriting was found among the papers of Deewan Umur Chund, the same which was shown to you by Captains Ludlow and Conolly; this note appears to be the one alluded to in the letter of Gyan Chund, as the description given of that agrees with the purport of this?

A.—The note bearing my handwriting, which you say was found among the papers of Umur Chund, is a forged and false document, and my autograph is not in it.

Q.—Deewan Umur Chund has said that, "this will be a note of Sunghee Jotha Ram which Rawuljee seized at the Ghaut;" and Rajoo Lal has declared, positively, that it bears the handwriting of Sunghee Jotha Ram; moreover all readers of Hinduee who compare the handwriting of Sunghejee upon this and other papers, must acknowledge that this superscription is the writing of Sunghejee; therefore it cannot be considered in the light of a forgery. You are at liberty now to offer any explanation as to the purport or meaning of this document, but if you decline to avail yourself of the opportunity, it will be concluded to refer to the events of the 4th of June at Juepoor?

A.—If I have written it, and it is my note, then deem me guilty in respect of those events.

Q.—The connection of Deewan Umur Chund and Siyu Lal with the criminal occurrences of the 4th of June last is considered to be proved; and this paper, with your handwriting upon it, was found among other papers belonging to Deewan Umur Chund; the letter of Gyan Chund, also, was found at Agra among the papers of Hookum Chund; and the latter appears to acknowledge the receipt of the former, as the tenor of a communication therein stated to have been received, agrees with the purport of this note. If, therefore you can benefit yourself by offering any explanation touching this note, do so unreservedly!

A.—Ascertain the point in any manner you please. Interrogate the whole of Juepoor. This is not my note, nor is this my handwriting. It is assuredly a forgery.

(To be continued.)

MEETING OF UNCOVENANTED SERVANTS OF GOVERNMENT.

A meeting was held on the 10th October, at the Town Hall, by the Uncovenanted Servants of Government for the purpose of taking into consideration a plan for a Widow's Pension Fund, which had been prepared by a Committee, and to a certain extent approved by the Government. On the motion of Mr. Oxborough, Mr. FRANCIS took the chair a little before eleven.

After a few words from the chair declaring the object of the Meeting, and a remark from Mr. KIRKPATRICK and Mr. CROW,—the gentleman who had acted as Secretary to the Committee read the resolutions of the Meeting in February last year, and the proceedings of the subsequent Meeting on the 25th July following,—the opinion of Captain HENDERSON upon the two schemes of Mr. CARR and Mr. PETERS, the latter of which (that which was now offered to the Meeting) he preferred as being based on scientific principles of calculation,—the subsequent proceedings of the Committee,—and lastly, then report. As the latter will be published immediately, we shall for the present merely state, that the scheme contemplates only a provision for widows; but the calculations being made upon the supposition that 4 per cent. would be the rate of interest on the accumulating capital, the offer of Government to allow 6 per cent. interest will, it is expected, create a considerable surplus available as a provision for children, upon the proposed rates of subscription; enough, it is hoped, to allow half the amount of the widow's pension to her children under age after her death. Persons losing their situations are to be allowed to continue their subscriptions to the Fund except in case of dismissal for misconduct, in which case the sums already contributed by them are to be returned and their names struck off; but if they get restored to public employment, they are to be allowed to come upon the Fund again at their former rates of subscription, on paying up arrears.

Mr. CROW expressed the obligations of the Meeting to the Committee for the attention they had bestowed upon the subject, and was sure that the scheme must be entitled to their confidence, since Government had not thought it necessary to have it even revised before giving it their sanction. He therefore moved the following Resolution, seconded by Mr. STACY, Resolved.—That the Report of the Committee just read be published for general information— which resolution was carried nem. con.

In answer to a question put by Mr. KIRKPATRICK, Mr. SMITH explained that, though the table was calculated only for lives up to sixty, there was no intention to exclude older lives it offered, at proportionate rates of subscription.

The second Resolution was proposed by Mr. RYLAND and seconded by Mr. CARR, namely:

Resolved.—“That the Widows' Pension Scheme submitted by the Committee be adopted, it having received the countenance of Government, and that the Fund be opened on the 1st January 1837.”

Mr. RYLAND emphatically urged that it was essential to adopt the measure in its present shape; they might extend the principle hereafter, but if they hesitated to adopt this scheme and to accept the liberality of Government now tendered to them, they would find it very difficult to get up another fund, and he should despair of their having any fund at all.

Mr. CARR observed that the principle assumed in the calculations was to give every subscriber the full value of his subscription for his widow; that a provision for children had not been taken into account, but the question would be considered between this and the 1st January, how far the difference in the rate of interest between four and six per cent might be made to go towards their benefit. It was intended to reserve the whole of that difference for the children.

Mr. PETERS, in an animated speech, insisted that it would be a disgrace to them not to include the families of subscribers in the scheme, and that subscription should be made compulsory as in the Pilot's and other Funds supported by Government.

Mr. WILCH expressed his general concurrence in the remarks of Mr. PETERS, and thought the Committee's report and table of rates ought to have been previously published, for at present there were few who knew any thing about the principles on which the scheme was formed. He therefore moved the following amendment:

Resolved.—That a lithographed copy of the table of subscriptions and of the rules just read, embodied in a pamphlet, explanatory of the principles of calculation observed in drawing up the scheme proposed for our adoption, be circulated to every office at the Presidency and in the Mofussil for the more particular information of the Service at large, and with the view of ascertaining whether the majority are in favor of making it a compulsory one.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK seconded the amendment, and a great deal of animated discussion ensued for which we have no room, except to mention that the principal speakers were Mr. KIRKPATRICK and Mr. PETERS. The amendment being put to the vote, was carried by a majority of 57 to 33.

This result was considered by many as a rejection of the Fund altogether. However, the apprehended evils of delay and conflicting opinions in consequence of the reference, were happily neutralised by a Resolution proposed by Mr. GARDNER, and seconded by Mr. OXBOROUGH.

Resolved.—“That the proposed Fund be established on the 1st January 1837, subject to such modifications as may hereafter appear expedient, consequent to the intended circulation of the pamphlet referred to in Mr. WILCH's amendment.”

A good deal of discussion arose upon this, which we have no time to report, and an amendment was proposed by Mr. PETERS, which was lost, the above resolution being carried by a majority of 23 to 11.

Thanks were then voted to Lord AUCKLAND, on the motion of Mr. SMITH, seconded by Mr. OXBOROUGH, for the liberality with which he had dealt with their Petition;—and after the usual vote of thanks to the Chairman, the meeting broke up at half past one. There was upwards of a hundred persons present in the early part of the proceedings.—Calcutta Courier.

MEETING OF SUBSCRIBERS TO THE MADRAS CLUB.

CIVIL FUND MEETING.

At a General Quarterly Meeting of the Subscribers to the Civil Fund, holden at the Town Hall on Monday the 31st October, 1836.

The Hon'ble W. MELVILLE, in the Chair.

1.—Read the following letter from Mrs. Armstrong, widow of the late Mr. James Armstrong, of the Civil Service, dated the 16th April, 1836, with its enclosure, claiming the benefits of the Institution for herself and six children; also correspondence with Mr. Bushby relative thereto.

Resolved unanimously—That the construction put by the Managers on Article 46 in reply to the reference of Mr. Bushby on behalf of Mrs. Armstrong, be confirmed. That interest being fixed at 5 per cent. by Article 46, no alteration can be allowed thereon—That the present income being calculated independent of the Opium Commission of 1834-5, but including that 1833-4—also exclusive of a probable asset of 10 000 Rs. from insolvent Agency Houses, and also an exact account value of property not at Goruckpore, to be hereafter realized

2.—Read the following letter, dated the 11th May, 1836, with its enclosure, from Mrs. Boddam, widow of the late Mr. Rawson H. Boddam, of the Civil Service, claiming the benefits of the Institution for herself and six children.

Resolved.—That the application of Mrs. R. H. Boddam for admission to the benefits of the Fund, be transmitted by the Managers to the Agents in England, and they be empowered to grant her the usual allowance on receiving the prescribed affidavit and account of the Estate.

3.—Read the following letter from Mr. R. N. C. Hamilton, dated the 8th October, 1836, with its enclosure, claiming the benefits of the Institution for the widow of the late Mr. Thomas Louis, of the Civil Service, and his three children.

Resolved.—That Mrs. Louis be admitted to the benefits of the Fund, subject to the prescribed ascertainment of property.

4.—Read the following letter from the Messrs. Codd, dated the 29th April, 1836, forwarding a letter from Mrs. Smith, wife of Mr. Henry Smith, of the Civil Service, on the subject of his future subscriptions to the Funds of the Institution.

Resolved unanimously.—That Mrs. H. Smith is entitled under the Rules in force to claim an interest in the Fund contingent on Mr. Smith's demise, without any contribution from the Pension granted by the Hon. Court to Mr. Smith.

5.—Read a letter from Mr. W. H. Macnaghten, requesting to be excused, on account of his numerous pressing duties, from serving as a Manager of the Fund.

Proposed by Mr. Macfarlan, seconded by Mr. Millett, and Resolved unanimously—That Mr. George Uday be elected in Mr. Macnaghten's place.

6.—Certain Resolutions communicated from Allahabad being then taken into consideration, it was, upon the motion of Mr. J. R. Colvin, seconded by Mr. Reid—

Resolved.—That this Meeting be adjourned to Saturday the 3d December, and that the papers and propositions laid before it be referred to a Sub-committee composed of the following gentlemen:—Messrs. H. T. Prinssep, F. Millett, J. P. Grant, and Hy. Torrens, and that they be requested to assist the Chairman in classifying the same and preparing a report thereon, to be laid before the said Meeting : which report to be previously printed and circulated.

As an amendment to the above, the following Resolution was proposed by Mr. J. P. Grant :

That the proposed new Rules be sent back to the Committee of Revision, with directions to consider them in connexion with the opinions this day submitted to the Chairman of the Meeting, to remodel the said Rules if they shall see fit, to publish a draft of the Rules so remodelled six weeks before the next Quarterly Meeting with their remarks thereon, and that the Committee be authorised to add to their numbers.

That the Rules so remodelled be considered at the next General Meeting.

The amendment being put to the vote was lost, and the original Resolution was carried by a considerable majority.]

The Meeting then broke up, with the usual vote of thanks to the Chairman.—Calcutta Courier.

BENGAL MEDICAL RETIRING FUND.

The fourth Quarterly General Meeting of subscribers to the Bengal Medical Retiring Fund, was held at the house of the Secretary, on Monday, the 10th day of October, 1836, when Dr. Savers was called to the chair, and the following report read :—

“ Since the last Quarterly Meeting the Committee of Management have been anxiously employed in carrying the resolutions then passed into effect. In conformity with those resolutions the subscribers to the Fund have been called upon to pay up the arrears of their donation and subscription, within 12 months, from the 31st day of August last ; a circular address to non-subscribers, inviting them to join the Fund before the 31st day of the present month, has been drawn up and circulated, together with a power of attorney for signing the Fund Deed, to each member of the service.

The Fund Deed is now ready for signature. It was thought proper to have one, to prevent the disputes and misconceptions and probably litigation, which more or less happen in all such institutions, whose regulations are not drawn up in a legal form. Great care has been taken, and great attention paid to have it strictly in accordance with the regulations ; it is in fact the code of regulations itself, and as such will be printed, and a copy sent to each subscriber.

The powers of attorney for signing the Deed were sent to the service during the first week of August. Owing to the nature of this document, and that of the Deed not having been fully understood, some parties have held back from returning it duly executed to this office ; 140, however, has already come in ; and an explanatory notice having been inserted in the newspapers, it is hoped the remainder, or at any rate a great majority of them, will arrive before the period for joining the Fund shall have expired.

With reference to the payment of arrears, a memorandum has been made out, and sent to each subscriber, of the sum due by him on that head to the Fund. This has been a work of much difficulty and delay ; owing partly to the number of these accounts, but chiefly to the want of documents in the office from which to make them out ; for in consequence of the inadequate allowance granted to the late secretary during the time the Fund was in abeyance, the records could not be kept up ; and some statements of recoveries have not yet been rendered. Each account, therefore, has been made out from the statements of payments furnished by the Accountant General ; every item of payment having been separately examined. From these causes, and from the hurry in which the accounts have been prepared, error in some instances have been unavoidable ; but the Committee trust they are but few in number ; while they are certainly such as must be detected, either by the subscribers themselves or by the Committee, when time shall have allowed the ledger to be duly posted up.

A vacancy having occurred in the management, by the election of Mr. Assistant-Surgeon J. T. Pearson to the office of Secretary ; the votes, collected in anticipation of the possibility of such an event were examined, and a majority was found to be in favor of Mr. Surgeon H. S. Mercer, who was accordingly declared duly elected, and has accepted the office.

Mr. Assistant-Surgeon G. N. Cheek being not satisfied with the decision of the Committee and of the quarterly meeting, relative to his desire to become a member of the Fund, he having declined promotion some years before it was formed, and thus, as they think, placed himself out of its pale, has submitted his case to the subscribers ; and as two other gentlemen are in the same situation with regard to having so given up promotion, the question has been made a general one. This, and the modification of the regulations required by the Hon'ble Court of Directors, are now before the subscribers.

Several propositions for altering the rates of subscription have been submitted to the management. Some parties think the rates press heavily upon the junior branches of the service ; while others, on the contrary, think the seniors pay too much, the Committee have carefully considered these propositions, but have declined circulating them to the subscribers in the present state of the Fund. When it is fairly brought into operation, any defects in its regulations will become apparent, and must be met by amendments ; but until then the Committee are convinced any alterations are likely to do more harm than good. And this opinion is justified by the consideration that the Agra Committee, who framed these regulations, consulted the laws and rates of subscription of the similar Indian institutions, and adopted such only, as had been proved by experience to work well. They are now upon their trial, if any be found based upon erroneous principles, they will be immediately submitted by the Committee for amendment : but until they are thus proved, it is on every account advisable that they should be suffered to remain undisturbed.

A proposition has been made by two subscribers, Assistant Surgeons H. Taylor and D. Woodburn, to suspend the operation of the Fund, until the decision of the Hon'ble Court of Directors shall have been received upon the memorial praying that the boon lately granted to the rest of the army may be extended to the Medical branch of the military service. After mature consideration the Committee were compelled to decline circulating this proposition, for the reasons given in their letter in reply to the proposers which was published in the newspapers. They are happy to find that their decision has given very general satisfaction ; only one subscriber having expressed himself as desirous that the proposition should be circulated ; while a considerable number have protested strongly against it. Messrs. Taylor and Woodburn, however, have again pressed the managers to comply with their request, but have again been refused ; nor can the Committee consent to it consistently with duty ; which, they conceive, as imperatively binds them to reject an injurious proposal, as to adopt a good one. If those gentlemen are still dissatisfied, they have the power, in accordance with the 11th regulation of section 4, to submit it for approval to the next quarterly meeting, when, if it be adopted, or they be dissatisfied with the decision of that meeting, the Committee of Managers will submit it to the service, in obedience to the regulation quoted above.

The majority of the letters received during the quarter relate to various questions upon the subject of the regulations, and the accounts of the individuals who wrote them. As was anticipated, some parties have declared themselves unable to pay up the arrears of subscription within the period stipulated ; and to them the Committee, on their own responsibility have granted an extension of time. But some have already paid up the whole of their arrears ; and the great majority have made arrangements for doing so.

An idea having gone abroad that statements regarding the Fund, which appeared in some of the public prints, are to a certain extent authorized by the committee ; having in fact a demi-official authority ; the Committee take this opportunity of declaring that every thing relating to the Fund, which may appear in any publication, un-issued by themselves, or by their secretary, is written and published without their sanction.

By a resolution of the last meeting, the Committee were empowered to offer three annuities, when a majority of signatures should have been obtained to the Deed ; and others as the requisite funds are collected. Three annuities are accordingly declared, and others will be offered as the arrears come in. The Committee might, indeed, at this time, have offered another, the collections not officially reported, being such as to allow of their doing so with safety, but as the regulations strictly provide for a surplus sum of 30,000 rupees to meet contingencies, they do not feel themselves warranted in a measure which would reduce the funds, even to the smallest extent, below it.

In the last report the number of members amounted to 175 ; of these, none have signified their intention to withdraw ; and as most of them have paid up either the whole, or part of their arrears of subscription, it is not expected that any will do so. While there have been 60 new subscribers during the quarter, and 4 who formerly withdrew before the court's sanction was obtained, have again joined the fund.

At the last Quarterly Meeting the recoveries on account of the Fund in the Civil and Military departments had been rendered up to the 30th of April last, shewing an amount, (without interest,) of sicca rupees 78,612-6-7 : to this sum there is now to be added net recoveries in the Military Department for May, June, and July as far as the paymasters' and other accounts have been received, Co.'s rupees 653-4-7 or Sicca rupees 612-7-4 ditto Civil Department (Revenue) Co.'s rupees 80, Sicca Rupees 75—total Sicca Rupees 687-7-4.

In the Agra Presidency Receipts and Disbursements for 1834-35, amount credited is Company's rupees 2054-15-3, or sicca rupees 1966-6-0, making a total of sicca rupees 81,256-3-11. The expenditure during the quarter has been, for the office expenses Company's rupees 750-0-0, or sicca rupees 703-2-0, for printing circular, &c. Company's rupees 36-0-0, or sicca rupees 33-12-0—total sicca rupees 736-14-0, leaving a balance in favor of the Fund of sicca rupees 805,19-5-11.

No statement of recoveries in the Agra presidency for 1835-36, nor paymaster's accounts for four divisions ; nor treasury accounts from several districts, have been received : nor have any collections by collectors in the north-western provinces been reported.

Therefore, besides the above sum of sicca rupees 81,256-3-11, there is in the General Treasury due to the Fund, the whole interest upon the collections of the respective years, from 1st January 1833 to the present date, and the recoveries for May, June, and July, of which the accounts have not been rendered, together with the subscriptions for August, and September last, the latter now in course of payment.

Sir Charles Cockerell, Bart, and Co. have been appointed agents to the Fund in England.

Much inconvenience having been caused by the accounts being kept in sicca rupees while all other public institutions have theirs in Company's rupees, the Committee have determined to adopt the latter ; an equivalent amount being charged ; viz. Company's rupees 106-10-8 for 100 sicca rupees. In this currency, therefore, and at this, the real exchange, the subscriptions, &c. will for the future be calculated. For the present and past years, the rates having been fixed on the lower scale, the following are the sums to be paid in Company's rupees monthly, by the respective ranks.

The Committee are highly gratified by the manner in which the call for the payment of arrears has been met ; and by the general support they have experienced. As they anticipated, difficulties have arisen in their way, and still exist, but they daily decrease in magnitude ; and the vigorous operation of the Fund, will soon convince all parties of its utility and success.

The following resolution was moved by H. H. Goodeve, M. D., seconded by W. B. O'Shaughnessy, M. D., and carried unanimously.

That the report now read be confirmed and adopted ; and that this meeting do more especially approve of that paragraph wherein the Committee state that they have used a discretionary power to permit an additional extension of time to those members, who have proved themselves unable to liquidate their arrears, within the specified period.

The Fund Deed was then signed by all present ; and also for 140 members by their constituted attorney.

The thanks of the meeting were then voted to the chairman.

STEAM FUND.

The steam committee, it will be observed, after having retained the fund placed at their disposal for upwards of three years have come to the resolution of returning it, under certain circumstances, to the contributors. The reasons which have induced them to take this step will be seen by their minute. We shall therefore merely add, that they have acted in accordance with a resolution unanimously adopted some months since, and say a few words with regard to the protest which two of the members have now recorded against the document.

The objection to the distribution of the fund rests upon the assumption that it may, and probably will, be wanted for the object for which it was originally collected. Had this been well founded we confess we should have considered it conclusive; but it will be observed that the committee have met it with the assertion that no prospect whatever exists of their being able to fulfil the design with the execution of which they were entrusted. It remained, therefore, for the opposite party to prove that such a prospect did exist, or abandon this portion of their objections. But they have declined to do so. It is true they assert, in vague terms, that some possible contingency may arise in which the fund will be wanted; but even if this point should be conceded, to what does it amount? Is a large sum of money to be locked up from year to year without any defined object, merely because the chapter of accidents may point out some use for it? At this rate the subscribers should at once give up all hopes of benefiting by their property. Many of them are leaving the country; many have left; and not a few have been swept by death. Among the Committee even the rapid change which society undergoes here is strikingly shown; for of the 21 members who once composed that body, death and other causes have left only 9. A proposition, therefore for the retention of the fund, until it is wanted, or even for a year or two longer, is tantamount to one for its abandonment by the subscribers, not a title of whom can be expected to be forthcoming a few years hence. Besides, as the committee show, the question of Steam Navigation now depends in a great measure upon the public authorities; and if they decide in its favor, as we think they eventually must, even if they have not already done so, the Steam Fund can be of no further use; for it is not to be supposed for an instant that two such Governments as those of Great Britain and India should be swayed in the course they pursue on such a subject by the paltry consideration of £10,000.

The next objection of the dissentients is, that the distribution of the Fund may counteract the impression which the Petition sent home in favor of Steam Navigation are calculated to produce. All those petitions, however, will have been received at least 8 months before the distribution can be known at home; and if any thing was to be done in consequence, it would be in progress. Nothing further, therefore, need be said as to this portion of the protest. Nor need we dwell upon the inconsistency of the concluding assertion, that the course pursued by the Committee shows they consider Steam Navigation hopeless with their minute, which expressly declares the contrary, and proves that they look upon its success as nearly certain.

But besides the fact which the Committee adduce in support of this favorable view of the subject, there are others, with which it is to be presumed they were acquainted, not less conclusive; the first and most important of which are preparation actually making by Government to keep up the communication with Egypt by steam;—in proof of which we need only refer to the unusually large shipments that are about to be made of coal to the Red Sea. To say, therefore, that the Committee despair, or any thing like it, is contrary to fact; for the Committee do nothing of the kind. They merely see no further service that they can perform; and are evidently anxious that the trust reposed in them with so much confidence should be executed with equal good faith.

We have only to add, that one or two schemes for the appropriation of the Fund have lately been started, one of which has met with extensive support.

With regard to these abstractedly, but one opinion, we presume, can be entertained. Originating, as they all do, in the firm conviction, becoming more and more prevalent, of the vital importance of improving the internal communication of the country, the object they have in view is of the most laudable kind. We trust, therefore, they may meet with as much legitimate support as possible. When it was seriously proposed, however, to the Steam Committee to expend the whole of their funds in the construction of a road to Agra, a great deal too much was asked of them. The Committee, we look upon it, have only two courses to pursue;—either to proceed with some plan for securing a steam communication between Europe and India, or to return their funds to the contributors. To do any thing else with them would be a misappropriation. In deciding, therefore, against the Agra road, they have merely acted up to a rigid interpretation of the extent of their own powers, and ought not by any means to be considered hostile to the improvement.

The question of appropriation, however, now rests with the subscribers at large, and we can only say that we shall be delighted to see it decided in favor of any object of general utility.

MINUTE BY THE BOMBAY STEAM COMMITTEE.

(At a meeting held on the 20th October, 1836.)

The events of the last three years, connected with overland communication with Europe, have been such, that the Bombay Steam Committee are induced to examine the circumstances in which they are placed, with a view to the adoption of measures for the future disposal of the Steam Fund.

They find in the first place, that little or no prospect now exists of their being able to carry the plan into execution (even were it desirable to do so,) with which they first commenced operations, as the funds in their possession are by no means adequate for the purpose, and by the slow accumulation of interest are not likely to become so within any reasonable time.

The object for which they were constituted appears, at the same time, to be in a considerable degree accomplished: for it is to be observed that they merely contemplate re-opening the communication with Suez by steam as an experiment, to show the advantages it was capable of affording, and furnish data for others to act upon. In short, to ascertain whether the communication which had been abandoned by the Court of Directors after a few imperfect experiments, might not be kept up with advantage to the public.

All these points have been placed, by subsequent events, in a clear and satisfactory light. Four trips to Suez and back by the Hugh Lindsay, and several by sailing vessels, have been performed with marked success. A communication by steam between Malta and Alexandria has been established. The regular transmission of overland packets from England has also been secured; and it has been proved that the intercourse between the two countries may take place in the remarkably short space of 44 days. The subject, moreover, has been brought before Parliament, has been investigated by the House of Commons, and efforts have been made, under the directions of the British Government, to accomplish the object in view; and though so far with but doubtful success, yet with an energy and perseverance that lead the Committee to hope much from the future exertions of the authorities both here and at home.

In the hands in which the question, under these circumstances may be considered to rest, the Committee think it may with confidence be left. To act permanently as an executive body for the purpose of superintending steam navigation was never their intention, and they believe that no advantage could be expected to result from an attempt of the kind on the part of a body constituted as they are. Little or nothing, therefore, now remains for them to accomplish; and as the future success of steam navigation with Europe depends in a great measure, if not entirely, upon combinations over which they can have little or no control, they are of opinion that the fund with which they have been entrusted can be of no further service in their hands, and should be returned with as little delay as possible to the individuals by whom it was contributed.

They propose, therefore, to commence repaying it on the 1st of January next, unless a majority of the subscribers of 100 Rupees and above, as provided in the committee's prospect as should object to the proposition; and will be guided in the course they pursue in this respect by the communications they are favoured with on the point prior to the period mentioned.

With regard to the interest received on the funds some doubts have arisen in the minds of the committee. To apportion it rateably after the deduction of expenses, and for broken periods, would entail both labor and expense, and be attended with numerous other difficulties.

Besides, as the majority of the subscribers to the Fund, (comprising no less than eleven hundred individuals) contributed sums varying from 5 to 100 Rupees, the share they would each be entitled to from this source, after the payment of the expenses that have occurred, would be altogether insignificant.

In this dilemma, to guard against every misunderstanding from what might prove a fertile source of error in the settlement of their accounts, the committee propose that the balance, arising from interest, that may remain after the payment of expenses, be handed over to the following charitable institutions in equal proportions, viz.—The Bombay Education Society, the Native Dispensary, and the Benevolent Society.

It is proposed at the same time, as regards the principal of the Fund, that the distribution, if it take place as contemplated, should continue for the period of two years; and at the end of that time that the balance arising from unclaimed subscriptions be deposited with the consent of Government in the General Treasury, with a list of the claimants, and a request that it will be pleased to permit the Sub-Treasurer to superintend the future appropriation of the Fund, and at the end of four years, hold what may still remain unclaimed at the disposal of the institutions above mentioned and in the proportions stated.

G. ASHURNER, Secretary.

PROTEST.

I dissent from the resolution agreed to by the Committee, to return the subscriptions to the Steam Fund on the 1st of January for the following reasons.

1st. I consider it premature, because it is only during the present year that parties at home have derived any benefit from the communication via the Red Sea; and have consequently begun to take any interest in its success; and I think its regular establishment has been retarded from the want of zeal shown by parties interested at home.

2d.—Petitions to Parliament, calling for its interference, having been sent from this and the other Presidencies, we ought to wait until the result of these is known, before coming to a decision.

3d.—Because, should it be hereafter found necessary, as may be the case, to appeal to the community in aid of the establishment of Steam communication, it would be found difficult to collect such a sum as we now have, avowedly given for the furtherance of this object.

I therefore consider this proposition from the Steam Committee is likely to injure the cause, as tending to show they consider it a hopeless one.

JOHN SKINNER, Member of the Committee.

I concur with Mr. Skinner in his dissent and for the same reasons.

F. MCGILLIVRAY, Member of the Committee.

Bombay, 20th October, 1836.

TO THE BOMBAY STEAM COMMITTEE.

GENTLEMEN,—We have learned with regret that your committee have come to the decision of proposing, on the 1st January next, to return to the different subscribers to the Steam Fund, the amounts of their subscriptions, unless a majority of those now in India who have subscribed Rs- 100 and upwards, should be opposed to this proposition.

Such a resolution we consider uncalled for, and injudicious, as, coming from your body, it cannot fail to have considerable weight with a majority of the subscribers, and will tend, we fear, to injure the cause, as it shews you consider it hopeless or distant, by throwing up so valuable a fund, which may yet be of the greatest service and assistance in regularly establishing a communication universally desired by every one in this country.

We consider the publication of this proposition and opinion from you as particularly unseasonable at the present time, just as the importance of the communication by the Red Sea is beginning to be appreciated, and the quickness with which it may be made, has so lately been proved, even under the present imperfect arrangements; which leads us to hope, that as parties hitherto lukewarm in the case in this country and at home, must thus be convinced of the speed with which letters and passengers may be conveyed, all will more zealously co-operate in strenuously endeavouring to have the communication via Egypt, regularly established, nor cease in their efforts to this effect, until it be accomplished.

While the result of the petitions from the three Presidencies, praying the British Parliament to give their powerful aid in calling on the Government to effect this object is unknown, this expression of opinion on your parts may lead many friends to the cause to think it is abandoned by us, which we can assure you is far from being the case.

Should it even eventually turn out that this greatly desired communication with England will be established without the aid which the Steam Fund might afford, surely there are many objects intimately connected with that for which it was subscribed, to which it might be beneficially applied, and for which the subscribers would agree to its being transferred.

One occurs to us which we would now suggest to the subscribers at large for their opinion, and if agreed to, the Government of India might also sanction and contribute a further sum, viz. to improve the road from Agra to this Presidency, thereby ensuring to parties in the upper provinces and in these districts, a quicker and more speedy transmission of letters and parcels, and greater ease and security for passengers travelling. And while to them the benefits would be great, to Bombay also it would prove highly advantageous as facilitating a more extended traffic in that direction, and the gains to the overland communication, whenever established, would be greatly enhanced by the additional packets and passengers a good road would ensure.

As considerable sum was subscribed in the N. W. provinces of India, and a great portion by parties in the Bombay territories, the application of their subscriptions for their mutual benefit seems a legitimate employment of the fund, and though we acknowledge, one not directly in furtherance of the object originally intended, yet one so intimately connected in promoting its usefulness to the generality of the subscribers, and to increase its value and return to whoever may establish it, that we scarcely doubt a large majority of the subscribers would agree to their subscriptions being applied, as we have suggested.

However, we only hint at application of the fund as one in connexion with the overland communication which might meet the approval of the subscribers for eventually employing the amount of their subscriptions, should they not be required more directly in furtherance of the cause they were originally intended to aid, and as a reason why the money should not, as you propose, be immediately returned to the subscribers.

These subscriptions were given for a great and public object, and should not, we think, be returned till all hope of that object being effected is lost, or till we are well assured they can be of no aid or assistance in establishing it or some other, so intimately connected with it, as to be of the greatest use in promoting its success.

We remain, &c.

MEDICAL AND PHYSICAL SOCIETY.

Proceedings of a Meeting of the Medical and Physical Society of Calcutta, held at the Asiatic Society's apartments, 1st October, 1836.

Letters from the following gentlemen were read :

From A. MacGowan, Esq., Calcutta, and J. Ronald, Esq., Surgeon, 24th Regt. N. I., requesting that their names might be withdrawn from the Society.

From C. Morehead, M. D., stating that Messrs. Leckie and Co. of Bombay, will undertake the agency of the Society at that Presidency ; in answer to a request that Dr. Morehead would ask those gentlemen to perform that office.

S. H. Batson, Esq., Assistant-Surgeon, was proposed as a member of the Society, by Dr. D. Stewart, seconded by Dr. J. Jackson.

The Secretaries' report upon the subject of the periodical proposed to be published by the Society was then read.

The report stated that in consequence of a resolution passed at a Meeting of the Society in March last, a circular had been dispatched to the Mofussil, requesting the opinion of members upon the propriety of publishing a periodical journal under the auspices of the Society and the mode of conducting it. At the same time calling upon the subscribers to pay up their arrears so as to enable the Society to meet the increased demands upon their funds which the proposed publication, if carried into effect, would necessarily entail upon them. The result of this appeal was the receipt of numerous replies in favor of the proposition. The majority deciding for a Quarterly rather than a Monthly journal, all the writers expressing themselves willing to pay the cost of forwarding it from the Head-Quarters of their respective divisions. The greater part of the letters were accompanied by remittances amounting in all to about Rs. 4,000. The funds of the Society were in consequence materially improved, the balance in its favor in the Union Bank being at present 4,671 Rs. after all expenses for the year have been deducted. The whole amount of subscriptions for 1836, and some arrears for former periods being yet unpaid.

The report went on to state that in compliance with the general wish of the members it was proposed to establish from the 1st January next, a journal of selections and original matter to be continued Quarterly and forwarded to the Head-Quarters of divisions at the cost of the Society.

It appeared from the printer's estimate that a journal of one hundred closely printed pages would cost about 320 Rs. per number. This with incidental expenses for drawings, would give an annual charge of about 1,600 Rs., and if 400 Rs. were allowed as the average of hawk charges, the whole would amount to 2,000 Rs. per annum. The hawk charges were, however, uncertain, because there was good reason to believe that these would be diminished materially by the proposed alterations in the post office.

With regard to the editorial management, the report stated, that the Secretary Dr. Goodeve, assisted by his colleague Dr. O'Shaughnessy, had already expressed their willingness to undertake that office, and that they were now fully prepared, with the concurrence of the Society to commence their labors. In doing so, however, they stipulated for the sole responsibility of the editorial office, and that it should be placed on the same footing as the Editorship of the Asiatic Society's journal. Without this condition they could not be answerable for the success of their work. The society were of course at liberty to withdraw the trust confided in them whenever their labors were unnecessary or displeasing to the Members. It was proposed to place at the disposal of the Editors a certain sum for the purchase of periodical and standard works in addition to those already received by the Society, and an extra writer and hurkaru were requested.

This report was unanimously agreed to and adopted.

A case of cataract was then presented to the Society by F. H. Brett, Esq., which afterwards was read and discussed.

Mr. Brett's patient was a gentleman of advanced age, but of naturally good constitution, laboring under cataract of the right eye. The eye was otherwise apparently healthy, iris normal expanding and contracting freely, retina sensible to light and to the shadows of objects when brought near. The cataract appeared to be a hard cuticular one combined with opacity of capsule, lens rather small. After a fortnight's preparatory treatment, the operation of reclinacion was performed. The lens was depressed with facility, and the capsule freely ruptured. The patient was kept on abstemious diet and the pupil dilated by application of Ext. Belladonna to the eye brow : on the 3d day repeated syncope with high nervous irritability came on, there was watchfulness, jactitation and occasional wandering. This was partly attributable to the loss of the patient's accustomed stimulus of wine. A moderate quantity was accordingly administered, and a full dose of Hyoscyamus described at bed time. On the 4th day, it was necessary to apply 18 leeches to the brow to diminish inflammation, and a large dose of Hyoscyamus was repeated. On the 6th day, the bandages were removed and the pupil appeared clear and circular, but enormously dilated. There was not the slightest vision. The amaurotic symptoms were considered by Mr. Brett as merely temporary, cause, by the Hyoscyamus and Belladonna operating on a system weakened by the loss of its accustomed stimuli. The narcotics were consequently discontinued, a small blister applied to the temple, and a nutritious diet allowed. Next day light was distinctly visible, and the pupil contracted. The general health was also improved. Some conjunctival inflammation succeeded, which was much reduced by leeches and aperients, but the pupil remained dilated and there was scarcely any vision. The patient was very obstinate and refused to adopt any further remedial measures, the inflammation in consequence became chronic and continued for months together with an occasional recurrence of the nervous symptoms. Four months after this, Mr. Brett visited the patient and found the amaurosis still continuing. The pupil was perfectly clear, no vestige of capsule or lens remaining—the health good. No progress had taken place in the cataract in the left eye, an advantage which Mr. Brett attributes to the performance of the operation and the necessary antiphlogistic measures and counter irritation connected with it. Another advantage gained by the patient was that before the operation the vision was double, and consequently indistinct and inconvenience which did not subsequently exist.

AGRICULTURAL AND HORTICULTURAL SOCIETY OF INDIA.

A General Meeting of this Society was held in the Town Hall, on Wednesday, the 12th October, 1836.

PRESENT.

Dr. N. Wallich, M. D., Vice-President in the Chair. The Revd. Dr. Marshman; The Hon. Col. Rehling; Wm. Storm, Esq.; D. Hare, Esq.; Dr. Strong; J. W. Masters, Esq.; Charles Lyall, Esq.; M. S. Staunton, Esq.; A. Grant, Esq.; C. Trebeck, Esq.; Dr. Voigt; John Bell, Esq.

VISITOR.

Mr. G. Pratt.

The following gentlemen proposed at the last meeting were duly balloted for and elected members of the society, viz.

G. U. Adam, Esq.; R. Lowther, Esq.; P. McArthur, Esq.; A. McArthur, Esq.; C. Hutchins, Esq.

The following gentlemen were proposed as members:

M. P. Edgeworth, Esq., proposed by Mr. Bell, and seconded by Dr. Wallich.

Maharajah Dheraj Matabchund Bahadoor, and Rajah of Burdwan, proposed by Mr. Bell, and seconded by Dr. Wallich.

J. Furlong, Esq., (Kishnaghur,) D. McIver, Esq., (Rungpoor,) W. Innes, Esq., (Commercolly,) and J. M. Cripps, Esq., (Kishnaghur,) proposed by W. Storm, Esq., and seconded by Mr. Bell.

A. Freeman, Esq., (Bhaugulpore) proposed by G. F. Hodgkinson, Esq., seconded by Mr. Bell.

Dr. Robert White (Madras Establishment) proposed by Dr. Wallich, seconded by Mr. Bell.

Dr. Charles Huffnagle, on the motion of the Secretary, was proposed by the Agricultural Committee as an Honorary Member, and warmly seconded by the General Meeting.

The proceedings of last month were read and confirmed.

The Secretary informed the meeting that he had received the Cherra Poonjee potatoes, of which he had sold the greater part that was eatable, and had distributed to mallee, half of the seed.

He had likewise received and distributed to Members requiring them, the English seeds received from Capt. White, as well as the Bombay Carrot seed.

The proceedings of the Agricultural Committee in regard to the distribution of coffee seeds, &c., also submitted and approved.

The Secretary informed the meeting that the first exhibition of vegetables would take place in the Town Hall, on the 6th November next.

The following communications, and contributions were read and presented, viz.

A letter from J. W. Grant, Esq., Export Warehouse keeper, dated 14th September, calling upon the Secretary for information respecting the ultimate disposal of 19 casks of American Cotton seeds, and 1 box of tobacco seeds, which were imported from England by order of the Honorable the Court of Directors, and were by order of Government handed over to the Agricultural Society for experiment and distribution.

The Secretary had replied to Mr. Grant's query, by referring that gentleman to the general distribution of the seed throughout India, and specially to the experiments made at Akra farm, which under the disadvantages of old seed —soil unsuited to the successful maturity of the staple and want of precise knowledge as to the best season for planting—had given results which placed the question beyond a doubt, that the Cotton plant of America, particularly the Upland Georgia, could be advantageously cultivated in districts favorable to its development, and led the society to resolve, that every possible means should be adopted, to procure from America direct an abundant supplies of fresh seed.

The late Mr. John Palmer, who was always foremost in the ranks of those desirous to see improvement in the agricultural resources of India, then intimated through Mr. Kyd, that he would be happy to influence a shipment of seed direct from America, and the offer being thankfully accepted, the result is now laid before the Society in a letter.

From Charles Huffnagle, Esq., to the Secretary, dated Calcutta the 24th September, enclosing invoice and bill of lading per 45 bags of Cotton seed, shipped from Baltimore per Cordelia, Captain Beard, in virtue of Mr. Palmer's order. This consignment consists of 20 bags, containing	80 bushels of Upland Georgia.

15 bags "	90 ditto New Orleans.
10 bags "	30 ditto Sea Island.

Fl. 45 bags " 200 bushels of seed.

This commission deserves particular notice for several reasons.

It is the first of a series of shipments ordered by the Agricultural Society, with a view to introduce generally a better staple commodity in India.

It has come to hand, within the short space of 10 months, from the date of the Secretary's letter to the late Mr. Palmer, having had to travel from the interior to the port of Charleston, S. Carolina, thence to Philadelphia, from Philadelphia to Baltimore, whence it was ultimately exported for Calcutta.

For this, consequently, the Society stand indebted to the exertions of Dr. Charles Huffnagle, an American gentleman resident in Calcutta, who has, in the spirit of liberality, waived all claim to profit or commission, and further tenders his valuable services, on all matters wherein they may be available.

From Captain Beard, commander of the Cornelia, to Mr. Huffnagle, intimating that but for having charter his interest in the vessel, he would, on being informed that the above cotton seed was for the Agricultural Society, have made no charge; as it is, Captain Beard has only charged one-half the usual rate of freight.

These circumstances sufficiently refute the opinions that were entertained by some gentlemen, that national jealousy had any thing to do with the non-fulfilment of orders for cotton seed from the United States.

The Secretary stated to the meeting that he had consulted the Agricultural Committees as to the best measure to be adopted to give effect to the society's views, on the disposal of this cotton seed, and that they were unanimous in recommending the immediate despatch of a large portion to Allahabad, for distribution in Upper India. That in accordance with this decision Mr. Bell had forwarded by the steamers which left Calcutta on the 1st and 12th instant, 22 bags of American and 1 bag of Egyptian cotton seed, and had solicited Captain A. Watts, to receive the same, pending a reference to Government on the subject of its further transmission.

The Secretary had also sent a liberal allowance to the Madras Society, and had given Mr. Crane, a quantity of each sort for trial by the Society at Singapore. In addition to which he had supplied several of the district Societies and individual applicants, with various quantities, and had yet a considerable balance in store.

The Secretary informed the meeting that he had received from Mr. Vaupell of Bombay 12 boxes of Otahete sugar cane cuttings, which he had handed over to Dr. Wallich for deposit in the Nursery attached to the Botanical Gardens. Two of the boxes were broken to pieces and a few plants only were received alive, the greater part having died from neglect on ship board.

Memorandum.—Numerous applications for this superior cane are now on the file, and the Secretary hopes that supplies will soon be received from Lucknow, the produce of which will meet the demands of Lower Bengal.

Mr. Bell had received from Patna and shipped per John Adam, six cases of seeds, ordered by him on and at the request of the Agricultural Society of Madras.

From W. Taylor, Esq., dated 26th September, intimating the establishment of an Agricultural and Horticultural Society at Burdwan, of which he was Secretary, and requesting supplies of Seeds and plants to form a nucleus, for an experimental garden, and an intelligent mallee to superintend operations. All which Mr. Bell had provided, with the aid of Dr. Wallich, in the Plant Department.

From M. A. Moffat Mills, Esq., Collector of Cuttack, desiring a supply of American Cotton Seed to be sent by dák banghy, promising, that being for public purposes, he supposes that Government would allow it to go free of charge.

From R. Lowther, Esq., of Allahabad to the Secretary, dated September 7th, advising dispatch per Steamer, of a bottle of Mangel Wurzel Seed, and a fine specimen of the growing root. The root although taken great care of, for the purpose of exhibition, had completely decayed. The seed is at the service of Members, who may wish to try it.

From William Liddell, Esq., Secretary to the Madras Society, dated 5th September, promising to send a model of the American plough lately introduced at Bombay with much success, and offering to obtain the sanction of Captain Dalrymple, Master Attendant of Madras, to procure the model of a small description of English plough lately received by that gentleman, which is considered admirably adapted for India.

From C. K. Robison, Esq., forwarding a box containing vegetable seeds received from Sydney, on account of the Society, without advice, supposed to have been sent by Mr. Cracroft. The contents of this box were as on a former occasion most carelessly packed.

From Dr. Wallich, forwarding a note from Captain Jenkins to his address, with some fibres of the pine apple and three bags made from the same.

From Mr. J. W. Payter of Begrah, seeking information as to the culture and properties of the fallow tree, cotton and sugar cane, &c.

Memorandum.—Many applications now remain on the file for tobacco seed, Virginia, Persian, &c. Should any gentleman have any, it will thankfully be received by the Society for distribution.

From Dr. Robert Wight to the Secretary, dated Camp Pulney Mountains, 22d September, containing an elaborate disquisition on the experiments made in England, by Mr. Anderson, the Curator of the Apothecary's garden at Chelsea, on a sample of the Joomlah or Hill rice, which was sent to the Society of Arts in London by Dr. Wallich in 1821, the result of which was communicated to the Society, in a report from the Committee of Colonies and Trade presented by the Right Honorable the Governor-General in July last.

Dr. Wight's paper brings under examination also, a successful experiment on the mode of raising celery in India, by Mr. G. T. F. Speed, in order to demonstrate the principle, which led to the success of the one, and to the failure of the other.

If the Doctor's deductions are valid, there are those who will not fail to gain experience by testing the pith of his argument, but theory and practice, are so diametrically opposed to each other in general, that we must cautiously adopt the leading string of a law, which however plausible it may appear, may, after all, be defective, when practically applied. Mr. Anderson had the rice sown in a hot-house, then removed to a greenhouse, where they became stout, and healthy plants. They were subsequently transferred to a sheltered place in a bason for the growth of aquatic plants having 9 inches depth of water and twelve of mud where they grew and promised well until a change of weather, and all died before flowering.

Dr. Wight after disapproving of the steps taken by Mr. Anderson in his experiment, endeavours to show that the analogy of the law which governs the principle of animal and vegetable life is more decided than heretofore imagined, and that while the proper application of this law has imparted success to Mr. Speed's experiment although neither recognized nor understood by him at the time, its mis-application in that of Mr. Anderson is strikingly illustrative of the grounds of his argumentation.

It is impossible to give even an outline of the Doctor's scientific dissertation which will be read by many with great interest.

One important point, however, seems to have escaped the attention of both Mr. Anderson and Dr. Wight. The term "mountain rice or paddy," would indicate that the plant thrives beyond the influence of inundation. Now, even the rice crops that flourish only when fed by annual floods do not ripen until the action of heat has absorbed superfluous moisture.

In Dr. Anderson's experiment, this circumstance seems to have been entirely overlooked, for the rice was transferred to a bason with 9 inches of water, where it flourished to a certain point, then sickened, and died. No other result could possibly be expected, but if Mr. Anderson had gradually drained his bason provided there was sufficient depth of soil below the mud, the inference is that the plants would have attained maturity.

From J. B. Jones, Esq., of Jaunpore, a sample of bamboo rice and seed, alluded to in his communication of the 24th August.

From his Highness Nawaub Towhower Jung, some coffee stated to have been grown in his garden.

From Dr. Wallich, dated 11th October, presenting a MS. table of accounts to Dr. Hamilton's statistical surveys, which was made by Dr. Wallich while in England, from a copy 14 vols. folio, belonging to the Royal Asiatic Society.

From Mr. G. Pratt, dated 11th October, to the Secretary, presenting a few specimens of the pod of the vanilla arimatica, which he had in his possession since 1818, as fragrant as when pulled.

Mr. Stanton proposed, and was seconded by Dr. Wallich, that premiums be offered to native mallees for the best essays on kitchen gardening.

Mr. A. Grant was of opinion that separate essays should be called for referring to the different classes of vegetables.

Resolved, that Mr. Stanton's motion be adopted, and the details relating to his proposition be submitted to the Committee, for adjustment.

Resolved that the thanks of the meeting be offered for all the foregoing communications and donations.

MADRAS AGRICULTURAL AND HORTICULTURAL SOCIETY.

A General Meeting of the Madras Agricultural and Horticultural Society was held at the College Hall, on Saturday, October 8, 1836.

PRESENT.

The Hon. J. Sullivan, Esq. President.

The Hon. Sir R. Comyn,	Æ. R. MacDonnell, Esq.
The Rev. Mr. Spring,	J. A. Arbuthnot, Esq.
Capt. Dalrymple,	G. Fisches, Esq.
Ragavah Charryar,	J. Ouchterlony, Esq.
Captain Moberly,	A. P. Onslow, Esq.
J. Minchin, Esq.,	W. Liddell, Esq.
G. Lys, Esq.	Captain Lavie.

The proceedings of the Committee and the Report of the Garden Committee (A) were read by the Secretary.

An abstract of the different communications which had been received by the Secretary (C) since the last Meeting was then read, and the thanks of the Meeting were given accordingly.

The attention of the Meeting was then particularly called to some of the extracts from a most valuable communication from Dr. Wight, dated Sept. 22, 1836.

Resolved.—That the proceedings of the Committee be approved and confirmed.

Resolved.—That the cordial thanks of the Meeting be given to Dr. Wight for his valuable and interesting communication (B)—with a request that the society may be favored with any further observations on the indigenous plants of this country which his unwearied research may enable him to make.

Resolved.—That Dr. Wight's communication be referred to the Committee with the request of the Meeting, that his suggestions be immediately attended to.

Resolved.—That Mr. Fisher having kindly offered a quantity of Loquat Stocks, the Society beg to accept the offer with their best thanks.

Resolved.—That Dr. Ingledew's manuscript Treatise in Gardening be forwarded to Dr. Wight, with the request of the Society that he will have the goodness to peruse it—and if he should be of opinion that the publication of it would be desirable that he would kindly say what alterations or additions would be necessary.

Resolved.—That the Committee be authorized to raise Funds at the usual interest for the purchase of a piece of ground in the south side of the Society's Garden.

Resolved.—That a vote of thanks be given to the Committee for their valuable service—(Proposed by Sir R. Comyn, and seconded by Mr. Ouchterlony.)

Resolved.—That the next Meeting of the Society for the distribution of the prizes be held about the middle of January 1837—Notice to be then given of the following Shew Meeting.

Resolved.—That a vote of thanks be given to the Secretary for his gratuitous services.

Resolved.—That the thanks of the Meeting be given to the Honorable the President for his able conduct in the chair.

The Secretary in account with the Madras Agricultural and Horticultural Society.

Report of the Garden Committee.

The Garden Committee beg to lay before the General Committee of the Madras Agricultural and Horticultural Society an outline of their proceedings since the present Garden grounds were made over to the Society, which was on the 13th July last, the day on which the lease of the last renter expired.

The committee first considered it advisable to ascertain the description and quantity of water procurable, for which purpose, they caused five small wells to be sunk in different parts of the Garden, and finding excellent water on a site that commanded the whole grounds, two wells 12 feet in diameter and 25 feet deep were sunk, and have been completed in brick and chunam, with a 3½ feet parapet round each, the water standing at this time in one 5 and the other 4½ feet the driest season of the year.

The next subject which called for consideration was, the best mode of drawing water from these wells for irrigation, and the Committee having ascertained that Mr. McDonnell had, within the last year, put up machinery for raising water with bullocks which had been found to answer admirably, being extremely simple, and requiring no other labor than one pair of bullocks with a driver, to draw sufficient water for the whole ground, the same has been constructed over the two wells in the Society's Garden.

The Committee then turned their attention to the levelling of the grounds, previously to laying down the water courses, and to the making of such roads as were immediately necessary; the latter have been duly completed, and a contract was entered into for the levelling—the contractor commenced on the work immediately, the terms were agreed on, just after the heavy rains which fell in July and beginning of August. As long as the ground was well saturated he worked extremely well, but latterly from the excessive heat of the sun, and consequent hardness of the ground, the labor has been very great; and though he is now making but slow progress, the Committee expect all will be completed in a few days, when they will immediately commence laying down the water courses, the directions of which are all marked out and the material collected to commence operations. There were two old dry wells on the grounds, the materials of which have been brought into use, and the cavities filled up.

The Committee had then under consideration the permanent establishment to be kept up at the Gardens, and keeping in view a strict economy of the funds combined with efficiency, determined that, from the 1st October 1836, the establishment should be fixed as shewn in the Appendix attached to this report, in which is included the Committee's rules, defining the respective duties of all employed with the hours of attendance, &c.

The Committee then turned their attention to the necessary buildings for the protection of carts, bullocks, seeds and other property belonging to the Society, and erected by contract a permanent puccah shed which will hold the cattle and all stores, and has two lock-up rooms of good dimensions, one at each end.

The Committee obtained the sanction of Government to procure from the stores Europe tools, and other implements at prime cost with charges, which is 50 per cent. below what is charged to individuals allowed to purchase Government stores.

The Committee have laid in a large quantity of maure and red earth so as to be in readiness for gardening, when the season will permit of their making a commencement! a large quantity of vegetable seeds have also been sown in boxes, and as soon as the grounds are sufficiently advanced and the season allows of it, the plants will be transplanted.

The Committee have also determined on the construction of a permanent conservatory; but understanding from the Secretary to the General Committee that the funds will not at present admit of so extensive a work, have caused to be constructed by contract a temporary conservatory for the immediate protection of the plants belonging to the Society, which will be completed in a few days, the materials for which have been principally taken from the old bricks and Palmyra trees found on the premises.

September 30th, 1836.

The following letter from Dr. Wight, dated Sept. 22, 1836, in reply to the communication from the Secretary at the desire of the Committee was then read—this valuable paper was accompanied by a very beautiful drawing of the Ficus Miconocarpa (R. W.) from the jungles Pulney mountains—which was exhibited at the meeting. It consists of a bunch of seven figs, measuring about 6½ inches across in the drawing, with leave 7½ inches long.

B.

To the Secretary to the Madras Agricultural and Horticultural Society.

SIR,—I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 8th instant, stating that you address me at the request of the Madras Agricultural and Horticultural Society, who are desirous of knowing in reference to my remarks in the Madras Journal of Science what country stocks might be successfully used for grafting English and other fruit trees not indigenous to this country. Also that the Committee beg you to state that any other communication connected with the objects of the Society will be most thankfully received.

For the honor conferred by this communication as unexpected as it is unmerited, the only suitable acknowledgment I have it in my power to make, is my returning an answer to the question proposed as full and distinct as the rather inexplicit terms in which you have couched it, and my separation from books and collateral sources of information will admit. In the remarks referred to, it is laid down as a rule that could not be departed from, that the stock must belong to the same natural family of plants as the scion to be ingrafted. According to this law of nature, which is nearly, though not absolutely without exceptions, it is exceedingly difficult to find native stocks for grafting English fruit trees, owing to so few of the order to which they nearly all belong being indigenous. Apples, Pears, and Medlars all belong to the section Pomaceæ, of the order Rosaceæ, the only examples of which I am acquainted with, natives of this country, are two or three species of the genus Photinia; trees usually found in alpine jungles: and the Loquat, itself an introduced plant. On Loquat stocks, therefore, which thrive well in this country, though they do not readily bear fruit scions, of the three kinds of English fruit abovementioned might be engrafted with every chance of success. I would suggest as a means of acclimating the apple, that the seed of those now in the country should be sown with the view of procuring apple stocks, from which, if the opinions of Mr. Knight on the subject, prove correct, finer fruit may be expected than from stocks of a different genus of plants. He concludes, from many experiments made to determine this point, that the more nearly the stock and scion are allied, that so much the more perfectly will the scion retain the character of the tree from which it was taken, and that grafting inferior kinds on better sort of stocks has a tendency to improve the fruit of the graft. This rule, if correct, ought certainly to be attended to in England where they can have all sorts of stocks, but must, I fear, be departed from in India, as it seems very improbable we shall ever be able sufficiently to acclimatize stocks for this purpose, but the importance of the object sought, demands a careful and persevering trial. In the grafting of mangoes it might and ought to be attended to, as a means of improving our inferior varieties of that fruit.

The English stone fruits all belonging to the section Amygdalæ, of the same order (Rosaceæ) will perhaps succeed on Loquat stocks, but the Almond and Peach are preferable, and as the former of these thrives well in many parts of this country I can see no reason for doubting that Plums and Cherries would succeed on them.

The tree known under the name of 'country Almond,' is not the one meant, as it belongs to an order having but little relationship with Rosaceæ. In Nepal there is a species of Cherry which perhaps would not be difficult to introduce into the Carnatic, and may I think be tried almost with the certainty of succeeding in Mysore, which would form an excellent stock for that kind of fruit; and, I think, I met with another on the hills at Shevagerry. If this last surmise proves correct we can no longer have any difficulty about stocks for the whole of this tribe. I certainly found one in the jungles of Ceylon, but at such an elevation and in a climate so humid as might render its introduction difficult.

In my paper in the Madras Journal (which I have not at hand to refer to) I think I have mentioned most of the other fruits, and I feel averse to taking up the time of the Society by going over the list again: one however occurs to my recollection not mentioned there, though described as "one of the most delicious productions of nature" the Durian. This as being a native of a tropical climate may perhaps succeed on its own root, but if not, it could be grafted on the Bombax (Cotton tree) or Helicteres, both belonging to the same natural order. Helicteres, though usually only a shrub, often attains, in good soil, a large size and should be preferred from its hardihood and power of drawing nourishment from the poorest soils, flourishing luxuriantly among nearly naked stones and rocks, on the tops of the low and hot rocky-hills scattered over the Carnatic, where scarcely a tuft of grass can find nourishment.

With these few remarks I shall conclude my reply to this part of your letter, merely adding, that should the Society on any future occasion, wish further information on any of the points touched upon, I shall always feel pleasure in replying to the best of my abilities, to any question it may honor me by proposing.

On the second part of your letter, that concerning communications connected with objects of the Society, I shall avail myself of the invitation of the Committee to offer some suggestions for its consideration.

It is one of the weaknesses of our nature, to undervalue things near, and to attach an undue importance to things distant which can only be procured at the cost of much trouble, expense, and risk of disappointment. On this principle we can explain the propensity, so prevalent among our countrymen in Europe, to travel on the continent in search of wonders in France, Italy, Germany, &c., but think the far greater ones of their own country beneath their notice. On the same principle I explain what I look upon as an inconsistency among some men of my own profession who insist that it is impossible to get an adequate professional education in England, and in the same breath acknowledge English practice infinitely superior to continental. Some amusing instances of a similar propensity I have seen among Florists, cultivating as precious flowers, plants raised from seeds brought from a distance, but neglecting as common the very identical plants growing as weeds about their houses, though so much handsomer and bearing flowers so greatly superior in beauty that they could not recognise them as the same. These introductory remarks are introduced in the hope of securing a more patient hearing for the suggestions I have to offer, recommendatory of a somewhat different course to be pursued by the Madras Agricultural and Horticultural Society.

It has long appeared to me, that, while looking abroad for fine fruits and flowers, we are neglecting the not less estimable ones of this country which only require to be brought from their obscurity and receive but a moiety of the care and attention in cultivation bestowed on their foreign rivals, to drive them from the field. To commence with a homely illustration, I dare say that many, if not most of those who do me the honor to listen to these remarks, have paid 10 or 12 rupees for a jar of "Hoffman's Raspberry Jam" without for a moment considering, or perhaps even knowing, that almost every alpine jungle, and nearly the whole table land of Mysore, has a variety of indigenous species of Rubi (Rasps, &c.) scattered over them, that only require to be brought to the garden and have the same skill and attention bestowed on their culture, as the would-rasp of England, to render them equal, if not superior to the English ones. The berries of some kinds that I have eat in their native uncultivated state, are not inferior in size or juiciness, and but little in sweetness and flavour to the finest English Raspberries. On the Neelgherry hills a species of Strawberry, grows nearly allied to the English wood Strawberry, but in its native cold, moist and dewy climate, the fruit is small and insipid. So do we find its English congener, when growing in unfavourable situations, but transferred to the garden and carefully cultivated for a few seasons, it gains size and becomes very high flavoured. Would it not be easier to acclimatize the Neelgherry than the European Strawberry in the Carnatic? We have not yet, so far as I know found in India any species of the genus Ribes (Gooseberry and Currant) but the woolly Myrtle (Myrtus tomentosa) is a native of many of our hills, (Neelgherries, Pulney, Shevagherry,) and bears a fruit resembling the Gooseberry, in so many respects, that it has received on the Neelgherries the name of Hill-Gooseberry, but wants its high flavour and sweetness. Might it not, if brought to the plains, acquire from the hot and bright sunshine which it would there enjoy, during the season of ripening its fruit, the properties which it is denied in the elevated and humid regions it naturally inhabits? To affect such changes will no doubt require both time and care, and their accomplishment cannot be expected without many disappointments; but when we trace back to their originals, all our finest cultivated fruits, we find our melting high flavoured Rasps, Gooseberries and Cherries, the ameliorated progeny of the now despised wood-ones; over-sweetest and largest apples, of the sour and diminutive crab, our luscious Magnum Bonum plums, of the austere sloe and our noble Peaches; Nectarines and Apricots, of the uneatable Almond! How much care must have been bestowed and how many disappointments endured before these changes were accomplished, every one can estimate: let the greatness of the result, be our encouragement to persevere in a similar course. We have no sloes to convert into plums, but we have in our Cullacka (Carissa Carandas) a fruit superior to the sloe, which may be made to afford a respectable substitute for Damsons, as a tart fruit, where it is not procurable, or where its high price would form a bar to its employment. We have no wild Cherries to ameliorate, but we have the Nagapullum (Calyptanthus) the fruit of which is not very unlike. Our introduced figs, whatever be the care bestowed on them, are generally as compared with those of the South of Europe, small and insipid, let us try to civilize, these represented in the accompanying drawing, which, even in their present immature state, are as large as Oranges, and growing not as solitary individuals thinly scattered on the branches but in clusters like bunches of Grapes. Our Carnatic Grapes like the figs are inferior, might not some one of our numerous indigenous kinds be fitted to supplant them, or what might be of easier accomplishment, could not some method be discovered by which the vegetation of the one in use might be more thoroughly checked previous to the season of fructification, to allow the plant time to rest, if I may so speak, as practised in England by opening the vineries for some weeks in winter previous to the commencement of the forcing season. I would further suggest as a means of improving the flavour of Grapes, that the vines be trained on rails having their whole front exposed to the sun, by which the Grapes would enjoy his full rays and be better ripened than under constant shade as in the present method of growing them on pandals. A method which would have the additional advantage of saving room, as each walk of a garden might have its trills of grape vines as regularly as its trimming of box or its Indian substitute, whatever that might be, almost without occupying a foot of ground, that could be otherwise appropriated.

I fear I am becoming tedious, but as I have still some observations to make, I shall, at the risk of being considered prolix, solicit the attention of the Society a few minutes longer, the more so, as they belong to a different and more momentous branch of the subject.

We are all aware how much this country occasionally suffers from scarcities of food. It is therefore a desideratum of the first magnitude to devise means by which such calamitous visitations may be rendered less frequent if they cannot be altogether averted. It is equally well known that much of this suffering originates in our trusting for a great part of our supplies of rice, to lands irrigated from tanks filled by the periodical rains. A failure of these is sure to cause distress, and even when most plentiful rarely fill the tanks sufficiently to allow water enough for all the lands depending on them. Hence it is that in travelling through parts of the country so watered, we almost invariably towards the end of the season, meet with some fields lost for want of that necessary, and in more unfavourable years, extensive tracts of country are often so destroyed, and with them, the previous labour and outlay of the Ryot, whose all perhaps was invested in the crop. River watered lands, though not altogether exempted from such accidents, are not so subject to them, owing to most of their supplies of water being derived from the western monsoon, which is more regular than the eastern one. The attention of the Society, it appears to me, may be advantageously directed to the discovery of some other crop, less precarious, and requiring less water than rice, to be substituted in its room, on such lands. Potatoes is becoming to Europe what rice is to this country, but all attempts in the usual way, to introduce that root into the Carnatic have failed. Little, therefore, can be expected from it, unless we can acclimatize the plant in the first instance by raising it from seed. The chances of success from this process, I confess are very few, but still the experiment is easily tried, and ought to be perseveringly made. If seeds raised in this country will not vegetate, others ought to be procured from England where this mode of propagation is occasionally resorted to, to procure new varieties: and still better from its native country, by which we would be furnished with a new stock, which might adapt itself as thoroughly to the tropical climate, as the old one has to the temperate. The Dolichos bulbosus, itself a tropical plant, is much cultivated in the Malay Islands on account of its turnip-like roots, might also be tried, but a more probable substitute than either, is I think to be found in the Indian Corn or Maize, which is known to succeed well in the country, and affords an abundant supply of nourishment for man, from its seeds; and for cattle, from its stem and leaves. I am aware that before any of these experiments can be undertaken on any considerable scale, that the countenance and support of Government is necessary, but I feel well assured that that has only to be asked to be granted to the fullest extent.

In aid of these and similar measures, I would strongly urge on the attention of the society the propriety of using every effort to give unlimited diffusion to the Jack and Bread Fruit trees both of easy culture and producing abundance of wholesome nutritious food, much esteemed and in general use in Ceylon and Malabar, but on our coast considered a daintiness, from its rarity. It is indigenous in all the alpine jungles of the Southern provinces, forming large, and if in more accessible places would be, very valuable trees on account of their timber, independent of their fruit. As it is not improbable it is a native of all the hilly jungles both north and south of Malabar. I cannot suppose there will be any difficulty encountered in distributing it abundantly over the plains, since it is naturally so on the hills of Coromandel.

In Ceylon the fruit is so abundant and cheap, that a very large one, nearly as much as a man can carry, and enough to feed him two or three days, may be bought for about one anna. How invaluable then would it be to the coast, were the comparatively worthless mango and not much better tamarind trees supplanted by jacks which from being in fruit at all seasons would afford an unceasing supply of food from year's end to year's end. To say more in support of this recommendation would be to insult the good sense of the Society, since every one who has had the misfortune to witness the amount of human suffering that follows in the train of famine, can picture to himself the benefits that would ensue to the country at large from having an abundant and never failing store thus easily provided against its wants. Much time will no doubt be required to carry these recommendations into effective operation, and it is to be feared much suffering from hunger must in the interval be endured. This however, so far from standing in our way as an impediment to immediate exertion, ought to stimulate us the more strongly to the adoption of active measures. True it is many of us will not be permitted to see and rejoice in the blessings we may have aided in conferring, perhaps on millions yet unborn, but while life is granted, we live in the cheering enjoyment of having made it our humble endeavour to mitigate the evils which an inscrutable and merciful Providence has in its unerring wisdom, thought fit to inflict on so large a portion of the vast mass of human beings, whom it has pleased God to subject to our rule.

Fearing that I have already trespassed too long on the patience of the Society, I abstain from some further suggestions I had to offer on another but less important subject, and beg to subscribe myself,

Your very obedient servant,

ROBERT WIGHT.

Abstract of Letters which have been received by the Secretary, since the last General Meeting, on the 7th November 1835.

No. 1.—From G. Fisher, Esq. Salem, dated November 9th, 1835, announcing the despatch of a maund of Coffee grown in the Sherwarry Hills, in the beginning of 1835. A bag of Cotton raised at Maganore from Bourton seed, and a small quantity from American seed, called Sea Island. Mr. Fisher tenders his best services in forwarding the views of the Society. (The Coffee alluded to did not reach the Committee in time for the exhibition in the early part of the year—but the Cotton was exhibited and was much admired by those assembled.)

No. 2.—From Captain Audry, Vellore, dated December 17th, 1835, accompanied by Manuscript Treatise in Gardening for the use of the Society also offering a supply of fresh Bourbon Cotton seed, the produce of plants in his own garden.

No. 3.—From J. Bell, Esq. Secretary to the Agricultural and Horticultural Society of India, dated December 18th, 1835, announcing the dispatch of 3 cases, of Patna Vegetable seeds, also a box containing Lecchee, Mango, and other plants from the Company's Botanical Garden. Wishing to know the proper season for seeds to reach Madras in future enclosing a list of the seeds forwarded, and the amount paid for them including packing, &c. rupees 192-14-0. (These seeds arrived at Madras about the 10th February, and were forwarded to the Hon. Mr. Sullivan's garden on the Neilgherries on account of the Society. Mr. Sullivan has since informed the Society that, in consequence of bad packing but few reached the Hills in a state fit for use.)

No. 4.—From A. J. M'Lean, Esq., Secretary to the Marine Board, dated 18th December 1835, stating that two boxes of young Tea plants had been sent to Mr. Ashwin's gardens by Government, on account of the Horticultural Society. (These plants were distributed amongst several Members of the Committee and others, but notwithstanding the utmost care in various parts of Madras, they all died before the end of March.)

No. 5.—From A. P. Onslow, Esq., Secretary to the Board of Revenue, announcing the transmission of one bag of Cotton seed grown in the Esplanade for the use of the Agricultural and Horticultural Society.

No. 6.—From W. Munro, Esq., Secretary to the Bangalore Horticultural Society, enclosing the Rules of the Society and the List of Subscribers up to that time, February 9th, 1836. The Bangalore Society also request that they may be allowed to style themselves a branch of the one at Madras—ask for a copy of the Rules and for such seed and plants, as may be at the disposal of the Madras Society.

No. 7.—From the Hon. the President to the late Secretary Lieut. Thomson, desiring him to express the cordial concurrence of the Madras Society in the wishes of the Bangalore Society and their satisfaction at having such useful allies.

No. 8.—From J. Bell, Esq., dated Calcutta, 20th February, forwarding a printed Circular respecting an interchange of seeds and plants—expressing a desire to know whether seeds, &c. arrived safely and whether they were approved of.

(See No. 3.)

No. 9.—From Mr. Davis, Agriculturist on the Neilgherry Hills, dated 1st March, 1836, with a list of seeds for sale, stating that he has a farm of 30 acres, and soliciting the support of the Society, expresses his opinion that his seed entirely grown from English will succeed better than those sent out from the Cape or England.

No. 10.—From G. Fisher, Esq., Salem, dated May 16, 1836, requesting a supply of any seeds or plants which the Committee may receive, and offering duly to report the success or failure of them—stating that his Fruit Trees were then in full bearing and that the distance only precluded his submitting them to the Society—expresses his disappointment as the loss of the Coffee which he had sent for exhibition, but hoped to be more fortunate in future—also offering to the Society the use of his Gardens until that of the Society is sufficiently advanced for the reception, propagation and dissemination of Plants of Seeds. Mr. Fisher also adds that the Acorns and Spanish Chestnuts which were forwarded to him by the former Secretary had entirely failed, as he supposes from the seeds having been improperly preserved.

No. 11.—Printed Circulars from Calcutta, referred to in No. 8.

No. 12.—From Captain Ley, dated Bangalore, May 28, forwarding an Apple supposed to be the largest ever grown in that station, measuring $11\frac{1}{2}$ inches and weighing $9\frac{1}{4}$ ounces.

No. 13.—From His Highness the Prince Asem Juh Bahadoor, &c. &c., dated May 31st, enclosing a donation of Rupees One Hundred for the Madras Agricultural and Horticultural Society.

No. 14.—From the Secretary dated May 30, 1835, to H. Chamier, Esq., Chief Secretary to Government (C.)

No. 15.—From H. Chamier, Esq., Chief Secretary to Government, dated June 16, 1836. (D.)

No. 16.—From G. Fisher, Esq., Mooganore, June 24th, 1836, promising a Packet of seeds from the Hills by the first opportunity, and announcing that he had purchased a very considerable estate in the immediate neighbourhood of Salem, for the purpose of carrying on Agricultural and Horticultural pursuits in a large scale and that he had already introduced the cultivation of Sena, Linseed and Tobacco, that, with the last, he had completely succeeded. Mr. Fisher also suggests the propriety of notifying the receipt of any seeds or plants to the Subscribers at large.

No. 17.—From Mr. J. Gomes, at the Mount, forwarding a very large and fine Pomegranate grown in his garden.

No. 18.—From H. Chamier, Esq., Chief Secretary to Government, dated July 2d, 1836, requesting to be furnished with a report of the growth, appearance, and present condition of the Tea Plants which were forwarded to the Society on the 14th December 1835.

(See N. 4)

No. 19.—From A. P. Onslow, Esq., Secretary to the Board of Revenue, dated July 4th, 1836, announcing the Government had complied with the request of the Committee to be allowed to take red earth from the little Mount duty free.

No. 20.—From Captain Dalrymple, Master Attendant, dated July 19th, acquainting the Secretary that Captain Adam had begged the Society's acceptance of a Lemon Plant from Vizagapatam.

No. 21.—From Captain Clemons, Acting Secretary to the Bangalore Horticultural Society, acknowledging the receipt of the Secretary's Letter of the 29th June, and expressing "their satisfaction to the Honorable the President and Committee of the Madras Society for their co-operation and cordial concurrence in the wishes" of the Bangalore Society—asking for a supply of good Tobacco and Cotton seeds of a superior description and offering in return any seeds or plants which the Madras may wish to naturalize in the Carnatic. Also announcing that His Highness the Rajah of Mysore has been pleased most liberally to place at the disposal of the Society for the purpose of a Botanical garden a valuable piece of ground commonly known as the "Laul Baugh."

No. 22.—From G. Fisher, Esq., Salem, July 19th, requesting the Secretary to take charge of a bag of Coffee and desiring to be registered as a Candidate for the Prize for Coffee announcing the dispatch of Seeds for the use of the Society's Garden at Madras and requesting a List of the Seeds which had been received from Liverpool.

No. 23.—From J. Bell, Esq., dated July 21st, acknowledging the receipt of rupees 200 for investment of fresh Garden seeds, also the value of account due to the Society for the first dispatch of seeds—Mr. Bell expresses his regret that the first seeds should have reached too late in the season and states that the Society of India were in the same predicament as they got none—Mr. Bell states that he had received a reply from Patna respecting the seeds, and expected to receive them in all August—he promises that no time shall be lost in forwarding them—Mr. Bell's advises having despatched a packet of seeds for Bangalore per Louisa to the care of the Secretary (No parcel of this description arrived per Louisa, Secretary.)

No. 24.—From Mr. Skirving, Liverpool, dated July 20th, 1836, stating that all the seeds had been despatched except Artichoke seeds which could not be procured at that time, and adds that the plant, seldom seeds but generally grows from suckers. Wishes to know in what state the seeds arrive, enclose catalogue and express a desire to supply on the most moderate terms or to exchange with the Madras Society for seeds or plants of India that may not be plentiful in England, the seeds of any New Pine or any other Tree, Shrub, or Flower would be very acceptable, and the utmost value returned, in any way required.—Would be happy to be of any service to the Institution. Any new Camellia, or seeds of any Camellia would be very acceptable or any Native Rhododendron such as Arboreum.

No. 25.—From J. Walker, Esq.—President of the Liverpool Botanic Garden, dated March 30th, 1836, acknowledging the receipt of the Secretary's Letter, enclosing a Bill to Messrs. Coutts and Co. for £30 stating, Mr. Walker expresses a desire to forward and promote the objects of the Madras Society and expresses a hope to be able to establish such an exchange of the products of the respective countries as will be mutually beneficial to both institutions—states that half the order had been sent per "Warwick," and expects that the remainder will arrive during September. Mr. Walker states that the Society were in the point of removing their Garden to a greater distance from the town of Liverpool and expected to open their New Garden in May—hopes to have in their power shortly to enrich their collection by importing plants from remote parts, either by direct purchases, or through the medium of exchanges—Expresses a desire to hear of the prosperity of the Madras Institution.

No. 26.—From Captain Hutton, dated Madras, July 25th, 1836, offering a bag of English Plants to the Horticultural Society, consisting of Plums, Cherries, Peas, Apples, Gooseberries and Currants, originally 2 of each —One Armula Seekale and Horse Radish (These plants were dispatched a few days afterwards to Bangalore, and accounts have since been received of their safe arrival and that they are all alive except the Armula, Horse Radish, and Seekale.)

No. 26.—From Lieutenant E. Downe, dated Bangalore, August 11th, stating that he had forwarded 4 Mangosteins from the only Tree at that station, then in full bearing in his garden with about 100 fruits on it.—In 1834 the tree did not blossom. In 1835 it blossomed, but had only one fruit. The Tree was planted by Colonel Waugh about 20 years ago, Lieutenant Downe states that there were several trees of Bastard Mangostein at Bangalore, on which grafts from his tree had been attempted but without success.

No. 30.—Colonel Waugh has kindly favoured the Committee with the following observations on Lieutenant Downe's letter.

"The plant in question was received from Penang in 1816-17, and planted in my Garden at Bangalore, I imported the wild or Bastard Mangostein at the same time from Malabar, for the express purpose of stocks, on which to engraft the former more valuable sort; being of the same family there can be one doubt of their taking; the object therefore should by all means be preserved in because these fruit are proof that the tree will produce and the fruit will improve by means of a native stock.

The plum has succeeded by means of repeated engrafting on peach stocks which had been previously acclimatized. The first plums gathered, at Bangalore were from a graft of mine and a graft pear that again seemed to acclimatize the plant. The original Plum Tree, and layers from it again were healthy plants and used to send forth abundant of perfect blossom, the fruit set and perished, the engrafting on our acclimatized stock gave the turn that was necessary to the constitution of the tree—so will it be with the Mangostein. The plan of the latter at Bangalore would be considered a healthy good tree at Penang where I have seen orchards of the kind.—16th August 1836.

No. 31.—The Secretary received through the Honorable the President about the end of August a number of very fine Mangosteins which were grown in the Company's Garden at Cotallam—They were considered by those who have visited the straits to be equal to any that are grown there.

No. 32.—From the Hon. J. Sullivan, Esq., with a large variety of Vegetable seeds received from the Neilgherry, for the use of the members of the Society—requesting also that a small quantity of each kind of Seed received from Liverpool should be sent to the Neilgherry for the use of the Society.

No. 34.—From G. Lys, Esq., applying for a list of seeds and offering the Society a considerable quantity of Trees, consisting of

Bread Fruit,	Custard Apple, and
Taek,	Mango, cum multis alies.
Guava,

No. 36.—From G. Fisher, Esq., dated October 1st, offering the Society any quantity of Bourbon Cotton seed and Virginia and Maryland Tobacco seed—also any number of Coffee Plants that may be required—expresses a wish that the Society could procure some of the real Sea Island Cotton seed—believes that all that has come hitherto to this Presidency under that name is spurious and considers the best Cotton in Southern India is from Bourbon seed.

No. 37.—From Mr. Victor Fernandes, Mulberry Planter, Paulghaut, dated Sept. 29, 1836—enclosing a specimen of Raw Silk, the produce of his garden, 3 miles North of Paulghaut, describing his plantation containing about seven thousand Mulberry Trees, &c. &c.

No. 38.—From J. Bell, Esq., Secretary to the Agricultural and Horticultural Society of India, dated Sept. 23d, 1836, forwarding a Copy of Resolutions proposed at a General Meeting at the Town Hall on the 13th July, respecting future supplies of Seeds.

No. 39.—Copy of the above named Resolution.

MADRAS, May 31, 1836.

To H. CHAMIER, Esq.

Chief Secretary to Government.

SIR,

I am directed by the Honorable the President and Committee of the Madras Agricultural and Horticultural Society, to beg that you will have the goodness to express to the Right Honorable the Governor in Council the thanks of the Society for the piece of ground which has been so liberally granted to them, near the Cathedral Church, for an experimental Garden; and to request that Government will be further pleased to afford them such pecuniary assistance as may be deemed expedient for the purpose of enabling them more fully to carry the objects of the Society into effect.

I have the honor of stating, for the information of the Right Honorable the Governor in Council, that the Madras Agricultural and Horticultural Society have lately been directing their attention more particularly to the improvement of Agricultural products of the country, and they are not without hopes that, with further means at their disposal, great benefits will follow the exertions of the Society, by holding out suitable rewards for the best specimens of Sugar, Coffee, Cotton, and Tobacco, as well as for the importation of Otaheite Sugar Cane, American Cotton seed, improvements in the Machinery for raising water, Implements of Husbandry, Manure, &c. &c.

The Committee also desired me to bring to the notice of Government the fact that when the Agricultural and Horticultural Society of India first directed their attention to the general products of the country in 1829, the Right Honorable the Governor General in Council granted the munificent sum of 20,000 Rupees for the first year, with a further sum of 4,500 Rupees for buildings and stock for their experimental farm; besides the annual sum of 10,000 Rupees for premiums, &c. &c., they hope, therefore, that this Society, now in its infancy, may secure from the fostering hand of this Government, such pecuniary assistance as will enable it, aided by the Subscriptions of its friends on this side of India to co-operate with the parent Society in Bengal in their mutual objects of general utility.

The Committee of the Madras Agricultural and Horticultural Society have further requested me to solicit such indulgence connected with the transmission of letters and seeds through the Post Office as Government may deem compatible with the interests of the state and to pray that all seeds for the use of the Society may be imported Duty Free.

I have the honor to be,

Sir,

With the greatest respects,

Your most obedient humble Servant,

WILLIAM LIDDELL,

Sec. to the Madras A. and H. Society.

Public Department.

Gentlemen,

Para. 1. I am directed by the Governor in Council to acknowledge the receipt of your Secretary's letter of the 1st ultimo; and to inform you, that the application which it contains for pecuniary assistance in aid of your Society has been referred for the favourable consideration of the Supreme Government.

2. The Governor in Council is pleased to permit all

Seeds for the use of your Society to be imported free of duty; but regrets to observe that, under the Post Office Regulations of this Presidency, your request respecting exemption from postage cannot be complied with.

I have the honor to be,

Gentlemen.

Your most obedient Servant,

H. CHAMIER.

Chief Secretary.

To the Committee of the Madras Agricultural and Horticultural Society.
[Madras Herald.]

THE AGRICULTURAL AND HORTICULTURAL SOCIETY'S GARDEN.

In compliance with a wish which has been of late generally entertained among several members of the community, that some information regarding the progress made towards establishing a garden connected with the Agricultural and Horticultural Society, should be laid before the public, the committee, to whose care the society has confided the management of this part of its plan, consider it their duty to submit the following succinct account of their proceedings.

It is proper to promise that from the first establishment of the Agricultural and Horticultural Society of Western India in 1830, until the year 1835, the means which it possessed of carrying its general plans into effect were principally confined to supplying seeds and plants to members residing in various parts of the Presidency, commissioned by the society itself, either from Europe, the Cape, or other places, or to transmitting such as were occasionally received from individuals who were desirous, through the medium of the society, to secure for such seeds and plants the advantageous trial which an extensive distribution among its numerous correspondents rendered available.

In addition to this, communications were opened with the sister societies of Madras and Bengal, and endeavours made to improve the European vegetables and fruits reared for the consumption of the community by native market gardeners and others, by distributing rewards and prizes to the most deserving at the society's annual occasional meetings.

In the agricultural department, the society may fairly lay claim to a share of merit, in aiding and encouraging, in communication with the revenue officers of Government the introduction extensively throughout this Presidency, of that valuable product, the Mauritius or Otaheite Sugarcane, and substituting it for the more inferior and puny cane of the country.

A simple reference to its published proceedings from time to time in the papers of this Presidency, and of the forthcoming volume of its transactions, (so soon as funds sufficient to cover the expence of publication are available to be raised by subscription or otherwise,) will also show that the society have not been idle, nor unobservant spectators of what was going on around them, or what it most concerned them to know. At the present moment, it is engaged in assisting to promote and forward the measures in progress at both extremes of the Indian continent, Ambalah in North India, and Travancore in South India, for the cultivation of the mulberry, the rearing of silk-worms, and the manipulation of silk, an article which promises ere long to become one of the staple exports of the country, if duly fostered and encouraged by the ruling powers.

* Beside these, cotton, indigo, hemp, wool and other valuable commercial products, and the best means of improving them have engaged its attention as will appear in due time.

In 1834, however, it was suggested by a few individuals, who were much interested in the society's plans, that the establishment of a garden would greatly increase its capabilities of benefitting the public, and would give to its operations a more practical, defined, and popular character than these had hitherto enjoyed. It was anticipated by the authors of this proposal, that such a plan would be warmly supported by a community such as that of Bombay not only on account of its obvious and practical utility, the object being to furnish the society with effectual means of attaining its benevolent and important ends, but also as it was calculated to add to the institutions already established on the island, one of a highly ornamental and popular nature, which would bestow on the public spirited of all classes of society, an elegant, an agreeable and instructive place of recreation and resort. The public would possess in it a conservatory, in which, in the course of a few years, and without incurring any considerable expense, the productions of many, various, and distant climes would be collected together, and it would afford to the curious or scientific opportunities of examining objects of the highest interest: whatever, in short, the vegetable kingdom furnishes to excite the curiosity, to supply the wants, or occupy the industry of man.

The success which has attended the institution of similar establishments at Calcutta,* Ceylon, Mauritius, &c., hold not every encouragement to us, and the favoured site of our island, which is so often and so justly the boast of its inhabitants, would here, it was thought, render manifest its peculiar advantages.

The proposal was promptly adopted by the Agricultural and Horticultural Society, and a committee was appointed to select such a spot as should appear to them the most eligible for the object in contemplation. The situation recommended by the committee was approved of by the society, and negotiations for the purchase were set on foot without delay.

This object, however, was not effected without much altercation and loss, both of time and funds, caused by a knowledge of the circumstance that a public body was the party desirous to purchase, which fact excited the avidity of a native broker, who had stepped in between the possessors of the ground and the society, in order to profit by the transaction at the cost of both. The amount which has been laid out in this purchase, will be given in the account of expenditure incurred in the general object. It will here be proper to state, that the ground fixed on for the garden forms a portion of a picturesque valley on the east side of the island, situated in the vicinity of the village of Sewree. This valley is formed between two ridges of moderate height. That on its west side extends between the village of Warala, near Matoonga and Chintzpoogie, in a direction nearly north and south. It is more elevated, and of greater extent, than the ridge on the opposite side of the valley, and the flag-staff hill of Parell forms a part of the same chain. The ridge which forms the east side of the valley separates the latter from the harbour. The north extremity of the valley expands into the plains which adjoin the district of Matoonga, and at its southern extremity it opens to the sea.

The Society's ground is situated immediately at the foot of the Parell flag-staff hill. Besides possessing a beautiful and extensive prospect it enjoys all the advantages of a good soil, which consists partly of a vegetable mould and of a rich loam, supported by a sub-soil of porous moorum which overlies the trap rock, of which the hills of the boundary ridges just mentioned are composed. The supply of water is abundant, and attainable by digging to the depth of 40 or 50 feet. The exposure is varied, and the situation well sheltered from the north-east and south-west wind, which during the seasons in which these respectively prevail, prove so noxious to vegetation, particularly to delicate plants.

The distance of this site from the fort was at first advanced as an objection to the choice, but the society determined that the local advantages of the spot, inasmuch as these were subservient to the future success of their plan, were sufficient to justify the preference and should be alone considered: for the distance could only affect a few individuals residing at one extremity of the island, whereas as a large proportion of members who might contribute to, and take great interest in this undertaking, resided at out-stations, and would alone look to the local advantages in reference to the essential object in view.

Moreover, a retired site, remote from the more densely peopled parts of the island, would confer many advantages, of which one only need be mentioned—that ground in such a situation could be purchased at a much more reasonable rate, and future additions to it, if required, could be more easily effected, than had it been situated nearer the fort.

The purchase was, after much delay, at length concluded, and the following plan of the objects to which the garden should be devoted was proposed to, and adopted by the society.

It is scarcely necessary to state here, that it was never the intention of the proposers, that the whole of the objects here after to be stated should be at once commenced upon, nor that the sketch of the plan should be implicitly followed by those who were to lay out the ground. The latter (the plan) was submitted chiefly with a view of illustrating, and conveying a more precise idea of the committee's proposal, than could be communicated in any other form; for to have determined on a working plan at the time the one in question was laid before the society, would have been premature.

It is proposed then to divide the garden into five departments, to be devoted to so many distinct objects.

The first of these will consist of a kitchen garden, in which every improvement in the culture of indigenous culinary vegetables, and the introduction of those of foreign countries, will be attended to. The superficial may be excited to underrate this humble object, and it had already excited the sneers of some. But the society, in order to merit public encouragement and support, must, if you will, stoop to be useful; for in this department it possesses the power of being more directly useful, than in any of the others embraced in its plans.

It is a fact well known to all inhabiting the island, that our vegetable market is generally very deficient both to the quality and variety of the vegetables which it supplies. With regard to vegetables of European origin, this inferiority cannot be attributed to any defect in climate or soil, for in the private gardens of gentlemen who possess a taste of this kind, vegetables of excellent quality are annually produced. The market growers are mostly unskilled or ignorant, and having no competition to contend against, they do not consider it worth the trouble or expense of improving the cultivation. If the society could throw into the market vegetables of superior quality, the market growers would be forced to learn that which the society would be glad to teach them—a better mode of cultivation, by which not only the quality of the produce might be improved, but the quantity might also be increased: and thus at the same time that the indulgences of the more opulent are augmented, the comforts and necessities of the poorer classes would be ministered to. That class of vegetables which forms the object of culinary cultivation, though considered in the light of luxury or superfluity in the diet of the rich, is the principal source from which the poorer and more wretched inhabitants of this island derive their sustenance, as the more nutritious dry grains constitute but a small proportion of their food. The indigent are obliged to have recourse to the coarsest, and frequently unwholesome, vegetables of this kind, such as the cucurbitaceous class, (gourds, pumpkins, melons, &c.) the Curcuma Amaranth tribes, and many others, whose rapid growth or bulk reduce their price, and form their only recommendation.

To render those vegetables of this class, which may possess more nutritious and more wholesome qualities, as low priced as the kinds above alluded to, at the same time that their cultivation might turn out equally profitable to the grower, will, it is anticipated, be accomplished by attention to this department. Every attention will likewise be directed to render the Indian horticulturist independent of other countries for his annual supply of garden seeds, by endeavouring to produce the seeds of the various exotic species here.

The second department of the garden will be devoted to the orchard which requires little explanation, as the same general objects will guide the operations of the society, here, as have been stated regarding the first department; viz. the improved culture of indigenous fruit trees, and the introduction and propagation of those of exotic origin.

It is proposed to devote the third division to a collection of those plants which yield what is generally known under the term colonial produce, and of those whose productions form articles of commerce, constitute the objects of agriculture, or are employed in the operations of rural industry; such as cotton, sugar, coffee, indigo, the spices, the grains, the grasses, &c. &c. The object in establishing this department is to procure from the countries that produce them the best varieties of the plants that form the object of this division, in order to propagate the same throughout the Presidency by transmitting seeds, &c. of plants growing in the society's garden, and already in a manner acclimatised, to those engaged in the cultivation of the different kinds. In this way the society will have it in their power to assist the practical cultivator, by supplying the means of trying, on a small scale, the advantages of any particular variety of the above productions; and if in consequence of such trial, he should determine to engage in the cultivation more extensively, the society may furnish him with information regarding the place, &c. whence the variety can be supplied, or even be the medium through their correspondents, of procuring the supply. In this way also the cultivator may be brought to a knowledge of the existence of varieties of foreign produce, possessing superior qualities, of which he might otherwise have remained ignorant; and he will thus have it in his power to make a preliminary trial as to its adaptation to his climate or soil which may prevent him incurring any unnecessary expense, in case of an unfavourable result.*

In this manner, and to this extent will the plans of the society contribute to the improvement and extension of the various kinds of culture in this Presidency. But there is a vague impression, that the society ought, or have it in their power, to engage itself in some particular cultivation on an extensive scale, that the public may derive the benefit of the experiment; but such a proposal is quite impracticable. No public body constituted as the Agricultural and Horticultural Society is, could engage in an undertaking of this kind with any reasonably prospect of success, or profit, either to themselves or the public. The failure of the Calcutta Society, in a project of this nature, ought to operate as a warning to us not to repeat the attempt here. The undivided attention of private speculators will ensure success, which the complicated and frequently changing management of a public society cannot accomplish: but if, in return for the facilities afforded by the society, the former would communicate the result of their operations for general publication the same benefit would result.†

The fourth department will form merely a subdivision of the last, and will be devoted to a collection of medicinal plants, particularly those used by the natives, and to plants which are employed in the arts and manufactures of this country, but which may not be produced in sufficient abundance to become objects of foreign trade—such as the plants used by the dyer, the tanner, &c. or those which furnish materials for cordage, and the like.

The fifth department, which completes the plan, must be considered only as an appendix to the garden to be brought into operation, when those of more practical importance shall be some what advanced. In this division it is proposed to assemble a complete collection of the plants which compose the indigenous Flora, or the uncultivated species of the Presidency to be arranged systematically. To accomplish this part of our plan, the members residing at out-stations will be able to lend material assistance, and native collectors will also be employed in the jungles at proper seasons to gather seeds, &c. this means new species of plants, may be added to the list of those already known to botanists, and the superfluous part of such collections will be received by foreign horticulturists in exchange for the productions of their respective countries.

A reference to the plan will convey a more clear idea of this scheme than can be communicated by description

* If gentlemen members of the society would kindly instruct their native gardeners to collect the ripe seeds of all plants as they came to maturity in their own gardens, and afterwards transmit them to the society's office to be sorted and named it would greatly facilitate the society's means of usefulness.

† An erroneous impression which appears to have got abroad, especially in the interior, it may not be irrelevant to notice in this place; namely, that a person by becoming a member of the society, (for which no other qualifications are necessary, than payment of the customary annual subscription and a desire to promote the common views of the associated), becomes entitled to a yearly supply of vegetable and flower seeds gratis, as if the society, by some unaccountable means or other, could obtain seeds, and those of the best description; moreover of the every kind, without cost or expense. The 9th rule on the formation of the society, provides that members are entitled to a reduction of 25 per cent, on the cost prices and charge to the society, which is as much as it can allow. Again, where seeds supplied do not vegetate, the society has to bear the blame of supplying worthless seeds, though the true cause of failure may rest in improper management by ignorant native mallees and others; their being exposed either to a damp or wet atmosphere or a close, confined, heated one resembling a ship's hold, will equally deteriorate them, if not completely destroy the vegetative principle. All seeds imported by the society, are tried previous to distribution either at the Presidency or up the country, and such only as are found to be good are distributed. This digression from the main subject of this report may be out of place, but it is equally necessary that it should be made known.

alone; it is only necessary to bear in mind, that those who are to execute it cannot be tied down by the present plan, which must be modified according to the habits of certain plants, or other essential particulars, which cannot be foreseen at this stage. The managers will, however, always keep in view to effect such an arrangement as will combine, as much as possible, ornament with utility. The leading features of the plan will likewise be preserved.

In carrying these plans into execution, the society must possess opportunities, which will not be neglected, of instructing native gardeners in all the operations of a better system of horticulture. To effect this it is proposed to enter lads as apprentices, who will be regularly brought up to the business of gardeners, and to the use of tools employed in European horticulture, or at least such modifications of these as will adapt them to the strength and habits of natives. At the expiry of their service, the lads will be furnished by the society with certificates as to their qualifications, and thus, in a short time, a class of persons, possessing qualifications superior to those who now follow the occupation of gardeners, will be placed at the service of the public.

Towards defraying the expense of the establishment, vegetables, fruits, &c. produced in the garden will be sent to the market. Of the curious, ornamental, and rare plants, nurseries will be formed, and the young plants will be sold.

From the above statement, the public will be able to judge how far the plan proposed will, if carried into operation, effect an object likely to confer many advantages on the community, and how far it is entitled to general support and encouragement. Without such support, all operations connected with the project must be interrupted for the present, and the cost as well as labour which have been already expended will be entirely lost; for an examination of the amount of donations received, compared with the expenditure, will show that the funds subscribed for this object, are entirely exhausted.

But no such unwillingness on the part of the public, is to be expected on this occasion, for in adopting the project of establishing a public garden, the society rather followed, than anticipated, the wishes of the community.

All that is wanting to insure the general support necessary, is a guarantee that the plans if the means are supplied, will be followed up. To secure this, the public must exercise over this establishment that control which it ought to possess over every institution that claims public support, or professes to be established for public good. Let them look to the managers (whose names are appended to the document) appointed by the society to execute their plans. Let them hold these gentlemen responsible for the activity of the establishment placed under their orders, and for the fair exercise of their own judgment in appropriating whatever resources they may receive for this object to the best advantage. Let periodical statements be called for, reporting progress, stating the difficulties when any of a serious nature are met with, and conveying any intelligence on this subject which may be considered interesting, for general information. Let the rules which have been drawn up for the guidance of the managers be examined, and any defects amended. Finally, let the plan itself, now set forth, be examined, and any suggestions for its improvement will be thankfully received both by the society and by the managers.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE ASIATIC SOCIETY.

Wednesday Evening, the 5th October, 1836.

The Rev. Dr. Mill, Vice-President, in the chair.

Lieutenants Newbold and S. Tickell, proposed at the last meeting, were balloted for, and duly elected Members of the Society.

Mr. Vincent Tregear, proposed at the last meeting, was, upon the favourable report of the Committee of Papers, unanimously elected an honorary member.

Mr. G. F. McClintock was proposed by Mr. Macnaghten, seconded by Dr. Mill.

The Secretary then read the Report of the Committee of Papers on Mr. C. Brownlow's proposition relative to the publication of the Atij Leila.

Resolved.—That the Society approve and adopt the Report of the Committee:—that it feels honored by Mr. Brownlow's desire to publish the works under its auspices; and that in addition to its own subscription, the prospectus shall be circulated among individual members, and the patronage of the Government shall be respectfully solicited to Mr. Brownlow's undertaking.

Library.

The following books were presented:—

A Discourse concerning the influence of America on the mind, being the Annual Oration delivered before the American Philosophical Society on the 18th October, 1823, by C. J. Ingersoll, Esq.—by the Society.

Notice Historique sur Charles Telfair, Esq. Fondateur de President de la Société d'Histoire Naturelle de l'île Maurice, &c. &c.; by Mr. Julien Des Jardins—by the Author.

Nouveaux Choix des Poesies Originales des Troubadours; by M. Raynouard—by the Author.

Opinions on various subjects, dedicated to the Industrious Producers; by Wm. Macbere, Esq.—by the Author.

The Indian Journal of Medical and Physical Science—by F. Corby, Esq. Editor.

Gay's Fables translated into Bengali Poetry, by Mahārāja Kali Kissen Behadur—by the Translator.

Conclusion of the Guldestah, or Nosegay of Pleasure by Mūsī Mannū Lāl—by the Author.

Map of the Indus River and of the neighbouring countries, from the recent surveys, compiled in the Surveyor General's Office—by Mr. Tassin.

Royle's Himalayan Botany, 9th part—from the book-sellers.

Read a letter from the treasurer of the Academy at Bordeaux, Mr. Dutrouilles, forwarding by the hands of Dr. Laverne a packet of seeds for the Botanic Garden of Calcutta and requesting in return such seeds from Tibet or other colder parts of India as are likely to thrive in France.

The seeds have been made over to Dr. Wallich, who will kindly reply on the subject to Bordeaux.

Literary and Antiquarian.

An account of some of the Petty States lying north of the Tenasserim Provinces, drawn up from the journals and reports of Dr. Richardson, was submitted by Mr. E. A. Blundell, Commissioner of these new provinces; also a sketch of Lubong, by the same.

Captain A. Cunningham, Engineers, A. D. C. presented to the Society the very extensive collection of statues and other specimens of Buddha sculpture discovered by him in his exploration of the well known monument or tope in the road between Ghazipur and Banares. The following note on these interesting relics was read.

"The stone figures, bas-reliefs, and inscriptions were all found near Sárnáth, a Buddhish monument about eight miles from Benares. The greater number were dug within a small space of 10 feet square, and nearly all in an upright position side by side. Along with them were 40 or 50 others now lying near Sárnáth, and which were left behind from their being of the same description as those now presented to the Society, and from their being in a less perfect state, and from their wanting inscriptions.

I learned from a villager, that when Jagat Singh, the Dewan of Cheth Singh, of Rajá Benares, was digging near Sárnáth for building materials for the ganj which now bear his name, his workmen lighted on a small temple the walls of which they carried away—and it was within that temple that these figures were then seen; but owing to some superstitious feelings on the part of the workmen, no steps were taken at the time for their removal.

The three seated female figures, one bearing an inscription, were found in the ruins of a small temple consisting of only two rooms, and the long bas-relief containing the allegator's heads was discovered in a stone tank 13 feet nine inches square, upon clearing away the rubbish from the pukka terrace which surrounded it.

I am induced to offer these figures to the Society, in the hope that the inscriptions upon their pedestals may be translated, and help to throw some light upon the Buddhish religion, as well as upon Sárnáth and the ruins of the different buildings in its neighbourhood.

The special thanks of the Society were voted to Capt. Cunningham for this valuable contribution to the Museum.

Physical.

The Secretary presented on the part of Mr. Dean, Assoc. Mem., some fine fossil specimens lately obtained by him from the bed or banks of the Jumna river.

Mr. Dean had maintained for some times an envoy to explore such parts of the river as he had not been able himself to examine. Out of the produce of this adventure he had selected the specimens now transmitted, because they served to settle the question of the existence of three animals in a fossil state, which had hitherto been doubtful,—or rather which had been for the first time advanced with hesitation from his former collections in the Jumna;—the camel, the buffalo, and the antelope.

They consist of the femur and cranium of the fossil buffalo, about one-sixth larger than the present race;—fragment of the femur of a camel; cores of the horns of an antelope, and waterworn portions of the horn of the axis.

To make the recognition of these fossils as clear as possible, Mr. Dean had placed side by side of each of the corresponding recent bone, so that no doubt could remain of their identity. The splendid discoveries in the Siválík range have meantime removed all uncertainty on the subject, and have even pointed out two distinct species in the fossil camel, on which a paper has just been printed in the Researches.

A paper by Messrs. Falconer and Cautley was submitted on the fossil bear of the Siválík range, with drawings pointing out variations from the existing species.

The knowledge of this animal is derived from two fine fragments of the head. The chief peculiarities are observable in the teeth, which are constructed more after the type of the higher carnivora than any other described species of the genus.

A paper entitled "Some remarks on the development of Pollen," was submitted by Dr. W. Griffith, Mad. Est.

Indications of a new genus of insectivorous birds—by Mr. B. H. Hodgson.

A table of the breadth, current, and depth of the river Satlej, from Hari-ke-patan to its junction with the Indus at Mithankot, was communicated by Capt. C. M. Wade.

Also a note on the spring of Lohand Khadr—by the same officer.

Two large cases containing fine collection of butterflies, moths and other insects from Silhet, was presented by Mr. George Loeb, C. S.

Observations concerning certain interesting phenomena manifested in individuals born blind, on their restoration to sight, were communicated by Dr. F. H. Brett.—Journal of the Asiatic Society for Sept.

REVIEW AT BENARES.

The Commander-in-Chief arrived at Benares on the evening of the 12th Oct., and reviewed the troops on the morning of the 13th. Owing to the lateness of his Excellency's arrival at Raj Ghat, and the delay of sending up orders, &c. the order for the brigade next morning was not circulated until 10 a. m.

The following is a programme of the spectacle, and it will be seen by the accompanying station order that his Excellency was highly pleased with the appearance and performance of troops:

1. Brigade in line receives the Commander-in-Chief.
2. The battalions break into columns of companies, right in front and close to $\frac{1}{2}$ distance, 15 paces between each. Pass round in quick time and close to ten paces.
3. The mass of battalion columns wheel into line of contiguous columns, change front to the left flank and deploy into line on the front company of the right battalion.
4. The brigade retires by companies from the left in rear of the right, covered by light infantry. Halt, fronts and wheel into line.
5. The brigade changes position in battalion columns to the left, covered by light infantry.
6. The brigade retires by companies from both flanks in rear of the centre. Fronts and forms line to the right.
7. The brigade retires in direct echelon of battalions from the left. Forms battalion squares on the centre sub-divisions.
8. Reforms echelon of lines, and forms line on the centre battalion and salute.

The manoeuvres were steadily performed, and with the exception of a little shuffling in the retiring in the rear of the centre, which must in some degree always take place the whole went off most brilliantly, and it is but justice to state that Colonel Costley performed his arduous task most satisfactorily, more especially as he had but a very short time to prepare owing to General White not having left Benares until the latter end of September. The following station order was published to the troops.

'The commanding officer has great pleasure in promulgating to the officers and troops under his command the unqualified approbation which his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief has been pleased to express regarding their appearance as well as their performance in brigade this morning, and which His Excellency has desired may be made known to all the troops both European and Native by their respective commandants.

'In executing the gratifying commands with which he has been honored, Lieut.-Colonel Costley is most happy to avail himself of the opportunity to offer his sincere thanks to commanding officers for their zealous exertions and unremitting attention to the discipline of their several regiments, a steady performance of which is ever certain—as in the present instance, to achieve a result so flattering to themselves and all under their command, and on which the commanding officer heartily congratulates them.

'In adverting to the merits of the officers composing the station staff, the commanding officer has been desired by His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief to express the assurance of his approbation, and in which the commanding officer finds it difficult to do justice to the individuals or to his own feelings upon the occasion.'

After inspecting the regiments personally, His Excellency returned to his boats, we understand, would set off on the 14th, for Sultaupore,—Englishman.

TOWN HALL THEATRE.

THE FRENCH DRAMATIC COMPANY.

LE NOUVEAU SEIGNEUR DU VILLAGE.

This is one of the old stock pieces of the Opera Comique, and a great favorite with the Parisians. Its dialogue is written in very choice French, and the music, is by the celebrated Boieldieu. It is in every respect a very pleasing little piece.

The incidents are few, and of the most ordinary nature. But the skill with which the characters are drawn, the beauty of the music, and the point, wit and epigram of the dialogue, have placed this little opera, high in the scale of dramatic and lyric merit.

The Nouveau Seigneur is expected in his village, which has just been made over to him by the Ancien Seigneur, his uncle. The Bailli (a sort of chief of this small municipality, magistrate and so forth) has conned an oration by way of welcome to be delivered in the presence, on the day of the advent of the Nouveau Seigneur. The day previous to that on which he is expected, sees the entry into the village of an illustrious stranger.

Blaise, a stupid peasant, in love with Babet, accosts him—takes him for his Lord and produces a bottle of chambertin 10 years old, the drinking of which by the new comer is the vehicle for an exceedingly comic duett between the two. The wine, and the attention of Blaise, induce the fresh arrival to admit his identity, and that of the Nouveau Seigneur to be one and the same. Blaise solicits his favour, and one of his farms, the obtaining of which is a condition precedent with the Bailli, for the promise of the hand of his niece, the fair Babet. Babet, however, loves not Blaise, but Colin. The news of the arrival of the great man, circulates in the village—the Notables come headed by the Baillif and the presumed Nouveau Seigneur, after graciously receiving their homage, condescends to ask them all to a petite fête, and Grand Dîner, which, under the circumstances of his sudden arrival, and want of preparation, is furnished by the Bailli and the Notables of the Place, who are too delighted to have the honour conferred upon them. The great man in the mean time, exhibits a penchant for the pretty Babet, and promises the farm to Blaise, simply because Blaise is an ass, and Colin the preferred suitor of Babet, a sharp and good-looking fellow. At about this stage of the proceedings, the illustrious unknown, in a soliloquy, discovers to the audience that he is only Frontin the valet, and not the Marquess, the real Nouveau Seigneur, and while calculating the results of his impertinent assumption of his Lord's character, and devising expedients to pacify, and propitiate his injured master, who has a spice of the devil about him, comes the Bailli with twelve thousand francs in gold of the rents and profits of the estate, and begs to pay them over at once to their owner. This is a fearful temptation to poor Frontin: however, his honesty triumphs, and he refuses the money and rushes out. The arrival of another stranger then creates a sensation in the village, and he gives himself out, to the poor despairing lovers, Colin and Babet, who first see him as the homme d'affaire of the Nouveau Seigneur, having previously learnt from their discourse, that the Nouveau Seigneur was already arrived.

It is needless to observe that the last comer is the real Nouveau Seigneur. He promises to say a word for Colin and Babet, but without disclosing his real character to them, and subsequently enters the banquetting room, at the moment when Frontin in all his glory is presiding at the entertainment. His appearance strikes the Valet all of a heap—some pretty music ensues—and Colin gets the farm and marries Babet, and the piece concludes with a chorus, epithalamium, and all that sort of thing.

UNE VISITE A BEDLAM.

The Count Alfred de Rouval, is married to the Countess Amelie, the Count is a Colonel of Dragoons, very young and very gay.

Amelie, is lovely and slightly exigent: she mistakes gaiety, and volatility in her Lord, for neglect, and want of affection; and this young couple become in time estranged. The Count goes to travel, and the Lady comes to stay with an uncle, the Baron, who has a charming retreat in Surrey in the vicinity of Bedlam, (probably his Chateau is the present Elephant and Castle.)

In this shady retreat she discloses to the Baron the desertion she experiences from de Rouval: for 11 long months she has not set eyes on him, and she announces her intention never to see him again. By the greatest chance in the world, the Count takes London in his travels, and wanting to see Bedlam, is taken to the residence of the Baron, by the Baron's contrivance, and there sees, as he is told the charming Amelie in a state of insanity, a second Nina Pazzi per amore, and all on his account: this sight of course makes the Count very wretched and his misery is not a little enhanced by his finding his wife greatly improved, both in accomplishment and in beauty. He is about to be very wretched indeed, when he discovers, through Crescendo, a fantastic Italian musico, that Amelie is not mad, but on the contrary his favorite pupil, and sings like Malibran, or Grisi; then commences a sort of Rowley in for an Oliver on the part of the Count.

He becomes mad in his turn, and after two or three amusing scenes, the young people make up their quarrels and the piece in consequence terminates. This is one of the thousand and one pieces of the Prolific Eugene Scribe. The dialogue is exceedingly pleasant.—Hurkaru.

As we gave above a tolerably full analysis of these pieces, we have to only now to inform our readers, that they were very well enacted. The audience improves at each representation, both in numbers and in fashion, and we have to congratulate the artistes on this particular, that we have observed that when once seen their additional visitors invariably constitute a portion of the audience of the ensuing performance; this shews, that the visit originally, made perhaps to gratify curiosity, is now repeated, on account of the merit of the performers, and the general attraction of the bill of fare. We were gratified to see Lord Auckland and the Misses Eden honour the performance with their presence.

In the first piece Fleury was excellent, and Fradin made the most of the insignificant part of Blaise. The duett between these two, respecting the bottle of Chambertin, was very comic.

Male. de Ligny represented most effectively, the pretty and naive Babet: her Romance, oui vous avez des droits superbes, was much applauded.

Fleury was transformed for the occasion into the Gentil Colin, and looked the part very well. In the second piece Fleury was an exceedingly amusing funatico per la Musica, Fradin a most vivacious Count, and Madame de Lagny a very interesting Countess Amelie; her acting throughout the last piece was greatly applauded: it was a delicate-lady like, and wittal, highly effective performance. We were happy to observe that M. Fradin, had in some measure recovered his voice; we are told that when in the full enjoyment of it, this gentleman as a tenor singer exhibits musical qualifications of no mean order.—Hurkaru.

LE COIFFEUR ET PERUQUIER.

The dramatic personae of this Vaudeville (which by the way was played one or twice, by the last French Company,) are Poudret a peruke maker of the old school, who is the Caxton of the Antiquary, to a Mons. Desroches, who is his Monkbarns. His being one of the three, which the hand of innovation has left to Poudret for his daily occupation and solace. He is an enthusiast in wigs, and mourns over the decline and fall of his art.

Marius sitting amongst the ruins of Carthage, is a scarcely more affecting picture, than is Poudret pouring over, and plotting papillotes, on the last of the wigs.

The next character of importance is Alcibiades, one of the new school, a degenerate pupil, and successful rival of Poudret. He is young and ambitious, and has no respect or predilection for wigs, but a strong penchant for Julia, a niece of Poudret to whom the cher uncle promises 20,000 francs, if she marry with his consent.

Mademoiselle Desroches, the sister of Mons. Desroches, is an antiquated damsel, with an exceedingly inflammable imagination, and a heart formed of the most melting materials: there is a ridiculous scene or two between herself and Alcibiades, whose presence greatly prejudices the lady's reputation in the eyes of her staid brother, whom Poudret by mistake has innoculated with the notion, that Alcibiades is her lover, whereas he gets into the house for the purpose of communicating with Julia. He however is compelled, in order to maintain his ground, to make love to Mademoiselle Deroches, and to dress her and Mons. Deroches' hair, during which Poudret enters, and exhibits a great deal of comical fury, at seeing two of his triumvirate of wigs, in the revolutionized hands of his hated rival. After some little explanations, however, matters are made up, and Alcibiades marries Julia, and her 20,000 francs.

UNE AFFAIRE D'HONNEUR.

Mr. Mathieu is a good, easy man, in comfortable circumstances, and lives with his wife and a very pretty daughter in Paris. They go a family party to the play, but from the crowded state of the house, are compelled to separate, the two ladies sit in one part of the Theatre, and Mons. Mathieu in the orchestra. He shortly enters into conversation with his neighbour in whom he discovers the son of an old friend who resides in the hideous little Town of Caudebec in Normandy. Mons. Mathieu determines to marry his daughter to the young man, and points her out to him as a stranger; the young gentleman at a glance becomes enamoured, and is lavish in praises of her loveliness. Mons. Mathieu disputes his taste, and denies her claim to admiration; as a natural consequence of which, Arnaud, the lover, calls him out. Mons. Mathieu, whose object of getting the young man to his house, is thus attained, gives his address and what purports to be his name, and appoints the following morning for the meeting. The name given however is Blousac, which belongs of right to an individual resident in the same house with Mons. Mathieu, who is in reality the very 'best of cut throats,' and has a terrible duelling reputation. The fatal morning dawns, and Arnaud presents himself at the house of Mons. Mathieu, equipped and eager for the fray. Mons. Mathieu declines fighting before breakfast, and Arnaud, himself, his wife and daughter, who then appear, sit down. The duel now is out of the question with Arnaud and love, mighty love, occupies his breast. Mathieu leaves the lovers together, and then commence his tribulations, which constitute the main incidents of this Vaudeville. He first encounters Arnaud, second a Marechal Ferraut of Dragons—endowed largely with the qualifications and taste peculiar to the class he belongs to—that is to say, he is as brave as Julius Caesar as Mr. Bacon the quondam Ice Secretary would say, as quarrelsome as my young Mistress's dog, and one who taketh delight in wine, was-sail, and one or two other things not worth mentioning.

Mons. Mathieu no sooner gets rid of him, than he is exposed to an arrest, in as much as Arnaud is not forthcoming at his lodgings, and he is known to have an affair with Blousac, the famous duellist, for whom the police take Mathieu. After much amusing perplexity, an explanation at length takes place, the young people of course marry, and the piece concludes.—Hurkaru.

Why, oh! Why not give us an opera as before? The two VAUDEVILLES were presented on Monday the 24th Oct. to a very thin house. UNE AFFAIRE D'HONNEUR, is, we trust, une affaire finie, at least for some time. Twice about six weeks, is once too many—toujours perdrix falls upon the palate, and even a French vaudeville, though light and pleasant as an omelette soufflée, may, by too much exposure, become flat and flaccid; the cream of these trifles, should ever be flavoured with the gusto of novelty it is apt else, to curdle on the public taste. Having delivered ourselves of this confectioner's criticism, we proceed to observe, that le compere Mathieu (Fleury) was the atlas of the piece; he bore the whole weight upon his own shoulders and supported his burthen very successfully: but there was no part for Fradin. This is not as it should be; we should have rejoiced to have had an opportunity of seeing what he would have made of the Marechal Ferrant. Arnaud would have been a nice part for Monsr. Charles. Sivord was respectable. There was present in this piece, a very odd looking member of the French executive authorities, to wit a Police Serjeant of la jeune France; his appearance made quite a sensation—we were at once reminded of Fieschi, Alibeu, the Porte St. Denis, and the Luxembourg Palace; visions of slaughtered Marshals, of proces monstres, of monarchs imperturbable, even in the air gun's mouth, and Mrs. Trollope's young men, her "Tapageurs en blouse," who bearded like pards at close of day, assemble in troops, and howl forth the hymns of liberty,—all these floated in dioramic procession before our aching sight. The police serjeant, like some of the greatest improvements in machinery, was perhaps the result of accident. Monsieur de la Jarriete appeared quite unconscious of his own distinguished merit—modesty and genius are ever hand in hand.

LE COIFFEUR ET LE PERRUQUIER, was a humorous piece enough, and of Fleury and Fradin, the Poulret and Alcibiade of the play, it is difficult to say which was most amusing. Poudret, the Conservative, the Winchelsea of wig-makers, loves nothing but his art; Alcibiade in a red satin waistcoat and handkerchief to match, with a coat calculated to give Nugee or Willis a fit of hysterics, loves nothing but himself. He is of the movement party amidst the knights of the comb and scissors, and the quarrel between these two worthies, touching their respective politico-professional opinions, was a very admirable piece of burlesque, and convulsed the lookers on with laughter.

We hope, however, that no reasons will in future interfere, to prevent the artistes from giving us operas: one or two of those already played would bear repetition—the Calife for instance or the Chaperon Rouge and, as Messrs. Bonniol and Welter are now on terms with their comrades, the public ought to profit by the reconciliation. Mere vaudeville will not do; besides, the little operas which they can get up, are quite as good acting pieces as the vaudevilles, and have all the musical merit and attraction to boot.—Hurkaru.

THE KING'S WORD.

The junction effected on Wednesday the 12th Oct. between the respective forces, of the French Artistes, and the English amateurs, headed by Mrs. Leach, made a decided impression upon the public. We were very happy to observe, that the numbers of the spectators had very considerably increased, and having once seen and heard the French Company, we have little doubt, but that they will be constant visitors for the future. Lord Auckland and the Misses Eden were present.

The business of the evening commenced with 'The King's Word.' This petite comedy, as the advertisements called it, was in truth a very small affair indeed; plot, incident and dialogue considered, we thought it very sufficient nonsense. It was, however, very creditably performed by the amateurs, and Mrs. Leach. The decided comic powers of the amateur who played the Sheriff, enabled him to make his part tell with the audience—but Martin, although in able hands, was a rather dull personage, and even Mrs. Leach could make but little of Catharine—in fact, both the one and the other, are unplayable parts. The same may be said of the part of the King, who wore a very pretty 'orange tawney' dress, and a most unexceptionable wig. 'The King's Word' is a clumsy version of a little French Vaudeville, called Tu n'as le pendu, which was played at the Varietés in 1834. Jenni Colon was the Catharine, and the principal merit of the French piece, consists in a pretty French ballad, sung by this accomplished actress, and one or two other musical pieces introduced; all of which, being omitted in the English version, reduce the king's word to, but a sorry affair.

LE TRESOR SUPPOSE.

Is an opera of Daleyrac. Some of the music is very pretty—and the piece gave great scope for the exhibition of the powers of those two very clever comedians, M. M. Fradin and Fleury. The story is of somewhat ancient materials, as are also the names of the characters; to those familiar with the Old French comedy, the names themselves would almost tell the story. Crispin, Geronte, Dorval, Lisette, Lucille. Now Crispin has, time out of mind, been the name of all roguish and intriguing valets; your Geronte is invariably an old man, with a pretty niece, and who is to be victimised by the plotting, and roguery of the Crispins, eked out by the tact and espréglerie, of the Lisettes, the Mr. Abigail of the French stage; and the Dorvals, and Lucilles are levers, and the masters and mistresses of the Crispins, and the Lisettes, and their union is the invariable result of the good offices of their servants. The plot of the Tresor Supposé, calls into play, the above attributes of the above names. Geronte is a miser, with a pretty niece and ward Lucille, who is in love with Dorval, who as a matter of course is poor, and therefore forbidden the house by Geronte. Crispin and Lisette, lay their heads together, and trick Geronte, into the purchase of the house of Dorval, his only remaining property, by inducing the old man to suppose that in the cellars, are certain treasures, the existence of which is unknown to Dorval. He, Geronte, forthwith contracts with Dorval to give him 150,000 francs for the domicile. The hoax is then disclosed, and Dorval consents to take Lucille in lieu of the purchase money. The lovers marry and the curtain falls.

Madame de Ligny sang her airs very prettily, and her soubrette was a very good piece of acting; we were much struck by a very odd, but very agreeable quartett, in the first act, sung by Madame de Ligny, Mademoiselles Fleury, Fradin and Monsr. Charles. It was very much and deservedly applauded. We shall, in conclusion, permit ourselves to observe, that there was a singular absence of homogeneity, in the costumes exhibited in this opera; Fradin and Fleury were in the costumes of the beginning of the 16th century, while Monsr. Charles and Mademoiselle Fleury were dressed very much like the ladies and gentlemen, who now flourish and adorn this present nineteenth century, and this very year of grace 1836. This should, if possible, be avoided for the future.—Hurkaru.

KETTLY.

This an exceedingly pretty vaudeville. Kettly, the heroine, is a young Swiss girl, very beautiful, very natural, and slightly sentimental, in love even to desperation with Senneville, a young French officer. She is the daughter of Frans, a veteran of the French armies, who having left the service, inhabits a chalet in a Swiss valley.

Madame Werner his neighbour, is the proprietress of the hotel of the village, and well to do in the world. Her son Rutli, is a prodigious blockhead, with considerable conceit and a total absence of all penetration. He has a liking for Kettly, and as a natural consequence, according to his calculation, the liking is mutual. Senneville at the time the piece opens, arrives after an absence of two years. He describes himself as a young gentleman who had been jilted by his mistress, and his object in re-visiting Switzerland, is to moralize and sketch landscapes by way of consolation. His first encounter on his arrival is with Kettly, whom he fails to recognize, very much to the disappointment of the poor girl, and after some pretty scenes with her, and her father, and Rutli, he undertakes, at the instance of Rutli, to interfere with Madame Werner and obtain her consent; Rutli having persuaded himself, Frans his mother, and lastly Senneville, that Kettly is dying for love of him, and that nothing is wanting to their union, but the consent of his mother, who opposes the match on account of the poverty of Frans. Senneville offers to remove this obstacle, by giving Kettly a marriage portion of 4,000 thalers; Madame Werner consents. The distress of Kettly is beyond description, and in the intensity of her affliction, she discloses in the prettiest manner possible her affection for Senneville. Senneville, upon whom during all this time, the grace, naiveté, beauty, and ingenuousness of the young girl, had worked their due effects, is delighted, finds himself deeply in love and the piece concludes with the marriage of these two amiable specimen of humanity.

LES PREMIERES AMOURS.

Is also an exceedingly pretty vaudeville. Emmeline and Rainville are cousins, have been brought up together, and as children had exchanged tokens and love passage. The cousin Rainville, however after leaving his uncle's house in pursuit of his studies, and of fortune, turns out at last to be a very decided mauvais sujet, gets himself into all sorts of scrapes, draws bills upon his uncle, and finally his name is forbidden. After a lapse of three or four years, his approaching return is announced in a letter to his uncle, who is not much edified by the intelligence.

He had fixed upon a neighbour for the husband of his daughter; and his first visit is expected about the time fixed by the nephew for his re-entry under the uncle's roof. Emmeline is on the tip-toe of expectation; when a very prepossessing gentleman presents himself. She at once takes him for her cousin, and under this impression, communicates all the little secrets, &c. which were common to herself and her cousin. The confidant who happens to be the proposed Futur, is on thorns lest the communications should disclose any 'untoward event' in these love doings, he having at first sight yielded to the charms of Emmeline.

Her vivacity and his amiable reception by her, induce him to confess himself the cousin. Rainville mean while arrives, having been preceded by sundry dishonoured bills of exchange, and unfortunate creditors, and the disclosure of his irregularities, procures much lecturing on the part of Emmeline, who reproaches her innocent lover, with all the follies, perfidies, and irregularities of her dissipated cousin. These equivoques, constitute the grand incidents of the piece, which terminates by the marriage of Emmeline and the prepossessing gentleman, the choice of her father, whilst Monsieur Rainville is kicked out of doors, as an incorrigible vagabond.

MICHEL ET CRISTINE.

Of this piece we do not happen to recollect anything, and we have not been able to lay our hands on the book. These vaudevilles, well enacted as they certainly will be, will afford a very delightful evening's entertainment.

The Audience was thin, Lord Auckland was not present, and the Orchestra was composed of a brace of fiddles, and yet we never saw an audience better pleased, nor Vaudevilles more correctly or successfully performed.

In Michel et Cristine, Fradin as Michel, was admirable, and of Madame de Ligny, both as to the beauty, and freshness of her costume, and the delicacy, discrimination and pathos of her acting, too much cannot be said. She was the heroine of the night, the three Vaudevilles, were for her so many well fought fields, from which she triumphantly bore off the suffrages of her spectators. The approbation of this lady's acting was unanimous. She has evidently been hitherto labouring under the effects both of timidity and indisposition, neither were perceptible in her singing on Friday evening, and in spite of the meagre fiddle accompaniment, the airs she sung were greatly applauded.

As Cristine in the first piece, and as Emmeline in the second, (les premieres amours) she displayed much natural and comic humour; but as Kettly, the innocent, the tender, faithful, and romantic Kettly, with her pretty Swiss costume, and her mountain purity of sentiment, her honest, ingenious and unsophisticated emotions, with all this, and with Fradin as her Senneville to play up to her, Madame de Ligny's representation of Kettly was one of the most agreeable and attractive pieces of acting we have seen for some time past. Fleury made his appearance in les premieres amours as the dissipated cousin Charles, (we called him Rainville in our notice by mistake, our sketch of the Vaudeville was given from memory) a sort of Roué de la Bourgeoisie, a Charles Surface of the diddling classes, his coat, hat, and inexpressibles, were in themselves sufficient to make the part, but his acting, was even more amusing than his coat, hat and pantaloons. It is really dismal to see all this talent, exerted with such doubtful prospects of remuneration, but however much we may lament the fact, we fear, unless some means can be discovered, to induce people to go, and look at, and listen to, what they do not understand, that matters will remain in this respect in statu quo; quite certain are we, that Vaudeville alone will not do. But we see no reason why their operas should not be well patronized, the music is the identical music, which fills nightly, Opera House in London, and the Académie Royale in Paris, which delights the nobility of Vienna, and the public of Berlin. The works of Auber, Bellini, Mayerbeer, and Weber, have as much merit, or at any rate, as much present popularity, as the compositions of Rossini, Generali, &c., Spontini has his admirers all over Europe, and Spontini has composed several grand French operas. The present French Company when united can present to the public, the productions of these masters, and the patrons of the Italian artists, to whom good music was their inducement, will probably from the same motive, support the French. The amount of remuneration for their exertions, to be anticipated by them, is, it is true, not very great, and from their numbers, the sums individually appropriated to each number of the operatic corps, must of necessity be smaller than those shared by the Italians. But we believe that the Italians did contrive to save something, say three or four thousand rupees each, and with this prospect, at the end of two seasons, and considering that they can do nothing better, we shall we suppose have to congratulate Calcutta, on still possessing an opera. A luxury, enjoyed we believe by no other colony either of Great Britain or of any other European state, and this surely is a distinction worth something? Independently of which, Doctor Burney in his history of music, treats at some length of the influence of the cultivation of music, and the diffusion of musical knowledge on the morals of a people. The harmony, order, and regularity of private and domestic life, is greatly promoted and enhanced by the indulgence in this innocent, exciting, and rational recreation. . . . But this is rather a propos de bottles, to a critique on a Vaudeville, we therefore for the present, time and space considered, deem it advisable to bring our observations to a conclusion.—Hurkaru.

MRS. LEACH'S SOIREE.

Curiosity to see and hear Mdlle Léméry, the admitted vocal powers of Fleury, the leading capabilities of Thonon, and the magnetic qualities of Mrs. Leach and her little band of amateurs, attracted a very considerable body of society to the Town Hall on Monday the 31st Oct. The rapid succession of the several species of entertainments announced, the precision with which they followed one upon another, in pursuance of the terms of the advertisement, and we will say, the faultless mode in which each separate performance was presented, do the greatest credit to the arrangements of the presiding genius of the evening—we should in gallantry have said divinity; for we presume Mrs. Leach was "stage manager" for the nonce. Of the first overture we can say nothing, not having been present, but to judge from the manner in which the second was executed we should suppose it must have been excellent. The pains-taking industry, patience, and judgement of Monsr. Thonon, are too apparent in the results upon his orchestra to need any comment from us—the execution of the overture to Robert le Diable, which we heard, was almost faultless. "The Loan of a Lover," was a laughter moving affair, and every body appeared to admit, that the Peter Shingle of the piece, was at the same time a Peter the Great. The grand attraction of the evening, succeeded the exhibition of Peter and his whimsicalities; Mademoiselle Léméry made her début, and rushed in the "grim repose" of criticism,—the dilettante and connoisseurs, crowded the openings between the first, second, and third pillars. The scena from Massaniello, was very cleverly executed by this lady: there was a little of timidity, and the effect produced on the audience, although amounting to a decided "sensation," was somewhat marred by this very natural consequence upon a first appearance. We shall take leave to observe in addition, that the scena was ill-selected. The music which people are here familiar with, is of the Italian school; and in as much as Mdlle. Léméry is a decided vocalist, of a very good school, and with very considerable capabilities, she would have done better to have thrown off, with Una Voce, or the scena from La Gazza Ladra; either of these executed in the style, we are quite assured, her powers would enable her to do, would have gone straight home to the hearts, sympathies, and tastes, of the patrons and magnates in the Calcutta musical world. In her second song, which was from the Calife, her timidity had disappeared, and we are enabled, as far as hearing two songs, will qualify us for the task to present our unlearned notions on the musical qualifications of Mdlle. Léméry.

Her voice is a soprano, of considerable power, and of very remarkable sweetness, very high and under complete management; she slips down the chromatic scale, very much in the style of Sontag: we doubted her flexibility of voice in the first scena, but our doubts vanished during her execution of the second—her method is pure, and her taste correct: she is, in a word, an exceedingly fair specimen of the new French school,—a school which, to our unprofessional observation, borders very closely on the Italian. Madame Centi Domoreau has given the lead and tone to this new system, and she is pupil of Bordogni, one of the most finished Italian tenors we have ever heard. The style and voice, and floriture of Mdlle. Léméry, reminded us greatly of Centi; and we very much regret, for the sake of this lady and her corps operatique, that she did not sing something Italian—on the next occasion we hope she may. The patrons of the opera, will at once rally round her. The largo al factotum of Fleury, shewed at least that he can sing Italian music; but French words to Italian compositions are an abomination, and the next time we hear this scena, we hope he will adopt the original words.

Of Master Modus and Mrs. Leach, in the last piece, we have heard great things, we were unfortunately not present, and can therefore say nothing. The audience appeared greatly amused. Lord Auckland and the Misses Eden were present.—Hurkaru.

MR. WILLIAMS'S DECEPTIONS.

On Friday the 30th Sept. there was a muster of persons at the Town Hall, brought together by the magic wand of Mr. Williams.

Brightly and benignly did the planetary influences shed their favouring rays, on the head of their devoted worshipper. There was much of magic; and the adept, exhibited himself also in the useful character of an exorcist, a caster out of devils. An unfortunate person was possessed of a devil, in the shape of a bottle of claret. The evil spirit to judge from appearances, worked most uncomfortably in the inward man of the recipient, and the conjuror coming to his relief, proceeded to cast out the fiend, who at the word of command came forth, at the elbows, and thorax of him possessed, and went out, not into an herd of swine, but simply into a glass tumbler or two. There was also a little boy, who sang, and danced a hornpipe, and the whole concluded with a pleasant representation of certain celebrated statues, by a gentleman in a slate-pencil coloured garment, mounted on a box, in front of a black back ground, to an accompaniment of slow music. The audience seemed mightily pleased: there were a great many baboos present.—Hurkaru.

In this age of the march of intellect, there are many persons who esteem it somewhat beneath their dignity as rational beings, to countenance by their presence, the tricks of a conjuror. A feeling of this nature, perhaps, was the cause that Mr. Williams's performances have been so little patronized by the higher circles of Calcutta. At his farewell benefit, on Friday last, there was a very considerable attendance of those who in the cantphrase of the elect are said to be "not in society," but of the members of the services and of the upper ranks of the classes independent of the Government, there was but a very thin sprinkling indeed. This, however, was of little importance to the performer, for four rupees from the humblest individual in the land are quite as valuable as the same sum from the Governor-General himself. We should guess, that there were about four hundred persons present, and as Mr. Williams' audience was not swallowed out to a delusive show of encouragement by a number of free tickets, he must have been pretty well paid for his single evening's exertions. We heard several persons expressing an indignant regret, that the French performances should receive so little public patronage, while such crowds should throng to learn how a conjuror can jabber a cog Latin, and cheat their eyes by the quickness of his hands. We are not quite sure, that these men of taste view the matter in a fair and proper light. In the first place, the French performances are more expensive; in the second place, they are unintelligible to by far the largest portion of the British-Indian public, and in the third place, a European conjuror is a much greater novelty here than a European actor. Let no Thespian hero envy the poor conjuror. If the latter's first appearance is more attractive, wonder being a brief sensation and not to be repeated by the same means, his influence upon the public mind is far less permanent than that of the actor, whose performances even rise in interest as we become more acquainted with his genius. A more lamentable trade than that of a conjuror can hardly be conceived. He is compelled to lead a life as unsettled as that of the Wandering Jew, for he cannot take up any fixed quarters without a sad sacrifice of his greatness. He cannot hope to become the established favorite of an audience. The sooner he turns his back upon those the better for his reputation and his purse. His brief occasional successes can never excite any reasonable expectation of a permanent livelihood. Let those who are indignant at the idea of a conjuror having collected in the Town Hall some sixteen hundred rupees, recollect the precariousness of his profession. Besides the drawbacks already alluded to, he is exposed to others too numerous to mention. There is a story in Goldsmith's Citizen of the World that may partly illustrate remarks. A conjuror and a tailor once happened to converse together. "Alas," cries the tailor, "what an unhappy poor creature am I; if people should ever take it in their heads to live without clothes I am undone. I have no other trade to have recourse to." "Indeed, friend, I pity you sincerely," replied the conjuror, "but thank heaven, things are not quite so bad with me; for if one trick should fail, others may succeed. If at any time you are reduced to beggary apply to me, and I will relieve you." A famine overspread the land. The tailor contrived to live because people could not well go naked, but the unhappy conjuror found that it was in vain that he promised to eat fire or vomit pins, and he was at last obliged to solicit the charity of the very tailor whose calling he had formerly despised.

It would be difficult to give an exact account of all the feats of legerdemain performed by Mr. Williams, for they occurred in such rapid succession that we should be afraid to trust very implicitly to our memory. We will, however, mention a few of the most striking. A lady in the company drew a card from the pack. This a gentleman was desired to tear into as many pieces as he pleased and to mark the identity of the card by keeping one of the bits. The gentleman at the direction of the conjuror then placed all the pieces (with the exception of the single fragment just mentioned) in the barrel of a loaded pistol. The pistol was fired against a board and lo, the card entire, with the exception of the identifying fragment, appeared upon the board which was taken down and handed round the company with the reserved fragment which precisely corresponded with the fracture in the card. A gentleman then took seven pice in his hand and after counting them very carefully grasped them closely. He was desired to say how many he would like that seven to become. He answered, thirteen. He opened his hand and found the number he desired. A lady's pocket handkerchief was then taken and after wrapping up a card in it the handkerchief and card are both cut to pieces by a gentleman who stuffed them into a pistol. They were fired off into the air. A few minutes afterwards a quart bottle was broken open and the handkerchief and card were restored entire with the exception of the bit of the latter preserved for its identification. A lady's wedding ring was rammed into a pistol by a gentleman present and fired off. The conjuror then presented a box containing boxes within boxes, in the last of which was the ring. There were a great variety of similar tricks which were, as the advertisement described them "seeming impossibilities." A native friend who stood near us, insisted that there was some supernatural agency in the matter, and when we smiled at his credulity, he enquired if there were not accounts in the Bible of persons who had worked miracles through the assistance of the devil. He alluded, he added, to the magicians of King Pharaoh who in imitation of Moses, turned rods into serpents and water into blood, and brought up frogs on the land of Egypt. Not being theologians or metaphysicians we did not attempt to pursue the conversation by entering upon questions that have puzzled far wiser heads than the one upon his shoulders or our own.—Hurkaru.

SUPREME COURT.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 22, 1836.

This was the first day of term. The Chief Justice, Mr. Justice Grant, and Mr. Justice Malkin took their seats on the Bench at 11 o'clock.

Motions of course were heard, after which the Chief Justice, intimated that the Admiralty Sessions had been adjourned to this-day.

Mr. Clarke as counsel for the Malay prisoners then rose, and stated that in as much as the Court had intimated its intention to confine him in his argument in arrest of judgment, strictly to matters appearing on the record, he could not adopt the line of argument, which he had understood had been left open to him by Mr. Justice Grant, and he therefore abandoned his motion in arrest of judgment.

The Chief Justice then adjourned the Admiralty sessions to the last day of term, and stated that the delay in pronouncing sentence on the Malay prisoners, arose out of certain references on questions on points in this case having been made to Government, to which the judges had not yet received an answer. The Court then rose and will proceed regularly on Monday with contested motions, and the other usual business.

MONDAY, OCTOBER 24.

Woomeschunder Paul Chowdry, and another v. Isserchunder Paul Chowdry and others.

In this case Mr. Clarke as counsel for Woomeschunder, had in the month of August last, obtained an order nisi, to discharge for irregularity, the order obtained by the defendant Isserchunder on the 2d of June, 1835, and that the several attachments which had issued against the complainant, in the months of January and February, 1836, and all subsequent proceedings had thereon, be set aside with costs; and that the complainant, and all parties having any interest under the decretal order made by the Court in the original cause, be at liberty to proceed before the Master in reference to the decretal order, &c. &c.

The Advocate General, with whom was Mr. Leith, now shewed cause against this rule.

The decretal order had been made in February one thousand eight hundred and fourteen, and was in substance a decree for partition of the lands, and for an account of the rents and profits, and of the personal estate of Kistnoochunder Paul Chowdry, the father of the complainant and defendant. Kistnoochunder died on the 6th of November, 1809, leaving one widow and 4 sons, Premchunder and Isserchunder by one mother, Woomeschunder and Ruttonchunder by another. To the two eldest, Premchunder and Isserchunder, he gave by will a ten annas share of the property: to the complainant and Ruttonchunder a six annas share. The suit was instituted in April 1813. The decree was made in February 1814, since which time the opposing members of this family have been fighting one another without intermission. The estate at the time of the death of Kistnoochunder, is stated in the bill to have been worth seventy lacs of rupees: partition has been made of the lands, but the account of the rents and profits from 1809 to 1826, and of the personal estate, still remains in the Master's office, and no report has been yet made, in consequence of the obstacles mutually thrown in each other's path, by the litigant parties. Isserchunder, as the surviving executor of his father's will, has had all along, possession of the personal estate; and up to the year 1826, collected the rents, issues and profits of the real property, and carried on in the joint family name the trade, which was very extensive.

During the progress of the causes, several orders had been made upon Isserchunder for the payment of his costs to Woomeschunder, out of the estate which he held as executor; the orders to this effect are very numerous, and so far back as 1826, and continue down to the 2d June 1835, when Isserchunder obtained the order for clearing all his contempts, on depositing with the master certain title deeds by way of security, to abide the balance if any should appear against him by the Master's report, on the termination of the taking of the account. It was contended against the order of Mr. Clarke, that no irregularity had been committed in obtaining the order of the 2d June, and that he, Isserchunder, ought not to have been in contempt for not producing the books of accounts of the zemindaries, and the trading because the complainant, by his own wrongful act, had put it out of the power of the defendant, to comply with the order of the Court, for the bringing in of the books. The wrongful act complained of was the surrounding of the defendant's house, by the Sheriff and his posse comitatus, in the execution of sundry processes of contempt against him, the breaking in, and taking his property, under writs of sequestration, and the carrying away all the books of accounts in question. He could not therefore obey the orders of the Court to bring in the papers, and he ought not therefore to be put in contempt as to this particular, the non-performance of the Court's order having arisen out of the act of Woomeschunder. As to the money contempts, security for the payment of his costs to Woomeschunder, had been given under the orders of the Court, in the deposit of the title deeds, and there was nothing therefore irregular in the order of the 2d of June 1835, by which all his, Isserchunder's, contempts had been cleared, with liberty consequently to him to proceed in the cause. It was further contended, that Woomeschunder was too late to come in now, and set aside the order of the 2d June 1835; he had not shewn cause in the first instance, against the order nisi, which was subsequently made absolute on the 2d June, and had lain by for 14 months, without taking any step whatever.

Mr. Clarke, with whom was Mr. Osborne, was about to address the Court in support of the rule, when

The Chief Justice stated:—The first point we wish to be satisfied on, is as to your being in time, to make the application; you must account for your laches, from the 2d June 1835 to the 6th of January, 1836, when you were put in contempt by the defendants.

Mr. Clarke. We had no attorney on record at the time the order of the 2d June was made absolute. Messrs. Baillie and Molloy consented to shew cause, but subsequently did not. The transfer of attorney from Mr. Stacy, who was dead, to Baillie and Molloy, could not be effected, as Mr. Baillie, the executor of Mr. Stacy, would not sign the acknowledgment for costs, although Mr. Stacy had taken a mortgage over the whole share of the property of Woomeschunder, by way of security for the payment of his costs. The laches besides, if any arises out of the act of Isserchunder himself: he as executor of Kistnoochunder, had and has still in his hands the whole of the personal Estate, all the accumulated rents and profits from 1809 to 1827: he chose to set at defiance the order of the Court, and would not pay Woomeschunder his costs out of the Estate; depriving him thereby, of the means of paying his solicitor his costs. The learned counsel then animadverted pretty strongly on the absurdity of Isserchunder complaining of laches—he who was notoriously the most dilatory litigant that had ever appeared in Court—whose evasions, delay, and chicanery, were become proverbial.

As to the irregularity in obtaining the order, Mr. Clarke said that the other side came into Court, and discharged contempts, without disclosing what were the contempts, and contended that it was the custom and practice of the court, in making orders for discharging contempts to set out their nature: here Isserchunder had stated only money contempts, whereas the order went to clear his contempt of not bringing in the books of account, and thus stopping the progress of the suit, which, in point of fact, Isserchunder had most effectually done by the non production of the books. The order for bringing them in was made on the 18th December 1828, since which time, Woomeschunder had been unable to proceed in the Master's office with the proof of his charge, against Isserchunder, for his share of the personality and of the accumulated rents and profits of the lands, and of the profits of the trading. Depositing title deeds, is a security for the payment of the money contempts, but are no security for the bringing in the books; the Court ought not, and would not, have taken that, as a clearance of this latter contempt, but the fact was never brought to their notice, at the time they made the order of the 2d June 1835. Isserchunder has committed a gross fraud and deception upon the Court. The whole conduct of Isserchunder in these causes, was one scene of laches, contempt of the Court, contumacy and violence.

The Chief Justice here stopped Mr. Clarke.

Mr. Justice Grant. You are tied up, are you not, by contempt, and cannot proceed in the Master's office?

Mr. Clarke. Yes, my lord.

Chief Justice. Mr. Clarke, we are disposed to discharge the order of the 2d of June. The contempts to be cleared on both sides, and the sums owing by way of costs to be set off, one against the other, upon both parties undertaking to spend the cause in the master's office. You, Mr. Clarke, must proceed de die in diem in the proof of your charge, and each party must pay his own costs in this motion. Isserchunder must comply with the terms of the order of the 18th December 1823, and bring in all books mentioned in that order.

Mr. Clarke signified his willingness to accept these terms, his only object being, to proceed in the Master's office with the proof of his charge.

We omitted to state that the cost due by Isserchunder to Woomeschunder, amount to about 60,000 rupees under various orders of Court, whereas Isserchunder's charges against Woomeschunder, are but rupees 14,000.

Kistno Mohun Chowdry, v. ———

Mr. Prinsep moved to set aside a judgment entered upon a bond and warrant of attorney.

The defendants swore in their affidavit, that they never heard of Kistno Mohun Chowdry the obligee of the bond; that they, the defendants, are not resident in Calcutta, and never signed any such bond, or warrant of attorney, and that they have sought for, and cannot discover the plaintiff Kistno Mohun Chowdry, and that they have applied, through Mr. Smith, their attorney, to Mr. Rowland Graham, to produce this Kistno Mohun Chowdry; and that they have commenced a prosecution against Kistno Mohun Chowdry, Sumbuchunder Mullic and another person, for a conspiracy in pointing out the defendants as the obligees of the bond.

Mr. Prinsep stated that the judgment itself was irregular, as having been issued too soon.

Chief Justice. Take your order nisi, and serve it on Mr. Graham, and if he cannot produce Kistno Mohun, we shall then enquire how he came to enter up this judgment.

George Pollock v. Rev. Thomas Robertson.

Mr. Leith moved that the bill against Mr. Robertson be dismissed for want of a replication. Order nisi granted.

Nilcomul Paul Chowdry v. Gopeemohun Chatupadia and others.

Mr. Advocate General called attention to this case. Mr. Leith, in the course of last term, moved for an attachment against several defendants, in this cause, for violently resisting and obstructing the process of the Court, in refusing to receive the process of the cause: Mr. Pearson now moved for a week's time on the part of one of the defendants, for to shew cause against the rule for the attachment being made absolute.

Mr. Leith stated they had attempted fourteen times to serve these defendants.

Chief Justice. Mr. Leith, the service is admitted. Rule enlarged for a week.

Mr. Leith then moved to make his Rule absolute as to those parties not covered by the order just granted; he stated that he obtained it at the sittings of last term, and that they had obstructed the process of the Court, by shutting themselves up, and opposing with armed forces the service of the subpoena.

The Chief Justice ordered the matter to stand over.

Whyte Executor of Mr. J. N. Lyall, versus Lyall, Matheson and Co. and others.

The Advocate General applied for a receiver. He stated the complainant was executor of J. N. Lyall, who, with Mr. Lamb, constituted the firm of Mackenzie, Lyall and Company in June 1835. Mr. Lyall resolved to return to England, and entered into an engagement with his two partners Whyte and Lamb, to pay him two lacs and sixty thousand for his share of the business: they were to pay by monthly instalments, and at their request, a person in Calcutta was appointed to receive the payments. Robert Lyall is another executor, a partner in the house of Lyall, Matheson and Co. Mr. J. N. Lyall set out about Christmas on his voyage to England, but before he went he employed Mr. Collier to make his will. He gave to Lyall, Matheson and Co. or some of the partners, a power of attorney to receive from Whyte and Lamb the monthly instalments. Some portion of the money has been paid, but the power of attorney has expired with the death of the man who gave it. Mr. Whyte objects as executor to receive, and pay to himself, as representing the estate of the deceased, the monthly instalments to the estate; 56,000 rupees have been paid on account of the residuary legatees, and persons most interested under the will. Mr. Whyte demanded from Lyall, Matheson and Co. the will, and an account of the 56,000 rupees he had paid them, as executor of Mr. J. N. Lyall, for he having died at sea none of these funds had come to Mr. J. N. Lyall's hands.

This gentleman and his partner, have large sums to pay,—large sums are also to be paid by Lyall, Matheson and Co. Their power is extinguished. I need not urge, as I might do, the impropriety of their attempting to set up any power. Mr. Whyte is, therefore, the only executor present and who can receive the monthly instalments, his situation is therefore exceedingly delicate, and I consider the motion as one of the strictest propriety, and one that any man of honor and integrity would hasten, as the complainant now does, to make.

To whom must the account prayed by the bill be rendered if this motion be not granted? Mr. Whyte must receive it; and he is placed in the invidious position of asking, and requiring to know, what became of the money paid by himself, on account of J. N. L. Lyall, to Lyall, Matheson and Co. as attorneys for the purpose of receiving the money.

Mr. Prinsep said he was prepared to consent on behalf of the defendants, for the appointing of the receiver.

Chief Justice. The only sum in dispute, is the sum in the hands of Lyall, Matheson and Co.; they don't submit to the fact of funds being in their hands, and you have not made Whyte and Lamb parties to the Bill, but merely Whyte as executor; and Whyte and Lamb, are the only debtors to the Estate, from whom the receiver would have any thing to receive.

Mr. Justice Grant asked for a case in which the Court appointed a receiver, in a suit in which the executor is a party, not having renounced his executorship.

Mr. Pearson. This is not merely an executor.

Mr. Justice Grant. But the Testator has confided to Whyte and Lamb the management of his affairs knowing them to be his debtors, and perhaps very properly.

Mr. Justice Grant and Malkin. The objection to the appointment is the expense to the estate.

Chief Justice. I am quite clear that this motion for a receiver cannot be granted; a portion of the instalments have been received by Lyall, Matheson and Co., the money is in their hands, they also hold the bond, the only account they have to render is the account of these funds,—nothing has been said to us of any danger to the funds in their hands; the executor must, therefore, collect the funds of the estate in such manner as he thinks fit and must be accountable to the estate. But, the great objection is the expense, commission, and so forth, in the event of appointing a receiver by which the residuary legatees' interests would greatly suffer. Motion refused.

Rajah Indernarian Roy v. Isserchunder Paul Chowdery.

Mr. Prinsep, with whom was Mr. Clarke, shewed cause against a rule for restoring this cause to the board.

Mr. Pearson, with whom was Mr. Leith, in support of the rule, stated, that this was an application for restoring a cause to the board. We contend we ought not to be shut out, for our laches in not setting our exceptions for argument: we offer to pay all the costs the other party has suffered in consequence. When the exceptions were called on for argument, no one appeared, although the briefs were prepared, but on account of the unheard of rapidity with which the other side proceeded:—

The Chief Justice asked for the dates of the Master's report, filing exceptions, &c.

Mr. Leith gave the dates, and stated the cause was struck out of the board on the last day of the sittings on the 26th of July. The laches in getting ready to argue the exceptions, was in consequence also of illness and distant residence from Calcutta. The exceptions, the same as the objections taken in the Master's office, are as to the mode of computing interest.

Mr. Justice Malkin. But how is it possible that if you could take objections in the Master's office, you were not ready to argue the same points in your exceptions?

Mr. Leith. My Lord, there might be causes which would prevent the attorney from laying the brief before Counsel (laughter.)

Chief Justice. But that is not to delay the other party in the cause.

Chief Justice. No, Mr. Prinsep, we see nothing to prevent us discharging this rule. Rule discharged.

In the Goods of Bibbee Misree Khanum deceased.

Mr. Leith moved to examine witnesses in proof of the execution of the will in this case.

The will was written in Persian, and one of the attesting witnesses Bux, a moonshee, wrote it. The testatrix was ignorant of the language. He stated that the testatrix insisted on her will being in Persian.

Miranda, a writer in Mr. Strettell's office. I am also an attesting witness. She died two years ago. She put her mark to the will in my presence. It was explained to her in Hindostanee. I don't very well understand Persian. She understood.

Chief Justice. According to the explanation in your presence, to whom did she leave her property?

Witness. She left her property to a niece; her sons were not mentioned. I understood afterwards she had sons. The executor is the husband of the niece.

Mr. Justice Malkin. How came the will to be written in Persian?

Witness. She dictated to the Munshee, who wrote in Persian as she dictated in Hindostanee. The sons are, I believe, in public offices. I don't know where they live.

Bux, recalled. The will was executed on a Sunday about three o'clock: I wrote the will in the presence of the last witness. The testatrix was present when I wrote it. She did live at Colinga, but on the day the will was executed, she sent for me to Midnapore, to the executor's house, her son-in-law.

Mr. Leith observed that the executor took nothing under the will.

Chief Justice. No, Mr. Leith, we are not satisfied with this. Probate refused.

Rex versus Beardsmore.

Mr. Prinsep moved for a habeas corpus to Mr. Beardsmore for the restoration of the child of Ann Rose to her mother, the applicant. It was stated on a former occasion, that the child was found in a very filthy state; but the cause of that was, that the house had been robbed, and some opium or other drug given to the inmates, by which they became stupefied and were not in a state to take care of the child.

Chief Justice. You cannot mix up the statement of former motion with the present.

Mr. Prinsep stated that his grounds were ample to induce the Court to grant the writ. They state that the child was with Ann Rose her mother, until a few days before its removal to Doctor Beardsmore's by Mr. Hutchinson; but she, Ann Rose, being for a short time absent, she gave her child to her own mother, and then it was that Mr. Hutchinson, from whom she never had for months past received more than a 100 rupees, took the child away. She denies most positively that she is living in a state of prostitution.

Chief Justice. We cannot refuse you an order nisi, to shew cause why the habeas corpus should not issue; put it is a matter of discretion to Counsel to bring forward a second time that which has been already once refused. Order nisi granted.

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 25.

Bissumher Seal v. Ramdhone Bonnerjee and another.

Mr. Clarke, with whom was Mr. Leith for the complainant, stated, that the complainant had obtained in this cause a decree nisi, by taking the bill pro confesso.

The Advocate-General, with whom was Mr. Prinsep, for Ramdhope Bonnerjee, and Mr. Marnell for the other defendant, came in to shew cause against the decree.

The Advocate-General cited Rajah Baradicaunt Roy v. Kistnokin Doss in Mr. Clarke's book, in which it was decided, that the defendant might come in and shew cause, and set aside the decree nisi and have leave to put in his answer. Upon this authority it was contended, that the defendant Ramdhone, might come in and shew cause against the decree, and enter upon the substantial defence, as well as upon mere points of form, to which the other side wished to confine him.

The defendant had an affidavit of circumstances and merits, and a certificate of answer sworn.

Mr. Justice Grant stated, he did not understand how the case cited by the Advocate-General applied to the question now before the Court. You now seek upon this hearing, on a bill taken pro confesso, to come in and take advantage of the circumstances of your affidavit, which do not appear upon the record; this ought to be the subject of a special application.

The Chief Justice. We must ask the Registrar to state the practice.

Mr. Clarke. I should wish to be heard, my Lord.

The Chief Justice. Very well, Mr. Clarke, we will hear you, but we shall take the practice from the Registrar.

Mr. Clarke cited the 55th equity rule which expressly lays it down "that a defendant cannot shew cause against a decree nisi, till such time as he shall have paid the complainant the costs of the day; and upon costs paid and receipt produced, such defendant shall be at liberty to move on petition, that such cause shall be restored to the Board;" but here the cause has been restored to the Board, and now comes on regularly for the hearing, and they cannot come in at hearing with affidavits. They have paid the costs of the day, and have made no application upon petition according to the terms of the 55th rule; the cause has been re-set down, and comes on regularly for hearing; they want not only to be heard on merits, but to be heard also on matter dehors the pleadings, which they cannot do at a hearing, but only on motion, and they want to blend these two methods together.

The Chief Justice cited the case of Joykissen Doss v. Hastie, in the 2nd Clarke, in which the Court sanctioned the course now attempted to be enforced by the defendant Ramdhone Bonnerjee.

Mr. Clarke contended that it was only in the solitary instance of the death of a party, that the defendants could come in at a hearing by affidavit. Besides, we ought to have an opportunity of putting in affidavits to contradict them, which we cannot do at a hearing. I heard from my friend that he had an affidavit.

The Chief Justice. Yes, but you haven't heard that the Court will allow him to read it.

Mr. Clarke contended that it would be a hardship on the complainant, not to permit him to come in, and answer and contradict the fresh matter dehors the pleadings, attempted to be introduced by the defendant; the defendants ought not to be permitted, therefore, to come in at this hearing of the cause with any fresh matter whatever.

Mr. Leith followed Mr. Clarke, and contended that Mr. Marnell could at any rate not appear, the bill was taken pro confesso against him, he has not answered, not even entered an appearance, he therefore cannot appear; the learned Counsel then went into the point of practice argued by Mr. Clarke.

The Chief Justice. Now let the Registrar state the practice.

The Registrar, (Mr. Dickens) stated, that the modern practice of the Court, was in favour of the Advocate-General, supported by four cases, since the decision of Joykissen Doss; the cases were cited and the Registrar stated them to have partially overruled the case of Joykissen Doss v. Hastie, and sufficiently for the purposes of the present case, and the 53d rule taken and read with the 55th rule, would appear to establish the view of the practice stated by him. The point taken by Mr. Leith as to Mr. Marnell's client is entirely new, and I cannot speak as to the practice. The answer of Ramdhone was sworn on the 7th August, 1836.

Mr. Marnell, for Nawcomoney Dabie. In the event of your Lordships allowing the Advocate-General to come in, I should ask to have leave to enter my appearance and put in answer.

Mr. Clarke. I submit that my friend not having entered an appearance, cannot be heard.

The Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Grant. No, Mr. Marnell, you certainly cannot be heard, you are in contempt.

The Chief Justice. In this case, we must take the practice as stated by the Registrar, whether the established practice requires alteration or modification is the subject for future consideration, we now decide and establish the practice; we allow, therefore, the Advocate-General to come in on terms. Of Mr. Marnell's client, we take no notice whatever. As to the terms we think the costs ought to be between attorney and client: the defendant has delayed the cause by his laches, he must, therefore, pay all the costs as between attorney and client, and he may then file his answer; we have not decided that parties may not come in before the hearing by motion to discharge contempt.

Mr. Justice Grant concurred.

The Registrar. I understand the affidavit tendered cannot be read, and that nothing will be taken at the hearing but the certificates of answer sworn.

The Chief Justice to Mr. Clarke. We only decide in this case, what I have stated, that the certificate of answer sworn is sufficient; we decide nothing as to the allowing the reading of the affidavit.

N. B.—The cases cited by the Registrar as establishing the practice, as laid down by him, were:

Umnabhaye Chowdree, v. Juggernaut Persaud Mullie.

Aushutos Day, v. Huruloll Tagore.

Nubinnmoney Dabie, v. Shamloll Tagore.

Rajah Buddinauth Roy, v. Kistnokin Doss.

These are manuscript cases, from the Registrar's book—and decided subsequently to the cases published in the books of practice.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 26.

Christopher Martin and others v. Robert Spankie and others.

Mr. Osborne moved for an order, that the next of kin, the complainants, should have six months time to file their petition of appeal against the decree in this cause, the time to begin to run from the 9th of September last.

The grounds put in were a certificate of the Registrar, of decree pronounced on the 10th May last, that the same remained, in minutes till the 30th of August following, and that alterations had been made in the decree since it was pronounced; and that it was signed, and enrolled, on the 9th of September last. By the letters patent 6 months were given to parties to appeal from the period of pronouncing the decree; but, the learned Council observed, there were conflicting decisions upon the point, as to whether the time was to run from the pronouncing, or from the signing the decree; the last decision was, that the time should begin to run from the period of signing, but doubts had subsequently been thrown out against the law of this decision; this was the case of Reed v. Govind, in the 1st Clarke, and if it was to be held in the present case, that the time was to run from the period of pronouncing the decree, it would be a great hardship on the appellants, who would thereby have less than two months, instead of 6, to file their petition. The minutes of the decree, as finally settled, were not delivered to them until a day subsequent to the 9th of September, and Mr. Osborne cited the 78th equity rule, in which it was laid down, that the time for answering, pleading, demurring, excepting, &c., should run from the delivery of the office copies of the pleadings, demurred, pleaded, or excepted to, &c., upon this rule, therefore, he submitted, that the court would make the order applied for, as it was impossible for the parties to prepare a petition of appeal against a decree they had never seen, and which differed in some respects from the decree, as pronounced by their Lordships.

The Chief Justice observed, that the decision of Govind v. Reed had been overruled, by the case Smythe v. Clay, that it was better to avoid going into the question, as to when the time began to run, which was of an embarrassing nature, and that Mr. Osborne's best course was, to file his petition of appeal, as he had yet till the 10th of November, and then move for leave to amend it, by which he would obtain further time.

Palmer v. Brightman.

The Advocate-General shewed cause against an order obtained at the instance of Mr. Macnaghten by Mr. Leith, that Mr. Smoult, as administrator to Edward Brightman, should pay over to Elliot Macnaghten, as trustee and executor under the will, the sum of 20,000 rupees, or that an attachment should issue against him. A writ of execution had issued upon the decree, against Mr. Smoult.

It was contended for Mr. Smoult, that as administrator he admitted the receipt of 22,000 rupees, but that he was not called upon to pay it over to one claimant under the will, there being other claimants.

Mr. Justice Grant. Elliot Macnaghten is in the place of the executors of Bentley. The executors are discharged, and Mr. Macnaghten is the trustee for carrying into effect the provisions of the will, which have a prospective tendency.

The Advocate-General contended that Mr. Macnaghten ought to be put to his actions and that this order ought not to be confirmed.

There is no direction in the decree that Smoult should pay, nor finding that he has the means of paying, and then comes a question, I suppose, because he has since obtained this sum of money, they wish to make the payment over of it, part of the decree, and to attach a penalty for a contempt upon Mr. Smoult, when in point of fact, he has not been guilty of any disobedience of the decree.

The Chief Justice. What is the disobedience of the terms of this decree?

Mr. Justice Grant. But there is an order subsequent to the decree.

The Chief Justice. Oh! if there be an order on Mr. Smoult to pay, and that he has not paid, it is a different question.

The Advocate-General. He does not admit there to be no outstanding debts besides, and that is one of my grounds.

Mr. Leith. We have an order nisi upon the writ of execution.

The Chief Justice. Unless Mr. Leith you can shew us something in the decree, which Mr. Smoult has disobeyed, we shall not go into the merits of the case. I see no admission of assets by Mr. Smoult, I see no order upon him to pay.

Mr. Leith then went into the decree, and argued the point shewn out by the Chief Justice.

Mr. Justice Grant. There is no doubt that the trustee, Mr. Macnaghten, can recover all sums due to the estate which remain outstanding after the decree.

Mr. Leith went on and stated, Mr. Smoult is administrator; he is a party to the suit, and he ought either to pay over, or come and shew that he has not funds.

The Court intimated, that there was no order against Mr. Smoult to pay and consequently no attachment could issue against him.

Mr. Leith then contended at some length that his order, which was absolute, should be confirmed and attachment issue upon it, and that in the present case, there was a priority of claim for the money in the hands of Mr. Smoult; the decree is a decree among all parties—Mr. Smoult is a party, and the decree is binding on him.

Mr. Justice Grant again observed, that there was no order against him to pay, and no contempt therefore in Mr. Smoult, and by the terms of the order they sought an attachment without shewing any contempt.

Mr. Leith. But my Lord we have obtained a final decree, and can now obtain no interlocutory order in the cause.

The Chief Justice. By the terms of the decree no assets are found in Mr. Smoult, and that is why the decree stops there, and does not enjoin him to pay.

Mr. Grant followed at some length.

The Chief Justice. You see Mr. Grant you seek an attachment, shewing disobedience of an order. The court might perhaps entertain an application, upon affidavit of assets in Mr. Smoult for the payment by him of a specific portion of the money to Bentley's estate, but that is not your present order, you cannot have an attachment. We are quite clear, Mr. Advocate General, we need not hear you on the merits of the case. The order seeks an attachment for disobedience of a decree. Now I made this decree; in it I made no order upon Mr. Smoult; I never intended to make an order on him. Mr. Smoult has disobeyed no part of the decree, and the order must be discharged, each party paying his own costs.—Order discharged.

The Court having gone through the bar and taken all the motions.

Janokey Doss v. Hunnomohun Doss was called on. It was a case of exceptions to the Master's report, presenting no public interest, and which, we believe, occupied the rest of the day.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 27.

Miss Polhill v. The Rev. J. Macquoen.

At the rising of the Court, the Advocate-General said, that he wished to call the attention of the bench to a notice, which had just been served on Messrs. Collier and Bird, the attorney for the plaintiff. This was an action by Miss Polhill against Mr. Macqueen, for a libel, and an order had been obtained from Mr. Justice Malkin, calling on the Advocate-General's client, to shew cause in Chambers, why the defendant should not have leave to plead several matters, that is, the general issue and a justification; and in the mean time all proceedings be staid. Now it was a motion of course for leave to plead several matters, why then were they to be put to the expense of shewing cause?

Mr. Justice Malkin. This is according to the practice of the King's Bench. It will be found in the new rules published by Mr. Jervis.

The Advocate General. But the rules, published by Mr. Jervis, are not in force here; I know it is contemplated to introduce them, but until they are sanctioned by the Court, the practice remains as it was, and it was always a motion of course for leave to plead several matters.

The Chief Justice. The practice of course cannot be altered until the rules are published, but there is a distinct rule of this Court for what has been done. If you will turn to the 22nd rule in the 3rd edition of Mr. Clarke's Rules and Orders, you will find that no motion is to be made in open Court for leave to plead several matters, but an order is to be obtained from a Judge in Chambers with certain exceptions—these exceptions are, non Assumpsit, Nil debet, non detinet, and plene Administravit. Your case does not come under these exceptions, and therefore the course adopted is according to a rule of our Court.

Mr. Clarke. What we complain of is, the stay of proceedings of which the rule of Court says nothing.

Mr. Justice Malkin. That follows of course, pending an order nisi how could the parties proceed, they must know first what will be done upon that order.

The Advocate General. I also complain of the notice itself, it informs us nothing, and is a mere waste of time and expense. It calls on me to shew cause why the defendant should not plead a justification, but it does not tell me what that justification is. By law he has a right to justify, and I cannot shew cause against his doing so; but if he wants to plead matters which would not amount to a justification, then I could successfully shew cause, but I must first know what these matters are, and this notice does not inform.

The Chief Justice. We will not decide that for you here Mr. Advocate. If your objection be good, you will have the opportunity of urging it in Chambers. The order granted by Mr. Justice Malkin stands therefore, and cause must be shewn against it.—Hurkaru.

MADRAS SUPREME COURT.

MONDAY, OCTOBER 3.

In the matter of Chokumputty Valungapooly Thaver.

On a former day Mr. Teed on behalf for the Prisoner had obtained a rule nisi for a writ of Habeas Corpus. Among the facts contained in the Affidavit on which the rule was granted were these two; that the Prisoner had been arrested on the 8th Dec. 1834, and that sometime in August 1835 he had been transferred from Tinnevely, where he had been seized, to the hill Fort of Ghooty within the Zillah of Bellary, where he now was confined.

Mr. Advocate General this day shewed cause against the rule.

The ground on which the rule had been granted was that the prisoner was taken up without conviction and altogether in an irregular manner.

It would be found that the prisoner had been arrested under the authority of Regulation I. of 1819, that the warrant had been signed by the Chief Secretary according to the terms of that Regulation—and that he was still under the charge of Mr. ROBERTSON the Collector of the Ceded Districts and Magistrate of Bellary.

He read the Affidavit of Mr. CHAMBER, Chief Secretary, and the Regulation.

He said he should not take upon himself to justify either the Regulation or the act of the Government—his duty was confined to that of shewing that the terms of the Regulation had been complied with, and if so, it was not competent for any municipal Court to enquire into it.

Mr. Teed, in support of the rule, objected that there was no charge specified in the warrant of commitment.—He submitted that the Regulation was one which could be established—a Regulation must be in accordance with the Law. But this is at variance with the Law of England therefore it is illegal. It will extend to authorise incarceration for life without possibility of redress—to pass such a Regulation was more than the King of England could do—much less the Governor in Council.—He quoted the case of King v. Lieutenant Colonel SYMONS and others, 11. Sir T. STRANGE'S Reports, p. 256.

He contended that this Regulation was repeal of the Habeas Corpus Act—which was what the Governor in Council could not do.

Mr. Advocate General, in reply, said there were much worse Regulations than the one in question, but still they were Laws binding in the Mofussil. As to the right of Government to make Laws, it would be necessary to bear in mind the distinction between the plenary power of legislature in respect to the Provinces committed to the Governor in Council anterior to the last Charter Act and the limited one which was confined to Regulations within the Presidency: in respect to these latter Regulations, they were not to be at variance with British Law—as to the Regulations in respect to the Provinces there was no limit to the legislative authority. He declined to enter into the merits on which the prisoner was committed, he confined himself to the Regulation and the warrant of commitment under it.

Mr. Minchin, as Amicus Curie, enumerated the statutes under which the Governor in Council became entitled to make Rules and Regulations.

Mr. Advocate General denied this doctrine and insisted that the right of the Governor in Council to make Rules and Regulations depended not on these few statutes but on the general Government which had been committed to the Governors in Council of the several Provinces by Charter both of the Crown and by those conferred by the Crown and Parliament.

Comyn, C. J. did not think himself authorised to interfere, whatever his own opinion might be as to the Regulation. There was no imputation raised that it had been passed in a manner not warranted by the legislature. As to the commitment, supposing the Regulation to be good, the warrant was right, inasmuch as it followed the form appended to the Regulation.—The Rule therefore was discharged.—Spectator.

MONDAY, OCTOBER 10.

The quarterly criminal sessions opened this day at 11 o'clock precisely, before the Lord Chief Justice Comyn.

The Grand Jury were sworn in and charged by his Lordship; who observed that though numerically heavy, the cases in the Calendar were all of a light order, being simple larcenies, and he would not therefore detain the Grand Jury with any commentary upon them, but simply remark that to constitute the larceny it was not necessary that the property should be actually removed from a dwelling house; it sufficed if there was evidence of the intended robbery though detection impeded the removal. There was, however, one grave case of murder, in alluding to which his Lordship took occasion to draw the Grand Jury's attention to what could constitute the declaration of the victim before death valid evidence. The law conceived that when a person was in that state which imparted to himself the certainty of approaching dissolution, any declaration then made was invested with the force and sanctity of an oath. His Lordship concluded his charge by alluding to two cases of misdemeanour, that would be laid before the Grand Jury; the one of a nature which he never before had seen brought into that Court, and he hoped never to see again. It was against two persons for obtaining money under false pretences, by inducing a man to believe that something to which they had given the name of the 'attachment' had been issued by the Supreme Court against his person, and taking advantage of the terror this inspired to get from him sums of money as requisite presents to Officers of the Court. His Lordship explained the points that required attention to this case; and concluded a brief but lucid charge, by stating the high satisfaction he had derived from perusing a report he held of the state of the Jail. During the Quarter not a single complaint had been preferred—the place was kept clean and well aired—and its healthiness was sufficiently spoken in the fact of not a patient having been into hospital whether from sickness or accident.

The Grand Jury returned true bills in the course of the day against

- 1.—Veerasawmy and Moonyappen, for stealing from the dwelling house of Gungooloo.
2. Ramasawmy, Moonyan and Lutchoomman, for stealing the property of Joe, and on another indictment for stealing the property of Madooram.
- 3.—Kistnami and Narasimooloo, for stealing the property of Soorah Ramasawmy Chitty.

4.—Condell, Antony and Veerasawmy, for stealing the property of Messrs. Amalie and Co.; and Moothyan as receiver.

5.—Govindoo, for stealing from Messrs. G. Richardson and Co.'s warehouse, the property of Mr. James Cor-

6.—Ponnen, for stealing the property of Ammanayam math.

7.—Sawmyaden, David Solomon and Perriasawmy, for burglary and felony in the house of Soodaayee.

8.—Fukeer Saib, for stealing the property of Mr. Edward Mahony.

9.—Kunayan for assaulting and stealing from the person of Vencatasawmy Naick.

10.—Vudaykany Acharu and Veerasawmy Rajah for obtaining money under false pretences from Allagapah Acharu.

Of the above cases were tried:—No. 1—both prisoners found guilty; No. 4—the two first Guilty, the rest not guilty; No. 5—guilty; No. 8—guilty; No. 9—guilty.

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 11.

The Grand Jury returned true bills against 11.—Meerjungee and Peer Ahmad, for stealing property from the warehouse of Siddooloo Chitty.

12.—Nerrainan Ramasawmy and Vadagherry, for burglariously entering and stealing from the dwelling house of Eroosammah, and Yellamah as receiver.

13.—Appiah, for the wilful murder of one Soobboo.

14.—Mooneyan, for stealing from the Pagoda of Munnaroo-sawmy.

15.—Jeremiah Durand, for stealing the property of John Henry.

16.—George Emerson and William Knowles, for stealing the property of W. S. Binny, Esq., and others.

17.—Nannoo, for stealing the property of Jungheer Jee Dadahjee, and Cundappen as receiver.

The Grand Jury ignored a bill against a multitude of people for a forgery.

Of the above the following cases were disposed of.—No. 2, the two first pleaded guilty, and Lutchoomman was found guilty; No. 7—the three first guilty, Perriasawmy—not guilty; No. 15—pleaded guilty; No. 16 not guilty.

Rajah Rutna Moodelly was this day sworn in by order of the Chief Justice as Interpreter to the Court in Tamil and Gentoo during the present session.—Spectator.

INSOLVENT COURT.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 8.

In the Insolvent Court this-day Mr. John Grimsdick, obtained his final discharge and certificate.

Mr. Sandes applied for an order nisi that Mr. W. F. Hare, an assistant to the firm of Mackenzie, Lyall and Co., some time ago declared an insolvent, and discharged under the provisions of the act, do pay to his assignee a portion of his salary for the liquidation of his debt. This application excited much interest, it being the first attempt to place part of the salary of an insolvent assistant to a mercantile firm at the disposal of the assignee. Mr. Sandes applied under the twenty-seventh clause of the act, the words of which are as follow:

And be it further enacted, that if any insolvent at the time of making any such assignment as is herein-before mentioned shall hold any public office, appointment, or benefice, civil, military, or ecclesiastical, under the crown of the United Kingdom of Great Britain or Ireland, or under the said United Company, and if his interest in such office or appointment shall be such that he might lawfully sell the same, such interest for the purpose of sale shall, by the assignment, be transferred to and vested in the assignee or assignees in trust for the benefit of his creditors, and if his interest therein shall not be such as he might lawfully sell, then it shall be lawful for the said court to order the said insolvent to pay such proportion of his receipts, therefrom to his assignee or assignees as the said court, shall think just and right.'—But Mr. Justice Malkin, who presided, was clearly of opinion that the clause did not apply to insolvent assistants not in the employ of the Crown or Company, and in the absence of all authority for the rule, dismissed the application.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 29.

The Advocate General applied on behalf of the Bank of Bengal to be admitted to prove two sums of five lakhs and two lakhs of rupees on the estate of Alexander and Co., the balance remaining unpaid of seventeen lakhs advanced to the firm, a little time previous to their failure. Our readers will remember a similar application some time ago in the matter of Fergusson and Co. The seventeen lakhs were advanced by the Bank on twenty-seven promissory notes, the payment of which was guaranteed by Mackintosh and Co., Fergusson and Co., and Cruttenden and Co., who subsequently made over Alexander and Co.'s securities to the Bank. The property has since been sold or redeemed, and the seven lakhs for which the Bank now apply is the difference between the sum advanced and the amount realized by the sale or redemption of the property.

The learned counsel also applied for leave to prove Rs. 3,28,282 on the same estate. This was a sum entirely distinct from the seventeen lakhs above noticed, and had been advanced to the late firm to enable them to carry on their business. The learned counsel, as we understood, stated that the Bank held several indigo factories as security, the working of which on the Bank's advances had realized a profit of Rs. 1,50,000. He thought the Bank had a good claim to this profit. As the estate would not have been called on to pay the loss if any had occurred in working the factories, the assignees had no claim to the profit. However, the Bank were willing to deduct the amount of the profit from the sum advanced and prove for the remainder. Rule nisi in both applications.—Oriental Observer.

Mr. Justice Malkin presided this day, but the case were few in number and not of public interest, excepting an application made by Mr. Boyle, on behalf of the assignees of Alexander and Co., for six weeks further time to shew cause against an order nisi obtained by the Advocate General to allow the Bank of Bengal to prove for upwards of five lakhs of rupees on the insolvent estate. Our readers will remember the application for the order nisi, and that a rule absolute was granted some time ago, under similar circumstances, to allow the Bank to prove nearly the same amount, arising out of the same transactions, on the estate of Fergusson and Co.

Mr. Boyle founded his application for time on the recent service of the rule, on the departure of Mr. Turton, counsel for the assignees, and on the voluminous grounds which were necessary to be laid before counsel now retained to oppose the rule being made absolute.

The Advocate General, with whom was Mr. Prinsep, argued that the grounds were not voluminous, but of a description such as counsel might readily become acquainted with. Moreover, the Bank would be injured in the event of a dividend being paid by the estate during the six weeks now applied for. He did not—he had no intention to question the grounds on which this application was made, nor had he a right to say (though he might do so hypothetically, and so he would put it) that the assignees may be expecting the receipt of a Bill by the Bombay packet from a gentleman formerly retained by them. However he had no objection to the delay of a fortnight.

Mr. Justice Malkin suggested, in order to save the expense of another application, that a month's further time be granted. The Advocate General assented, and that time was accordingly allowed.—Englishman.

MISCELLANEOUS NEWS.

CALCUTTA.

METCALFE LIBRARY.—Government have sanctioned the grant of a piece of ground in Tank Square for the erection of the Metcalfe Free Press Library, upon condition that the building shall not exceed one story in height.

PUBLIC LIBRARY.—The Public Library gets on very well, and has had its subscription list recently augmented. It has been decided that the books of this library shall be transferred to the Metcalfe Library building, which is to be erected in Tank Square.

TIGERS.—The tigers at Middleton Point, on Saugor island, have carried off all the cattle from the settlement at that place, and have been continuing their attacks nightly on the bungalows, in which the Superintendent and his people have been obliged to fortify themselves for some weeks past. Six sheeknies have been sent down for the protection of the besieged, and on the 27th Sept. at 9:30 p. m., a large tiger was shot by the sirdar in the act of springing into the principal bungalow, after having broken through the stockade. The skin and head have been sent up to town, and the people are to have a gratuity of 10 rupees for the head and 5 rupees for the skin, and will receive a like sum for each tiger killed.

MURDERS.—As a man was proceeding from Calcutta to Bhatnagar, near 6 miles from Hooghly, he was waylaid and murdered by some dacoits. His mangled corpse was found on the banks of the Ganges.

A young Hindu woman was murdered at Hidgelee on the 19th Oct. The unfortunate woman went out to bathe, in company of another woman: her protracted absence alarmed her relatives, and not being able to find her themselves, they went and gave information at the police; and on a diligent search being instituted, the dead body of the poor woman was found. The circumstances of the murder are under investigation.

A seller of wood in the Kidderpore Bazar was murdered on the night of the 15th Oct. The body was found the next morning with the skull dreadfully fractured. A native who resided in the neighbourhood and has absconded, is suspected as the murderer.

ATTEMPT TO MURDER.—Baboo Radhakissen Seit, of Burra Bazar, a native gentleman of family and wealth, was shot in his leg, while in his boatuck-khana, a lower-roomed house, through a window towards the street, at about eleven o'clock of the night of the 12th Oct. The ruffian made his escape, and as yet remains undetected. There was a Brahmin with the Baboo at the time he was wounded, who was also hurt in several places. A European surgeon was called in, and the following morning some slugs were extracted from the persons of both, and they are doing well.

ACCIDENTS.—A young Brahmin, named Modhoosoodun Bhuttacharjee, whose parents reside in Aheirtullah Street, within the Hatcolah division, was missed.

about four days since : his body was discovered floating in a tank in the same street. The deceased is supposed to have been accidentally drowned.

A man was killed at Gorechatee, from the falling in of his house during the heavy shower on the 29th of September.

A girl aged between five or six years, the daughter of a man named Goluck Koondoo, residing at Naudi's Bagan, Hautcolah, was drowned in a tank not far from her father's house about twelve o'clock, on the 10th Oct.

A few days ago, a man seated himself on the side of a drain at Hautcolah, and some woman who resided in the next house accidentally threw down warm water on him, which scalded him all over his body dreadfully; so much so, that his life is considered to be in danger.

During the heavy rains on the 14th Sept., the roof of an old house fell in at Tribenny. One of the inmates of the dwelling was seriously hurt and another completely buried under the fallen roof.

THE COURT OF REQUESTS AND PILOTS.—It has been decided by the Commissioners of the Court of Requests during the week, that Pilots, where-ever residing, are amenable to the jurisdiction of that court, in virtue of their situations.

HOLLIDUR MULICK.—Baboo Hollidur Mullick has been fined one hundred rupees by the Magistrate of the Police, for alleged torture and false imprisonment of a servant. The Baboo, in a letter addressed to the editor of the Hurkaru, most solemnly asserts his innocence of the crime; and states that the charge was preferred with the view of extorting money from him, and supported entirely by false evidence.

POISON SOLD FOR ROLUN BARK.—Professor O'Shaughnessy has addressed a letter to the daily papers, in which he warns the public that nuxvomica bark, (Bengally Kuntchela,) a deadly poison, is sold in the bazar for Rolun bark, or saictenia febrifuga (Bengally Rahana). Experiments have been made on several animals with a distillation made from the former, by Mr. Piddington, who mistook it for the latter, and in every instance it has proved fatal in a very short time.

LIEUT. BURNES.—Lieut. A. Burnes is about to proceed on a commercial mission to Cabool, and is to effect a careful survey of the Indus from Patta to Attock, in order that measures may be adopted to buoy the river, should the steam navigation of that stream prove practicable. An Engineer officer will accompany Lieut. Burnes as an assistant.

ANTI-BLACK ACT PETITION.—The subscriptions to the Anti-Black Act Petitions amount to 24,120-13-10 Rs.

SALVAGE.—A letter from Macao of the 4th August, gives the following account of a small salvage effected from the wreck of the Suzanna:

"Upon hearing of the wreck, I set off to be in readiness for a start, and after making arrangements for three armed Sorchas to follow by the inner passage. I started for the wreck and found her in a snug bay, but open to the S. W. on the island of Tyloo, about 20 miles W. S. W. of Macao,—the hull parted below the main deck, the upper-works being at low water mark. After some firing, we got possession of the launch, and communicated with the Mandarins on shore; but the highest one, in a junk of six guns, deserted us shortly after our arrival—as we suppose, because he had only come to work for himself. In five days we got about 30 chests of opium out of the sand by divers.

THE ANDROMACHE.—The Andromache left Saugor on the 22nd Oct. for Trincomalee, where she will receive orders, whether to be docked here or at Bombay to repair her copper, and after being repaired, she will proceed to England.

LAUNCH OF A NEW STEAMER.—The new Steamer which has for some time been building in Messrs. Currie and Co.'s yard for the Steam Tug Association, was launched on the 11th October and named the Seetakoond by Mrs. Wm. Young. The following are her dimensions:

Length of keel.....	127 feet.
Breadth over all.....	13-6 "
Length of beam, before and abaft the paddle wheels.....	25 "
Breadth in wake of paddle wheels for about 20 feet is.....	19 "
Depth of hold from the rabbet of the keel to the upper part of the upper deck beams.....	12 "
Two engines of fifty horse power each.

The vessel is entirely built of teak, copper-fastened and finished in the best style. The engines are the same which the Emulous had. After the launch, the vessel was hauled into a mud dock to receive the boilers, the fixing of which may occupy five or six weeks; but it is expected she will be ready for tugging early in December.

NEW STEAMER.—The new armed steamer, intended for service in the Straits, was launched from the Howrah Dock Company's yard on the 28th October. She is a splendid vessel.

SIR BLADEN CAPEL.—His Excellency the Naval Commander-in-Chief, Sir Bladen Capel, is likely to visit Calcutta within the next two months.

PERSIAN INTERPRETER.—Lieut. Miles, Interpreter and Quarter Master of the 5th N. I., has been appointed Persian Interpreter.

PUBLIC EXHIBITION OF OBSCENE FIGURES.—Mr. Henry De Rozario, who keeps the Anna Post Office, and a servant of his, have been bailed to appear at the Supreme Court and take their trial for circulating about Calcutta, a watch with indecent figures on the inside case of it.

LITERARY SOCIETIES.—Two literary societies have recently sprung up in Calcutta, the discussions in which are carried on in the vernacular language.

GOOMSUR AND SOORADA.—The continuance of the disturbed state of the Goomsur and Soorada districts has induced the Council of India to pass an Act which was promulgated on the 12th October suspending the functions of the courts of justice in that part of the country, and vesting plenary powers in a Commissioner appointed by the Government of Madras. It is already known that Mr. Russell has for some time been acting in that capacity.

MEDICAL FUND.—About fifty new subscribers have sent in their names as subscribers to the Medical Fund and not one name even has been withdrawn.

EXTENSION OF PAYMENT OF ARREARS TO THE MEDICAL FUND TO THREE YEARS.—This measure was proposed by Mr. Corbyn at a meeting of the managers. All present concurred in the proposition; the resolution is to be submitted for the decision of subscribers at the next quarterly meeting.

MEDICAL COLLEGE.—The pupils of the Medical College were examined in chemistry on the 13th of October and gave great satisfaction to a numerous concourse of spectators. The following prizes were distributed by Lord Auckland.

Mr. Simonds, of the Subordinate Medical Department, the gold medal.

To Mr. Foy, Apothecary, General Hospital, silver medal.

Sibchunder Karmocar, first prize.

Nobinchunder Paul, second ditto.

Isuruchunder Gangole, third ditto.

Isaurchunder Dutt, Rajkissen Deb, Dwarkanath Goopla, Umachurn Set, Shamachurn Dutt, and Ram-narain Doss, prizes of the fourth degree.

The rest of the candidates who had contended for the prizes, seven in number, received testimonials of their proficiency.

Six of the candidates (those for the 4th prize) were considered so equal in merit, that it was impossible to prefer any one of them to his competitors, and it was even contemplated to decide by lot upon the individual to whom the money should be given. Hearing of this, Lord Auckland generously presented from his own purse, five additional prizes of similar value, so that they all reaped the substantial reward of their exertions.

REV. JAMES CHARLES.—The Rev. James Charles, Senior Minister of St. Andrew's Church, has been elected a Member of the General Management of the Bengal Military Orphan Society, in the room of Colonel W. Dunlop.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY'S SCHOOL.—This school was examined on the 12th Oct. and the improvement which the scholars developed, was very gratifying.

PALLEE PLAGUE.—The disease which has nearly depopulated the town of Pallee, proves to be some distemper generated from the filthy state of the town, and not the plague as it was reported to be.

THE POST.—Hitherto letters to all places east and south of Monghyr, from the upper provinces, were transmitted by the circuitous route of the General Post Office, Calcutta. This circumstance, which caused great delay in the conveyance of the despatches, being brought to the Post Master General's notice, that officer lost no time in remedying the evil. Orders were issued to all deputy post masters in Upper India to forward all packets, for Nepal, Monghyr, Bhaugulpore, and other stations to the eastward of the great line from Allahabad to the Presidency, via Patna, in lieu of Calcutta.

MR. JAMES KYD.—Mr. James Kyd, the East Indian gentleman who was for many years master-builder to the Honorable Company, and was well known and endeared to the community of Calcutta, by his eminent virtues, died on the 20th Oct., from an injury received in his leg, aged 50 years.

SALT CARGOES.—A declaration has been made by Government, which the Chamber of Commerce has been requested to make known, that the Captains of salt vessels will be expected to look after the article till the time of delivery and weightment, and that hereafter no plea of weather or of frauds will be deemed sufficient to account for deficiencies beyond the fair and liberal allowance for wastage settled by the Board.

NAWAB TUHAWER JUNG.—The Nawab Tuhawer Jung has been appointed a member of the Committee of Public Instruction by the Governor-General in Council.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.—The Chamber of Commerce had a special Meeting on the 18th Oct. for the purpose of voting an address of thanks to Captain Chads of H. M. S. Andromache, for his gallant and eminently successful exertions for the suppression of piracy in the Straits. A letter embodying the resolution was immediately drafted, and sent to him in the course of the afternoon.

The Chamber has been informed that a schedule of articles to be subjected to fixed instead of ad valorem rates of duty, has been prepared, and that the Board of Customs is ready to coffer with the Chamber upon it, previous to submitting it to the Government for adoption.

BONDING WAREHOUSES.—It is stated there is a plan before the Chamber of Commerce to divide the subscription for the Bonding Warehouses into 1,000 shares of 100 rupees each, and that two or three considerable firms have expressed a desire to take a large number of shares. This looks well. The question no longer is, who will set an example, but whether applicants will not find themselves too late. The prospectus, however, and the plan of the intended building, have not yet been fully determined upon.

THE MEMORIAL TO THE COURT OF DIRECTORS FOR THE BOON.—A considerable number of signatures have been received to this paper, and it is expected that it will be dispatched during the current month.

NEW PUBLICATION.—Professors O'Shaughnessy and Goodeve, of the Medical College, intend to publish a quarterly journal of the Medical and Physical Society of Calcutta, from the 1st of January next.

RIVER POLICE.—REGISTRATIONS OF COOLIES AND HACKERIES.—In consequence of a representation made to Government by the Chamber of Commerce, respecting the extent to which plunder and depredation are now practised upon goods whilst in the course of being transferred from the vessels in the river to the warehouses, measures are in contemplation for the correction of this mischief. The evil appears to have increased to an alarming degree, and has latterly been carried on with a degree of daring almost incredible. The remedies which have been suggested consist in the establishment of an efficient river police, and a general registration of all boats and craft that ply for hire. In addition to this, it is suggested to establish the registration of all coolies and hackeries as the only means of putting a stop to the theft and robbery, which are constantly practised in open day, during the conveyance by land of goods from the vessels discharging cargo.

DANISH CENTENNIAL JUBILEE.—His Majesty, the King of Denmark, issued a proclamation, that the 29th, 30th and 31st of October, shall be observed as a centennial jubilee, in commemoration of the abolition of the Roman Catholic and the establishment of the Lutheran as the national religion of that kingdom. The proclamation was promulgated from the pulpit of the Church at Serampore on the 23rd October, and the celebration of the event commenced on the 29th October. Two sermons were preached on the 30th Oct. from texts selected by his Majesty for the occasion, and composed by the Dissenting clergymen who usually officiate in that church.

SCOTT'S GAZETTE.—The Editor of this journal has intimated that its publication will close at the end of the present month, the subscriptions to it being inadequate to defray the expenses of publication.

TWENTY FOUR PURGUNNAS' COURT.

FOUZDARY, 29TH SEPTEMBER.—Great fall of rain. It was reported, that in consequence of the incessant fall of rain Allipore was under water before 3 p. m. and several villages were swamped; north, south and middle roads. Entally, were in several parts overflowed by nearly a foot and a half of rain. The tanks all over discharged their fish into the public ditches, and hundreds of poor were collecting them with round nets and sheets. The houses of many poor ryuts were uninhabitable during the night.

A hard case.—In November or December last, several persons were arrested and sentenced for a great riot and assault, which occurred at Solder Missery's Bazar at Bhowanipore. One of the principal parties, Rada Soonder Mittra, a wealthy native, eluded the vigilance of the officers, and was not punished for his delinquency, though from time to time, writs were revived for his apprehension. The magistrate finding all means fail, was obliged to have recourse to the only alternative left, that of placing his property under seizure agreeable to section 2, Regulation XI. of 1796. In the mean while the term of imprisonment of several of the offenders had expired, and two of them, Goordial and Bulramdaas, pointed out one Rada Soonder Mittra to the Nauhazaree, or Kidderpore Thana, as the man. All the parties and witnesses in the original case were again summoned, and none but Goordial and Bulramdass pointed to the prisoner, as the offender. The prisoner earnestly declared his innocence, and said that Baboo Rada Soonder was a rich man, and he a poor one: it was however out of the magistrate's power to release him, as, according to the Mahomedan Law, two witnesses had pointed to him, and unless he could falsify their testimony, he must continue a prisoner. It has since been ascertained beyond a doubt, that Baboo Rada Soonder Mittre is still alive and going on with his tricks at his estate, at a place called Cuckerbarria adjoining to Bhowanipore; and Goordial and Bulramdass therefore have been fully committed to take their trial for perjury before the Sessions Judge, and the Baboo's property continues under seizure.

The Recent Fracas at Hwrah.—With reference to the report regarding a fracas which took place in the neighbourhood of Hwrah, in which it was said were implicated several native gentlemen of rank, and among them Baboo Mothoornauth Mullick, Baboo Mothoornauth has denied his having been engaged in the quarrel; he was not present during the disturbance, nor has he heard of any complaint having been lodged against him.

Oct. 4.—The trial of Mr. James Frederick, who was brought up before the magistrate on the 23rd of September, on the prosecution of Messrs. Teal and Co., his late employers, upon a charge of theft and forgery, having been postponed to this day, it was called on, and the defendant was acquitted for want of sufficient proof of his guilt.

13th October.—Mr. James Pattie and Baboo Gobindpersaud, were summoned to the Magistrate's Court this day, for preventing the people of Balligunge from taking water from a tank adjoining Mr. Pattie's premises, in opposition to the order issued from the Court, and fined in the sum of two hundred rupees each.

THE BALLIGUNGE TANK CASE.—Mr. Bignell, the pleader in the Sudder Dawaunge, appeared on the 25th Oct. before the Commissioner, on behalf of Mr. Pattie and Govind Baboo, the parties fined in the Balligunge tank case by the magistrate of the Twenty-four Pergunnahs, on the 14th October. Mr. Bignell stated, that as it appeared to him, the Commissioner had no jurisdiction in the matter, so far as Mr. Pattie was concerned; he would limit his application on behalf of that gentleman to a petition for copies of all the proceedings to enable Mr. Pattie to bring the case before the Supreme Court. Mr. Bignell intended to prosecute Govind Baboo's appeal before the Commissioner, but prayed the hearing might be postponed until he had obtained copies of all the papers, when he would state at length his objections to the magistrate's order. Both applications were granted.

A moonshee on part of Baboo Govindpersaud Bose, a defendant with Mr. Pattie, applied for copies of the notice of the case decided on the 13th Oct., and for copies of the notice of a former corresponding case. Copies ordered to be given if in the possession of the sheristadar, or to apply to Mr. Commissioner Pigou where they have been duly sent in original.

Mr. Dias, on the part of Baboo Hurrehnd Lahoree, applied by petition for authenticated copies of the English calendars, Nos. 1, 4, and 5 of 1834, and No. 1 of 1835, in which cases his client with several others were committed for trial before the Sessions Judge. By a separate petition, Mr. D. also applied for authenticated copies of the depositions of the witnesses against his client in the above cases, among the rest for that of Mr. Lewis DaCosta, and for the order of the Sudder directing an enquiry in case 9. Both applications granted.

MOFUSSIL.

DELHI.—The Lord Bishop of Calcutta is expected to reach Delhi on the 19th Nov. and to remain until the 27th. During his stay His Lordship will consecrate the church and hold confirmation.

A brisk trade has sprung up and has been carried on for the last two years and upwards between Bombay, Bhewanee and other places in western India. Foreign articles are procurable at these places at little more than half the price charged by up-country traders.

Major Sutherland, Resident at Gwalior, will quit Agra on the 10th Oct. in quest of a more healthy site than Gooma for a cantonment for the new brigade.

The weather at Delhi, has been absolutely cold of late. At sunrise on the 30th of September, the thermometer stood as low as 59°.

A great many accidents are said to have occurred during the very severe storm, on the 25th of September. Among others, another illustration was afforded, of the danger of seeking shelter under trees and ledges of rock, from the "pelting of the pitiless storm." A party, consisting of a native gentleman and his two servants, were overtaken in the storm, while returning from the Koutub, and sought shelter under a large tree by the way side, but they had not been there many minutes, before the two servants were killed, instantaneously, and the master severely wounded, by the falling of a branch of the tree. Another party of two boys, sought shelter under a ledge of rock, but such was the violence of the storm, that the mass was precipitated upon the unfortunate youths, and crushed one of them to death, the other escaped.

On the 26th of September, about three o'clock in the morning, nine convicts, belonging to a gang encamped on the grand trunk road near Shahdars, made a most daring attempt to escape; one of the party, it is said, managed to get clear off, but of the remaining eight, seven were killed and one wounded and captured.

It appears, from enquiry, that the gang consisted of one hundred convicts, under charge of a jemadar and twenty-five burkundazes, and that, on the evening previous to the attempt being made, the choppers of the godown, in which the working tools are usually deposited, having been blown down, the tools were placed outside, under the care of a sentry, a circumstance which is supposed to have given rise to the project; for, no sooner had the prisoners, by a sudden effort, broken the main chain, to which all were attached, than the nine convicts, who contrived to get clear out of the hut, made a rush for the tools: five or six succeeded in arming themselves, but two were killed in the attempt to do so, by the nearest sentry, who received a slight wound on the head from a pick-axe. After arming themselves, the prisoners scampered off in all directions with the burkundaze after them.

A memorial has actually been sent in from Loodianah to the Honorable Court, in support of the Belgaum one, and, of course, in favor of the present practice of purchasing retirements in corps; and another is about to be transmitted from Kurnaul, to which there are sixty signatures of officers of all ranks, from the Colonel to the Ensign.

The new rules for the Military Fund (sanctioned by the Honorable Court of Directors) proposing subscriptions for benefits in advanced grades, have been circulated at Delhi, and have met with general support.

A further reduction has been made in the duty upon all salt passing the Hurriana Line for consumption in the Seik States, and country generally north of the Hurriana Line and west of the Jumna, which will now only have to pay a duty of eight annas a maund, instead of one rupee as heretofore.

The Beekaneer Rajah has been made happy by the receipt of intimation from our Government that, on his reaching the neighbourhood of Rewarrie, in progress to Gyaee (whither he is about to proceed on a pilgrimage) he will be joined by a suitable escort, under a British officer, who will attend him during his progress through our territories; and that, all due attention and honor shall be paid him at every station and military post through which he may have to pass in his progress. Great preparations are making for this journey, with a double object in view, viz. the marriage of his son to the eldest daughter of the Rewah Chief, who is to give a dowry of five lacs of rupees with her, as also religious considerations. The cavalcade that will attend the Maharejah will exceed 5,000 followers.

Three wealthy natives, formerly connected with the Delhi Treasury, were committed to jail for six months by the magistrate of Delhi, for contempt of authority. It would appear, that circumstances arising out of their former trust made it necessary to institute enquiry, and that therefore they were called upon to appear, which they not only refused to do, but went so far as to defy the Magistrate, who however very soon brought them to their bearings.

Rumour says, that Lieutenant-General Marley, the Commandant of Allahabad, has been reprimanded, for having permitted the meeting of military officers to take place at that station.

Two individuals, representing themselves to be Nawabs of Patna, had arrived at Nusseerabad, and were treated with great hospitality: they accepted invitations to messes, &c. but refused to partake of the dainties before them, alleging as an excuse, the expediency of conciliating the prejudices of their benighted servants and countrymen.

These two nawabs of Patna have been seized as Russian spies; but the memory of two such persons (born in Calcutta, though not natives, in the common acceptance of the term) is not yet lost to the recollection of a mercantile firm in Calcutta, which entrusted them with goods, for sale in London. The Nawabs escaped, as the story goes, to France, then came on their travels to the East, and they have since been seized as Russian spies. These individuals are supposed to be the identical men who once resided with and robbed Dr. Helfert at Smyrna.

A circular has been addressed to the several Commissioners, calling on them to state their sentiments with regard to the best means of reforming the Mofussil police.

The city of Delhi and its vicinity, are in a very insalubrious condition at present.

The Sudder Board of Revenue of the North Western Provinces, has determined, that, in future, patrols shall be admitted on the Customs Establishment, and rise in the department, by the following scale. The orders of the Board upon the special report of the Collector, or Deputy Collector of Customs, being necessary to sanction promotion, from a lower to a higher grade.

4th class; first two years of service not to receive more than 200 rupees per mensem.

3d class; for 3d, 4th, and 5th years of service not to receive more than 250 rupees per mensem.

2d class; for 6th and 7th years of service, not more than 300 rupees per mensem.

1st class; for commencement of eighth year, 350 rupees per mensem.

The North Western Provinces are about to lose the services of a most talented, upright, and respected officer, Mr. Hutchinson, who is appointed to act in the Sudder Nizamut and Dewany Adawlut, during the absence of Mr. Robertson, at the Cape of Good Hope.

Mr. Glyn will act for Mr. Hutchinson, as Commissioner of the Meerut Division, and Mr. Franco, as Judge of Meerut, in the room of Mr. Glyn.

On the 10th Oct. a child was murdered in the city and thrown into the canal. It appears from enquiry that a man, while bathing, saw a bundle float past him, and upon examining it found a little girl, about five years of age, tied up in it, quite dead: there were evident marks of violence upon the head and throat, leaving no doubt, that not only strangulation but other means had been adopted to extinguish the vital spark. The parents of the child, who are of the mally caste, have recognized the body, but can afford no clue to the detection of the perpetrator of this horrid deed.

AGRA.—The banks for the sale of Agra Bank stock have closed, the entire capital of that institution, consisting of 4,000 shares of 250 rupees each, or one million of rupees, having been subscribed by the public, who have latterly eagerly pressed forward to secure so safe a means of investment.

Major Sutherland left Agra on the 12th Oct., on his return to Gwalior, from whence he will proceed on a tour through Malwa and Candeish. His object is to inspect the position and relations of the different native states throughout those countries, and to examine generally into such questions of the natural and other resources of this extensive tract, as will not fail to present themselves to his enquiring mind. He will be absent on this tour about six months.

Major Ross, who accompanied him from Agra, directs his route to the Bundelkunt and Saugor frontiers, with the view of adjusting some questions connected with our civil relations in this quarter, which Major Stubbs had begun last year, but could not in his mere military capacity conclude.

A committee of the officers of the country, composed of the commanding officer of the forces, the officer commanding the three regiments and the Surgeon, is about to assemble to select a cantonment for the reformed contingent in some place above the Ghats, as Goorahwallah seems to be condemned by all as unhealthy.

The following are the stages travelled by the Commander-in-Chief in his route from Cawnpore to Kurnaul:—

Cawnpore from 19th November to 24th November.
Lucknow from 29th November to 4th December.
Cawnpore from 9th December to 10th December.
Gwalior from 27th December to 1st January.
Agra from 8th January to 13th January.
Muttra from 16th January to 17th January.
Meerut from 2d February to 7th February.
Kurnaul from 14th February to 17th February.

Kedar Nath, a younger brother of the traveller Moonshee Mohun Lal, who now holds an appointment in the office of Mr. Gubbins, the Joint Magistrate and Deputy Collector of Etawah, has expressed his desire to accompany that gentleman to England, and has laid a petition before the Lieut.-Governor, praying that Government would furnish him with the means of carrying his design into execution.

The students of the Agra College were examined on the 3d Oct., and developed considerable improvement.

SIMLAH.—The abuse bestowed on the Agent has created no very enviable sensation up here. Numerous parties are starting in all directions for the interior.

MUSSOORIE.—The rains have cleared off a little; but the Jumna bridge has been carried away by the torrent and the communication with Simla interrupted.

In consequence of the restriction on leave in the country, Mr. Fisher will be obliged, to the general regret, to return to Calcutta.

MONGHYR.—A severe storm occurred at Monghyr, on the night of the 29th of September, which lasted until the 1st Oct. and committed much damage.

ALLAHABAD.—Dr. Tytler is delivering lectures at Futteghur on electro-magnetism.

The scholars of the Government Free-schools were examined on the 12th and 13th of Oct., and the improvement which they shewed, gave great satisfaction.

A proposition has been made, to remove the ancient pillar which is laying in the Allahabad fort, to Calcutta.

CHUNAR.—Rupees 1,300 of the amount stolen from the magazine, have been recovered and some of the thieves detected, in consequence of all the klashees having been mulcted to the amount stolen.

BRAWR.—Mr. Assistant-Surgeon H. Maclean, it is said, has volunteered to visit Pallee, and investigate the real nature of the pestilence raging there.

KURNAUL.—In an affray that took place here, some time back, between the sycos of the Horse Artillery Troop, and the station gwallahs, five of the former received wounds from swords, supposed to have been given by some troopers of Cavalry, who wearied of inactivity, or from pure love of mischief, were de-ironed of fleshing their weapons. Be that as it may, a Jemadar or Havildar, and some troopers were tried and acquitted. But out of this arose an order from the Brigadier, that though no large cattle were to be allowed on the Artillery exercise ground, yet goats and sheep might graze there, and the grass on it was declared to be at the service of those, who thought proper to cut it.

PALLEE.—The plague is still making fearful havoc among the inhabitants of Pallee, and is said to be approaching towards Agra. The population of Pallee, which consisted of twelve thousand persons, has been thinned by the plague, and emigration, to about three thousand.

MEERUT.—The second Suddur Aumeen of Meerut, has been appointed Suddur or Suloor to Boohundshur. It is reported that Mr. Hamilton may be appointed judge of the new circle of Azimguhur. Hindoo Row and several native gentlemen have been paying a farewell visit to Mr. Sombre, previous to his departure for England.

The whole of the revenue, to the amount of 20 lakhs, has been paid up, leaving not a rupee outstanding.

NATIVE STATES.

NEPAL.—There is likely to be some row in Nepal. General Beem Singh, the minister seems inclined to usurp the Rajaship. It is said that orders have been sent up to restore the old cantonment of Burrah Gong, about 30 miles west of Bettiah, and a corps is to be sent there immediately. A large quantity of grain is also to be collected and stored up there.

JUEYPORE.—The Rajah has completed the 3d year of his nonage, an event which was celebrated with great hilarity by the Rajpoot chiefs. The Resident graced the Regent's saloons by his presence on the occasion.

Mr. Trevelyan has arrived and is now encamped outside the city.

Two hundred of Major Foster's volunteers have, it appears, by virtue of their free will, deserted from their troop and been dismissed.

KHYRPORE.—The Scinde Ilacqua has lately become the scene of great excesses. The two sons of the Khyrpore Chief, desirous of participating in the pleasures of power, rose up against their father and seized upon several of his villages: but the old Chief calling in the aid of the Scindians, suppressed the insurrection and took his two sons prisoners: they are now incarcerated in the Fort of Khyrpore; and, as a farther punishment, a younger brother has been raised to the dignity of Wullye Ayud (Heir Apparent.) The mother, however, of the two elder brothers, determining to circumvent this arrangement, has made a resolution of poisoning the old chief, and making over his territories to her two sons.

SHAH SHOOJA-OOO MOOLLUCK, though divested of the externals of Royalty, still keeps up the farce of court: at the last levee he held, a letter was read from Yacoob Ally Khan the Kottawalla, stating that having heard from various quarters of the King's intention of once again trying his fortunes in Cundahar, he begged to proffer his services, as well as those of 200 tried and staunch horsemen. Yacoob's services were rejected.

BUHAWULPORE.—A serious affray is said to have occurred in some zemindarie in the Buhawulpore ilacqua; in which a man named Usuff Khan, of high rank, and great renown, was killed. A dispute had arisen between the Zemindars of Nabah and Kote Keowray, which having been referred to arbitration, parties were appointed on both sides; but, whilst preliminaries were being settled, the Nabah party treacherously attacked the other, killed the chief, Usuff Khan, and wounded several of his followers.

At Pere Kalus, a village in the same ilacqua, another singular occurrence has taken place. Shere Mahomed, the Sirdar of the village, was blessed with a daughter, whose surpassing beauty became the theme of every tongue. Rookun-ood-doula, the Buhawulpore Chief, was fired with the desire of possessing such a treasure, and messengers were despatched forthwith to make proffers of marriage for the village beauty; and, if these were not accepted, to seize, spoliat and imprison the whole family. Timely notice of the intended honour was conveyed to Shere Mahomed, so that by the time the messengers arrived, the family had flown and taken shelter in a more congenial clime.

ODDE.—It is said that, in consequence of the misgovernment of His Majesty the King of Lucknow, it is very probable the Government of India will immediately place the Oude territories under British rule.

Mr. W. H. Darnett, the barber and factotum of the King of Oude, has been raised by the King to the dignity of a Brigadier-General, with the command of eight regiments of horse and foot.

His Majesty is now seriously contemplating a fight with the Queen mother. The preparation of guns and munition creates great consternation in the city, for if they be fired, heaven only knows where the balls may go. Her Majesty is encamped in Umisi's Bagh, where she has a very smart guard and is determined to resist to the death. The Resident looks on very quietly. Brigadier-General Denisset, has despatched a shooter suwer to Agra and Loolceannah, to arrest the progress of Lieut. Fast (late of the 59th) as he is by the Brigadier-General's interest to succeed Mr. Wright, the King's teacher, instead of being thrown away on Dost Moohummud.

LAHORE.—Runjeet has returned to Lahore.

Now-no-hal Sing has been enjoined to send all the retainers of Shah Nowaz Khan, the ex-Chief of Dera Ismail Khan, to Lahore. In giving this order, the Maharaja took occasion to inform his courtiers, that had not Shah Nowaz Khan been guilty of the enormity of sacrificing the blessed cow within his territories, he would not have had to mourn their loss.

Hurree-Sing was soundly rated for not overpowering and capturing the famous bandit Payund Khan; but he excused himself by saying that the craven would never face him boldly, but always retreated to his mountain and impregnable fastnesses, on the approach of danger.

The Maharaja was urged to reply to the repeated and urgent entreaties of Koonwur Shere Sing, to be permitted to try his strength with Dost Mahomed, and conquer Cabool, but no answer was deigned. This silence seals the fate of Cabool.

Shikarpore, it is probable, will soon again become the theatre of war. The victorious Now Nehal Sing, elated by his recent conquests, and supposing, that ought in the shape of mortality can stem the tide of his prosperity, sent a taunting message to the Chiefs of Shikarpore, upbraiding them with their backwardness in not congratulating him upon the occasion of his conquest of Dera Ismail Khan, &c., and demanding enormous contributions in the shape of nuzzerana. Peace and war at present, are so nicely balanced, that it is difficult to say which will preponderate.

Runjeet, upon a late occasion, while expressing his anxiety to confer once again with his friend Sir Charles Metcalfe, remarked that formerly many of his courtiers endeavoured to persuade him from forming any alliance with the English, but that having wisely rejected their counsel, he had entered into the strictest friendship with them, with what advantage to himself time had shewn: Sir C. Metcalfe, he said, had told him, that in twenty years he would reap the fruits of this alliance with the British, and the sequel has proved the wisdom of the assertion.

The Mazdries and Biloches, the most noted freebooters in the Punjab, are committing great depredations in Mooltan. They have acquired sufficient head to set at defiance the collected forces of Dewan Sawun Mull, the Governor of the province.

The Usuff Zades, another set of robbers, are equally troublesome in the vicinity of Peshawur.

Monsieur Ayetavel is to be invested with the Government of Dera Ismail Khan.

Runjeet contemplated sending a Mr. Farquharson, whose military abilities are highly spoken of, with Now Nehal Sing, to effect the conquest of Shikarpore so soon as the rains shall have broken up.

A new system of customs, based upon the British system, is in contemplation. A letter has been addressed to the Hakims of Mooltan and Cashmere, enjoining them to act in strict conformity with Captain Wade's wishes, and to adopt any measures, affecting the removal of the present severe commercial restrictions, he may point out. All points involving dispute to be referred to the Maharajah.

Rumour has it, that Runjeet Sing, anxious to witness the manner in which European women "trip it on the light fantastic toe," upon a late occasion ordered his brave General Ventura, to go forthwith and bring into the presence Mrs. Cortlandt and a Mrs. Martin, in order that they might exhibit before the Maharajah, and convince him of their superiority over the black-eyed damsels of Ind; and that the General preumptively refused to comply with the request.

LAHORE.—Upon the occasion of the approaching marriage of Now Nehal Sing, the Political Agent of Loodiana has sent 32 bighly loads of fruits to Runjeet.

HERAT.—It is reported, that Shere Mahomed Khan, the son of Yar Mahomed Khan, one of the courtiers of the Herat Chief, and who it appears, commands his forces, has fought a desperate and sanguinary battle with the Mulluck Zrees, and taken one of their strong forts, Ghowrie. Elated with the conquest, the Herat Chief dispatched a portion of the conquering army, headed by Atta Mahomed Khan, to battle with Shere Poordil Khan, the Reis of Candahar, who was encamped in the Burruck Zree country about the Herat Army was routed by that of Candahar, which was headed by Shere Poordil Khan's son. So complete was the defeat, that tents, baggage, equipments, ammunition, every thing, fell into the hands of the Candahars. The discomfited Atta Mahomed Khan, is breathing vengeance against the chief of Candahar, and only waits for an opportunity to retrieve his fallen dignity.

CABOOL.—Roohilla Khan, of the Burruck Zree tribe, and the Prime Minister of Shah-Nehal Khan, having deserted his noble and indulgent master in the hour of danger, and betaken himself to the mountains of the Vuzerie tribe, has written a letter to Dost Mahomed Khan, in which he urges that the armies of Runjeet Singh having conquered Dera Ismail Khan, Doorooboonoo and Took, are now thinking of turning their arms towards Cabool, which place is to be visited in November; but that the danger being yet afar off, the Ruler of Cabool can, if he will, set his shoulder strenuously to the wheel, avert it, as well by the arts of policy as by the force of arms. This letter gave much satisfaction to Dost Mahomed, who immediately ordered Hajte Khan to repair to Jalalabad, with a force 8,000 strong.—Meer Ammad Khan to co-operate with Sahadut Khan the Hakim of Lallpore, and his own eldest son, Ulzool Khan, to Hajiatore with a large body of men: Abdoola Khan the Achuck Ziee, was also desired to direct his steps to Candahar, and, after he should have obtained assistance from that quarter, to join Ulzool Khan, in the Vuzerie mountains and render him every assistance in his power. Dost Mahomed further said, that he would place himself at the head of his army at Jelalabad, and drive the Sheiks from Peshawur or perish in the attempt.

In consequence of these arrangements, added to the arrival of Hajte Khan with his 8,000 men, at Jelalabad, Sahadut Khan of Lallpore has actually commenced operations; and that so warmly that he has obliged the Sheiks to decamp; not, however, before some of their head men were murdered. Sirdar Taij Singh is out against the insurgents.

CABOOL.—By the advice of some of his courtiers, Dost Mahomed, to replenish his exhausted treasury, has imposed a poll tax on all the inhabitants of Cabool,—fixed, without reference to rank or station, at 2 rupees for a Mussulman and 5 rupees for a Hindoo. The exaction is so enforced, that those who possess the means, readily meet it—but, those who are poor and needy, have been obliged to fly from Cabool, and take refuge in Runjeet's territories: the refugees are so numerous that, if Dost Mahomed does not adopt means to stop it, Cabool will soon become depopulated.

SEKUR.—It is said that a considerable assemblage of principal border Thakours of Sekawatta, together with their followers, amounting to nearly 3,000 in number, has taken place at Biatote, near Sekur. The reason for this hostile demonstration, arises, it is said, from the recent determination of the Jeypore Government to place Bukta Ram and Bejee Singh at the head of the administration of that State, and to turn out Kurmeem Khan, who has, hitherto, enjoyed the confidence of the Rajee, and who was equally favored by the late Rao Rajah Luchman Singh, who fully appreciated the services of this old and faithful servant.

WOKHARA.—This country is experiencing all the horrors of a civil war: a furious contest is raging between the Chief of Bokkhara and his son-in-law, in which reprisals and cruelties on both sides form the distinguishing feature.

CASHMERE.—In consequence of the very heavy rains, the river which runs through Cashmere, has swollen to so frightful an extent as to inundate almost the whole of the surrounding country, destroying crops and every thing in its course. In the City of Cashmere, the large bridge has been swept away, and thirty of the inhabitants drowned.

MITHEN KOTE.—The long pending question, of the amount of tribute to be paid to Runjeet Singh, by this tributary flaque, has not yet been decided, but it is not likely to remain long so; for Koonwur Kurruck Sing, preparatory to the long expected dour upon Shikarpore, has pushed forward his troops, and seized upon the fort of Mithen Kote, which is not more than twenty miles from Mithen Kote, and in the direct road to Shikarpore. The inhabitants of the country are flying, in all directions before the Sikhs, and crowding into Shikarpore.

PESHAWUR.—A battle has been fought between Mihtab Singh, one of Runjeet's generals, and Sahadut Khan, the Dukh Wala, in which the latter was defeated with the loss of sixty men.

The Pathans in the vicinity of Peshawur have become so daring, as to extend their depredations even into the very heart of the city. Khoonwar Shere Singh's house has been robbed, and many of his followers wounded in a skirmish with these Kuzzaks, who, after the commission of the deed, managed to escape, untouched, to the mountains.

TURANTARAN.—The Maharaja Runjeet Singh was on the 8th Oct. at Turantaran, where he holds his Durbar.

An Urzee was received from the Ukhbar Nuvees of Cashmere, stating that the Hakim Mahun Singh, had raised a levy of 2,000 soldiers, which he had distributed in all the forts of Cashmere, and that two lacks of rupees in cash and two in specie would be remitted to the Iluzoor by the Duserah.

Intimation was received from Now Nehal Singh, that he had reduced the refractory Zemindars of Dooroboonoo.

Sirdar Herah Singh was told that, as a compensation for the contingent of Horse he kept up for the Sirkar's service, he would receive a grant of the Jagheer of Kusrowta, which, however, as was afterwards ascertained, was already bestowed upon Soochait Singh.

The Vakeels of the Pattialah, Naba, Jeendh and Khitul Rajahs, paid their respects, and were asked what had been settled regarding the dispute into which the death of the Jeenth Rajah had brought them. The reply was that, Sir Charles Metcalfe had settled it to the satisfaction of all parties; so much so, that the Rajahs had given up the intention of sending their Vakeels to Calcutta, to lay their grievances before the Governor-General in Council.

Two hulkares were despatched to Cabool, to glean intelligence of the movements of Dost Mahomed.

MADRAS.

SIR E. GAMBIER.—Sir E. Gambier was daily expected at Madras.

SIR F. ADAM.—Sir Frederick Adam was expected at Madras from the Hills on the 27th or 28th Oct. which place he was to leave on the 1st Oct. on his downward route.

SIR F. ADAM.—Sir F. Adam, on the 5th Oct., left Sadras, arrived on the 7th at Madras, and took his seat in council.

NEW CHAPLAIN.—A new Chaplain, the Revd. G. Trevor, has been appointed to Madras.

DON ANTONIO.—The Queen of Portugal has appointed Don Antonio to be Bishop of Milapore.

The Right Reverend Don Antonio, Bishop of Milapore, was enthroned and took possession of the ancient cathedral at St. Thome, on the 6th instant.

COURTS-MARTIAL.—It is said that a court-martial will shortly assemble at Madras, to investigate charges against Capt. Fitzgibbon, rising out of the publication of a pamphlet relating to former proceedings in which that officer was concerned. The court of enquiry formed to investigate into Capt. Wiltshire's charges against Capt. Osborne, will soon close its proceedings, and it is said, no court-martial will follow.

CAPTAIN PAUVREAU.—The Madras Government have allowed Captain Pauvreau, of the French brig Eugene, the sum of rupees 353, to remunerate him for the expense and trouble he was put to in saving and entertaining the commander and crew of the schooner Barraket, which was wrecked on the way to Moulmein, and enabling them to return to Madras.

GOOMSOR.—The affairs of Goomsor continue much the same as reported last month. The Bunjee and his family have left the country for Vizianagram, where they are to be imprisoned in the fort. Troops are being sent to the seat of war and the campaign is expected to recommence on a grand scale.

THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF.—The Commander-in-Chief has taken his passage in the Royal William, which is to leave Madras for the Cape and England on the 10th of October; previous to which time it is expected that the new Commander-in-Chief, Sir P. Maitland, will have arrived in the Trus Briton, which left England on the 26th of June. Captain Ireland had engaged to remain 3 or 4 days beyond the 10th, in case the Trus Briton, should not have made her appearance; at the expiration of which time the office of Commanding-in-Chief will devolve on Major General Sir John FitzGerald, Commanding the Southern Division.

SIR PEREGRINE MAITLAND.—The Trus Briton, with Sir Peregrine Maitland and his family on board, arrived at Madras on the 10th October, and his Excellency landed on the evening of the 11th with the usual honors. Sir Peregrine, before his departure from England, received a letter from Lord Elphinstone, in which his Lordship manifested his intention to proceed overland on the 1st of September, and expected to arrive at Madras in the beginning of November.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.—The merchants of Madras have at length determined on establishing a Chamber of Commerce.

ANTI-BLACK ACT PETITIONS.—The Anti-Black Act Petition has only received forty-eight signatures, and the subscription list only shewed an amount of about 750 rupees.

EMIGRATION.—The brig Vencatareddy, commanded by Captain Rodgers, sailed from Madras on the 28th of September, for the Solomon Islands, a small groupe of the Chagos Archipelago, eleven in number, in Lat 50. 23' S. On her are embarked about 30 cooly laborers with their wives and families, natives of Madras. They are engaged to remain 5 years, the men to receive 2 pagodas a month, and the women one. The spirited individuals who have embarked in this enterprise intend to colonize on the islands and to attempt the cultivation of sugar.

TROTTING MATCH.—The trotting match from Guindy to Royapetta square, took place at the appointed time. The distance which is nearly, if not quite, five miles, was done in 21 minutes. The honest little Arab is 13 3. He broke 3 times and twice fancied his master had a desire to call upon one or two of his friends as he passed.

FAREWELL DINNER TO SIR R. O'CALLLOHAN.—A grand farewell dinner was given by his friends, to Sir Robert O'Callaghan on the 13th Oct.

EXCHANGE OF TERRITORY.—An exchange of Territory is about to be made between our Government and the French, of their respective possessions in India. Lord Elphinstone, before leaving England, was empowered to treat with the Marquis De St. Simon on the subject, and a Commissioner from Calcutta will shortly be appointed to meet the French Governor at Pondicherry, where the proposed negotiation is to be carried on.

MELANCHOLY ACCIDENT.—A youth belonging to the 6th regiment, whilst bathing in the sea opposite the tents on the Esplanade, was seized by a shark, who tore off his right arm and leg. The unfortunate young man died almost immediately.

COMPULSORY ATTENDANCE ON IDOLATROUS WORSHIP.—A memorial has been submitted to the Madras Government by 203 members of the Christian community,—of whom 51 are ecclesiastics, 111 military men, ten medical men, and 31 civilians and others,—praying to be exempted from compulsory attendance on idolatrous worship. The prayer of the petitioners, however, has been refused by the local government, and has, in consequence, been forwarded to the Supreme Government.

MUKTUL.—The monsoon of this year has been very unfavourable in most of the Hyderabad districts north of and bordering on the Kistna; the tanks are drying up fast, and there is much reason to apprehend a great scarcity. The Bishop and Archdeacon arrived at Muktul on the 6th instant, and were to proceed again the same evening en route to Secunderabad from Bellary.

BOMBAY.

PIRACY.—A battela was attacked on the 9th Oct. by a body of twenty-four armed ruffians near Demoo Onurgum, on its way to Jumbhoosur. The pirates are said to have come up in a boat, and intimidating the crew by throwing a few over board that offered any resistance, they succeeded in carrying away the cargo, consisting of ivory, sugar, English cloth and some other articles, amounting altogether to about 6,000 rupees. It is stated that the battela was closely followed by the plunderers, since its sailing from the harbour.

SERIOUS AFFRAY.—An affray took place on the 11th Oct., near Colsbunder, between the Farmer's officers and a piratical boat, containing some iron and copper sheets, in which one of the former is said to have been mortally wounded. It seems that the boat, which had two Luvanus, one Slidee and three lascars on board, would not have been able to effect its escape, had not some of its accomplices swam to its assistance from the coast. Being unable, however, to carry away the iron and copper they abandoned it to the waves, and the pieces, when afterwards brought to the Musjed Bunder, weighed 20½ maunds copper and 9½ maunds of iron.

ABOLITION OF SEA AND LAND CUSTOMS.—The farm of sea and land customs in the Konkan has been abolished, and that branch of finance placed under the Collector of customs in Konkan from the 1st Oct. The farm of duties in the zillah of Poona, will also be shortly done away with, though it has been renewed for three months. In consequence of these measures, the large establishment of the farmer, Venchjee Merjee, consisting of several hundreds of Karkoons, has been broken up.

THE RAJA OF SATTARA.—The Raja of Sattara recently shut himself up in his hill fort with hostile intentions towards the British Government. The reason of this was not known at the time, but part of the troops of Poona received instructions to be ready to march at a moment's notice. From this circumstance, and from the departure of the Political Secretary to Poona by an express, some thing very serious was expected. The dispute, however, has been settled, and it seems it arose out of misunderstanding.

BONDING SYSTEM.—The Bonding System is likely soon to be introduced into Madras.

LETTERS BY THE HUGH LINDSAY.—The number of letters taken by the Hugh Lindsay amounts to about four thousand. Of these, however, many were, as usual, packets containing from 20 to 30 letters each.

STATUE OF SIR JOHN MALCOLM.—The statue of Sir John Malcolm, which was ordered from Hong when he retired from the Government of Bombay, arrived in the Walmer Castle, and was opened regally. It is by Chantrey, and is intended for the Town Hall, where preparations are already making for its reception. At present the case in which it arrived surrounds, and of course hides it in some measure. But enough may be seen to show that it is an admirable likeness. The costume in which it appears is that of a general officer with a military cloak. One hand rests upon a sword and the other is placed upon the hip. The attitude is bold and commanding. The height of the statue is 7 feet 4 inch, and the pedestal is about 4 feet. The spot selected for it is under the skylight, in the library entrance of the Town Hall.

DARING ROBBERY.—On the morning of the 16th September, between the hours of two and three, shortly after his return from a religious ceremony in which he had been engaged, the house of one Nillajee Kerrowjee, situated in New Town (Setwally) was broken into by a gang of Gatties, eight or ten in number, who proceeded to carry on their work in a very cool and systematic manner. Having lighted a candle, they assaulted Nillajee's wife who was asleep, and commenced to strip her of the jewels which were upon her person to the value of about 520 rupees; roused by her cries her husband came to her assistance, and received two severe blows, one upon the foot, the other on the arm. Luckily a box of joys which was under the bed, containing a great number which he had borrowed from her relations for the Gowrey festival, with about 1,500 rupees, escaped the observation of the rogues.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.—A numerous meeting of the mercantile community was held on the 22nd of September, at a room at the Custom House, granted by Mr. Bruce for the occasion, when it was unanimously resolved to establish a society to be called "The Bombay Chamber of Commerce." A committee was appointed to draw up rules and regulations for the society to be submitted for approval to another meeting to be held on the 24th September at 4 o'clock at the same place.

ESCAPE OF A CONVICT.—A convict named Ballo Enack, who was sentenced at the last quarter sessions to 14 years transportation for having stolen a gold watch from Captain Morden, of the 6th Royals, escaped from the grand goal at dusk on Tuesday the 13th October. The manner in which he effected this was, by tearing his blanket and turban which he formed into a rope, and fastening a billet of wood to it, threw it from the window of his cell to the top of the wall where it remained fixed upon the spikes. As soon as the circumstance became known all was confusion, sepoy and peons running about in all directions. This having occurred during the absence of the gaoler, nothing determinate could be resolved upon, but as soon as he returned, havildars and peons were despatched to the house occupied by the convict's family, where they found his wife, whom they forced to accompany them to point out the different places which her husband had been in the habit of frequenting. These searches were made to no purpose, so they returned with the woman about 1 or 2 next morning, when, after having been interrogated by the jailor, she was discharged.

Since this occurrence all the European and Native convicts have been fettered, among the former of whom are some sailors who were sentenced by a General court-martial to transportation for seven years for having run away with one of the ship's boats from the H. C. brig Royal Tiger on the Malabar Coast.

EXAMINATIONS OF SCHOOLS.—On the 9th of September, an examination of the Marathe Schools at Dharwar took place before a meeting of European and native gentlemen of the place. Mr Dunlop, the Principal Collector, Mr. Simpson, the Judge, and Messrs. Ravenscroft, Escombe, and several others were present. The progress made by the boys in arithmetic, reading and writing, was very satisfactory. The most deserving of them were presented with books, and the master was rewarded with a sum of 50 Rs. It is reported that a reference has been made by this Government to Bengal at the recommendation of Mr. Dunlop, to increase the salary of the Master from 20 to 30 Rs.

The English School at Poona was examined by the Right Honorable the Governor at Sungum on the 9th of September, when several prizes in clothes were awarded to the most deserving boys. Five of them were appointed as monitors in the school on a salary of 10 rupees per mensem.

PRESENT TO RAOSAHEB P. VENKUT RAO.—A complete khilaut (3½ poshaka) was lately presented by the Right Honorable the Governor at Dapooree, to Rao-Saheb P. Venkut Rao, principal commissioner of Belgaum, and late acting native judge of Dharwar, as a mark of the sense entertained by Government of his merits and services. The title of "Rao Bahadoor" has also been conferred upon him.

NATIVE EDUCATION.—The native education Society have chosen Dadoba Pandoorung and Nana Narayan to proceed to Indore, in order to attend upon the young chiefs of Jowra and Jabooa, as English tutors, on a salary of 125 per month.

SUTTEE.—A Bhatia woman left Bombay a short time since for Jaffrabad, which belongs to the Shiddee, in order to immolate herself, as a suttee, on the pile of her deceased husband. She was the first instance of a woman of this caste having left Bombay for this purpose. A woman of the same caste has since embarked on a boat for Jaffrabad, with an intention of burning herself with the bones of her son, declaring that he was her husband in former life!

PENANG.

MELANCHOLY ACCIDENT.—A melancholy accident occurred on the 20th August, by the upsetting in a sudden squall of a proow tumbangum or passage boat about hundred yards off the opposite shore, by which seven persons, men, women and children, were unfortunately drowned; and it is supposed several others have shared the same fate, although their bodies have not yet been discovered.

The accident occurred within sight of several persons collected on the beach, but no assistance was rendered to the unfortunate persons until they were a considerable time in the water; although many boats were then at hand.

OUTRAGES ON BRITONS AT PEDIER.—Capt. Bacon, of the brig Maria, has addressed a statement to the Penang papers, complaining that on his last voyage to the Pedier Coast he was put under personal restraint for three days under an armed guard by the orders of the Rajah of Pedier and his father-in-law, the noted Tonku Pakee, in consequence of having become responsible for the appearance of Captain Patton, of the Brig Zoroaster, which has been cut off by her crew, who was then detained at Pedier on a serious charge fabricated against him by his crew; but who having understood that it was the Rajah's intention to cut him off, immediately quitted the Port, leaving behind large advances made to some of the natives for a cargo. On the third day, however, Capt. B. was allowed to return on board his vessel and the only satisfaction he received for this unjustifiable outrage, were two letters from the Rajahs, apologizing for their conduct and declaring that they found no fault with him!

A DUTCH CRUIZER CUT OFF.—A report has been brought by the brig Hanoody, that one of the Dutch cruizers employed on the West Coast of Sumatra, the Dolphin, had been taken possession of by her crew, (of Javanese) who after murdering the commander and his wife, took the vessel and a son of the commander to Acheen, where they delivered the son to the Rajah of that place; and that the Resident of Padang had demanded restoration of the son which had been refused.

CEYLON.

SIR W. NORRIS.—Sir William, Lady Norris and family, embarked on board the Allison, and sailed on the 13th September for Penang, where Sir William succeeds Sir Edward Gambier as Recorder.

THE GOVERNOR.—His Excellency the Governor, was shortly expected to return to Colombo from Nuwera Ellia: Lady and Miss Horton will follow towards the end of the month, when the alterations and repairs, at present making at the King's House, it is expected will be completed. Apartments are also fitting up in it for the accommodation of Sir Thomas Bladen Capel, Naval Commander-in-Chief, and Lady Capel, who will visit Colombo about the same time.

GOVERNMENT SERVANTS' WIDOWS AND ORPHANS FUND.—A minute has been published by His Excellency the Governor, with a correspondence and memorial attached to it, respecting a plan for the establishment of a pension fund for the widows and orphan children of Government servants.

The plan contemplates the admission to its privileges of those public servants who draw pay not exceeding £300 nor under £15 per annum; from which subscriptions of six per cent. are to be deducted. The annual donation of £1,000 is solicited from Government in aid of the fund.

Sir Robert Horton has given his cordial approbation and ready support to the plan; but as he is not authorized to guarantee the assistance of Government to the extent solicited, he will submit the memorial to the Secretary of State "with his most earnest recommendation;" and until the decision of Lord Glenelg is received, he will make an annual donation of £200 to the fund.

CINNAMON TRADE.—The quantity of cinnamon shipped during the year, ending 31st August 1836, amounted to about 5,318 bales, being within about 182 bales of what was exported by Government during the monopoly.

SENTENCES OF COURTS-MARTIAL.—Peter Mallowney, who was sentenced by a court-martial to transportation for life to Van Dieman's Land, has completed the fourth year of his imprisonment in the jail of Colombo, and is still kept waiting for an opportunity to carry the sentence into effect; although, in the memory of man, a vessel has not sailed direct from Ceylon to the place of his destination. There therefore now appears as much chance of his being removed from his present deplorable situation as there was on the first day of his incarceration. Private Mc' Shanly, received 150 lashes on the 12th Oct., being the sentence of a court-martial, for having been drunk on parade and throwing a brick at a Corporal. On the 16th privates J. Lynch, and D. Ward, got 150 lashes each, the first for firing his musket over hours in barrack, the second for habitual drunkenness and stealing from his comrades.

FLOGGING.—On the evening of the 6th Oct., private Hitchion, of the 90th L. I., stationed at Ceylon, received one hundred lashes, being the sentence of a court-martial for having, when in the military prison, made use of intemperate language to the superintending serjeant.

NEW COFFEE CROP.—The new coffee crop has come in this year earlier than usual in consequence of the late prevalence of dry weather. What has as yet been brought into market is of an inferior description, owing to the injurious practices resorted to by the natives of boiling the green berries to extract the beans, and of moistening the latter after drying, to increase the weight. As the season advances, coffee will, however, improve in quality; and the present crop, it is expected, will prove abundant.

PERSIA.

Letters from Persia to the 13th of July give the following:—

"Last year the cholera broke out in the capital, and carried off about 7,000 victims. All the inhabitants who could leave the city moved out into the neighbouring villages situated in the hills, and thus escaped infection. The court was full of bustle in making preparations for a campaign against Kamram Shah of Herat. It was also publicly given out that the King would march against Khiva to punish the chief of that state, for his aggression upon Persia in carrying off her subjects as slaves. The Russian envoy, or Wazeer Mookhtar, as he is called, strongly urged Mahomed Shah to attempt the conquest of both Herat and Khiva. It was hinted that a Russian expedition against Khiva was in contemplation next autumn, and that the active co-operation of Persia would cement the existing friendship between the two states. These arguments, backed by bribes lavishly dealt out among the ministers, had the desired effect in exciting the vanity and ambition of the young King, whose prime minister, Hadjee Mirza Aghassee, is so full of schemes of conquest that he has already bestowed the governments of Cabul and Peshawur in anticipation, and says that he will not die happy until the armies of Mahomed Shah shall cross the frontier of China, India of course being taken up en passant!

"The English ambassador endeavored in vain, to dissuade the court from such a precipitate course, while the internal affairs of Persia were in such an unsettled state,—the revenue of the provinces unpaid,—the army heavily in arrears and openly discontented, deserting by whole companies and taking refuge in the sanctuaries where they could not be touched,—the arms and equipments of the troops in miserable condition, and the Nizam without any ideas of order or discipline. This wholesome advice was unheeded by the king and his ministers, and the English influence at this court no longer exists. The officers of the British detachment are in a false position, their duties have never been defined. One day they are sarkardars or commanders of the troops to which they are attached; the next they are treated as mere drill sergeants, all orders being given by the native Colonels, Surkury and Serteops.

CHINA.

An edict has been published by the Hoppo, prohibiting any ship, except Spanish or Portuguese, from importing goods of any kind into Macao.

SINGAPORE.

BARK CHARLES EATON.—One of the colonial schooners fitted out by the Sydney Government, for the purpose of visiting Murray's Island in search of the captive crew of the late Bark Charles Eaton, has succeeded in rescuing a little boy, and a lad, from the savages. The rest of the passengers and crew, including an European female, have been barbarously murdered by the cannibals.

REVIEW OF THE CALCUTTA MARKET.

(From Kuhn's Monthly Price Current, October 31, 1836.)

The Native Holidays which commenced on the 15th and terminated with the 25th instant, have as usual, put a stop to all commercial transactions during these 10 days. Our present number will therefore present but very limited matter of general interest, and the transactions which we have to notice, are for the most part relative to the business done before the 15th instant.

The subscription list for the Bonding Ware-house was filled up, on the 30th instant, to the complement of 1000 shares, and subsequent tenders have been registered upon a supplementary list.

Freights have become more abundant, and are quoted somewhat lower.

INDIGO.—The demand continues steady for sales on delivery, but many planters prefer to wait till the regular season is open, expecting better prices. The estimate of the crop continues to be from 105 to 110,000 maunds.

OPIMUM.—The proposition for the admission of this drug into the port of Canton, on payment of a duty, and the loss of the Suzana, has had a sensible effect on the Chinese market, as well as in ours, the more so, as the quantity disposable here is very limited. By the sales during the month Patna Opium obtained as high as Co's Rs-1605.

RAW SILK.—The market presents a favourable prospect, owing to the continued demand for England. There is no stock, the disposable arrivals from the interior being eagerly purchased at full rates.

SILK PIECE GOODS.—Corahs continue also to meet with increased demand, and large orders are under execution at the Aurungs. The demand for the other descriptions continues also unabated.

RAW COTTON.—We have only one transaction to notice, viz. the sale of 300 bags of Agra Cotton at Sa-Ra-12-10.

The market continues depressed, shipments to China being on their close as usual at this season, and those for England are still retained by the high rates of freight.

SALTETRE.—This produce has met during the whole month with steady demand, for the English, American, and the French markets, and prices continue to be on the advance. Good and fine qualities are still scarce.

SUGAR.—Has been on the decline since our last, owing to the difficulty of obtaining a certificate of the place of growth, required for shipments to the English markets. The fine white Sugar is still scarce.

LAC.—The demand for Dye, Shell and Stick Lac has been limited during the whole month; prices are, however, sustained.

RICE.—Fine white and clean Rice is much enquired after for shipment to England, and prices are on the advance. Munghy and Ballam are also in fair demand at enhanced rates, for Shipments to Mauritius. The new Rice expected to arrive at the end of November and throughout December.

LINSEED.—We have to confirm, what we stated already in our last number, in regard to the considerable decrease in our supply from the interior, having received up to the present day, not above one third of the quantity received at the same time last year.

SPICES, DRUGS AND OTHER MISCELLANEOUS PRODUCE.—Business to some extent has been done for articles under this head.

METALS.—Our sales have been on a very limited scale, owing to the native holidays, the prices of the assortments have consequently not experienced any marked alteration and the position of the market is about the same, as described in our last number. The stock has been increased by the following arrivals.

Jean, from London	102 Tons	Spelter
	50 bbls.	Quick Silver
	403 chts.	Iron
Repulse „ ditto	25 Tons	Hoop Iron
	40 „	Sheet Iron
	203 „	Swedish do.
William „ Liverpool	38 cases	Sheathing Copper.
	20 Tons	Tile do.
	10 „	Sloop do.
Allerton „ ditto	17 Casks	Copper.

TWIST.—We have the following supplies to report since our last.

William, from Liverpool	148 bbls.
	80 trusses
Allerton ditto	92 bbls.

Transactions have been suspended during the greater part of the month, owing to the native holidays; the sales were consequently very limited and prices experienced no alteration.

COTTON AND WOOLLEN PIECE GOODS.—Jaconets, Lappets, Book Muslin and Mulls have, during the first 5 months of the present commercial year, greatly exceeded the ordinary supplies of the former years. The market has been influenced by the native holidays and we have but few sales to report, the general appearance is however favorable.

THE JEYPOOR TRIALS.

TRIAL OF HOOKUM CHUND, JOTHA RAM AND FUTUH LAL.

Original of No. 17 of Agra papers, is shown to Jottha Ram and read.

Q.—This letter came from Agra, and the tenor of it shows that it was written for you?

A.—Mangeea will have written it; I know nothing of it.

Q.—In this letter is written—'In consequence I have sent a man to Juepoor, and have directed him to say to Sivu Laljee, Malee Ram, and Moouna Laljee Darogha—take care to keep steadfast the purpose of the Interior: add strength to it; so that her foot may remain firm, and she may not, on any ground whatever fail in resolution. I am doing my best, situated as I am here; let her exert herself there, night and day, to attain our object. Say to her from me:—"Be assured that I neglect not any means available. Tell the Feringhee that you will not consent to manage the public affairs through him; that if he has received instructions for pursuing this course, they may even take the Raj and give you permission to depart. Say if you are determined to ruin the Raj at his bidding, do so!—Why do you keep him there? Either give him leave to go to Agra, or take him by the hand and reinstate him, when he will furnish hoondees for the payment of your money, and the Raj will flourish. Or, if you will not restore him, then let me employ whom I please as Minister." To ensure all this I have despatched a messenger, and I had written to the same purport previously. This account of what had been done could not have been written by Mangeea as from himself. Mangee was your servant, and he could not have written all that matter on his own account. How do you answer this?

A.—It will be, that when a letter came from Agra, he wrote in answer, respecting health and well being.

Q.—If you are inclined to enter into an explanation concerning this passage with a view to your own exoneration do so?

A.—It may be known by asking them. The intent and meaning of the letter are not obvious. They will have written thither what they heard from thence.

Q.—Is this the handwriting of Mangeea?

A.—Ask him the question: I do not know the handwriting of Mangeea—but it may be his.

Q.—In this letter is the following passage: "the Sahib has given an order for embanking the bed of the stream: the propitious hour was duly fixed; sweetmeats were distributed, and all the beldars of the Battalions go to work." What is the meaning of this?

A.—It is written that he gave an order for making the embankment.

Q.—What stream was it, and who gave the order?

A.—It is written in the letter, and the writers know what embankment it was, and who gave the order. They will have written to Agra in consequence of what some one had told them.

Original, in the handwriting of Mangeea, of the following translation is given to Jottha Ram.

Translation.—"Written by me Mangeea Poorohit:—what my master Sunghes Jottha Ramjee wrote through me at Deosa, I used to write from his dictation. Date 30th November, 1835.

"Signature of Mangeea Poorohit."

Q.—Mangeea has written this with his own hand, as you see; what answer do you make as to the contents?

A.—He may write what he pleases! He is in the power of others. Mangeea and others are not under my control. When letters came, he will have written to Agra, to the family, (Jottha Ram would not give a distinct answer to the foregoing query, but if the words be numbled over, on being repeatedly pressed for his reply has a precise meaning, it is contained in the answer as here rendered.)

Q.—You say he is in the power of another, or of others; in whose power do you mean that he is?

A.—He is in confinement; and I also am in confinement. In that way he is in the power of another.

Q.—By whom has he been confined, and in whose power is he?

A.—I do not know.

Original of No. 19 of Agra Papers, exhibited and read—(the letter written from Deosa on the 12th June.)

Q.—Whose letter is this?

A.—It is from Mangeea.

Q.—Did he write it on his own account?

A.—Yes, he will have written from himself intelligence regarding the Risalu, and he has written—"be satisfied and happy." I know nothing about that. I never heard the letter read.

Q.—The following is written in this letter—"The Sahib has understood the matter well, and fixed it on the Rawul; confusion and anarchy prevailed in the city, and the Majee is satisfied; her confidence and resolution are now fixed; she is in the Sookniwas." Say, what was the matter that the Sahib understood well? What did he fix on the Rawul? Why was the Majee satisfied at a time that anarchy prevailed in the city? and how were her confidence and resolution fixed?

A.—If I had written thus, or were acquainted with the matter, then I should know. Since I came away from the garden near Juepoor, I have had no relations with the Majee Sahib, and I have not written to her.

Q.—It is also written—"Our good fortune has now approached us! I have been in a state of trouble and perplexity, so that I could not write to you before." Say, what good fortune befell Mangeea?

A.—When the Risalu had come, he wrote that we were well off: in consequence of the arrival of the Risalu there was safety, will have been meant, and there was satisfaction arising from the intelligence given by Dhun Singh.

Q.—How was there safety?

A.—In this way—that there was the Risalu, and there was Chand Singh: there were two men. Every man is my enemy.

Original of No. 27 of Agra Papers, (the letter brought forward by Hookum Chund) shown to Jottha Ram.*

Q.—Are you acquainted with this letter in the handwriting of Buhadoorjee (Hookum Chund)?

A.—I have not seen this before, letters did not come to me, and no one read this letter to me.

* Concluded to have been written for the purposes of deception.

Original of No. 33 of Agra Papers (a long letter written by Mangeea Poorohit) shown to Jotha Ram and read.

Q.—In whose handwriting is this letter?

A.—It will be in the handwriting of the person who wrote it.

Q.—Look at it well and say, whether it has been written by Mangeea Poorohit?

A.—From whence has it come, I do not know. The person will know to whom it came. Look at their letters and papers, and see if it is in their handwriting.

Q.—This letter was found in the house of Sunghee Hookum Ghund at Agra, is it one of Mangeea's?

A.—Why do you not compare it with his handwriting? How did I ever see his papers?

Q.—In this letter is written—"On the 12th or 13th I wrote and despatched a letter to Nunda. I have also written other letters, both to the Interior and to Sivu Laljee, but fall into the hands of some one, when I should assuredly suffer death. There is great cause for apprehension in the existence of his honor's handwriting! wherefore Nunda's letter was forwarded to Sivu Laljee, and the others were not sent. Sivu Laljee gave the letter to Nunda, and he read it and made the contents known in the Interior." This letter written by Mangeea went to Agra; did Mangeea write thus from himself? And what fear is there in the appearance of any person's handwriting, provided that the transaction connected with it be of a harmless nature, or not criminal? Give what explanation you please?

A.—What occasion had I to write a letter in this manner to the Interior or to write to the Nazir (Nunda)? And if I have written any letter, it will be with the Nazir, therefore inquire and the truth will be known.

Q.—This also is contained in the letter—"Were I at liberty as you are, it would be seen what could be effected by this time; but I am altogether unable to act, there are no intelligent persons near me; I cannot move hands or feet, being in the power of others; my mistress is in affliction, and the Budarun is in confinement—this is my situation." Mangeea was not in confinement, he was your servant, and could not write thus on his own account—"my mistress is in affliction, and the Budarun is in confinement." Explain this—if you are disposed to do so, show what meaning can be attached to the passage.

A.—What answer can I give to this question? Where there is anything requiring an answer I will give one.

Original of No. 35 of Agra Papers.

Q.—Did you ever before see this paper?

A.—I never did see it.

Q.—In whose handwriting does it appear to you to be?

A.—When I shall see the handwriting before, in that case I can tell whose it is.

Q.—Are you acquainted with Dya Ram Bhuttacharj?

A.—I have acquaintance with him; and I know all the Sunts and Muhants.

Q.—Is this his writing?

A.—I have never had occasion to become acquainted with his handwriting. He used to come to the Durbar, and converse there, but I never had aught to do with any of his notes or letters. If this is his handwriting, ascertain the point from him.

Q.—Do you know the handwriting of the daughter of Dya Ram?

A.—I may have seen it in the Shastrus.

Q.—Have you never seen any of her notes or letters?

A.—How should I know without seeing one of them.

Original of No. 31 of Agra Papers.

Q.—Look at this paper, who will have written it?

A.—I do not know anything of it.

Q.—Cannot you tell in whose handwriting it is?

A.—I know nothing of its contents, and never saw either paper or handwriting before.

Q.—It was found among the papers of Sunghee Hookum Chund, and it is dated two days after the treacherous attack at Juepoor, or on the 10th of Jeth, Soodi; and there is written in it—"The business has been only half done, but the Rawul will be utterly ruined." To what business do you suppose reference is made? and how was it only half effected? In what way do you imagine the business could have been fully accomplished?

A.—It does not concern me, nor do I know it. What have I to do with the matter alluded to—either the business, or how it was only half done? Did you not question the person from whom the paper came?

Original of No. 39 of Agra Papers—(a letter to Hookum Chund in handwriting of Mangeea.)

Q.—Who wrote this letter?

A.—I know nothing about it.

Q.—Are you not acquainted with the handwriting?

A.—It appears to be Mangeea's. He has written to Agra concerning matters of health and welfare.

Q.—What is the date of the anniversary of your birthday?

A.—Magh, Budi the 14th.

Q.—In this is written "They say the pre-ent period is fortunate; the fifth month (of the natal year) also is said to be favorable; in that month, therefore, all will be accomplished." Do you know what could have been intended by the expression "fifth month?"

A.—There is nothing in it to clear up: every one will refer to a horoscope; and write or talk thus.

Q.—But there is a strange coincidence between the actual occurrence of the disturbance at Juepoor in the fifth month of your natal year; and the expression used in Mangeea's letter?

A.—Ask him about it, as I know nothing of the matter.

Q.—It is also written here—"You also have done what lay in your power to aid our cause, and will be still at work. May Parmeshur prosper our affairs and then we shall meet again. Here, I am under restraint in all things; when at liberty every kind of exertion shall be made." As Mangeea was not under personal restraint at that time, to whose liberation could he have alluded in the foregoing passage? and what exertions had been made by any one, and on whose account were they made?

A.—If I knew what was meant I could declare to whom it was written, and by whom.

Original of No. 17 of Agra Papers, reproduced.

Q.—In this letter, written by Mangeea, there is the following passage—"I have read to him all that you have written regarding the Governor Sahib, the Major Sahib, and Metcalfe Sahib; and respecting Bunsee Ulur, etcetera." Did any one read or communicate this intelligence to you or not?

A.—No, it was never communicated to me.

Q.—You have declared that you know nothing of any of the papers seized at Deosa and Agra which have been shown and read to you, do you mean by this to deny that mention was ever made to you of these papers, or their contents communicated to you in any way?

A.—It was sometimes told to me that intelligence of all being well at Agra was come; that it was said I should soon obtain my liberty; that the Bura Sahib would settle matters and I should speedily be released. No one ever read a letter to me, or told me its contents; and of this letter I know nothing. Or, I might possibly say—"Write, in return, that all is well here."

Q.—Did no one make known to you the intelligence contained in the letters, and did you not cause answers to be written?

A.—What occasion was there for my desiring (answers to be written)? I used to say, write that all is well.

Examination of Mungeea (—) is read to Jotha Ram.

Q.—Mungeea has deposed herein that he communicated the contents of letters that came to you, and wrote answers conformably to your instructions?

A.—I have stated the matter. Should any one force a deposition, what can I know about it.

Q.—There is no question of force; his deposition was taken before us and given by him without any manner of constraint?

A.—But, why should I listen to his deposition? They are confuted by others. They may make what depositions they please.

Ordered.—That, Sunghree Jotha Ram is at liberty to write, or have written, and to forward for record anything that he may be disposed to say relative to the following examination, which may be read over to him in his own quarters whenever he wishes to hear the whole of it connectedly. A copy of the examination shall also be furnished to him as soon as it can be prepared.

Examination of Sunghree Hookum Chund on papers seized at Deosa and Agra, commenced at Rajgurh on the 19th of January, 1836.

PRESENT.

Major Alves, Agent to the Governor General; Captain Dimesley, Political Agent, Sheekhawtee; Captain Ludlow, Assistant Agent to the Governor General; Lieutenant Conolly, Assistant Agent to the Governor General; Ruhmut Oolla Khan, Vukeel of Raj Juepoor; Ram Sing, Vukeel of Rao Raja of Ulwur; and two Pandits employed as Secretaries.

Original of No. 1 (letter from Sunghree Hookum Chund to Sunghree Jotha Ram) is shown to Hookum Chund.

Q.—Can you say who wrote this letter?

A.—I wrote it.

The letter is read out.

Q.—What is the meaning of the passage—"the Malik thinks and trusts that he will do something?"

A.—That he should give some kind of answer.

Q.—Who was the Malik? Who was to act? and what was he to do?

A.—That he would write regarding this, our business. There was no Malik. I wrote in answer to a letter received. The writer of the other letter will know, I merely wrote in reply.

Q.—In this extract—"Now the following is the state of matters here. I have tried every one and asked counsel of all, and the advice given appears to me good; wherefore, I have written and despatched to Calcutta a copious statement entirely in accordance with our object and views, and calculated to promote them. Thus all will be known there, and though no answer is yet arrived, yet be satisfied that I have transmitted the whole account as it ought to reach their ears,"—who gave the advice, and what did you write to Calcutta?

A.—Who gave advice! If there was only one person I might mention his name, but every one I sat down with gave me counsel,—as, that we had been doing nothing for a long period; and that our property during the same time had been kept from us. A petition was sent to the Lord Sahib by dak, but I know not whether it ever arrived.

Q.—You have said that the writer of the letter to which this is an answer will know who the Malik is, that you merely wrote in reply: what letter is it, in answer to which you wrote this?

A.—The letter to which this is an answer will be with you.

Q.—Say who wrote it, or caused it to be written?

A.—I do not know who wrote it. I cannot say whether it was written by a Brahmun or one of another tribe: the letter came to me.

Q.—Is it usual to write a long answer on important topics to a letter, the author of which you do not know?

A.—The man that was there—Mungeea, will have written; or if Mungeea did not write, there is another Brahmun who may have written.

Q.—Who caused to be written?

A.—There will have been no prompter in writing: he himself wrote; and he also gave replies in writing.

Q.—Mungeea and others were not under restraint in their own persons, and it could not have been their case to which allusion is made in this letter, and which was represented to the Sudder. And you therefore mean to say, that you would write in answer to a communication on matters of moment, as in the present instance, without knowing the person on whose part the communication was made?

A.—They did not write desiring me to address the Sudder; they said merely,—“what have you been doing all this time?”

Q.—In this letter you wrote that you had despatched to Calcutta a copious statement; say, by whose desire was this done?

A.—My own case was included in the statement.

Q.—In this letter is written—"Meer Yar Ulee came here three days ago, and brought a letter to me from Megh Sing," what did that letter contain; and where is it?

A.—The letter informed me that Yar Ulee was coming, and would see me and communicate intelligence. There was nothing else in it.

Q.—What is the meaning of this passage—"A letter has been despatched to Megh Sing, when he sends me an answer I will direct Meer Yar Ulee to proceed?"

A.—No answer ever came to that letter.

Q.—It is written here—"He says that the General of the Meerut Division will have the command at Juepoor; that he has already had some correspondence with this Sahib, and will continue the intercourse; that he will go to Meerut and write us information thence. I mentioned to him that money for expenses was forthcoming." On what account did you promise cash to defray expenses? What was the cause of Yar Ulee's going to Meerut, and what was he to do there?

A.—He came here and said—"he is to have the command, therefore I will go there," subsequently, no answer came from Megh Singh, and I put no further questions to Yur Ulee.

Q.—Again it is written—"I have written my own account to Calcutta, and have also got the Sahib log to write that the Rawul did this business" doubling the truth will soon appear. The procrastination of these people is great therefore they may delay to act in this instance also, but the result is not less certain." Through what Sahib-log did you cause this account to be written? And, why did you have it written that the Rawul had done the business.

A.—I got no one to write, nor did any one write, neither the act was performed. There were many reports about what had occurred, but I did not write.

Q.—In that case why did you write thus in the letter?

A.—They said that I have not accomplished anything, on which account I wrote thus.

Q.—Who was it that wrote to you, saying that you had done nothing?

A.—The Deosa person caused to write to me, and he wrote.

Original of No 3 of Deosa Papers

Q.—Who is the author of this letter? Did you write it?

A.—It went from my house, and the handwriting will be mine. But whoever was the writer, I am the responsible person.

Q.—Why was the usual order of writing inverted in penning the letter?

A.—The writing is reversed, but there is nothing to prevent such mode of writing being used.

Q.—In this is written—"The account has been written in length, but how can the document in the name of the Declan be drawn up when there is no copy of the proper form of address forthcoming?" For all the other I have written letters, in which there was no difficulty I wrote for those who are in confinement, and also for the one at the Ghat, and in the letter I inserted all that we could wish to be said. All that you have said respecting the Declan, and Juepoor, will be known from these letters, but nothing has been written in her name as from herself because, as there is no formula for the style of address, and no seal, I know not how to write. Who is the Declan referred to herein?

A.—The Declan is the Majee Sahib.

Q.—And why should letters be written for her in this irregular manner, when she could write what she pleased to the British Government through me?

A.—There was nothing written.

Q.—But if you had been acquainted with the form of address, and had been in possession of her seal, you would have written, in that case, what would you have said?

A.—Had it been written, I could have mentioned the contents.

Q.—What did you mean by inserting in the letter, that if you had the form of address and seal you would write?

A.—I did not say that I would write if I had the necessary form and seal.

Q.—But these words are contained in the letter—"nothing has been written in her name, as from herself, because, as there is no formula for the style of address, and no seal, I know not how to write."

A.—It did not occur to me, therefore I could not write.

Q.—For whom else did you write petitions.

A.—I wrote, that three persons were imprisoned in Juepoor, and she is confined at the Ghat.

Q.—What persons were confined in Juepoor and at the Ghat?

A.—Sravugees were imprisoned at Juepoor, and Reopa was confined at the Ghat?

Q.—Did you write a petition in their name, or did you send an account of their imprisonment in your own name?

A.—If my memory serves, separate petitions were written for them which were afterwards combined into one. The draughts are distinct,—but I do not perfectly recollect, and if I cause that which is incorrect to be recorded it will not be well.

No 15 of Deosa Papers

Q.—Who wrote this letter?

A.—It appears to me to have been written by Futh Lal.

Q.—What is the meaning of the allusion in it to the subject of strangers?

A.—The meaning is this—he is a boy and was guilty of some childish act, which became known to the wife of Iotha Kun, and some one reported the circumstance at Deosa, when they, Mangea and others, wrote about it.

No. 12 of Deosa Papers—Copy of Khureetu in name of the Majee, written by Futh Lal

Q.—In whose handwriting is this paper?

A.—I do not know and cannot say.

Q.—This document was found at Deosa and appears to have been written in your house. What answer do you make?

A.—It may have been found at Deosa. I cannot say whether it went. There is a long account of my master's in it.

Q.—Are not you acquainted with the handwriting, and can not you name the writer?

A.—It is not my writing, and, as you know, Futh Lal's hand is much larger than this.

Q.—Look at the hand attentively, and then name the writer?

A.—It bears some resemblance to Futh Lal's hand, but the Khureetu did not go to Calcutta.

Q.—What Khureetu did not go?

A.—The one in the name of the Majee Sahib, of which this is a copy.

Q.—In the commencement it is stated, that "a copy of the original of the Khureetu, forwarded in the name of the Majee Sahib is sent, who read it and caused it to be conveyed into the interior?"

A.—What can I say? I did not write it and know nothing of it.

Q.—If the Khureetu did not go, was there any written statement sent in its stead?

A.—Some account may have gone, but there was no Khureetu or statement sent.

Q.—Why was so gross a charge made against the Rawul and his family in this document?

A.—How should I know? The world rang with the rumour, every one said so.

Q.—It is dishonest to accuse any one of a crime except on good grounds; how then could you bring forward a charge of this heinous nature without any proof whatever?

A.—What charge do I bring forward? The merchants receive accounts of all that passes, and this communication came in that manner. I have no one at Juepoor to write to me. I was residing at Agra and knew nothing about it.

Q.—Why did you cause the Rawul to be abused in an article printed in the Agra Ukhbar, wherein he was charged with this very crime?

A.—He first caused two articles vituperative of us to be printed: when the Ukhbar was brought to me I inquired how such matter had got into print, and was told that any thing might be printed for ten rupees. But I did not cause the publication of the dissertation in question; it was Bunsee Dhur, a resident of Agra, who had this and another article printed.

Q.—The article appeared in the Ukhbar of the 3d June last, and this sketch found in your house agrees with it, both as to matter and style, so exactly, as to lead to the inference that the former was composed in your family.

A.—I did not pen any thing to be printed; it was some one else who caused the publication of the article. He said to me, "shall I write something? He has abused you and I will revile him in return."

Q.—Who was it that spoke thus to you?

A.—There was a Moosulman who resides at Agra, and also Bunsee Dhur, they both said so.

Q.—And why did you defray the expense of the printing?

A.—I did not give any money for the purpose.

Q. This Memorandum was found in your house—"Through Bunsee Dhur, rupees 100 for causing two articles to be printed—the cash being paid into the hands of the said Bunsee Dhur." What is the meaning of this?

A.—He took the money for other purposes and embezzled it. He also took part of the sum to expend on the publications, for he had observed to me, that as he (the Rawul) had written twice against us, he (Bunsee Dhur) would publish something in abuse of him. Bunsee Dhur and other person, a Moosulman, got the money from my son.

No. 8 of Deosa Papers.—A letter from Futih Lal.

Q.—In whose handwriting is this letter?

A.—This is in the hand of Futih Lal, as well as the paper that was shown to me before.

Q.—In this is written—"The Urzee of the Majee Sahib has been forwarded; you shall have a copy of it sent hereafter." I and Babajee sat down together and composed an admirable address. I wrote the original myself, and it shall be forwarded to you by and by. It has been transmitted in English, Hinduwee and Persian; and request is made in it that the answer may be sent in Hinduwee—in order that I may read it myself." Who is the person alluded to here, as the one to read the answer? and who is the Babajee? You have said that no Khureetu was despatched, but from this it would appear that one did go. What answer do you make?

A.—No Khureetu was sent, nor did any Urzee go, but a narrative was forwarded. I am the Babajee, as for the person who was to read the answer in Hinduwee, I know not to whom allusion is made.

No. 3 of Deosa Papers.—A letter from Hookum Chund.

Q.—Who wrote this letter?

A.—It was written by me.

Q.—"I have sent the paper to Calcutta in my own name. In it was stated, the case of these four; an account of the Hoondees and other property, with the matter of your liberation from Deosa." In the foregoing passage of this letter who are the four referred to?

A.—Those four who are in confinement—Qanoogo Sivulaljee, Umur Chund Deewan, Rajoo Lal Chudhuree and Gyanjee Buguro.

Q.—What was the nature of the statement regarding them?

A.—I wrote that I was here, and those four persons were in durance there.

Q.—On what charge are those four men in confinement?

A.—I wrote nothing more than that they were in confinement.

Q.—In this letter you have written—"The petitions of Budarunjee and those four persons are ready, but in consequence of indisposition I have not yet forwarded them." What interest had you in the affairs of those four individuals and of Budarunjee?

A.—Petitions will not have been written, but statements of their cases were sent with a representation on our own account; the original sketches were made separately, including that of the Budarun's case.

Q.—You say that the originals were distinct, and that you subsequently included all that was to be said for them in your own statement; how were your interests connected with theirs? You were no longer conducting the affairs of the Raj, therefore how came you to make part with them?

A.—There was no benefit to accrue to us from it: what advantage could we except? We were in trouble, and we are still in distress; although, not the shadow of a crime attaches to us that we should acknowledge ourselves to be guilty. Do us justice. You procured our deliverance from Juepoor.

No. 8 of Agra Papers.—Letters of Juvahir Sing, son of Chimun Sing.

Q.—In whose handwriting is this letter?

A.—I don't recognize it. This hand is known to me.

Q.—The letter was found in your house; how did it come there?

A.—There was a Brahmun in the village of Chimun Sing, who brought the letter to show what had taken place (at Juepoor), as written by Juvahir Singh to his family.

Q.—What Brahmun was it?

A.—That I do not know; but he used formerly to visit at my house, and he said to me,—"See Sah! all this has occurred."

Q.—You said before that you were not acquainted with the handwriting; then, how can you now say that Juvahir Singh wrote the letter to his family?

A.—It is this letter; though I am not acquainted with the hand.

Q.—It is not specified in this letter that the ruffian was a servant of Bhuroo Singh of Bhurnala, and that Ruwjee caused the attempt at assassination. Moreover, the man is stated to have been attached to the murder of Deewan Umur Chund; and this letter was written on the day after the events. How then came you to accuse Rawuljee of this heinous offence in your various papers?

A.—I was not present in Juepoor at that time, and this letter came to me after a lapse of fifteen days.

Q.—After what interval of time did you write the petition or khuretu ?

A.—I don't recollect when it was written ; but the man Futh Singh (the ruffian) had been in the service of Bhueroo Singh. I don't know, but people say that six months before he was in the service of Umur Chund he was in the employ of Bhueroo Singh. Every one say so.

No. 43 of Agra Papers.—Letter of Chimun Singh.

Q.—In whose handwriting is this letter ?

A.—In the handwriting of the person I named yesterday.

Q.—Whom did you name ?

A.—This is not the writing of Chimun Singh, but that of his son ; either Juwahir Singh or another of his sons. It was found amongst the other papers. I am not acquainted with the hand, but the letter will have been written by a son of Chimun Singh.

Q.—Sunghee Jotha Ram was asked if this letter appeared to have been written by Chimun Singh, and he answered that he had some suspicion it was : do you therefore consider well, and say whether the author be really Chimun Singh ?

A.—It will be the letter of one of them, either Chimun Singh or Juwahir Singh. I rather think it was written by Juwahir Singh.

Q.—How did it come into your house ? Who brought it, and when did it come ?

A.—That person brought it, the Brahmun. It came to me : that man, who was going towards the Gunga, said something and left the letter.

Q.—Did Chimun Singh write it for your perusal ?

A.—It is the son's, not Chimun Singh's.

Q.—For whom was it intended ?

A.—It came to me.

Q.—Who is the worthless fellow spoken of in the letter ?

A.—I have no means of discovering who he is. All that is written is before you.

Q.—When one person writes to another, is it possible that the receiver of the letter should be unable to comprehend what is written ? No one writes in such a manner as not to be understood by the reader of his letter ?

A.—He has not mentioned any one's name here.

Q.—In this passage—"Whatever you have to write to Metcalfe Sahib regarding the late events, be sure to write and despatch speedily ; and as Alves Sahib has arrived here, write to him what there is to be said. Write in such a strain that the violence shall be attributed directly to him, and that such instructions on the report of this affair may be received from the Sudder that the wretch may this time be utterly ruined, when all obstacles will be removed to you." Who is the wretch ? and what is the meaning of the whole paragraph ?

A.—He has written an account of the outbreak at Juepoor, but he has not specified who the wretch is, nor who was to obtain freedom of action.

Q.—As this letter came to you, it is expected from you that you will explain who the wretch to be ruined is, and whose freedom is alluded to. Without knowing who these individuals were, how could you write to Metcalfe Sahib or Alves Sahib ?

A.—I don't know. The writer mentions many things, some of which were taken from other letters and cannot be understood. He has written about events that had occurred ; and afterwards he came, when this came with him.

No. 4 of Agra Papers.—Letter written by Gyan Chund, son of Deewan Umur Chund.

Q.—Whose handwriting is this ?

A.—It appears to me that I am not acquainted with it.

Q.—How did the letter come to you ?

A.—I don't know how it came.

Q.—In the following passage—"It was settled with the Majee Sahib that we should, without fail, seize the adversary and put him to death ; but the Majee says, 'if Babajee has made arrangements with the Sudder, let him truly write me that he has done so,'"—there are three persons alluded to, viz. Majee Sahib, the adversary, and Babajee. Who are these three ?

A.—The writer would know how to answer this question : how can I know who the persons are.

Q.—It is written—"Your honor wrote formerly to Dadajee Sahib, telling him that the arrangement was effected, and giving him encouragement ; and he forwarded the paper for the perusal of the Deelan, who derived consolation and assurance therefrom." Who is the Dadajee of whom mention is here made ? and who was it that wrote to the Dadajee ?

A.—If I knew, I might say : how can I answer at hazard.

Q.—The writer of the letter is Gyan Chund, son of Deewan Umur Chund ; Dadajee will therefore be his Father, Umur Chund ; Sunghee Jotha Ram was the author of the note of encouragement and assurance, and the Deelan spoken of is the Majee Sahib. This note (superscribed by Jotha Ram,) was found among the papers of Deewan Umur Chund ; and, assuredly, it appears to be the note of which mention is herein made ?

A.—It is undoubtedly a forgery and not Jotha Ram's.

Q.—You say that this letter is not in the handwriting of Gyan Chund, son of Deewan Umur Chund ; say then, whose is the hand ?

A.—The four letters (those of Gyan Chund, Nos. 4, 5, 6, 7,) were written after the disturbance.

Q.—In this letter there is reference made to preparations for something, what scheme was in agitation at the time ? Answer this question, whether the letter was written before or after the disturbance of Juepoor ?

A.—I do not know exactly : ask the writer what he has written, and to what matters he alluded.

No 17 of Agra Papers. A letter from Deosa in handwriting of Mangeea Poorohit.

Q.—Who wrote this letter ? and to whom did it come ?

A.—The hand resembles that of Mangeea.

Q.—Who is Mangeea ? was he any one's servant ?

A.—He was our servant. He was the servant of Jotha Ram.

Q.—To whom was it written ? and on the part of whom ?

A.—He wrote from himself, and, if the letter was found among my papers, he will have written to me.

Q.—In this letter the following appears,—“in consequence I have sent a man to Juepoor, and have directed him to say to Sivu Laljee, Malee Ram and Moona Laljee Darogha,—‘Take care to keep steadfast the purpose of the Interior ; add strength to, so that her foot may remain firm, and she may not, on any ground whatever, fail in resolution. I am doing my best, situated as I am here ; let her exert herself there, night and day, to attain our object.’ Say to her from me, ‘Be assured that I neglect not any means available. Tell the Firungee that you will not consent to manage the public affairs through him : that if he has received instructions for pursuing this course, they may even take the Raj and give you permission to depart. (The following words are put into the mouth of the Major) If you are determined to ruin the Raj at his (the Rawul's) bidding, do so ! Why do you keep him (Sunghae Jotha Ram) there (at Deosa) ? Either give him leave to go to Agra or take him by the hand and reinstate him, when he will furnish hoondees for the payment of your money, and the Raj will flourish : or if you will not restore him, then let me employ whom I please as Minister. To ensure all this I have dispatched a messenger, and I had written to the same purport previously."

A.—Jotha Ram has not written ; he neither read nor wrote.

Q.—But he may have caused to be read or written ?

A.—I know not as to that ; I was fifty kos away from him.

The examination of Mangee, in which he acknowledges having communicated contents of letters received, and answered them as directed by Jotha Ram, is here read to Hookum Chund.

21st January, 1836.—Hookum Chund is addressed as follows :—When we had risen yesterday, you said that you had some communication to make respecting the four papers (letters of Cyan Chund), state now whatever you may have to say regarding them ?

A.—When those four letters arrived I was ill, and I neither read them nor sent any answer to them. I had a high fever at the time, and merely glanced at them before throwing them aside, being quite insensible. For three months I suffered greatly from hydrocele. In the house of Bhutjee there is a female slave, and her daughter wrote those letters. She has no connection whatever with the Interior (of the Palace at Juepoor.)

Q.—What is the name of the Bhuttu ! and of what caste is the girl you speak of ? and what name does she bear ?

A.—The Bhuttu is Bhuttacharj Duya Ram, and the girl is his daughter.

Q.—Are you acquainted with the handwriting of Duya Ram Bhuttacharj ? And are you familiar with the hand of his daughter ?

A.—I am but slightly acquainted with the handwriting of Duya Ramjee, but that of his daughter I know well. As for the writing of Bhutjee the whole city will recognise it : how can it be unknown ?

Q.—Has this letter been written by the daughter of Bhutjee, or by the daughter of his female slave ?

A.—There is a female slave in his house, whose daughter, by Bhutjee, wrote the letters.

Q.—There is written in the letter,—“ All the Nagas here, the Battalions, Hunwut Singh and Bhart Singjee ; and those likewise who were with us before, have been engaged to fidelity in our cause through Bhuttacharjee Mubaraj.” Had this letter been written by his daughter she would have used the term Dadajee in speaking of her father, or one of similar import ; whereas the writer makes use of the appellation Bhuttacharjee, from which the inference must be drawn that the daughter cannot have written the letter ?

A.—Then do you ascertain the point.

Q.—In what way ?

A.—Show her the letter, then you will see.

Q.—The contents of the letter shown, was it not written by the daughter of Bhuttacharjee ?

A.—It is her letter, why should I tell a falsehood.

Q.—In this passage—“ If Babajee has made arrangements with the Sudur let him write me the truth”—who is the Babajee ?

A.—I don't know to whom the term Babajee is applied, whether it was intended for me, or written at random.

No 9 of Deosa Papers. A letter written at Juepoor, in same hand as Nos. 4, 5, 6 and 7 of Agra Papers.

Q.—Do you know this handwriting ?

A.—I know not who wrote the letter, but the handwriting bears some resemblance to that of the others.

Q.—To what other ?

A.—It is not written by Mangee.

No. 10 of Deosa Papers.

Q.—Who wrote this letter ? Are you acquainted with her hand.

A.—It appears to have been written by the person who wrote the former letters, but I know nothing about the writer.

No 19 of Agra Papers. A letter written at Deosa on the 12th June.

Q.—Are you acquainted with this hand ? and do you know who wrote the letter ?

A.—It has been written by Mangee.

Q.—In this letter is the following passage—“ Confusion and anarchy prevail in the city ; and the Majee is satisfied.” Why should the Majee be satisfied when a narchy reigned in the city ? And what is the meaning of,—“ her confidence and resolution being now fixed ?”

A.—People write at random and without reflection in their letters. Respecting that affair, I wrote ; take out the letter and read it : this (No. 19), is the one to which I wrote in answer.

No. 27 of Agra Papers. The letter brought forward by Hookum Chund at Agra.

Q.—In whose hand writing is this letter ?

A.—I wrote the letter : it remained in my house : it is an answer to the other, or the one written by Mangee. (No. 19.)

Q.—How many days after the disturbance at Juepoor was this letter written ?

A.—It will have been written some five or seven days after.

Q.—What did you do with it you had written it ?

A.—I did nothing with it whatever ; it remained among my other papers.

Q.—You sent many letters to Deosa after this was written, why was not this also despatched ?

A.—You know Sir, (turning to Lieutenant Conolly) many closed letters were found among my papers ; this letter remained with them : it lay there unopened in its closed state.*

Q.—Consider well : you have said that this letter was written some five or seven days after the disturbance ; reflect and say exactly when it was written ?

A.—How can I recollect the precise time after so long an interval ? Many letters that had not been opened were taken out of their covers. This is an answer to a letter written the second day after the disturbance.

* The letter had no appearance of freshness when it reached Juepoor.

Q.—You first said that this letter was written in answer to the other now before you (No. 19, dated 12th June 1835), and now you say that it was in reply to one dated two days after the disturbance at Juepoor: where is this last letter?

A.—It will be in answer to this letter (No. 19, dated 12th June).

Q.—The first part of the letter No. 27 is read out, viz. "I have received and read your letter, in which you have written as follows:—In the middle of last night, a Suwar arrived and told the Risalu that was stationed here with me on the part of the Sahib, to mount and be off. The whole of the men put their saddles on, and made ready to depart. When he (the Risaldar) came to take leave of me, I asked him what had occurred that he was going away: he then told me that swords had been going at the Doorhee in Juepoor, that the Bura Sahib had been wounded and Mr. Blake killed; and that there was a great tumult in the city. All the Sirdars, Thakoors and others, were at the Doorhee on the occasion. When the Risaldar had imparted this information, I said to him—You are going away, who will be my protector? Then he told the Suwas and Sipahes of Rawuljee who are here, to take care that no harm came to any of us on the peril of their lives. Having given this injunction he mounted his horse, and all went off. I passed the night in fear and trembling. In the morning more detailed intelligence came. It is reported that Alves Sahib has received three sword wounds; that the assassin was seized, and that Blake Sahib was assaulted, beyond all bounds, as he was going away: on reaching the Bazar he was assailed with stones, and surrounded by a mob: he fled and got into the Poorohit's Munder, from which he was dragged forth. This is what has occurred, as I have heard, but I have not yet learned who the assassin is, nor how many were engaged in the affair. They have dared to commit this deed in the day-time, openly, and amidst thousands of men! Without instigators they never would have ventured to attack those people (the English party) at all! It is a most deplorable business! But as it is said the assassin has been secured, all will come out. Without the connivance of the minister such a thing could not have happened at the Doorhee. In this affair, it is evident that the two or three individuals who are malcontent at this period, will have perpetrated the deed. But I am now in great fear as to my personal safety. He (the Rawul) and I are mortal enemies; and when he holds not back from the Sahib-log even, what hope can I have, should he be determined to injure me? Assuredly there is great cause of anxiety! There is one thing occurs to me, which is, that it may serve me to have ten or twenty trustworthy Sipahes near my person: they may remain separate from me, to be sent for in case of need!" All the foregoing matter is not contained in the letter to which you say this is an answer, although it is perported to have been taken from it; how do you account for this, as well as other obvious differences between the original and the alleged answer?

A.—The explanation is this:—They kept the letters that would serve their purpose, and the rest they threw aside as useless. There were maunds of papers and letters,—a hackery-load of them,—seven maunds.

Q.—What could have induced you to repeat at length all this matter, which must have come from the very person to whom you were going to send it back?

* All the foregoing is alleged to be an extract from Jotha Ram's own letter.

† Those who examined the papers at Agra, namely, three Juepoor Raj Deputies and two pandits, one of whom was attached to Lieut. Conolly, and the other was provided by Mr. Mansel, all working under the immediate superintendence of Lieut. Conolly and in the presence of Hookom Chund and his relative and Gossain Ubbu Chund.

A.—There is nothing to prevent one from writing in this manner, and it is common for writers to cite all that has been said in a letter received, and then give their answer.

Q.—In this letter written by Mangeea, dated Usarh Budi 2d (No. 19 of 12th June), it is stated that Dhun Singh Chobdar had been sent to the Bura Sahib, who received him well and gave assurances through him; and in your letter you wrote thus—"You say that you have determined on sending Dhun Singh Chobdar to the Bura Sahib; this is all right; send him." In these two passages it is manifest that your observation respecting the Dhun Singh is not in reply to what is said about him in the other letter. Again, in the letter from Deosa it is said—"I have been in a state of trouble and perplexity, so that I could not write to you before"—from which it would appear that no letter had been written to you from Deosa, after the disturbance at Juepoor, previously to this one of date Usarh Budi 2d (12th June). It is therefore obvious that your letter could not have been written in answer to any real letter received from Deosa. Think over the matter well and then give a correct explanation.

(Respondent, being unable to reply to the foregoing call upon him during the interval that it was convenient to protract the sitting, is told to consider his answer until the following day.)

[Answer of Hookom Chund to the interrogative proposition of yesterday.]

A.—A letter of the second day came to me; it was written in the morning of the day after the Risalu* was taken away; my letter was written in answer to that: I said at that place, (Agra) that the letter connected with this affair was amongst the papers that had been cast aside.

Q.—The letter of the second day to which you say this is an answer, is this (No 19 of 12th June,) it, or is there any other letter?

A.—I can't speak as to that; letters were coming and going continually, and an interval of six months has elapsed since the transaction took place.

Q.—In the examination of Mangeea Poorohit the following question was put to him. In this letter is the following passage.—"Our good fortune has now approached us. I have been in a state of trouble and perplexity, so that I could not write to you before." It would appear that the outrage of the month of June, at Juepoor was the circumstance that prevented writing; had you written no letter to Agra between the 8th of Soodi Jeth, (4th June) and the 2d of Budi Usarh (12th June); to which he answered, "I do not remember having written any letter; had I done so, how could I have stated in this letter that I had not written?" From his deposition therefore, and from the contents of this letter (No. 19 of 12th June), it appears that you were not written to until the 2d of Budi Usarh (12 of June); and on these grounds it is assumed that you never received any letter written on the second day (or on the 5th of June);

A.—It was written on the second day, Mangeea wrote it. They took out those which would answer their purpose and threw the rest aside.

No. 33 of Agra Papers. A letter from Deosa.

Q.—Are you acquainted with the handwriting of this letter?

A.—It is Mangeea's

* The Risalu left Deosa for Juepoor in the night between the 4th and 5th June.

Q.—To whom did he write the letter?

A.—It came to me.

Q.—In this letter is written—"On the 12th or 13th I wrote and despatched a letter to Nunda. I have also written other letters, both to the Interior and to Sivu Laljee, but have not sent them because of the dread that they might fall into the hands of some one, when we (or I) should assuredly suffer death." what do you conceive to be the meaning of this passage?

A.—The meaning is that Mangeea wrote a letter: he wrote and despatched it to Nunda. It was Mangeea who wrote, and he would have been killed.

Q.—What can this passage mean—"There is great cause for apprehension in the existence of his Honor's handwriting; wherefore, Nunda's letter was forwarded to Sivu Laljee, and the others were not sent." who is his Honor?

A.—This is the meaning of it:—Jotha Ram did not write, but Mangeea will have written. I do not comprehend the import of it: so much I understand, that Mangeea wrote: the contents of his letter I know nothing about.

Q.—In your apprehension, who is his Honor, to whom allusion is made? And what was the cause of dread in the existence of his Honor's handwriting?

A.—His Honor is Jotha Ram; but he neither reads nor writes.

No. 35 of Agra Papers. A Note in the handwriting of Bhuttacharj; Duya Ram of Juepoor.

Q.—Whose writing is this?

A.—I don't know whose note it is.

Q.—Did you ever see the paper before? It came from Agra?

A.—I never did see it.

Q.—It came from amongst your papers, and upon the outside of it is written 'Sungheejee,'

A.—It was not found amongst my papers; it was with papers of ancient dates?

Q.—Conolly Sahib states, that at Agra you first denied the handwriting of this note to be that of Bhuttacharj (Duya Ram), and declared you knew not whose it was, and that a few days after, when he went to the Fort and saw you there, you acknowledged this to be the writing of Bhuttacharj, and said that the note was written at the time that Jotha Ram had gone to Ujmeer to wait upon the Bura Sahib: explain therefore the import of what is written?

A.—It appears to me to be a note of that period, when, he (Jotha Ram) caused reading rites to be performed: but ask him about it.

Q.—Ask whom?

A.—Duya Ram Bhuttacharj.

Q.—You first of all said that you did not know whose note it was; how can you therefore now say that it was written by Bhutta Duya Ramjee?

A.—It will be his; but I am not positive about it.

Q.—Answer distinctly whether you are, or are not, acquainted with the handwriting of Duya Ram Bhuttacharj?

A.—I have had few opportunities, but what is there in this? How can his handwriting fail to be recognised?

No. 24 of Agra Papers. Petition of Roopa.

Q.—In whose handwriting is the paper?

A.—Mine; I wrote the paper myself.

Q.—Why did you write it? To whom did you address it? And at whose suggestion did you write it?

A.—I inserted the substance in a petition. Whether any one told me or not, I wrote of my own free will. When questioned about it on a former day, I said that it was written.

Q.—In whose name did you write? Did any one tell you to write a petition for Roopa?

A.—There were no written paper passed, but some man will have come and told me to write. I certainly did write.

Q.—The handwriting of this paper does not resemble that of the letters which you have acknowledged; compare the several papers before you?

A.—It is my writing: the apparent difference arises from the letters having been written in the inverse style.

No. 31 of Agra Papers.

*(Stated by Hookum Chund:—)A representation respecting this note was made by me before at Agra. I know not who wrote it, but it is a forgery. I saw them throw it in with my own eyes.

No. 39 of Agra Papers, A letter from Dena to Hookum Chund, of date 17th May, 1835.

Q.—Who wrote this letter? and to whom did it come?

A.—It is one of Mangeea's, and it came to me.

Q.—In the following passage—"And they say the present period is fortunate; the fifth month (of the natal year) also, is said to be favorable, in that month therefore all will be accomplished." What does the fifth month refer to?

A.—That Brahmuns say in this month your liberation will take place—the fifth month is fortunate for you.

Q.—Whose liberation was to take place?

A.—Those who are under restraint—Jotha Ram is under restraint there—I am under restraint here—their liberation will be effected.

(The examination of Sunghee Jotha Ram, touching letter No. 39, is here read over to Hookum Chund, and he is told to make any observations he pleases.)

A.—Whenever any one questions the Brahmuns he is told that the present time is fortunate for him, but the answers of the Brahmuns never prove true, for the matter rests with the destiny of the individuals. They tell us daily that the period is fortunate, whereas, on the contrary, our condition is becoming worse and worse.

Q.—You have deposed to these four Letters (Nos. 4, 5, 6 and 7 of Agra Papers) being in the handwriting of the daughter of Duya Ram Bhuttacharj? Look at the letters once more, and say if you are positive on this point, or think there is reason to entertain doubts?

A.—These letters were written a month and a half or two months after the disturbance at Juepoor, but I don't recollect the interval.

Q.—You were not asked the question to which you have replied: give an answer to the purpose?

A.—It appears so to my understanding, but I have had no opportunities of becoming acquainted with her hand.

Q.—If you have not had occasion to read her handwriting, how do you know that these letters were written by her?

A.—When I was in Juepoor formerly I had no occasion to read her hand—I fully believe this to be her writing.

Q.—(Some lines written by the daughter of Daya Ram Bhattacharj are here shown to Hookum Chund). Compare this note with the four letters, and say whether there is any resemblance in the hands?

A.—They are not like each other. Another paper in the handwriting of Gyan Chund, being shown to Hookum Chund, he is told that the hand in which it is written agrees exactly with that of these four letters of Gyan Chund, to which he replies—"It does not bear much resemblance, it is not like."

(A copy of the foregoing examination is given to Hookum Chund, and he is told to put to writing any explanatory statement he pleases with reference to it.)

EXAMINATION OF FUTUH LAL, SON OF JOTHA RAM.

Letter No. 6 of Deosa Papers, shown to Futuh Lal.

Q.—Who wrote this letter? Do you know the handwriting of it?

A.—Yes, it is my writing.

Q.—How did you hear that Gyan Chundjee had fled secretly from Juepoor, and had gone to Muthura, where Muni Ram told him he should not remain in his house?

A.—Travellers who passed said so, and I wrote what I had heard.

Q.—Did any servant of Gyan Chund, or any man sent by him, come to you or your uncle?

A.—No one came.

Q.—Did Gyan Chund ever write to you or your uncle after you left Juepoor?

A.—He did not write.

Q.—In this is written—"We have forwarded the khureetu of Budaranjee, also the representations of the Deewanjee and Siyu Laljee." What khureetus or representations are referred to here?

A.—A paper calculated to convey intelligence of some event. I do not remember much about it, but the paper contained something. Babajee Sahib (Hookum Chund) knows,—he will not know much about it either.

Q.—Who wrote, and who caused to be written an address for Budaranjee?

A.—I don't know.

Q.—Who gave you the khureetu which your letter states to have been despatched? who wrote it? whence did it come? and who brought it to you?

A.—There is a Moonshee in Agra, whose name I do not remember; his servant told me.

Q.—Did you get a copy of the khureetu?

A.—I did not.

Q.—What interest had you in forwarding a paper with the contents of which you were not acquainted?

A.—It contained intelligence as I said. In Agra there is a Moonshee who wrote it. Their servants caused it to be written. It went to the Lord Sahib.

Q.—In this letter you say—"We have forwarded the khureetu," as if you had also written it, and now you say that it was written by a Moonshee to be forwarded; how is this?

A.—His servant said that it was sent, and I wrote to that effect.

Q.—Who is the Moonshee? what is his name? and where does he live?

A.—I don't know his name, and I never met him: his servant came and told me.

Q.—After the khureetu had been despatched, could you have procured a copy of it if you wished?

A.—I don't know, as I never made the attempt. If I had wished for it, and had ascertained whether it was to be obtained, I might say.

Q.—In the letter is written—"but do you convey intelligence of this to them; so that in case of copies of the khureetus being transmitted to Alves Sahib, and his questioning them, they may be prepared to answer that they sent them. If you wish I will send you copies of them." From this it appears that the Deewanjee and others were not aware of the khureetus being forwarded; and also that copies of them remained with you?

A.—It went.

Q.—But you have written here—"If you wish I will send you copies of them." How would you have procured the copies? And if you were not the despatcher of the khureetus, but they had been sent by a Moonshee, how were you concerned to furnish copies of them? To whom, also, were you to send the copies?

A.—He said so. The Moonshee's servant used to go to and fro, and a copy might have come thence—but I will give an answer to the question to-morrow morning.

Q.—The question will not be put to you again in the morning. If you like, answer it now?

A.—What answer? I was not at all interested in the matter. The person to whom I wrote this letter was a Brahmun. I am not acquainted with the name of the Brahmun. Had I known his name, I should have inserted it in the letter.

Q.—In the following passage—"I have read those three notes; but pray write and let us know if a khureetu from the Interior, without a seal, can be despatched." What three notes, which you had read, are referred to?

A.—Those three notes were about forwarding a khureetu. A khureetu from the Majee Sahib cannot be despatched without a seal.

Q.—From whom did those three notes come?

A.—They came from that man to whom I wrote.

Q.—What was the nature of the khureetu? whence was it to come? and who was to send it?

A.—The notes came to us, and we were to transmit the intelligence they contained. They came from that Brahmun. Had there been a seal, the khureetu would have been prepared by us and despatched to the Lord Sahib.

Q.—Had you no seal of the Majee Sahib by you at that time?

A.—We had not any seal.

Q.—When did you receive the Majee Sahib's seal?

A.—Your honor, we had no occasion to make use of a seal.

(A blank cover with the impression of the Majee's seal it exhibited).

Q.—This seal was found in your house, when did it come there?

A.—It has been lying in our house ever since we were transacting business at Juepoor. When all our papers were seized this will have been with them.

Q.—In this letter you have said—"What you have written regarding Bhattacharj is correct. But a Brahmun here says that within twenty-one days he can either render the Rawul mad or cause his death, according as he may be instructed; so if you desire me I will send for this man and set him to work." What had Bhattacharj done or written? and to whom had he addressed himself on the occasion?

A.—Bhattacharj had said—"You have now attained to a propitious period, and in ten or twelve days you business will be settled." The Brahmun had written to me to this effect.

Q.—To whom did you write the foregoing passage? Whose consent did you require for setting the Brahmun to work, in order to effect the ruin of the Rawul?

A.—I wrote to the Brahmun to whom the letter was addressed, and at his desire I should have sent for the Brahmun and directed him to perform his promise.

Q.—What is the name of the Brahmun to whom you wrote this letter, and where does he reside?

A.—He lives at Deosa, but I do not recollect his name.

Q.—Was the man's name Mangeea Poorohit?

A.—I do not recollect whether his name was Mangeea or that he bore another name.

No. 8 of Deosa Papers of Futh Lal.

Q.—Who wrote this letter?

A.—It was written by me.

Q.—You have written in the letter—"The Urzee in the name of the Majee Sahib has been forwarded; you shall have a copy of it sent hereafter. I and Babajee sat down together and composed an admirable address. The original I myself wrote, and I will send it to you by and by. It has been transmitted in English, Hindee and Persian; and a request has been made that the answer may be sent in Hindee in order that I may read it myself." At whose bidding did you transmit to the Suddur an Urzee on account of the Majee Sahib?

A.—The three notes on the subject came to us and agreeably to their contents, I and Babajee wrote and despatched an Urzee in the form of a narrative. The English document was sent, but the Hindee and Persian copies did not go.

Q.—Through whom did you forward the copy in English? and by whom was it written?

A.—It was sent by the English dāk, and we employed a Bengalee to write it.

Q.—Did you send an English or Hindee copy to any one else?

A.—Copy was sent to the Brahmun.

Q.—Who is the Brahmun? and is he the servant of any one?

A.—He was at Deosa, and he is our servant.

Q.—If he was your servant, with whom did he remain at Deosa? and what was your motive for writing to him?

A.—He resided at Deosa, and sent intelligence from thence; I also used to answer his letter, and he received subsistence from us.

Q.—You declare, that you do not know the name of the Brahmun to whom you were in the habit of writing; say then, to whom did you direct your letters?—as the covers of letters must be addressed in the name of some one to reach their destination.
